 which men should be trained to do, so that they may then fight in the secular world with vigor, and especially in the political arena.

"...Freemasonry must keep its eyes open on its soldiers..."

Without this action taken by the Mac.*, on its members given over to life public, Masonic work would be sterile, the devotion of our brethren. '.
 a deception, and our hopes for the future would be nothing but (chimes res...

"Through these principal considerations, the Grand Orient resolves, without hesitation the situation, the question that was put to him, and he decides that not only Lodges have the right, but also the duty, to monitor the actions of public life.
 of those of their members whom they have brought into political office questions, the duty to ask for explanations when it appears that one or Many of these actions do not tend to enlighten the torch society.
 of the truth... the Grand Orient believes that one must be severe and inexorable towards those who, defying warnings, push treachery to the point of to support, in political life, acts that Freemasonry opposes all his forces as contrary to his principles on which he cannot to be allowed to transact.

"The wisdom of the lodges will resolve each particular case, for which, moreover, recourse to the Gr.\ Or. - , remains open before the
 The decision, if it includes a severe penalty, must be carried out in a defined manner.
 tive.

"Thus stopped in ten.\ of the Gr.\ Or. - , the 1st j.\ of the 1st m.\ 5856.

The 1st Gr.\ supervisor acting as Grand Master, National

By order of: Verhaegen the Elder.

The expert acting of Gr.' . secretary ,

The preceding decree was communicated to the lodges of the obedience.
by the circular, the text of which is as follows:

(1) Like baptism, which gives the baptized child an indelible character of Christian. We see that Freemasonry is a religion with its own sacred rituals -

i# ...

THE LODGES AND THE BELGIAN LIBERAL PARTY

497

"By sending you twenty-five copies of decree no. 703, please..."
Please, in one of your next outfits, draw attention seriousness of the FF.', of the lodge on the duties that every mason has undertaken towards Vordre, on the very day of his initiation into our mysteries, duties for mules in general terms in Article 1, § 2 of our general statutes, and that no Freemason can disregard under any circumstances of his life Masonic and secular.

c By order:

"The expert general acting as secretary,
"Henri Samuel."

This decree from the Grand Orient was so well in line with practice lodges, none of which were addressed to them testa. Moreover, a Freemason, who was suspected of having delivered to The publication of these documents was solemnly excluded from the order by the lodge of Philanthropic Friends (1), and this decree of exclusion was solemnly ratified by the Grand Orient, meeting under the pre-sidence of F.. Debie, F.. Boniface Defrê filling the functions of public prosecutor (2).

(1) Here is the text of this grotesque document:

The Royal Lodge of Philanthropic Friends declares Brother Armand Tardieu pable of the Masonic revelations inserted in La Patrie, of Bruges, says that he has deserved the censure of his FFF.. ; that consequently the R., lodge orders that his name written on paper, will be burned between the two columns, all the lights* extinguished; that there will only be a funeral torch for the execution of the judgment, after which she will be broken and thrown in a public place; that the name of the said Armand Tardieu will from the painting, from the extract of the drawing, written in red ink, addressed to the response; said that the execution of the said judgment will only take place one month after meaning. "

(2) For twenty-five years these important documents have been cited several times in parliamentary discussions, and their authenticity has never been questioned. recently F.*. Jottrand, member of the Chamber of Representatives, former Venerable of the lodge of the Philanthropic Friends, tried, in a letter addressed to the Courier from Brussels, to mitigate its scope by claiming that in 1863 and 1876 the Grand-Orient of Belgium had recognized the freedom of opinion of the members of the order. and renounced choosing candidates for elections from the lodges. Brother Jottrand could not produce any decree from the Grand Orient withdrawing that of 1856: the speeches and the agendas that he quotes in extracts are by no means sufficient to repeal such a solemn regulatory text. They signify nothing other than desire lodges not to incur public responsibility, which at certain times has They might have found it compromising. But such maneuvers change nothing. neither the heart of the matter nor the reality of the political action carried out by Fre one could see in the course of this work that these apparent retreats were a tactic strongly used in the order since Weishaupl (book I, chapter 111, g 3). It is safe from these masks that Freemasonry has propagated pantheism while claiming to respect to all religions, that it established the principle of the subordination of civil duties to the Masonic oath (vol. I, p. 167, book 1, chap. III, g 4).

Mr. Amand Neut victoriously responded to Mr. Jottrand, demonstrating by the

U 32

498 Masonry in Belgium

Not only does Freemasonry pronounce sentences, but It also gives rewards: thus, in 1865, the supreme The Scottish Rite Council conferred upon Brother Bara, Minister of the justice, the twenty-ninth degree, as a Masonic reward that.

On June 24, 1854, during the national solstice ceremony, Brother Bourlard, in the presence of the Supreme Council of Belgium, and of hundreds of Masonic vine-like members belonging to the various lodges of the country, he said, to the applause of everyone:

"All the major questions of political principle, everything that has "A matter relating to the organization, existence, and life of a state, oh! that.

"Yes, this belongs to us on the front lines. Each one of us in "our localities, each in our own home, wherever there is good to be done, by And wherever the opportunity arises to be useful to us, there must be a "mason; it is necessary that in all charitable and welfare administrations"

"Faisanco, Freemasonry must be there, watching over us, fighting us, if he
"It is necessary, for the triumph of truth."

And after formulating this audacious demand, in the middle spoke this revolutionary language:

We have the right and the duty to address the issue.

"nuns from convents, to attack her head-on, and it will be necessary that "the whole country will eventually do justice, even if it means using the "Strength to cure oneself of this leprosy (1)."

facts and numerous examples that the decree of the Grand Orient of Belgium of 1855 had been constantly enforced since 1855 and that the alleged freedom of opinion union claimed by two Freemason senators or deputies on certain issues
The declarations of war measures by the lodges were absolutely illusory. He concludes his
The answer lies in this decisive argument: "Isn't the law of July 1, 1879 in..." blatant contradiction with the opinions expressed on several occasions by many of those who stole it? Impossible to deny; the discussion established it without question.
test. And where does their cynical recantation come from? Where does this bloody demise re Given to them themselves? – This occult influence, which requires that the Freemason,
By joining the Masonic family, he alienates the freedom he would have had to remain Indifferent to the work the institution undertakes. (Public Good of Ghent, March 30, 1880)

The debates of the convent in 1876, held on the occasion of the revision of the school law (vp 510;,, as they were published in 1880 by the Journal de la Belge,
Mr. Neut's explanations on the logo tactics continue in full.

(I) A. Following these measures, the major logos of England and Germany broke off their public relations with the Belgian lodges. In 1874, the lodges went orders, through the organ of F.*. Bluntchli, Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Bayrouth, took the initiative to restore relations, precisely when the character
The revolutionary and allied back logos of the Belgians had become more pronounced. The G

THE LODGES AND THE BELGIAN LIBERAL PARTY

499

Brother Bergé, Grand Master of the Grand Orient, was only to develop this policy, when he said, on August 23, 1875, during its installation:

"The organization of liberal forces is only possible through Freemasonry" nonsense.

"Nothing can be done without her or against her. She will be the key."
of the union of all our scattered forces; it will be at once this refuge where the disagreements of those inspired by principles will come to be calmed common containers and the arsenal preparing weapons for combat; it will things on the surface, have given way to overly hasty discouragement. But he

It is essential that she direct this work and take responsibility for it.
Those who misunderstood her come to pay her homage, and those who
They do not want to serve her, they respect her.

"It must not be judged as compromising, but as support, like a guardian authority.

"At the present moment, she already holds the reins of these organizations" still isolated, imperfect, but which attest in various forms the awakening of the Masonic spirit; several workshops have established themselves heavy burdens for the needs of the fight and had the consolation of to note that the soldiers, numerous and eager, were only waiting for the signal leaders who have the honor of marching at their head will know how to join the evidence of a liberalism without reproach and without indecision.

"The dignity of Freemasonry demands that the situation be settled in this way;
To act otherwise would be almost suicidal, and it's not when... muffled tremors stir the country, when the fanaticism of our enemies puts the security of the homeland at risk, when from all sides friends, of brothers come to make amends, to rejoin their ranks, that he
"There can be no question of degradation."

England also resumed relations shortly afterwards. We are therefore entitled to ren to the Freemasonry of all countries in solidarity with the current conduct of that of Belgium, and F. Bergé was perfectly within his rights to say at the Grand-Orient, August 23, 1875: Our relations with them are completely restored.
The prejudices that had broken off these relationships have given way to a feeling more just, leading to a more accurate assessment of our conduct. The result is...
We are all the more satisfied because not only the Grand Lodges Germany absolved us, but they recognized the necessity of entering themselves even in the path we have taken since 1855. Let us compare the words pronounced at that time in our Or., by Brother Bourlard and those of which the F.. Bluntschli made use of Berlin; the arguments were identical on both sides; tl « this advantage for us, which we recognized as being just 185th, while that our German FFF waited until 1987 to adopt them. Our good Relations with Italy and France have existed for a long time; they continue on excellent terms. > (Quoted by the Courrier de Bruxelles, August 13, 1370).

500

Freemasonry in Belgium

It would be too long to recount the countless maneuvers of the lodges, and their daily involvement in political struggles.
Let us mention just a few outfits from the Brussels lodges:

The question of the day is: "What weapons does the State possess?"
Can democracy be used against ultramontaniam?

On January 11, 1875, they discussed the proposal of Brother Goblet.
d'Aviella on the means to be employed to popularize in the electorate the idea of the absolute separation of Church and State the State.

In 1876, all the lodges in the capital met to discuss
To answer the following question:

"What means should be used to stifle the ultra- reaction?"
"Montaine and especially to curb the audacity of the reactionary newspapers"
"tionaries?"

After a long discussion, the meeting stopped at the means following:

"To bring civil lawsuits against Catholic newspapers for defamation" defamation or slander; sue the preachers for damages guilty of having publicly advised unsubscribing from the newspapers of the sect; finally, to initiate proceedings before the courts as much as possible.
"Bunals in which the venerable brothers are assured of their majority."

The reports of the lodges' work, published in the report
The annual port of the Grand Orient shows us that since 1870 the Each lodge is also associated with a liberal circle and an association.
liberal, whose affiliates have effective control and in which They bring together a considerable number of members. These become They quickly become unconscious tools for the benefit of the skilled.
hidden in the rear sanctuary.

It should be noted that around this time, in 1873 and 1874, some Very close relations have been forged between the Grand Orient of Belgium.
and the Masonic powers of Germany, thanks to the intervention active tion of Bluntschli, one of Mr. Bismarck's confidants.
The coincidence of these reports with certain projects of the grand chancellor on the annexation of Holland and Antwerp to the empire Germanic, is all the more noteworthy given that the initiative of these
The initiative came from German lodges, as noted

THE LODGES AND THE BELGIAN LIBERAL PARTY 501

the Grand Orient of Belgium (1). If the annexationist projects of Mr. Bismarck had no follow-up at that time, the French-Belgian Freemasons drew from these communications a new fervor for the Kulturkampf. The F.*. Roofer, grand master in In 1875, he spoke thus before the Grand Orient on this occasion:

to affirm its principles against the enemies of the true light. The provisions regulatory situations that prohibited the examination of problems in lodges Religious and political factors had the effect of keeping her in a narrow formalism; but formalism stifles all life when it is not not the shell of an intellectual activity. The German lodges, illuminated by the illustrious and serene editor of L'Indépendance, were aware of this danger, and, while avoiding transporting the political and religious struggles in the secular world in the field of Freemasonry, they understood the need not to systematically dismiss In the course of their work, the general questions that relate to the humanity's most vital interests. Ancient traditions will carry weight. for some time now on the work of the German lodges, many scruples – putes will still need to be treated with care; but, with the new spirit (of the Kul- (turkampf) which characterizes the Germans, one can hope that their Ma- "Stupidity will soon adapt to the needs of the times."

If Belgian lodges are thus actively involved in politics from their country, who will believe that the French lodges don't Don't they do as much? The only difference is in the more or less precautions taken with regard to secular advertising.

These are, moreover, all the principles of Freemasonry, as they are presented in the first book of this work, which express Freemasons, leaders of the liberal party:

"Be Lutherans," wrote the Revue de Belgique, the party's avowed organ, in its issue of April 15, 1875, be Calvinists, be Unitarians,*be Old Catholics, be Israelites, be rationalists, be something else entirely One more thing; you can remain good citizens, excellent liberals, sincere progressives; but know that logically no one can be "Both liberal in politics and Roman Catholic in religion."

(I) See the bulletin of the Grand Orient of Belgium for 1874 and 1875. To be clear To appreciate the scope of these relationships, one must know that the city of Antwerp is near the balance of the elections between the two parties and that the main strength of Liberals in Denmark, this city relies on the numerous German merchants who are there. established. Although, because of their status as foreigners, they did not have the right However, they have many resources thanks to their wealth and their employees. of influence, which they exert in the direction indicated by the Masonic centers. mands. The current Belgian ministry reportedly plans to naturalize all of these en masse. foreigners. Never would a more decisive act have been taken for the destruction of the Belgian nationality.

502 the Franc-*haçonn*xbix in Belgium
And Brother Goblet d'Aviella does not hesitate to write:

"Liberals cannot dispute the urgency of supporting any movement a process that tends to separate any group from the Roman Catholic Church our fellow citizens, regardless of which sect or school they support,

"If Belgian liberals want to save their country and their ideas," he said
For his part, F.*. Pergameni believes they must resort to means more energetic; they must work tirelessly to abolish convents and religious orders, which they wrest from the teaching hands of the clergy, that they arrest by severe and radical measures the unprecedented development of miracles, pilgrimages and stigmata tions... Prison, fines, and banishment are legal weapons
Why not use them? If we want to do serious work,
We must forget the doctrines of 1830 and put aside our beautiful dreams of freedom (2).

In the lodges, the same language resounds, and it is the
The same characters speaking. Here are, among others, two declarations wartime actions against Catholicism, extracted from the Bulletin of the Grand-Orient of Belgium, December 1875:

"Speech by Brother Bergé, Most Serene Grand National Master for 1875. Meeting held on April 23, 1875, in Brussels. (p. 113):

"It has been said, and I believe it, that Freemasonry is the true enemy" of the Catholic religion... Yes, we are the enemies of religion Catholic, if the Syllabus is to be its basis...

"Freemasonry has the mission of dealing with political issues."
and social; it must, to use a common expression among us, rough-hewing the raw stone...

c ... We cannot remain indifferent to the maneuvers verses of our enemies. When the men of darkness [11!) spread ignorance, superstition, and fanaticism lead populations to against stupefaction and decrepitude, we have a mission to plant the dra-skin of free inquiry, to spread education, to enlighten and to protect to manage all those over whom they exert their harmful influence. And this Mission, we will not fail!... That's Masonic policy in opposition to clerical doctrines... »

(1) Revue de Belgique, July 1876.

(2) Revue de Belgique, October 15, 1876.

THE LODGETS AND THE BELGIAN LIBERAL PARTI 503

"Speech by F. Couvreur, former Most Serene Grand Master of the National Order, (same outfit, p. 115):

"...I will be brief; this is not the time for long speeches, it is to

to engage in the struggle. It includes brothers who will not compromise with their principles,... a grand master (Fr. Bergé) whose name alone is a challenge to intolerance and fanaticism. Yes, the time for fighting is now. Naked!... Like our fathers, the beggars of the 16th century, we went out of the Church rather than denying our principles. Let others do so. Let's exalt the constitution. But let it be the constitution with all its provisions, in its spirit as in its letter, and not such that Pont is distorted by laws passed by clerical majorities or accepted by liberals (law of 1842) who still compromise with the faith of their Fathers! This is the real battleground... A door must be open or closed; in our case, it is neither one nor the other. The constitution proclaims the divorce between the State and the Church. This divorce, our laws (law of 1842) have made it a concubinage (??)... This game of deception must stop. Let that be our motto.

"Attention, my FFFs..... First madman (health). To the constitution, but to the constitution with all its freedoms, without privileges for the churches, bishops and the Little Brothers.

"Second fire, to Belgian Freemasonry! To its alliance with the Mason foreign nonsense!

"The God who sits enthroned in the Vatican recently wrote to one of his bishops that Freemasonry, the work of Satan, could no longer be defeated that through the prayers of the faithful; that the bulls and the mandates were powerless against her: that is the finest praise ever bestowed upon her our institution. May it continue to triumph over the prayers of its adversaries. how she triumphed over their calumnies and their anathemas!

"Last and perfect fire. To the death of the clerical spirit!... To the fall finally, of a Church whose power rests on ignorance and superstition, of the one whom Luther, the great Luther, already called the whore of the times modern, to the fall of the Roman Church!... »

At a banquet organized in Liège to celebrate the election of F.. Bergé, the F.. Scailquin said in his toast:

"Some men have the privilege of embodying an idea," of a party. F.*. Bergé is one of them.

"He personifies, so to speak, in our country, the party of free – thought, free inquiry. And it is to pay homage to his principles, It is because it aligns with his convictions that Belgian Freemasonry elected "F.*. Bergé, Grand National Master."

504 Freemasonry in Belgium

The lodges do not limit themselves to purely theoretical declarations. issues of irreligion, they do not limit themselves to preaching atheism in serve both the press and public power when It is in the hands of the followers, as evidenced by this plaque from the lodge.

From the Philanthropic Friends of Brussels, May 3, 1870:

"The lodge declares that there is cause to fight, as marked in the a corner of superstition and intolerance, the organized demonstrations by the Catholic clergy, for the month of July next, in comme
The event described as a Miracle of the Blessed Sacrament. She decides that it is necessary to inform the public about the odious nature of these demonstrations, notably through the organization of public conferences and the free distribution of brochures.

"It further decides that there is reason to appeal to the public authority" that absolute neutrality and abstention with regard to the holidays which will be organized.

"The dignitary officers are charged with the execution of this Resolution: They are authorized to contact other lodges.
and with other associations that would pursue a goal consistent with this resolution.

"Ultimately, the lodge entrusts the success of its work to the devotion and to the individual loyalty of all the FF.\, who will receive notification of this resolution and will be invited to organize within their circle of friends thousands and their relationships, absolute abstention from demonstrations events that are being prepared.

"The workshop also decided to make available to the officers dignitaries and lodge members that they are authorized to to add the sum of 400 francs which had previously been allocated to the commission responsible for publishing a Masonic almanac'(l). »

How can one not believe that the ban on processions, in France, by all the republican mayors, in June 1879, is not
Was this also the result of a slogan originating from the lodges?

Nowhere do the lodges propagate the sect of the solidaires, this odious pact against freedom of choice science. It was in 1862 that the first group of solidarity members... formed in Brussels, and it is from there that this sect spread in France and Italy.

Through an inevitable logical chain of events, socialism penetrates the lodges and he is welcomed, warmed within them (V. book II,

(1) Published by the Courrier de Bruxelles on June 27, 1879.

(ch. XIV, §4). In 1845, under the great mastership of Brother Dcfacqz, Eugène Sue, the socialist novelist, received a golden pen from the Antwerp lodge and a medal from the Brussels lodges as Testimonials of admiration. The progressive movement of ideas Revolutions have not stopped since then, and in the future that one can foresee socialism will signify its dismissal to liberation realism, as the latter did for the doctrinarism of generality ration of 1830. Brother Grün, former orator of the Grand Orient and The venerable master of the lodge Le Travail in Verviers is well known by his socialist opinions. In 1877, the lodges of Brussels, the most
All of these advances have brought Mr. Janson to Parliament, the former speaker at the Congress of Liège (book II, chapter XIV, § 3), whose socialist opinions are so well known that the International hailed his entry into political life as an indication of the profound change has taken place in the country.

III. – WAR ON CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

The desire to take control of youth education is former members of Belgian lodges. For many years, they have, by taking advantage of the freedom common to all in this country, created at all levels of schools where religion is completely excluded. As early as 1842 we see them trying to seize the public education by indirect means.

In the session of the 17th day of the 9th month 5842 (November 1842), The Lodge Le Travail of Brussels unanimously adopted, after Having debated them in several sessions, the following proposals sales:

"To admit to Masonic initiation, without payment for reception"
*jet without monthly fees, any layperson, primary school teacher, Belgian or domiciled in Belgium, who will possess all the other required qualities his, subject to and condition by him:

"1. To provide free primary education to four children, of masons or others, who will be indicated or entrusted to him by the lodge;

"2° To provide likewise, and in addition, primary education, to the fan presented by your lodge, at the same price as primary school teachers

50(1

LA FLUNC-MADONNE in Belgium

sü'ariés will receive from the government or the municipality, according to the terms of

"3° To be subject to the supervision of one or more commissioners" delegates from the lodge, regarding instruction, genre and method of teaching instruction given by the teacher to the children entrusted to them, in by virtue of the two preceding articles (1).

In accordance with this thinking, the Belgian lodges founded the University of Brussels, which is like the citadel of doctrines of the masonry. This foundation is not solely due to the generosity of the brothers, because the Brussels city council and the provincial council of Brabant, which have long been subservient The dice in the lodges give him a large subsidy from the budgets. municipal and provincial.

Finally, to give more impetus to the movement, the Maçonnerie founded the League of Education on February 16, 1865. Belgian, which supports non-religious schools through the use of the tax schools (2). This is the type that F.*. Macô and the freemasons French lessons were imitated from the following year (book II, chapter XII, 5 7).

The lodges employ not only their money and influence to support these schools, but they also exert influence on domestic life tick of their members a pressure, which is the negation of the same theories of freedom that they proclaim. Thus, on November 3, 1873, the lodge of the Philanthropic Friends of Brussels, on the proposal of F.-. Goblet d'Aviella, put this question under study: "Every A non-initiate entering the lodge must make certain commitments relating to his children's education system." We can see immediately the permanent inquisition to which the unfortunate submit who allow themselves to be drawn into this cycle.

But Freemasonry does not intend to fight by means of its own alone. weapons of competition against Christian education; she wants stifling it through the omnipotence of the State and destroying this freedom of the teaching that Catholics spontaneously proclaimed In 1831, they always respected it when they were in power.

(!) This document, so important because of its date and its nature*, was published in the Natural Religion, Sunday Review of the Interests and Progress of the Catholic Church French, issue no. of February 12, 1843. Let us note in passing*, says Mr. de Moussac, the pathie do l'église éphémère do l'abbé Cliatel pour la Franc-maçonnerie.

(2) See on the works of the Belgian League } Mr. de Moussac, the Intelligence League * pp. 14, hè à i2 oî <3:

THE WAR ON CHRISTIAN EDUCATION 507

It is in the field of primary education that the struggle has taken place.

Modern nations having believed that it was important to their power ability to rapidly develop reading skills and of rewriting, and, on the other hand, the Revolution having plundered the institutions that provided freely and truly free of charge This popular need, modern nations, we say, have been guidelines to be entrusted to the municipalities, and secondarily to the State, the responsibility for primary education. Therefore, the most important questions Difficult questions arose. Donated at the expense of all taxpayers. This teaching must be in harmony with the beliefs of the im majority and in accordance with the fundamental principles of education, as indicated by the experience of all peoples. Now, This experience shows that youth education must be essentially religious, that God and his law owe to each to intervene instantly in the moral formation of youth, as they must be present in all reasonable actions man. On the other hand, the Belgian people are overwhelmingly Catholic and has the right, as long as the budget is allocated to it. bution, to have a Catholic public education for his children.

A law on primary education passed in 1842 had reconciled the rights of fathers, those of the State and those of religion gion: Christian teaching was the basis of education, and its ministers had a share of authority in the management of schools which is essential to the accomplishment of their mission.

The liberals of the time had voted for it themselves (1). This law It functioned to general satisfaction and the leaders of several liberal firms, notably Mr. Van Brouckere and Mr. Frère, had repeatedly acknowledged that it would be seriously imprudent tooth to harm it.

In April 1860, the Grand Orient declared a law on compulsory education with fines and even prison sentences, such as

(1) The few reservations they made should be reported as symptoms of the current of ideas to which they belonged, or as milestones in the march of the error: they readily agreed that teaching should be religious, but they they wanted it under the exclusive direction of the civil authority, giving it the constitutional means to support competition against establishments private, and by rejecting the intervention of the minister of liter-sized binges of author education organized by the civil authorities; they did not want, according to the word of Mr. Rogier, "to call upon him to provide religious instruction only through administrative. » See M. Woeste, article cited from the Revue générale.

508 Masonic Finance in Belgium sanctions. Two years later, in 1862, wanting to introduce this questioning in a practical way, he put it in these terms to the order of the mandatory registration:

a 1° Define what is meant by compulsory education; 2° Establish the program of this teaching; 3° determine the coercive means to ensure the implementation of the measure; 4. to draft a bill.

These four points were the subject of reports of varying degrees of detail. developed by the lodges of Antwerp, Aalst, Liège, and Louvain, Namur, Verviers, and Brussels. The whole of This work was published in 1863 in a substantial volume by the publishers. Lacroix and Verboeckhoven.

And what was the response of the lodges to the questions of the Grand Orient?

The Antwerp lodge, from the very beginning of its memorandum, made this statement :

"The priest's intervention in teaching, in his capacity as an authority figure, inevitably nullifies the teacher's action, paralyzes it, and deprives the students of... children of all moral, logical, and rational teaching. The teaching of catechism is the greatest obstacle to the development of the faculties of the fant. The human mind, freed from this mass of things that distort it, of would be more just, more righteous, and more moral.

The lodge of Liège considered to be vicious the laws which re-education in general, "in that they grant a harmful influence on the ministers of a positive religion which for pursues a goal diametrically opposed to that of liberalism.

The Namur lodge, more brutal, had been content with approximately to fill his memoir with savage diatribes against the clergy and against religion. For her, morality has nothing in common with Catholicism. She added that "the essence of teaching The obligatory thing is not to concern oneself at least with religion, nor "Perhaps even a moral issue."

And the Louvain lodge:

"It is sad to mention the deleterious influence of Catholicism on the intellectual progress of the masses. Protestantism understood better that Catholicism: what a moral and humanitarian religion should be. Poverty and ignorance are built upon the Gospel.

The volume concludes with a bill in twenty-three articles. developed by the Grand Orient and in which the various its provisions proposed by the lodges of the obedience:

forces her children to go to school;

"2° Removal of all religious instruction;

"3. Inscription of the names of the defaulting parents on a display board" publicly in front of the town hall;

c 4° In case of repeat offence, the parents will be fined 100 francs maximum; in case of insolvency, to forced labor of one to thirty days for the benefit of the municipality, or imprisonment for one to five days;

"5. As a last resort, removal of the child from the care of the directorate..." eternal.

And this regime was declared applicable not only to boys' schools, but also girls' schools!

From 1863 to 1876, the lodges never ceased to prepare public opinion to this project: they made it the test imposed on all men Liberal party policies. No need to list all the conferences references, drafting of bills done in the lodges at this subject. They are all summarized in the action of the Grand Orient at the On the eve of the 1876 elections:

"The Grand Orient of Belgium," the official summons stated, "in its held on April 9, decided to convene an assembly on May 7, 1876 general assembly of Belgian masons, for the purpose of establishing the agreement of the M laughter on the need to ensure the triumph of the principle of secular education, free and compulsory and, consequently, to have the laws revised accordingly existing ones on education.

All regular Belgian Freemasons will be invited to attend this meeting, to which current circumstances lend importance capital. It is important that it be large and imposing. At the assemblies the wounds of ultramontaniam, where they deliberate on the best measures inherent in undermining our freedoms and violating the constitution, it is necessary that The children of the true light oppose a meeting where they will take care of the most effective measures to ensure intellectual development the people's moral and spiritual state. Freemasonry attacked in its essence, slandered denied and proscribed by the priestly party, must raise its head; the meeting of May 7th will primarily result in bringing together men of goodwill. will united in a common thought. The Grand Orient counts that, for to accomplish this work of unity and progress, the Belgian Freemasons will will answer his call in droves.

At the same time and by the same summons, the Grand-Orient announced that in its session of March 19th it had stopped the program of questions put to the competition for the

This is the present Masonic year. We extract the two questions from it.
following:

"Can humanity and human societies preserve themselves and..."

To develop without religious ideas? What should this idea be according to reason?

To make known the foundations and the sanction of morality according to the positivist school and demonstrate that they are sufficient for maintaining social order.

To present a practical project for the application of secular education, Free and compulsory in Belgium.

The result of the general assembly of masons on May 7, 1876 was a decision stating that "public education, which combines moral instruction should henceforth be exclusively Secular and scientific at all levels, free and compulsory.
At that time, the Grand Orient believed it was assured of the elections.
legislative elections; the event then thwarted his hopes, but a Surprise put him in power two years later in this ministry composed exclusively of Freemasons (1).
The Minister of Public Instruction was specifically chosen to be...
F.*. Van Humbeeck, former national grandmaster, who was known for the violence of his hatred against religion.

On December 26, 1864, the Antwerp lodge, Les Amis du commerce (Friends of Commerce) and perseverance combined, had summoned all the beautiful lodges to a plenary session, precisely to study the point of

(1) Za Vraie Lumière, n° 2, reproduces the Masonic titles of the ministers as follows:
Brother Fièvre-Orban, prince of the royal secret of the lodge La Parfaite Intelligence de Liège: Minister of Foreign Affairs;

Brother Pierre Van Humbeeck, now Lieutenant Grand Commander of the Supreme Council of Lodges of Belgium, received as a Freemason on June 28, 1857, elected on 1867 Grand Inspector, Inquisitor, Commander, former Venerable Master of the Lodge of Philanthropic friends, former president of the Liberal Association: Minister of Education public;

Brother Jules Bara, a cub initiated on January 15, 1858, was elected sovereign commander.
Born of the Temple of Jerusalem on April 27, 1866, Mason of the 27th degree: Minister of justice;

Brother J.-B.-J. Bruno Renard, today Grand Commander of the Supreme Tonsil of Belgium, initiated on July 29, 1847, elected sovereign grand commander In 1878, lieutenant general: Minister of War.

Brother Rolin-Jacquemyns, former member of the Saint-Vincent-de-fau, from Ghent, now a member of the lodge and chapter Le Septentrion, do Gand; Minister of the Interior;

the, senator: minister of finance;

Brother Sainctelette, member of the lodge La Parfaite Union, of Mons: minister public works.

THE WAR ON CHRISTIAN EDUCATION 511

From a Masonic perspective, the question of public education. The Brother • .Van Humbeeck, then Worshipful Master of the lodge Les Amis de l'union et du progress from Brussels, he went there invested with a delegation of all the lodges of this city, and there, in the middle of a meeting of two one hundred and forty delegates from the Belgian lodges, he pronounced the words following, which were met with applause

Nîmes:

"Throughout the course of this work, I was thinking of words that escaped I paid tribute to a great poet, on one of those days of despair when exile... had become a famous pamphleteer. He said:

"The Revolution has been criticized for creating a chasm. That's not True: the Revolution did not create an abyss; it dug a pit. She dug it out to lower the corpse of the past into it.

"What is true of the Revolution is true of Freemasonry, whose Revolution" was merely the profane formula.

"Yes, a corpse lies upon the world: it blocks the path of progress; this A corpse of the past, to call it by its name bluntly, without circumlocution, It's Catholicism.

"Yes, Catholicism is a corpse, not in certain precepts" of a sublime morality, whose maxims he shares with the other Christian sects and are confused with those of unified morality Verselle, but in its oppressive dogmas that paralyze freedom everywhere examination and only want to allow the citizen to think through the intermediary priest's diary; he is a corpse in this cleverly organized combined by skilled pontiffs for the purpose of universal domination saddle. It is this corpse, my brothers, that we have today looked at in face.

And if we did not throw him into the pit, we lifted him from the less so as to bring him closer by a few steps.

"This is a great result, and we owe it to our Brothers* in Antwerp; We thank them warmly, in Masonic spirit.

Once the discussion on the agenda had begun, he concluded Thus, his speech:

constants of Freemasonry. We have no doubt whatsoever that our keeping today does not shed any new light on this important point and that We left here refreshed and with our spirits renewed to work outside, by all possible means of execution, to obtain practical results ques. »

The bill was introduced on January 21, 1879, by V.. F.. Van Humbeeck, therefore, is the practical result of the inner work and outside the boxes.

512 Freemasonry in Belgium

Challenged by a courageous right-wing MP, Mr. de Moreau d'Andoy, in the session of the Chamber of Deputies on March 4 In 1879, Mr. Van Humbeeck formally maintained the core of his discourse, abandoning only the form as pretentious (sic), and Mr. Bara, the Minister of Justice, has openly accepted it solidarity.

The law presented by the Freemason ministry was passed by eight majority vote in the Chamber of Deputies compared to only one in the Senate. The Liberal Party turned it into a strictly party vote, and the most violent one. pressure has been exerted on representatives who owe their position political action on the Liberal Party to wrest a vote from them that the many people secretly disapproved of this.

This law fulfills the great desire of Freemasonry: the en- Religious instruction is absolutely excluded from the school. It is permitted only for priests to come and administer it in a special location. at certain set times. Not only the bishops and the priests are stripped of the authority they necessarily owe. their authority to have control over the schools where children of their faith are education; but also, fathers of families are excluded from any sion influence in the school's management. As it was feared that beautiful municipal councils cannot withstand such an organization Contrary to the wishes of the people, the schools are practically removed from their control. For this, an entire body was created of chief and cantonal inspectors appointed by the Minister of public education. School committees, appointed by the mi- minister in all rural municipalities, eliminate the action of municipal councils, which would probably have been beneficial in beautiful in a special case, and thus allow the city lodges to have all days lay hands on the schools in their neighbourhood (1).

(t) Here are the main articles of the law:

Article 4. – Religious instruction is left to the care of families and of ministers of various faiths.

A room in the school is made available to ministers of religion for this purpose.
to provide religious information to children of their communion attending school.

Article 5. – Primary education necessarily includes morality, the reading, writing, basic arithmetic, the legal system of weights and measures, elements of the French, Flemish or German language, depending on the needs of localities, geography, the history of Belgium, the elements of the drawing, the con the birth of geometric forms, the elementary notions of natural sciences
They also did gymnastics, singing, and, for the girls, needlework.

Primary education can receive extensions in localities where they •have recognized as possible and useful.

WAR ON CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

513

The Belgian episcopate strongly protested against this system, and after having exhausted all avenues to inform the public authorities Regarding the consequences of this law, he stated that Catholics could not in good conscience send their children to such a place schools nor participate in any way in their administration, and Everywhere he encouraged the creation of free Catholic schools, pla- created under his exclusive direction (1). Indeed, nothing is more serious for the future of the country, an education where God is not present. A Catholic deputy, Mr. Janssens, said it with a great Eloquence in the House of Representatives:

"God's law must be first and remain the most important." of their knowledge.

"He captures the first glimmers of their intelligence in order to anger them
We must delve into their thoughts. We must seize every opportunity for development.
new of their faculties to make them enter more deeply into

Art. tf. – The books intended for teaching in primary schools are exaundermined by the improvement council and approved by the government.

Article 7. – The teacher neglects no opportunity to inspire the pupils with love and respect for national institutions and public freedoms.

In his teaching, he refrains from any attack against religious beliefs.
grievances of the families whose children are entrusted to him.

(1) Here is a summary of the joint deliberations of the Belgian bishops, according to the Gazette de Bruxelles, September 1, 1879:

"After a lengthy examination of the situation, they jointly decided on the resolutions the following actions, the seriousness of which will not escape anyone and of which we are measure to attest to complete authenticity: 1* had what concerns the teacher training colleges refusal of absolution to all teachers and all students attending these establishments blissements; 2* religious instruction given in secular schools is considered dismissed as schismatic; consequently, all teachers who give this teaching again and excommunication; 3* refusal of absolution to all institutions lay guardians indiscriminately, even to those who would refrain from giving the instruction religious instruction in schools; as for children attending schools As laypeople, they are considered to have acted without discernment, and as such admitted provisionally to make their first communion. These resolutions were communicated referred to the deans and parish priests, with orders to inform the faithful of them advocates for the next one.

These resolutions are in accordance with the constant doctrine of the Holy See and with the course that the Catholic episcopate has always followed in similar circumstances, particularly in Ireland, the United States, and the Netherlands.

The Frère-Orban ministry tried, in one of those long-prepared parades, hand, familiar with the parliamentary system, to claim before the chambers that NSP Pope Leo XIII had disapproved of the conduct of the episcopate Belgian. This lie, despite the audacity with which it was produced, did not take long to to be unmasked, see the declaration of Cardinal Deschamps, Archbishop of Malinos* on the alleged disagreement between the Belgian bishops and the Holy See, in the Bien public (of Ghent) of December 1879. This Masonic maneuver has completely turned to the confusion of its authors.

II

33

514 Freemasonry in Belgium

their minds and in their hearts knowledge and love. All those who took care of Christian education, either within their families, or in schools', know how many opportunities there are to associate with lessons that we give to children, this strong and beneficial thought, which elevates and ennobles, we find in how many circumstances, either in the works of nature, or in the facts of history, occasions for to raise children's thoughts towards God, to make them love his goodness, to make to fear his justice.

"Everyone recognized how useful it is to connect objects which ideas of a higher order strike the senses and earthly thoughts higher and more important.

"And we are more convinced that these rapprochements are in the right order" of Providence as one discovers the numerous analogies Supernatural world. The best books written for children in all genres. languages, those whose specific purpose and effect is development to nurture nascent faculties, to ennoble first impressions, by a word to elevate, all have given a large part to religious thought.

"None of these will be able to serve in your schools, and it is distressing in thinking of the sickening, cold, wicked and stupid task, to which we are going to have to give ourselves up: to compose books for Christian children which have, if not the direct aim, at least the effect of making them forget that God should have the first place in their hearts.

Let there be no mistake about the scope of the provision which allows priests to come and give special instruction at certain times: it's a hypocrisy of the law and nothing more. The Philadelphes lodge of Verviers stated this clearly from the outset. 1875:

"Secularization of education. The Atel.*. believes that a good teacher
A SECULAR WAY IS THE MOST POWERFUL WAY TO LIBERALIZE POPULATIONS;

The priest must be removed from the school.

Faced with the uprising of the people, F.*. Van Iiumbcck deemed it prudent to manage the transitions, and by a circular ministerial decree of September 20, 1879, he prescribed to schoolteachers to bring "no innovation to the practices followed so far" regarding to prayers and religious symbols placed in classrooms. Moreover, he enjoins them, "as a result of the clergy's refusal, to give himself, religious education in schools, to supplement the ministers of religion and to have the religious lessons recited according to the catechism approved by the diocesan ordinary / »

THE WAR ON CHRISTIAN EDUCATION 515

Nothing has changed outwardly from the previous state of things and Inattentive people may believe that the principle of the law The news is abandoned. On the contrary, it remains standing entirely. and Freemasonry has not retreated in the slightest. This teaching of the catechism The schism is indeed given, not in the name of the Church, but of by the administrative authority; not by virtue of the law of the land, but, by virtue of a ministerial circular, which will be changed from hand, as soon as the Liberal party has escaped the electoral dangers which threatens the violent blow dealt to the faith of the Belgian people.

To better conceal their tactics, the skilled boxers will to the point of accusing the ministry of weakness and desertion by an avant-garde organ.

The Journal of Belgian Freemasonry, a weekly review

a high-ranking member of the order published a virulent article in March 1880 against the ministry, where we read this:

Freemasonry, which has done so much to obtain a radical revision of The law of 1842 suddenly saw its tendencies and aspirations disregarded. naked by those who had the mission to stipulate in the name of human progress "Native and to react vigorously against ultramontane doctrines."

"This negative result," he adds, "was bound to dampen the enthusiasm." the zeal of the convinced masons and to stop the magnificent momentum that has made us to win the victory in 1878 (1). »

We consider this article as further evidence of the action lodge politics; but the conservatives, who would believe in this a Masonic domestic quarrel would show very little experience Error in the tactics of cults.

The law of July 1, 1879 was limited to organizing secular schools. In order not to increase popular resistance which could have The ministry has been trying to make him lose his only majority vote. held there. 11 has only since then been content to file a a virtually identical bill concerning secondary education; the law against the freedom of higher education will come to the next session. But we must not forget that in 1860, in 1863 and in 1877 the lodges decided on the establishment of instruction mandatory. This will be the subject of a second step in the inarche Masonic. Let us read these words extracted from the memorandum sent

(1) Reproduced by the Public Good of Qand, no. 30 of May 15, 1980

516 Freemasonry in Belgium

in 1877 at the Grand Orient of Belgium, by the Amisphi lodge – lanthropes, and we will see that Freemasonry will not back down before none of the consequences of his principle of despotism:

- What is compulsory education, if not a conscription of All children under the banner of civilization, conscription well fairer than drawing lots, because it is fruitful and productive, And what is its general nature? – What is the obligation of education? otherwise the overriding reason of public utility, as in the case of expro* the primacy of property, private interest, and even the rights of the individual, "There, the right of the owner; here, the supposed freedom of the father?"

The law passed in June 1879 was only a prelude for the lodges. They are already sketching out even more destructive plans for complete freedom, and even if it took them twenty years to prepare for it gradually swayed public opinion. They did not want a single vote.

the transfer of power; but they are seeking a legal formula for granting the right to fly only to initiates. Article 1 of the The program of the liberal convention adopted in 1870 reads: "Attribution of the right to vote without property qualification, for the elections provincial and municipal, to citizens possessing a degree of education "Instruction determined by law!"

This is quite reminiscent of the idea of the civic sacrament of F.*. Bluntschli (Book I, Chapter V, § 6), and it is at least curious to note that it occurs in Belgian lodges after the relays tions that they had with this character (1).

Belgian Freemasonry wants to extend the same system to women's education, as she sought to do in France with Mr. Duruy under the Empire, and as she tempts him under the Third Republic (Book II, Chapter XII, Section 9), with the proposal Camille Sec's law on girls' high schools*

As early as 1875, the Philadelphus Lodge of Vcrvicrs revealed this to us. secret design of Freemasonry through this deliberation:

Women's education must be given the utmost care and to be brought up to the level of modern progress. Alongside primary schools mayors, it is established that middle schools and boarding schools be founded where the pa Liberal pensioners can ensure their daughters receive a complete education and reasonable (2).

(1) See the Bulletin of the Grand Orient of Belgium 1873, 2nd issue.

(2) Produced in the Courrier de Bruxelles of September 1879.

Freemasonry and Charity 517

The Journal of Belgian Freemasonry, March 1880 reiterates this demand and requests that the Liberal ministry ensures that women receive this reasonable education (1).

We know what this expression means in the language of the lo- ges: it is the negation of all religious belief and the boost given to all passions.

IV – Freemasonry and Charity

Freemasonry, wherever it comes to power, confiscates the property of the poor and destroys the foundations of Catholic charity to then place the burden of the poor on the budget, create the the poor person's right to assistance and the organization of functional bodies

France did it in 1790, the Italian revolution accomplished it in our days, and we have spoken of the misery that ensued for the people (Book II, Chapter X, § 8).

In Belgium, the French conquest had confiscated the patrimony monk of the poor. Since then, the assistance of the needy has rested largely on the charity offices established in each municipality. However, one of the draft laws on primary education mayor, prepared in 1863 by the Verviers lodge, had an article thus conceived:

"Poor parents may be removed from the list of dis-
"relief contributions from charity offices and other establishments"
"Public institutions, until they submit to the law."

In a Grand Orient ceremony, in March 1877, this question was adopted in these terms by the FF.*. Aug. Couvreur, Duriau, Féréol Fourcault, Aug. Jones, Alb. Lacroix, Ad. Le Hardy de Beaulieu and F. Van Meenen:

"Can charity offices deprive people of all aid?"
any poor individual who refuses to send their children to school Free, secular, and compulsory municipal education?

The answer was a resounding yes without any reservation.

The lodges never abandon their projects. After the instrumental-

(1) Reproduced by the Bien public, of Ghent, of March 30, 1850.

518 Freemasonry in Belgium secularism, if their representatives remain in control of power, the

The Belgian people will undergo compulsory education, and with it assistance Public criticism will become a new weapon in the hands of the despotism.

Even Masonic zeal has already begun to make use of it, and one cited several charity offices, which spontaneously, have refused public assistance as a general measure to poor families vres, whose children attended open Catholic schools by the bishops in view of the state's atheist schools.

But Freemasonry will not stop at half-measures. sure. In 1875, the Philadelphes lodge of Verviers posed as an article from the Liberal Party's program, the secularization of public charity, especially orphanages and hospices of orphans.

Unfortunately, we already know in France what the Freemasonry provides public assistance: the circular from Mr. Iléroid, Prefect of the Seine, to the directors of the hospitals. The rate in Paris clearly shows what becomes of freedom of consumption. science of the poor forced to endure it. On the other hand, the majority Masonic members of the Chamber of Deputies continued with zeal the expulsion of the clergy from charity offices and administrative committees of the hospices and the appointment of their members by the municipal councils. A proposal in This meaning, presented by Mr. Plessier as early as 1876, was taken up again in 1878 and became, with some slight modifications, the law of August 5, 1879.

Is it because of the use that Freemasonry counts in to do, that the French Republic, the organ of the dictator Gambetta highlighted this law as one of the most important measures aunts carried out during its session by the Chamber of Deputies?

11 Belgian lodges have been requesting the se-
The cultivation of cemeteries and church councils. It is a articles from the current ministry's program and it is sad to see to highlight the servile emulation with which French Freemasons, once in power, they hasten to copy it (Book II, Chapter XII, $6).

On all points, it is therefore still the same plan that is executed by Freemasonry for the benefit of the United Revolution Verselle.

THE MASONIC TRIUMPH

513 »

V. – Masonic triumph and outrage

TO THE PAPAUTIA.

It is in vain that, in order to consolidate precisely the harmful work Regarding the secularization of education, the Belgian ministry tried to introduce some purely temporary adjustments, admitted administrative and arbitrary, in the application of the law of July 1st 1879; the result was nonetheless achieved and Freemasonry of the The whole world saw it as a triumph.

On June 29, 1879, a meeting of Dutch Freemasons and Belgian Freemasons were meeting in the logo Gclclcrsche broe –

Belgians, he told them:

"You could not have chosen, dearest brothers of the south, a more
"I'm happier for our interview than this one; you
"You have just accomplished in your homeland a work of which human-
"Nilé is grateful to you; you have wrested the consequence-
"a primary matter in the hands of an intolerant clergy to make it "in the hands of the neutral state (1)."

Since then, Masonic exultation has never ceased. A new food was provided to him by the attack on the rights of peoples committed Against the Holy See, the Belgian ministry speaks of the expulsion of the nunciator apostolic. Already, in one of the preliminaries of this measure, the new
The powerful Scottish Masonic organization in France addressed its Congratulations to the Belgian lodges:

"...An important first step," said the Bulletin of the great Scottish Symbolic Lodge, in its July 1880 issue, comes to be done in Belgium in the path of the emancipation of ideas clerical, by the suppression of the accredited representative of the Pa-
The lodges are not unrelated to this interesting result.
tat. »

The House of Representatives, in November 1880, has

(1) Look at all this speech full of savage hatred against Christianity in the Chain of Union of January 1880.'

518* Freemasonry in Belgium

crowned these insults to religion by refusing to attend the Te Deum celebrated according to custom for the resumption of parliamentary work comments and which the king attended.

Proud of this success, Belgian Freemasonry wanted to continue The Scottish Rite Supreme Council concluded a solemn treaty with the Grand Orient, on March 5, 1880. The The disputes between these two powers concerned only rights reception to be touched; agreement on all political measures was perfect; but amidst the general prosperity of the lodges, These minor conflicts have been definitively resolved. All the names of the Liberal parliamentarism is at the heart of these documents, including the Solemn formulas would be amusing, if the actions of the lodges were not Not so serious.

The fiftieth anniversary of national independence, celebrated in the midthe place of mourning for the nation's Catholic majority, provided to the
The sect takes the opportunity to assert its power through demonstrations

The order organized a performance at the Brussels opera house a gala event, where all members attended wearing their insignia, and where they performed The Magic Flute, whose Masonic libretto which served in 1790 as a rallying point for the affiliates of Vienna, and which The impious Strauss wanted to have the choruses performed on his tom-Beautiful. Freemasonry always preserves its symbols.

At the same time, the municipal authorities were giving a public sanction for these celebrations by posting them throughout the city, the following opinion:

CITY OF BRUSSELS

Police measures during shows and popular festivals events organized by the Masonic order, for the celebration of the 50th anniversary of national independence.

"This is the first time," said the Courrier de the following day. Brussels, which the official poster, on white paper, informs the public awareness of the existence and flaws of the Masonic order. That is where A sign of the times. It's clear that Freemasonry reigns supreme. and governs. These holidays become official celebrations.

These feasts took place on August 23rd and 21st (the 23rd and 21st days of the

THE MASONIC TRIUMPH 518'

7* months of Tan of the true light 5880). The Chronicle, a of the lodge's organs, speaks of the first in these terms dis-crets:

"The first evening took place in the temple on Rue du Parsley; as it is the rule not to divulge what is passing inside the lodges, we will not speak of the Monday evening.

On the same occasion, Freemasonry organized in Brussels congresses of all kinds, which are discreet means for her. of meetings and recruitment. The most important was that of Information. We borrow the report from the Fran-Spanish:

This congress was organized by the League of Education: it is It's enough to say in what spirit it was prepared. But what is more significant What is truly remarkable is that, with such a background, he was awarded the presidency. Honor to Mr. Van Humbeck, our Minister of Public Instruction that, and that he accepted it. The effective presidency was granted and editor of Belgian Independence.

"There is hardly a speech that has shown us any mercy" the usual tirades about ignorance, superstition, and abuses of Middle Ages. A speaker declared that Protestant countries prevailed tent on Catholic countries from an educational point of view; another, that the Morality is not learned in catechism; Latin and Greek have had a rough few minutes; aren't they defended by the je-sequels? Several times the republic was praised with applause comments from the audience; a Portuguese man exclaimed that the congresses of instructidh would bring about the universal Republic; a Frenchman made res-to realize that we had the happiness of living in a republic in our own country. Mr. Fouchcr de Careil, who lacked the tact to remember the speaker of the Mechelen congress, bowed to the University of Brussels, He said he should not confuse it "with universities that are not free, who do not know independent science and dogma "suffocates." This allusion to the University of Leuven is amusing; for after all, What serious and impartial mind is suitable for anything other than science? from Louvain can at least stand comparison with the elo declamatory cadence of the French senator.

"If, however, one seeks to extract from most of the oral pieces stories that have been told, the idea that inspired them, we arrive at this conclusion that, for free thought and radicalism, under the patronage swimming in which the congress was held, the school must replace the Church.

518* Freemasonry in Belgium

Mr. Couvreur, the president, was the first to indicate this desideia* tum: "The churches," he said, "sometimes complain that science is invading raises their domain; they want to keep the monopoly on the brand. morality. I wouldn't want to offend any opposing beliefs. to my own; but I cannot help but express this conviction that where conflicts of this kind erupt, they arise from the feeling The masses are sometimes unaware of the inadequacy of education. religious. People feel that the school, by expanding the sphere of Their intellectual capacity also elevates their souls, purifies their atmosphere moral sphere, and better than the pulpit or the confessional, better than the repressive law, better than judges, police and prisons, turns against immorality, the conscience of man and judgment all-powerful among his peers.

"In my opinion," said Mr. Francolin, "religions are systems." comprehensive educations, which formerly responded to questions with dogma problems that science is working to solve. However, for those whom the cult of Our fathers have ceased to interest us; we must look to modern scenes. something to replace them. Therefore, the only possible system is education. integral cation of the elements of all knowledge. That is the a program that is essential for all countries and all governments.

is based on scientific principles; on the contrary, it will be bad vaise, if it is based on dogmatic principles. The school must be "Secular in order to be national." Mr. Vanderkindcre exclaimed: "The ideal To create a modern man, it would be necessary to introduce him to teaching. science is the management of the results achieved by humanity. Our material prosperity, the foundation of all intellectual prosperity; it "It reveals to us the secret of life, of the universe."

"Besides this fundamental idea, there are two others which make country with many members.

Several speakers recommended the introduction of the policy in the school. One of them, Mr. Tempels, said, "I would like to see the policy should be incorporated into the curriculum, even at the university level. especially in middle and adult schools that education po litigation can take place; but it is undeniable that a course in political law litic, instituted in higher education establishments, is necessary serious and useful to the highest degree. The necessity of the absolute separation of Church and State and of religious education "of each individual by themselves, without any official intervention." As a consequence, Mr. Tempels requested the establishment of a course in The history of religions (1): "The State," he said, "does not defend itself sufficiently.

(tl) Note the establishment of a chair in the history of religions at the Collège de Franc

THE MASONIC TRIUMPH 518*

He must do justice to religion, which tends to encroach on the land. "Politics, this phantom that I summarize in the history of religions."

Is that all? No. Here is a whole squad of speakers who recommend In order to mandate military education in schools, Mr. Jean Macé advocated the first this reform. After him came Messrs. Tempels and Perga- ly. "The day will come, I hope," he said, "when teaching will become mandatory. What could be easier than bringing it into Children's education, military education? Some have proposed tested: a Before giving children a military education, said one Austrian captain, Mr. Dunord, that they be given a good education religious." But this opinion did not seem to prevail. Radicalism wants a large army, placed under the orders of a power of which he is the master, and called upon to triumph over all resistance, especially from that of the Catholics.

"The final word was spoken by Mr. Buis, one of the leaders of the Ligrn" From the education sector: A stronger impetus, he said, will be given in the future to the propaganda of the League of Education, in order to ar river to implement the main proposed improvements.

in favor of introducing politics into schools. He is linked to an accentuated movement of Belgian Freemasonry to arrive to a revision of the constitution made in such a way as to remove from Catholics the freedoms guaranteed to them by the fundamental pact (1). But we must not delude ourselves into thinking that this movement will go further. and will go beyond the realm of political issues to address the social question. The newspaper entitled Journal de la Franc-Belgian Freemasonry, and which represents the young and active party of lodges, engaged in very active propaganda in favor of suffrage universal, which she expects not from the vote of an assembly resulting neither property-based suffrage nor general unrest, but of a movement whose nature it does not indicate (No. 22° j.\ of the 12th m. - . 1879).

The same newspaper also publishes in almost every issue mero of articles whose socialist tendencies are indisputable bles. Here again, whatever the wealthy bourgeois may think which feed the lodges' coffers, it represents the true in favor of a freethinker, by the radical French chambers, in December 1879.

(1) See in the Revue générale of November 1880, the quotations made by Mr. 'Woeste: The progress of the evolution of liberalism in Belgium.

518th Freemasonry in Belgium

the spirit of Freemasonry. Without it, what would this passage mean? from the lodge inspection report addressed to the Grand Orient of Belgium by F. Optât Scalquïn:

"What strength, what support, what resources can she devote to her a great work of humanity, in its ceaseless struggle against reactions bent on its destruction? Does it find within itself, in the laws that They shelter, in the manifestations of public opinion, what is necessary for him. What will it be like to resist its enemies?

"For this is indeed an immense, solemn, grandiose battle; everything announces that the 19th-century funeral will be celebrated amidst the the most astonishing spectacles that people have ever been given to contemplate. What weight will we carry in this formidable clash, in this melee? who would have tempted the genius of Homer (1)?

Aren't such words an arousal to everyone? social upheavals and the prelude to the cataclysms to which Will Freemasonry have led modern society?

(t) Journal of Belgian Freemasonry, 31st j.'. of 8th m.\ 1880.

CHAPTER FOURTEEN

THE UNIVERSAL REPUBLIC INTERNATIONALISM AND SOCIALISM

I. – THE FINAL DEVELOPMENT OF THE HUMAN IDEA

Weishaupt, in the instructions for the grade of A'Eoppte, threw this threatening statement:

The seed is sown, from which a new world must emerge; its roots
The cines are spreading, they have already become too strong, too widespread to that the fruit season hasn't arrived. Perhaps we'll have to wait a while longer.
to last for thousands and thousands of years; but sooner or later nature will consume it.
her work; it will restore to humankind the dignity that was its destiny born in the beginning. So let the laughers laugh, the mockers to mock. He who observes and compares what nature has done to other-* times and what she does today, will soon see that, despite all our "Through games, it invariably tends towards its goal."

Around 1825, a famous Freemason, Blumenhagen, said in a speech to a lodge:

"The Freemasonry order has finished its childhood and adolescence" cence. Now he has become a man, and, before his third When the century is over, the world will know what it has truly become.
That is why the spirit of order watches attentively, ahead of time and From the spirit of the world, it takes root in every corner of the earth, and is firmly established in the heart of the country. And since the whole world is the temple of order, the azure of the sky its roof, the poles its walls, and the throne and the Church its pillars, then the shepherds of the earth bow down

520 THE UNIVERSAL REPUBLIC

will do as they please and will abandon the government of the world to us, and to the people the freedom we are preparing for them. May the master of The universe gives us only a century, and we will have arrived at this but thus designated in advance. Then the peoples will seek their princes amidst the relics of the past. But, for that to happen, nothing must Let us slow down the work and let our building rise day by day. Let us place, Without anyone noticing, stone upon stone, the invisible wall rises.
will always be solidly higher 1 (1) »

Since then, events have certainly unfolded: the power
The Pope's temporal power is destroyed, the Bourbons no longer reign. part; imperial Germany, unified Italy, Austria delivered to parliamentarism and subjecting the Church to a regime of distrust, France as a republic, sufficiently testifies to the universal reign of Freemasonry. However, the great work is not yet finished.

The Masonic World said very recently, in an article official statement on the role of Freemasonry in the future:

a ... Such an association could not perish, because of an evolution progressive progress has been achieved... Humanity will continue to progress. That is its law. When what has long been regarded as an ideal is realized, the broader horizons of a new ideal offer to human activity, all days moving towards a better future, new fields of exploration, new conquests to be made, new hopes to be pursued (2). »

This great work goes far beyond a change in the political map of Europe: he goes so far as to destroy all the nations and to raise the universal republic upon their ruins. The war to the papacy and the Catholic Church must lead to a change the most radical thing in the world, to the destruction of all thought of future life, of all social ties, of all individual rights over the ground, in short, to the restoration of this freedom and this equality primitives, celebrated by Jean-Jacques Rousseau, Weishaupt and Saint-Martin, where man would be absolutely like the beast forests.

The Universal Republic – Socialist Communism
The International, – and finally Russian Nihilism, thus appear logically and historically, as a successive development of the Revolution. The savage sects that propagate them are

(t) Zeitschrift für Freimaurer als manuscript, 1828, p. 320, cited by Pachtlef, Über Götze der Fiumamtøl, \>. 450.

(2) Le Monde maçonnique, April 1876.

THE UNIVERSAL REPUBLIC 521

all come out of the lodges and only apply in their latest res consequences the doctrines of Freemasonry.

Freemasonry is certainly often in conflict with these new New secret societies: Mazzini, Karl Marx and Bakunin, who of our time represented these new phases of the Revolution tion, have clashed more than once, because it is a logic vengeful dence, which always fulfills Camille Des's word windmills: The Revolution is like Saturn, which devours its their own children! But there are also secret lairs, where the leaders Sects agree on their work of destruction. The present chapter will provide the evidence.

IT – The universal republic.

Based on the principle that every man, like an emanation tion of the unique substance, is an absolutely independent being, that he is king and God, Freemasonry teaches that there is absolutely No right exists without the consent of the people. This consent is essentially revocable, and, as he said one of the men most deeply imbued with his spirit, Jefferson, "a the people have, every eighteen years, that is to say at each renewal generational shift, the right to change one's government and to to go bankrupt. A constitutional monarchy cannot be that one step on the path leading to the republic. The homeland, Nationality, in itself, does not constitute any right that can be to chain sovereign individuals. Similarly, in a country,
The sovereign people were able to destroy the provinces, the corporations, local freedoms, so that sovereign humanity can and must destroy particular nationalities. "The nation must not tolerate
"There is no intermediary body between it and the citizens," they said.
revolutionaries of 1791. By virtue of the same principle, the IIumanitô Freemasonry must not tolerate any intermediaries between the Grand everything and sovereign individuals. The idea of it has long been around.
is formulated.

In 1792, a deputy from Cantal, speaking at the Jacobin lodge-club, Milhaud exclaimed, regarding the union of Savoy with France:

&22 THE UNIVERSAL REPUBLIC

"Ah! If it were true that the awakening of the people had arrived, if it were It's true that the overthrow of all thrones should be the next step.
of the success of our armies and of the revolutionary volcano, which each re Gion, having become free, then forms a government in accordance with the extent greater or lesser than nature has determined for it, and that, of all these national conventions, a number of extraordinary deputies form at the center of the globe a Universal Convention, which watches over without ceases to uphold human rights, to the general freedom of the corn* merce (1). »

Mazzini was the great propagator of this idea: he wanted to to arrive step by step by successively establishing the republic democratic in every country. At the end of his career, he was so well prepared by Protestantism and Freemasonry, the seeds these are from his work;

Universal Republican Alliance.

a. Dut of the association. – To affirm the right of every country to govern itself to be born in a republic and, consequently, the duty of all republicans to unite among themselves to form a republican solidarity.

a. Form of organization. – The association must be composed of sections... These sections will be so many representations of the various republics, while their delegates, gathered in a council central, will represent the solidarity of the republics, whose realization is the ultimate goal proposed for the work of the alliance.

"Means of action. – Fund financed by contributions to paid by its members, in the form of fraternity fees, fixed taxes advance payments and voluntary donations in support of the cause.

a Central Council. – Must be composed of a president, a secretary to keep quiet about finances, a secretary of deeds, and as many secretaries as possible that there will be two nationalities represented on the council. Each secretary silence, thus representing a present or future republic, will be the accredited minister of his own section and the intermediary with it. will be responsible for the affiliation of its members and their membership in orders of the central council. These secretaries, after the first year, will be elected by the various sections.

"The actions of the central council will be secret."

"Subordinate councils will be established. The list of members will be communicated to the central council in the manner that the latter will have indicated.

"General orders and regulations will be issued by the central council."

"Affiliation. – Any existing association, of whatever name–

'! ' Cited by Tliiers, History of the Revolution, vol. IV, p. 43i.

THE UNIVERSAL REPUBLIC

523

tion, whether in schools, colleges or communities, can to join the Universal Republican Alliance, provided that this association communicates the list of its members to the central council, subscribes to the same profession of faith, and pays the affiliation fees.

"Special Agents. – Appointed by the central council for all matters necessary for the organization or expansion of the Republican Alliance Verselle.

"Publications. – All publications that will emanate from the alliance" will be printed under the authority of a committee, exclusively elected for this matter by the current council.

"Affiliation tax. 25 cents."

a Profession of faith. – a I believe in the Republic, which is the organization the formation of a free people based on the equality of social rights and policies, as the only means for a people to express and to to translate his will into action, for the fulfillment of his own destiny and of its duties towards humanity.

a. Just as I believe in the necessity of a republican organization a suitable framework for each people, so that they may reach their full development From a moral standpoint, I am forced to believe in the necessity of an organization republican for all nations of the earth... I believe, therefore, to the solidarity of humanity, to the duties of one people towards another people, and the duties of each individual, not only towards his their own country, but towards the whole world.

"I therefore believe that it is a sacred right and duty for every nation" and for every man to help in every way possible the efforts of others three nations and other men for the foundation of a covenant universal public.

"And I am obligated, as a member of this association, to help in any way I can." my power, and by all means, the propagation and realization of this profession of faith.

This program had barely been published in New York (January) 1867; that the Italian followers echoed him by spreading through The following proclamation:

"Italy's enemies being the Senate, Parliament, and the Statute, and everything that is the work of the Piedmontese monarchy, it is absolutely necessary the desire to overthrow the monarchy, the sole and true cause of the misfortunes PEOPLES.

"The Italian Universal Alliance, which claims to be in contact with All free peoples demand that this be fulfilled throughout the world republican unity, and announces that, as for Italy, there exists a supreme committee, currently secret and invisible, to which each com The accomplice must obey even at the cost of his life, exposing himself, if necessary, to the torments, rather than betraying his brothers, and by obliging himself to take lay down arms as soon as the hour strikes, and not abandon them that when the goal has been achieved (1). »

THE UNIVERSAL REPUBLIC

We will discuss later the role that Mazzini played in the foundation of Y International and the reasons why it was eliminated (S 5); but the ideas thrown out by this terrible propagator of thought The rise of sects has made its way into the United States.

In 1872, in his proclamation to the people for the inauguration of his second term as president, Grant, the elected and representative of the Radical Party, issued an official proclamation with these words inconceivable to those unfamiliar with the language lodges:

"The civilized world tends towards republicanism, towards government the will of the people through their representatives, and our great republic is intended to serve as a guide for all others... Our creator is preparing the world to become, in due course, a great nation, which does not will be one language only, and where armies and fleets will no longer be necessary saires (2). »

It is the same thought which, in 1866 and in the following years tes, inspired these congresses and peace leagues, which prepare would cause the explosion of 1870, and to which so many honest people gave their support rashly. It was enough to have followed along with Some care was taken with these methods of secret societies to know that they advance towards their destructive designs precisely by throwing prey to the minds of our time, devoid of all rules, sonorous words and humanitarian dreams.

The true meaning of these demonstrations and these gatherings nions is given by the expression of hatred against Christianity nism and the Catholic Church that emerged within it. They have, to the point From the sect's point of view, the advantage of propagating their ideas through retention the information provided there and to group the elements that they use read later.

(1) Gazette du Midi, August 1868. See also attached document IV).

(2) Grant became the man of this part of Freemasonry in the United States which, more advanced than the majority of lodges in the country, is waging a systematic war against Catholicism, in 1874 he spoke out as no president had ever done. He had done it, for the secularization of schools and the fight against the clerical spirit the real reason why an entire, very active party wanted to perpetuate it to the pre-residence, and despite its "shock in 1877, wants to postpone it a third time in 1881. treatment of all constitutional precedents. {See contemporary United States,

THE STUDENTS' CONGRESS AT ALLEGIANCE

525

III. – THE STUDENTS' CONGRESS AT ILGÉ IN 1865

One of the most significant meetings of that era was the Congress of students gathered in Liège in 1865. We must go there to stop, because its members are now at the head of International, of Freemasonry or of the Gambettist administration in France. It was one of the signs of the times, according to the words of the Bishop of Orléans, and even today his debates indicate to us They are well aware of where the Cosmopolitan Revolution stands.

More than a thousand young people, from Germany, Spain, from Holland, England, France, and Russia were present there. sent.

They were first received at the Town Hall by the mayor of Liège, surrounded by the aldermanic college, and greeted by the magistrate like the elite of studious youth, like the young apostles of freedom and progress, they then proceed, preceded by Flags of various nationalities, towards the Grôtry casino, hall of dance hall and singing café, where the general sessions are to be held. There the congress is constituted. The president of the organizing committee The sateur of Liège, in turn, extends a welcome on behalf of the university youth, and is responsible for presiding over the assembly; the The assessor commissioners for France are: Rey and Regnard; Sarro de Magallone, for Spain; Schramm de Joug for the Hollande, etc. The son of the mayor of Leuven represents there Brussels; Goudry, Ghent; Gobert and Derguiny, Liège; of Secretaries are chosen from various nationalities, and the con grès is open with the question of teaching as its object.

Regnard, on behalf of French youth, thanks the from the University of Liège.

"Having come from France, where freedom was once also practiced, he hopes, he said, to get back to a learning process during these four days that will not will not be difficult; he will work bravely on the work of renovation. social or progress-oriented.

And Mr. Optât Scailquin, a young lawyer from Brussels, – today member of the House of Representatives, one of the leaders of Liberal party and Freemasonry, – he cries out in the middle of a tone

THE UNIVERSAL REPUBLIC

A tribute to France, which must still have hope, when it counts Such children within its fold! Honor to the fighters of thought! for having opened this platform, accessible to all principles... The Nir belongs to the youth; everywhere they will compete in devotion so as not to to bend the knee neither under the threats of intolerance nor under harshness of despotism... Let us therefore address all questions of education Let's stir up the masses! Let's shake up the social idea in all its depths!
Otherwise, the work would be incomplete. What is its purpose? (n'cst-co pas de réa-) to read all the reforms, to ensure that one day the people, confused due through the exchange of their products and through religious tolerance, will be able to to extend a fraternal hand to each other, above the debris of their barriers.

"In Madrid," the speaker continued, "when the students protested..."
the resignation given to one of their masters because of his opinions
If they're too liberal, they call in the army, they cut them down, they trample them under horses, and the people applauded their resistance... In Vienna, when academic authorities want to force them to attend anniversaries
They refuse to accept concordats, and the people agree with them.
In France, in Prussia, it's the same story, and seeing this, I said to myself:
My brothers, love this youth, for it is worthy to serve this a great cause of progress and freedom.

In one of the sessions the following day, the editor was heard of one of the most important organs of Belgian liberalism, the Pré-
Mr. Arnould, from Antwerp, said among other things:

Education is anarchic because society is anarchic. that, contradictory. There are not two institutions of which one can say which exist for reasons of justice.....

"I'm moving on to the moral order. Where do we stand? Here, we have..."
Again, and despite ourselves, we don't have all of Catholic morality.
on the other hand. – It is officially taught and followed in the hearts of masses. How can you expect a contradictory society, which only has ideas that came from who knows where... be serious and complete in their...
Education? Discussing education before discussing society.
That's not wanting to be practical...

"How do you want to bring back this immense humanity that we we do not yet know, which has only been partially revealed once, to the French Revolution, which was so great that we live
"All of them with this breath for the last eighty years?"

And with this energetic declaration, the speaker descended from the tribune, greeted by unanimous applause. There had therefore, in this congress of youth from all countries, exit state-run schools, unanimous sentiment against the

THE STUDENTS' CONGRESS AT LIÈGE

527

Catholic and Christian beliefs and morals are unanimous. adherence to the doctrines of the French Revolution, including 1793, unanimity against the current social order, which does not count two institutions founded on injustice.

We had to acknowledge this first, and yet there was between the members of the congress of violent struggles, of oppositions in Harsh and brutal words. What was the subject of them? We will let it be explained by one of the speakers, Mr. Fontaine, from Brussels. the, young orator with a red beard, of honest build, to the careless attitude, typical, it is said, of the bourgeois farocrat of the Belgian capital:

"Before we begin," he said, "I would like to clarify a point of order." my name and to say that I am not the double of Mr. Jean Fontaine, of Liège. Mr. Jean Fontaine is a lawyer, I am currently a publisher. from the left bank; the lawyer is a spiritualist and a disciple of Cousin, the publisher is a materialist and an apostle of Proudhon. I wish to establish these differences, because it could harm us; because we are all Two born in Belgium, to Belgian parents. I was baptized Belgian, by virtue of The civil code and the Catholic clergy. But I have no homeland, and you... know: ubi libertas, ibi patria l »

But what is this freedom? Mr. Fontaine will tell us at the end of his speech:

"You want freedom of education... it doesn't exist in Belgium." gic; freedom of education is impossible in a constitutional state tional... Who will give you this absolute freedom? It will be given to us. through this synthesis that we call the Revolution: read Edgard Quinet, he He'll explain it to you! It's a molten substance, it's equality, it's the abolition of all privileges, and since our program includes: Everywhere We discuss major social issues; socialism must enter into fully engaged in the issue of education. Capital must be serfs. work. 11 You need to know that every individual before going to The school must have eaten a piece of bread. And it is work that... will give it to him; therefore you must admit the Revolution and the enormous lops. But I'll tell you what we want, we Revolutionaries and socialists: we want physical development.

The moral and intellectual aspects of humankind. Note that I say physical first.
intellectual afterwards. We want, in the moral order, through annihilation from all prejudices of religion and church, to arrive at the negation of God and at free examination.

528

THE UNIVERSAL REPUBLIC

"We want, in the political order, through the realization of the Idea of Republic, to achieve the federation of peoples and the solidarity of individuals.
In the social order, we want, through the transformation of property, through the abolition of heredity, through the application of the principle of association Through mutuality, we can achieve solidarity of interests and justice! We we want, through the liberation of the workers first, then of the citizen and then, for the individual and without distinction of class, the abolition of all authoritarian system.

After Mr. Fontaine, from the Left Bank, comes Mr. Georges Jan-his, a dark young man, with a vibrant voice, proud gestures and The tone of the challenge, the reports say. He calls on the youth to the study and teaching of politics.

"Politics belongs to you by virtue of your age, because in youth
It seems that we have more upright and higher views. The young People these days have almost abandoned politics. It's not what was done in ancient times in Rome and Athens. Similarly, we have seen in a famous era, where we must forever seek models of political life and character, the Dantons, the Saint-Justs, the Camille Des mills, the Marats, bravely venture onto the burning ground revolutions. That's where you need to find your examples, that's where you'll see some Intrepid hearts, there you will see all of youth rise up, armed of new ideas, against the past centuries. You will finally see the cry, the a true cry from the people, raised in response to the call of a 22-year-old man, Camille Desmoulins (1). (Loud applause!)

"We talked about the Republic and socialism. There is one thing certain-

(I) The following passage from the Chain of Union (year 1878, p. 147) shows that Mr. Janson, by thus making the apotheosis of Camille Desmoulins in Liège, expressed the current thinking of Freemasonry. The author of the article, F.*. Emile Corra, addressed to the category of people who think that in the period of civilization that we have "Freemasonry is useless," and he responds "with facts and with..."
names. "

and of most flourishing charity; for it currently numbers more than 8,000 lodges spread throughout the world, lodges which have 500,000 active members and nearly of three million inactive members, united in a common inspiration.

"By names, because it saw in its ranks the Condorcets, the Dantons, the Babeuf, the Camille Desmoulins, the Lalande family, Abbé Grégoire, the Hoche family, the Kléber, the Lacépède, the Lafayette, the Lavatc, the Laplace, the Mirabeau, the Thomas Paine, the Proudhon, the Saint-Just, the Washington (the Masonic World, t. IX, p. 227, ajouto to that list of "glorious" names Hébert, the "Father Duchosno", Santerre, and elsewhere Mazzini); and even now she enclosed within her bosom the Brisson, the Crémieux, the Jules Favre, the Garibaldi, the Garnier-Pagès, the Pelletan, the Louis Blancs, the Gambettas, the Littrés. No, no, France-reacon-Nerio is not useless... No, no, his time was not fleeting, and today, Now more than ever, she must renounce the sacred work she has undertaken.

THE STUDENTS' CONGRESS AT ALLEGIANCE

527

The ultimate goal for all high intelligences is the abolition of all privileges, based on race or birth, and all the distinctions of order and caste, that is what the government of the nation by herself by means of universal suffrage, without being hindered by the pressure from a clique or a single individual is in the wish of humanity, and All these things are encompassed by the word "Republic."

Most Belgian representatives say the same thing.

Let us now listen to the main representatives of the schools of France. We first meet Mr. Regnard, from Paris, member of the office door:

"We have just recalled the idea of God; I, for one, am attached to the positive Visme. There have been two teaching methods; only one is good. the positivist or experimental method, that of Bacon, of the encyclopedias pedists and Auguste Comte; it has also been called materialist, name on whom many insults have been hurled: I believe that we should not I deny it; I accept it; I declare it frankly: I am subdued. realist...

"Count, following Diderot, our great Diderot, has truly deserved to humanity. The Middle Ages was a dark period, where a few Only the bonfires lit the world. It was fatal to humanity... I believe that, if the man called Julian the Apostate had succeeded, perhaps-

m

I take this opportunity to pay tribute to a man who did not
Mr. Littré never sought any position, any honor.

"We are also for science, for Germany, we believe We are born with Kant and Hegel; but I believe there are men who make more services and which are making progress on them. The philosophy of the Nature must be the basis of all knowledge; we attach our flag to the men who proclaim materialism; every man who is for progress, is also for positivist or materialist philosophy list. "

Mr. Lafargne proclaims "that no divine intelligence governs human actions; that spiritualism cannot achieve any morality.
He acknowledges, however, that "Catholicism is the most strong that was invented in terms of spiritualism. There are four
For a hundred years we have been undermining it; it is still solid, unfortunate "seeding." Then, undertaking the praise of our great master to "All," Puoudhon adds, "Here is the most beautiful word that humankind..."
manity has heard: Now that we have re-
We are standing tall, yes, we possess justice, faith, without fearing a soul that lives in heaven, on earth, under

"Earth... We will be honest, for the love of honesty."

u w4

528

THE UNIVERSAL REPUBLIC

What probity can there be for someone for whom God is evil, and the property theft, for one who recognizes neither God in heaven, nor authority, and consequently neither truth on earth, nor even Satan in hell, when it is repeated everywhere in every tone, and inspired by Him, his cry of revolt and hatred? Also, a few days later, the same Lafargue, in the last session held in Brussels, ended his motion with the cry of hell: "War on God!"
Hate God! Progress is here! We must break through the sky!

LIKE A PAPER VAULT.

Should we now report the motion of the French student?
Germain Casse, now a member of parliament, speaking of declaring the reli-Catholic church powerless in its teaching, of demand der "the total, complete exclusion of any individual who represents, to whatever degree, the religious idea, which is the idea of in to take a clear position. We must leave here in a clear position.

Paris or Rome, or Jesuit or revolutionary, if the word does not "You don't mind!..."

And in Brussels, the following year, where the minority, the spiritualists
The students from Cousin's school did not dare to surrender; one could hear
This demand, a corollary to the previous one:

"What is the Revolution? It is the triumph of labor over the pital, of the worker over the parasite, of Man over God! That is what We want. That is the social revolution that the principles entail.
From 1989 onwards, human rights were pushed to their ultimate consequences...
In the presence of such a great and pure principle, he You must either hate or prove you love... Citizens, we have just praised of France; France is nothing. It's because we are men, not because we are French, because we are something. No narrow borders! Fraternity must prevail.
stirs the world. One day, a great artist cast a metal statue,
He ran out of bronze; he took iron, tin, silver, he He mixed everything together, and his statue emerged radiant from the furnace. The Revolut this statue that we must create, we ourselves. Let all cooperate in the work True! Let's close ranks!

"Citizens, I ask you for an oath. We are men."
Well then! Let's swear hatred to the bourgeoisie, hatred to capital, and a right to work!
Vail; no, that's an absolute concept, a right for workers! United Let us rally, let us gather around the red flag... The red flag,
It is the call to arms, the people fighting and triumphing. In 1830,
In 1818, the people, etc., were not generous, but duped. The question is:

THE STUDENTS' CONGRESS AT ILLEG

529

if we will endure slavery any longer. Let's be clear, because* frankly, boldly revolutionary, or else let's return to Home, and
"Let's kiss the Pope's mule!"

And there you have tolerance, the fruit of state-recognized teachings. These en-the teaching of children by the State, to the point where they have led this She doesn't want any more of youth. It's Mr. Armengaud, a French student.
çais, who will also proclaim it, even in Liège:

"You heard," he said, "that energetic cry (by an (Glais and a German, Messrs. Gobert and Burcke): War on superstition, to fanaticism, prejudice, theology, theocracy! That's good;
This is also the cry of my heart. But what should our plan of action be?

This morning, if not an apology for force and violence? I'll...
To prove it, I shout with them: Long live the Revolution!... incompatibility beyond material power and moral power, budget cuts Ecclesiastical and academic: that's what the word Revolution means...
The sole purpose of the State is to protect material order; for me,
The state must be reduced to its simplest expression. As has been said, it
"He must be nothing more than a policeman!"

But it was in Brussels that, rid of Cousin's disciples and doctrinaires, agreeing on the principles, but dissenting For appearances' sake, the youth educated in state schools have explained with even more candor, reinforced by the company Supporters and editors of Liberté:

"I see women here," said Citizen Sibrac, a French student, "I
We thank them for coming. It's important that they understand why.
We are fighting, they must understand our aspirations. Biles, don't must not remain outside the revolutionary movement. Biles no They will not fail us, I'm sure of it. It was Eve who uttered the first cry.
of rebellion against God.

"So Freemasonry, as we have seen, cries out in unison.
Eva! Eva 1

It was again in Brussels that citizen Brismée made his move.
to quote these words:

"We are preached about tolerance: no tolerance! when we are told..."
Catch us, we'll be killed. The day we become masters, we must...
Let us use our strength to found the republic. If there is a need for 1 1
"Guillotine" we will not back down! Citizens, it is only on this condition
It is a wonder that we will no longer see scoundrels shouting today: Long live

530

THE UNIVERSAL REPUBLIC

The republic! Tomorrow, betray it, stifle it, assassinate it... If the republic Geoisie, just like in 1848, is closing its workshops, come on now!... Like
If the people didn't have the right to seize the workshops, then they should be closed to
If property resists the Revolution, it must be done by decrees of the people Destroy property. If the bourgeoisie resists, the bourgeoisie must be killed.
Citizens, as you know, today good people are murderers. and thieves... It's not the petty bourgeoisie I'm attacking, it's slave, and often more of a slave than the workers. I blame the bour capitalist, aristocratic and banking geosis, the one that makes the laws and our "Misery. That one must perish."

And citizen Pellerin:

"I am a worker and it is in the name of the workers that I demand the role. We talked about the guillotine, we only want to overturn the obstacles. Six hundred thousand heads stand in the way, let them fall. Yes!

Next come the thanks to the French students:

"Citizens," said a Russian student, "I am not used to speaking in public; in Russia, we were silent, as you know. I thank you from the bottom of my heart. French students, on behalf of Russian youth, materialized ideas. Your developments at the Liège council, and I hope that one day they will come to help us achieve the triumph of the materialist cause.

Already in Liège, the member of the bureau representing Spain, Mr. Sarro de Magallone exclaimed that the days of the congress were the happiest moments of his life, and explaining how, at Liège, because of cholera, the students in Spain generally had died. If they were lacking, he promised instead to bring many of them and was eager for the next congress.

Citizen Caesar of Pace succeeds the Russian student and comes also, on behalf of the Belgian socialist workers, to thank the students in French words:

"We have just heard you thank the Belgians," he said. We ourselves owe you thanks, you who came to us. Give strength, French citizens! The words you have heard. They must support you if you need support. You have given that in Belgium there are positivists, atheists, revolutionaries. Everyone wants social reform. A month ago, I was in London. There, as here, as everywhere, the movement is the same. Germans, English, Belgians, French, Swiss, want socialism based on the science; you too, student citizens! This vast union makes our force. In the past, only privileges reached out to one another over the borders... Now work and science are doing the same. I applaud. "Tell us to unite science and labor, students and workers."

LS CONGRESS OF STUDENTS AT ILLÈGE 531

Finally, the student Rey, a member of the office in Liège for France, He responds to these congratulations as follows:

"Citizens, or rather fellow citizens, for we are all of the same homeland, for eighteen centuries the people have suffered and worked. Alongside them, suffer like him, work like him, some men, despite the Inquisition, despite the dungeons, despite the stakes, studying and bringing so obscurely, silently, sometimes secretly, their stone to the building fact of science.

"Today this building stands, and its rich architecture shines in the eyes of all. To get there, we have one word: Justice! To achieve this, there is one way: Revolution!

"Freedom will soon reign, the slaves will become the masters, he There's room for everyone in the bright sunshine of Revolution 2.

Who doesn't recognize the Masonic temple there, the vast, elevated edifice to independent morality, and completed by state education, on the ruins of all nationalities?

From these quotations, says the Gazette de Liège, to the reports from which we borrowed them and which were transcribed in shorthand by its editors on the very tables of the congress, the most revolting aunts have always garnered applause from a portion at least a notable figure in the assembly; there was sometimes unanimity to protest against a spiritualist speaker, never against a materialist or atheist. The majority of the assembly was not frightened words alone: – too sharp or too cruel, they aroused protests mations; but the same doctrine, better veiled under terms softened, it no longer aroused this repulsion and provoked immense Bravo! Mr. Arnould's success is undeniable proof of this. gnage. Wasn't that, moreover, the logical consequence of the doc- the trines of state education in France, as we have demonstrated by irrefutable evidence? And the president of the congress and its organizer, Mr. d'Hoffschmidt, in his closing speech Didn't he say that the congress was what it was supposed to be?

Moreover, citizen Fontaine from the Left Bank expressed his opinion on the matter. Thus, at the last Brussels session: "In the minutes The Belgian press has shown generally due to gross ignorance or bad faith. She has will always truncated, altered, falsified, sometimes deleted the speeches delivered; she did not dare to conclude: she backed away, as always, faced with the affirmation or negation of principles revolutionary social and atheist movements that occurred. However A choice must be made; one must believe or deny!

532

THE UNIVERSAL REPUBLIC

"Only one newspaper, just one, acted in good faith. That was the Gazette." of Liège, and this because she is frankly Catholic, apostrophes Tolic, Roman... She published a complete analysis of the de- bats (1). » considerations of the sentence rendered by the academic council of Paris, which excluded certain students from state schools (2). The Journal des Débats wrote on this occasion:

"To which generation do these young people belong? No Didn't they treat at college about fifteen years ago, at least "Where did the current regime take root?" This was written by Le Temps. in turn: "Shouldn't we ask the institutions and to the teachers who shaped these young people. of what im- pressures and what lessons could be learned from the documents "Trines so sad, so negative, so desperate?" (3)

Isn't it finally the Revue de l'instruction publique which, on in a completely opposite tone, and as if to justify the masters, dared write: "The student meeting in Liège has a very real existence laughing and serious, and even though the congress would only have served to to give an indication of the high trends in which young people feel comfortable generations, that would at least be a result that comes at a price (4). »

Shall we now say that this meeting of students and... vriers, in Brussels, starting from the primary state education system, Secondary and higher education, all sharing the same foundation: naturalism. pantheism, the hatred of religion under the guise of superstition and fanaticism, transformed into a vast secret association which covers Europe and whose trial on January 5 in Paris has cons-

(1) These reports have been compiled into a brochure under the title of Inter-Congress national student association. 1866, Liège, 3rd ed.

(2) See the Moniteur of December 18, 1865.

(3) These quotes are taken from the Gazette du Midi, December 4 and 5, 1865.

(4) To say, wrote the student Pilon, in a letter to the Gazette de France, May 29 1868, to say that the teaching of the medical school is not materialistic, but it is Deny the sun! SK Castelnau, a writer of dubious character and very well-informed, says he, VerSy found nothing there, in an article in the Moniteur scientifique, July issue, but three spiritualist professors; the rest breaks down as follows: eleven atheist professors materialists, and twelve uncertain ones. Mr. Castelnau thinks, memo, that among the latter There are many names (he mentions five) that could legitimately be passed on in the category of atheists; "but the list of these," he said, "is quite decisive by the number and, even more so, the scientific value of the names of which it is composed to justify the assessment of an eloquent cardinal* that the major of the faculty is "Materialist..." (Gazette du Midi, October 18, 1868, Paris correspondence.) (Universe, October 31, 1868.)

and international in Geneva and elsewhere? Shall we say that in ■ New Congress of Geneva, of Students and Workers, God and the religion was dismissed by common agreement, as were the ideas of religion.
gieuses were declared harmful to the people and contrary to U human dignity, where morality was proclaimed independent of religion, that they were talking about organizing strikes in Europe menses, invincible, and to push back into the social question the in-intervention by any authority, by any government. "Such is the
"A flood," said Liberty, "that is rising and that in twenty years will cover everything."
This, says another newspaper, is the new Freemasonry.
whose members may one day number in the millions my, and who receives the order from a secret committee (1). »

Shall we say that in the meeting at Café Mathieu, on November 7th
In Paris, a letter from the high-ranking Freemason, Félix, was read and seized.
Pyat, urging the association not to just speak like in Liège, but to follow the examples of their brothers who did not No newspapers, but barricades, not congresses, but plots, which did not go to Liège, but were encamped in Saint-Merry, calling for new regicides, a new Convention, new Louvels, new Alibauds, new Orsinis,
There is atheism at the archbishopric, socialism at the town hall, the Revolution at the Tuileries? To arms, citizens, form your battalions!

Would we say that this association is already pushing its members to solidarism, and that it was Aristide Rey, a medical student, at which, says Mr. the imperial lawyer Lepelletier, the congress of Liège has made a name for itself, which led to the drafting of the statutes read to the audience by The same magistrate?

Society: Act as you see fit

"T. Whereas he alone is an honest man whose actions and convictions are always in agreement; that it is not permissible to treat with contempt certain practices and to submit to them;

"II. Whereas conscience condemns all religions, these directing man by the most unworthy motives: self-interest and fear; that our more enlightened intelligence rejects the various beliefs of primitive peoples transformed into religious dogmas; that reason...

(t) Cited in the letter of Bishop of Orléans on the signs of the times, Douniol, 1566.

gives truth, science, and that good, inseparable from truth, cannot to exist with the false doctrines of any sect;

"III. Whereas the communion of ideas between man and woman can alone found a family; that a rational education is necessary – to the child; that he instill in him beliefs in opposition to All that his nascent reason reveals to him is to distort his judgment. blinding his mind, perverting his conscience; that our weakness towards the defenders of the past, to whom we abandon women, is the a major cause of suffering for our modern societies;

"The undersigned pledge never to receive any sacrament." from no church. They don't want religious ceremonies at the wedding. nor to death, they do not want religious initiation at birth.

They do not form any secret society, nor have any other positive link in three others than the registration in this register, and cannot meet "only to perform the final duties for one of them."

But will it be said that these declarations cannot bind the Freemasonry, and that the speakers who read it were not Bricklayers?

Here is an indisputable answer:

"Didn't Proudhon, one of the greatest minds of this century, have Were the young men at the Liège congress not received into Freemasonry? They weren't received as Freemasons? Yes, certainly; we offered them the hand, and we said to them: Work with us! b

It was at the Masonic convent on June 13, 1867, that he spoke thus. F.*. Garrison, and his words were immediately recorded in the Masonic World (July 1867), as recognized Official confirmation of an undeniable fact!

Some time later, the lodge L'École mutuelle, which had In Paris, the most prominent men of the young bar received so one of the students, F. Grenier, whose theses materialistic and anti-patriotic, admitted to the faculty of medicine, had been slygmalized by Mgr Dupanloup (1).

(1) Le Monde masonique, May 18CS. In his doctoral thesis, P.*. Attic he wrote: "Patriotism, the principal virtue of the peoples of antiquity, is no other something that the altruistic law is limited to the fatherland. Therefore, this sentiment Nuant, and while it was a progress at the beginning of history, times will come, They came perhaps, where the way of Ciro will only be the reaction, of the ar-developmental delay, a vice. F. – . Grenier rejects in another passage all freedom to man; but on the other hand, he declares it possible that locomotives have passions and desires.

These are the doctrines that Freemasonry embraces, because they are the final logical development of its principle.

SOCIALISM AND FREEMASONRY 535

Moreover, Belgian and French Freemasonry proclaims, under the in the name of solidarism, the same statutes, spreads everywhere the ma-free marriage and civil burial.

IV. – SOCIALISM AND FREEMASONRY

Socialism and communism necessarily stem from principles of Freemasonry. We have already, through analysis of its rituals and the books of its principal founders, shown how its doctrines destroy at its root the right of propriété (book I, chapter VI).

Since man is posited as an end in himself, it follows that For him, the right to all pleasures.

The last socialist manifesto published by Le Révolté de Genève, on the occasion of the workers' congress in Marseille (September 1879), It begins like this:

"Considering that every man, by virtue of his being a man, has a right from his birth to equal satisfaction of its needs and equal development of all his faculties.

But this is precisely the old doctrine of the declaration of the rights of man and of the citizen of 1793, classifying the pro-privacy among the natural rights of man by charging the law, that is to say the omnipotent State, to fix this property.

This is the doctrine of Condoicet, one of the men who had penetrated most deeply into the doctrine of secret societies:

"The Jacobins," said Ma Ion, "adhered to equality before the law, the only "Compatible with the institution of private property." Condorcet "was more revolutionary when he said: 'Equality' in fact, the ultimate goal "Social art (1)."

Ragon also indicates the same thing as the ultimate goal of The royal art of Masonry:

"It is to Freemasonry alone that we owe the affiliation of all the classes of society. She alone could effect this fusion, which, from her within, has passed into the lives of peoples. She alone could promulgate

(1) Exposition of the socialist schools, by Malon (Paris, Lechevalier, in-12, 187?p

THE UNIVERSAL REPUBLIC

53?

CCTTC humanitarian law, whose upward action tends towards the great unity social formation, a march towards the fusion of races, of diverse classes, of Customs, codes, traditions, languages, fashions, currencies, and measurements. Its virtuous propaganda will become the humanitarian rule of all cons sciences.

"Every generous reform, every social benefit, stems from it,"
And if they survive, it's because Freemasonry lends them its support.
This phenomenon is due solely to the power of its organization. Its past... belongs to him and the future cannot escape him. By his immense leverage of association, it alone is capable of achieving, in a general communion trice, this large and beautiful social unit, conceived by the Yellows, the Saint-Simon, the Owens, the Fouricr. Whether the masons will it, and the generous The ideas of these philanthropic thinkers will cease to be vain.
utopias. – The social movement, moreover, he adds in a footnote, has since long occupied Freemasonry in general and the Grand Orient of France especially (1).

Nothing could be more accurate: all the founders of social systems lists emerged from within its ranks and the Masonic lodges have all days supported socialist propaganda.

Buonarroti, the founder of French and Italian Cliary Lienne, the tireless propagator of all secret societies during the Restoration period, he removed a former accomplice of Babeuf;
He had appeared with him before the high court of Vendôme. Far away.
to renounce the communist principles he then professed (2), he have infiltrated the Carbonara's constitution:

"In the origin of the centuries that we call the golden age," said the speaker Starred in the Vcnclita with the rank of Grand Elect, our meetings were unusual tiles, my good cousins. All men, obeying the simple laws of nature, were good, virtuous and helpful; all their virtues their sole purpose was to prioritize the practice of charity.
The land, without any particular owners, abundantly provided the necessities
It was useful to all those who cultivated it. Their needs were moderate:
Fruits, roots, and pure water were sufficient for the sustenance of men.
"my and their partners..."

And, to restore equality of nature and the community of goods

XXXVIII of its constitution:

(1) Course on ancient and modern initiations, pp. 46 and 47.

V. Conspiracy for the Equal of Babeuf, Brussels, 1828, vol. I, pp. 86, 87 and Malon, Exposition of Socialist Schools, pp. 26, 27

SOCIALISM AND FREEMASONRY 53*7

"The tax will be progressive... The poorest will only pay one percent." one-fifth of his income, the richest will pay six-sevenths; we observe will see the progressive rule for intermediate classes (1).

Saint-Simon is considered by all Masonic authors as one of the illustrations of the order, and in turn Enfantin, in a letter to General Saint-Cyr, thus uniting Saint-Simonianism with the Carbonari and the Jacobins:

"To sympathize with Saint-Simon today, the men of thirty to forty years old must have sympathized with Foy, Manuel and Lafayette, and the men of sixty, with Mirabeau, Saint-Just and I I'd almost say Robespierre.

At the time when Fourierism was seeking to spread, the logos Masonic lodges in Paris provided him with sympathetic support. Jau- The people of Pompéry were members of the lodges, and held conferences there. rences and found proselytes there(2). Later, as we saw, The same thing happened in Paris with the spread of VInter-national.

This is the tradition of Freemasonry everywhere. In 1845, the lodges Belgians bestowed Masonic honors upon Eugène Sue, and the socialist novelist, in his response to the lodge La Persévérance from Antwerp, explicitly stated that "the Masonic lodges were at the head of the liberal socialist party" (letter of January 13, 1845).

On November 7, 1866, the lodge La Parfaite intelligence and L'É The canvases gathered from Liège affiliated with the Philadelphes lodge of London, to continue the work of militant Freemasonry and progressive (sic), and sent him a board in which she formulated This is what she meant by progressive Freemasonry:

"To banish from the mind the vain preoccupation with a future life and the the notion of a providence ready to rescue all distress; – to overthrow blind forces; – to humble the pride of money and privilege; – transforming charity towards the poor, which humiliates them, and seeking the rights of the poor who raise them up; – to equalize intelligence through education tion, fortunes through the proportional balance of wages, protections by laws that are equally respectful to all – to achieve justice

In 1868, regarding a proposed revision of the statutes of the Grand Orient of Belgium, Brother Jacobus said to the lodge of Philanthropic friends from Brussels:

- (1) Constitution and organization of* Carbonari, g 99, f 02 and t?8.
- (2) Le Globe, journal des initiations, 1839, p. 170 et seq., 1840, p. 144, 168, 210.
- (3) Quoted by Le Monde on January 16, 1807.

538

THE UNIVERSAL REPUBLIC

"These words (the passage: Working together, etc.) announce another reform, due to a decision of the League of Philanthropic Friends thropes. This workshop examined the issue of charity, and in a substantial report, concluded that the most effective way, the the most humane, the most Masonic way to practice charity was to push to contribute to economic and social progress, either by promoting the establishment cooperative societies, workers' banks, either by spreading the ins- instruction. It was following this report that a restaurant was established at cheap.

"To call on the people to conquer their own well-being, to help the minor classes to emancipate themselves through education, work and credit, This is, without a doubt, the most powerful form of benevolence, for not only She excludes almsgiving in the present, but she makes all protection unnecessary in the future.

"It is this transformation of charity into emancipation, of the charity in social institutions, from protection to liberation definitively, it is this doctrine, which could be called a practical socialism tic, which the project wanted to specify clearly in the first article the general statutes of Belgian Freemasonry (1).

Currently, the lodges in Paris are all joining forces to found a higher school of positive sciences, according to the positive method tivist, intended to scientifically propagate socialism in the intelligent classes, and with socialism this brutal materialism and this radical negation which is the essence of positivism and of Freemasonry (2). It is not in vain that F.-. Jules Ferry proclaimed in 1875 the identity of the two institutions (book I, chapter 1). II, § 15).

The Masonic World, which reports all these actions with administrative measures taken by the Grand Orient of the Netherlands against the L'Alpina lodge, because of its overly socialist tendencies accentuated, it seems, by this workshop (3).

Mazzini, in turn, while claiming not to be a communist, claimed to change the distribution of wealth and to make people govern collectively, work by the State:

"There are no inequalities of nature, no fatal inequalities of con
Despite the divisions and classes, inequalities exist that stem from

(1) Quoted by La Patrie, of Bruges, October 1868.

(2) See the program of this environmentalist and the account of the actions of the lodges this meaning, in the Masonic World, August and November 1879.

(3) of uovombre 1879, p. 314.

SOCIALISM AND FREEMASONRY 539

social forms, within the very element where life develops. and we must work to change these forms, to transform, in the name of God, in the name of the war that God commands us to wage against evil, to sin and its consequences, this element is susceptible to change perpetually. The physical world, humanity's great workshop, has
It was not given to a few, it was given to labor. The goods material, neither good nor bad in themselves, but instruments of good or evil, depending on the individual or collective destination they receive.
wind, belong to all those who work, and the distribution always The increasing production of these goods will yield fruits that are all the more useful, a more pleasing to God than the most advanced education of humankind will have taught men to use it for good (1).

The statutes of Young Europe contained these articles which left know that the door is open to all socialist ambitions:

"Art. 8. According to the law of God and humanity, all men are free, all men are equal, all men are brothers.

"Art. 11. Equality consists in recognizing for all the same right and the same duty, in that no one can be under to adhere to the law which defines rights and duties, and in that each person, pro in proportion to his work, he shares in the common wealth.
which is the product of all social forces put into action.

The first German socialist, the tailor Weitling, who in 1837 began his propaganda in Switzerland and Germany, had organized its societies on the model of the enlightened and the carbonari, and he used cbant associations to propagate them

We should therefore not be surprised to see Masonic lodges to provide the International with the first cadres (§ 5). Ac- still, despite the experience of the Commune, the lodges Masonic lodges continue to propagate socialism.

Thus, in Paris, in 1877, at the opening of the L'Homme lodge free, whose name is reminiscent of the title of Louis Blanc's newspaper, ie F.*. Minât, venerable of the L.\ Perfect Equality, makes a exposition and commentary on the social system of Louis Blanc (3).

Most recently, on June 28, 1879, the lodge Le Globe, of Vincen-

(1) Address to priests concerning the Encyclical of Pope Pius IX given at Portict U December 8, 1849-

(2) V. Frost, The secret societies of the European Revolution, t. He, p. 268 e* *

(3) La Chaîne l'Union, year 1877, p. 73.

540

THE UNIVERSAL REPUBLIC

born, listened to the funeral oration of F.*. La Chambaudie, "poet so specialist and apostle of Saint-Simonia (1). »

In Italy, the Masonic lodge of Palermo, known as Y Equality of the 10th In March 1878, in a circular sent to the press, he invited all SCS members to deal with social issues, CL states that Economic emancipation alone will bring well-being and happiness to the people.

V. – The founding of the international association of

WORKERS. – KARL MARX AND MAZZINI

It is also a mistake to represent VInternatio- nale as a purely revolutionary secret society, similar at the Société des saisons, at the Charbonnerie, and when it is represented felt as merely an expression of the social unease of working classes.

She possesses both of these traits, and that's what makes her stand out. a completely unique place in the history of secret societies.

The vast majority of its members are solely under the impression of suffering caused by the disorganization of the ancient system of work. They are prey to passions which are the continuation of the liberal regime applied to economic relations.

In this vein, they often curse the revolution of 1789, the bourgeoisie hoarded national property and destroyed leaders of the corporations; they even cover them with their imprecations the Masonic lodges, where they see, entrenched as if in a citadel, the bosses they have to complain about (see Introduction VII).

But to these feelings, one could find the equivalent in the social struggles of previous centuries, is added to the the internationalists a furious hatred against religion, a radical denial of God and the afterlife. This spirit of impiety It was inspired by their founders and is maintained by their leaders, all of whom belong to the large anti-Christian sect and who see in this uprising of popular passions the means to achieve the ultimate goal predicted by Weishaupt: freedom and equality forests on the ruins of religion and property.

[\\] Masonic World, August 1879, p. 161.

THE FOUNDATION OF INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION. 541

Their skill lay in seizing upon the feelings specific to working masses suffering under the modern industrial system, to servevir as a framework of their spontaneous organization in Trades-Unions, syndicates, professional societies. Through this they had a action much broader than that of exclusively revolutionary societies Mazzini's tionaries and policies.

They adapted to the temperament of the modern worker by rejecting all the fantastical apparatus that exists in Masonic lodges
It amuses the bourgeois, but it baffles the worker on the evening of a day born from hard labor. The International was therefore able to raise the veil almost completely and work in broad daylight. But she It always remains a secret society, because it is led in the shadow and the mystery by chefs who are in close contact with the other Masonic lodges, and often combine their actions with theirs. As a man who had wittily put it initially quite rashly engaged with the Fifth International, Mr. Jules Simon, "twenty years ago the socialists were sectarians, at "Today they are practitioners." (Radical Politics, p. 23.)

These two characteristics, combined in the Internationale, explain the two tendencies that sometimes occur within it and have led to a temporary split: some are socialist Jacobins

It is very instructive to note that the exclusive socialists, not wanting not entering into political struggles, have always been eliminated or absorbed by the socialist Jacobins.

We will now look at the earliest origins of this formidable association and how Masonic societies what his staff provided him:

"In March 1850, wrote in the German Universal Gazette of Leipzig, a man who initially favored communist tendencies, He had then completely separated from me; I had just been released. after being imprisoned, as a political prisoner, in a prison of Augsburg, when I learned, from a commissioner, of the existence of the league in the form of a conspiracy whose leaders were Engels and Marx (1). The following year, another emissary, Weidmeger, at* today, dead, came to visit me in H...., where, in full view of my political co-religionists, I accepted the position of president of the A commune, established in this country by the association. I attended in this capacity, in Frankfurt am Main, at a congress organized by the associations of Mannheim, Mainz, Giessen, Frankfurt am Main, Ha-nau, etc...

(1). Karl Marx, a wealthy and educated man, a philologist of note in universities German, is the son of Israelites converted to Protestantism. (Lasalle, the founder of a socialist association, which today feeds into that of Karl Marx (was also Jewish). Karl Max was in Rome with Weitling in 1847 preparing for the return payment by Pius IX (V. Bresciani The Jew of Verona 1.1. p. 75.)

542

THE UNIVERSAL REPUBLIC

"The party was then called the Communist Party; it was only later that it called itself democratic social. But under the very name of communisle, it already formed an international association, and one could read in The head of his program was: "Workers of all countries, unite!" This manifesto, printed as early as 1851, and which I have in my hands, contains exactly the program and main features of the International current. The propaganda has certainly followed since a pro-march aggressive; but, as for the organization, by 1850 it was already complete. From that moment on, the central fund was financed by contributions of the various members and of the Communes (1). »

The Universal Exhibition in London in 1862 gave to the association tion an immense increase.

met, says Fribourg, on the ground of production and Observation. Questions of labor, daily working hours strikes, even, and many others were expected and were supported. levies. Correspondence then took place between Parisian workers and workers English and others; on September 28, 1864, a public meeting, organized in Saint Martin's Hall, reunited again, and officially this time, said the same historian, the workers' representatives of several nations European. A month later, the post brought the founding pact to Paris mental, and the international association was taking possession of France (2). »

Mr. Winterer, in his scholarly work, Contemporary Socialism porain, thus completes the story of the birth of the International:

The most famous conspirator of our century, Mazzini, could not not to remain a stranger to the formation of this international league. He he, too, proposed a draft address and statutes; but it remained too himself, that is to say, Italian and a conspirator. – His address reproduced simply knows his political program, drowned in a phraseology

(1) Translated and quoted by Le Français on July 17, 1871. Ragou recounts in Bon Course, p. 344, that Krauso, a famous German Freemason, had proposed, as early as 1812, to replace Masonic mysteries with the institution of a society which he named Menscheitbund or Alliance of Humankind.

(2) The International Workingmen's Association. Origin, pp. 6 and 12, by EE Fribourg, one of the founders. (Paris, 1871, iu-12, Lechevaller, ed.)

THE FOUNDATION OF THE INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION 543

socialist. – As for its statutes, they called for centralization so rigorous, such an absolute dependence on the impulse central, that any initiative and consequently any development will become impossible to establish in local associations. Marx had the work of Mazzini, who withdrew in despair to his tent, abandoning the International to its fate. In turn, Marx presented an address and some statutes, which were unanimously adopted by the London committee; the The general congress in Geneva ratified them in 1866. The address and statutes The German socialists were far from disarming the central leadership which was to remain directly or indirectly in the hands of Marx; but they reserved the rights of particular associations and threatened "They aroused all fears and sensitivities (1)."

The association's supreme authority resides in its congresses. as in Freemasonry it is placed in convents. Congresses, like convents, meet every year.

The time and place of their meeting are indicated, as well as the matters which must be addressed there, by the congress itself, or by the general or international council, which is for the association what the Supreme East represents for Freemasonry. – "This nations belonging to the international association. It takes within it, according to the needs of the association, the members of the office such as president (2), secretary general, treasurer and Personal secretaries for different countries.

"Every year, the congress convenes to designate the seat of the council general and appoints the members. » The seat of these councils has been first in London; since 1873 he has been based in New York.

"Each section is sovereign in appointing its correspondents"

"These are the correspondents who..."

Beneath a subordinate appearance, the directors are in reality all powerful groups.

(1) Mr. de Lavoley has just recounted, in almost identical terms, the founding of The International (Revue des deux Mondes, March 15, 1880). In the conferences At the London preliminaries in 1862, Mazzini was represented by his secretary, the Major Wolf.

(2) Two years later, in 1869, the Basel congress adopted the following resolutions yours: "Considering that it is not worthy of a working-class society to maintain in within it a monarchical and authoritarian principle by admitting presidents, during even if these were not invested with any power, the purely honorary positions being yet another attack on democratic principles, the congress in pledges all sections and workers' societies affiliated with the international to abolish t presidency within their ranks.

II

35

544

THE UNIVERSAL REPUBLIC

"The general council has the right to admit or refuse affiliation" tion of any new company or group, except the call to the next congress.

"The general council also has the right to suspend until the next congress a section of Pinternational. Any group, of For its part, it may exclude a section or a company from its membership. without, however, being able to deprive it of its international character, but he will be able to request its removal at the next congress (1).

"Wherever circumstances permit, the central offices offices in the same language will be established. The members of these offices central, elected and recallable at any time by their sections respective, must send their reports to the general council one "Once a month, and more often if necessary." – These offices or federal councils, as they are now called, and the sections that name them, equivalent to national Orients and to lodges of Freemasonry.

It is not without reason that Assi, in the manifesto he addressed knows all Y International affiliates to ask them to to support the strikes at Le Creuzot, invoked the name of France masonry:

"In the name of social republican democracy," he said, "we let us loudly proclaim our membership in the great association in International Workers' Federation, this sublime Freemason the folly of all the proletarians of the world, this hope of the future, of equality... (2). »

(1) The entire national leadership of YI resides in fact within the General Council, It is interesting to note the names of scs ineml>rc 3. The fundamental pact, which It serves as the basis and form of its first foundations, was initially signed Odgers, Cre "Wheler, English workers* and arrived in Paris under that name and with signatures which were members of the provisional committee established in London. Approved by the At the Congress of Geneva, it adopted the name of the General Statutes. The General Council then of President Odgers, an English worker and carpenter, and of Secretary General George Kccarius, tailor, who had been so from the beginning; in place of Wheler, the tre- The secretary was Cow'ol Stopnoy. The private secretaries of correspondence were S. Shaw, for America; Karl Marx, for Germany; Besson, for Belgium gique; IL Yung, for Switzerland; A. Sabicki, for Poland; Johannard, for Italy; Eugène Dupont, for France; Paul Lafargue (Marx's son-in-law), for Spain. Since then, in 1871, Serraillier is said to have replaced Besson; Giovanni Bora, Johannard; Eccarius, while remaining secretary general, would be in charge of the correspondence with America; James Cohen would be the delegate from Denmark; John Wclon would have replaced Cowcll & the treasury.

(*2) VInternationale, Brussels newspaper, no. 24, April 1870 – Tcstut, L*Asso- International Workers' Association, octavo, 1870, pp. 34 and 98.

THE FOUNDATION OF THE INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION 545

Fribourg tells us, in fact, that the International was based on everything about Freemasonry; that through it the In International Freemasonry was penetrating Parisian Freemasonry, where it garnered strong support, and that finally Switzerland, the Bel France and America announced the creation of French groups socialist movement (1).

In April 1865, several Parisian lodges, notably Le Tem-

Lodge No. 133, The Rose of Perfect Silence, The Future, The Renaissance sance, united, at the instigation of Fribourg, to prepare the reunion union of a great congress of workers from all nations. We we do not know why this project failed (2); but the lodges nevertheless continued their support for the International.

Fribourg also recounts its active role during the elections de Pelletan and Garnier-Pagès, high-ranking masons, – the former even, venerable master of the Paris lodge, who first organized the association tion of those in solidarity (book I, chapter II, § 12), – had put him in contact port with groups from schools and the St-Antoine district, restless students or Blanquist workers, whom they did not disdain not to use, while despising them, the committee candidates of the thirteen, all high-ranking masons.

The founder and historian of the International adds further:

"Having made the acquaintance, we met again in the St-An- suburb toine, and when the Left Bank was founded, Fribourg was admitted in the small circles of the Latin Quarter. This explains how strangers to the world of work, such as Longuet, Emile Richard, Emile Maison, Robert Luzarche, Jules Ducrocq, Nauzet and Pierre Denis, were, from the very beginning, members of VInternationale. »

It was in these circumstances that Mr. Jules Simon gave his membership and accepted, from Fribourg, the membership card bearing the number 606 (3). Certainly, Mr. Jules Simon did not foresee not at that moment that Y Internationale prQnÀmiiiext aux incendies of Paris, and that he himself, the enemy of standing armies, the author of Radical Politics, would associate himself with the legitimate but harsh repression of the Commune as minister under Mr. Thiers.

(1) Fribourg, International Association, p. 31, The parliamentary inquiry into the Government of National Defence, de Sugny, 2nd report, cliap. 1",

(2) Le Monde maçonnique, May 1863.

(3) Fribourg, The International Association, d. 152 and 17a.

546

THE UNIVERSAL REPUBLIC

Like so many others in his party, he was inevitably led by the community to the first principles laid down by a philosophy that starts from the absolute independence of man vis-

of this man's adherence to a naturally benevolent spirit
That alone would be proof enough, even if it were just a few months later.
Later he would not have addressed the following letter to the Vin- congress international in Lausanne in 1867;

"Men who spontaneously gather in all countries" of the world for a common and noble purpose; who have no other concerns that contribute to the triumph of common sense and reason; who, in politics, in socialism, and in science, do not seek that the truth, treating brute force and routine with equal contempt, these two enemies of thought; an assembly that has no other president tooth than the one she chooses and other regulation than the one she
In fact, it's a spectacle that consoles us with the official truth, with official justice.
cielle, of the freedom granted by the menu cl of the truth stifled under the myriads of restrictions and conventions.

"Believe me: when I called from the podium for the abolition of the ar-permanent laws, the separation of church and state, and total freedom of the press with suppression due to the offense of offending public morals and re-My dear, I was not speaking to the Legislative Body, but to your council.
sandstone; I was bringing him my share in advance, just as I am sending him today "From today, I offer my support and best wishes from afar (1)."

Mr. Jules Simon was not alone in giving his support in this way.
to the statutes of VInternationale. A number of prominent figures politicians did not hesitate to do so either, and Mr. Fribourg cites expressly "Henri Martin, the popular historian, Gustave Cliadey, Proudhon's active collaborator, fell victim by Raoul Rigault, Corbon, the former vice-president of the Constitution the killer of 1848, and many others whom events separated later from the founding group (2). » All were removing Freemasons,
We saw that earlier.

Mr. Fribourg also notes the contribution that the group formed by The students of the Liège congress brought to the International:

(1) Reproduced by the Gazette du Midi on August 13, 1871 and most newspapers from Paris at the time.

(2) Fribourg, L'Association internationale, p. 431. En nofe, p. 132, he cites the articles written by Henri Martin, in Le Siècle de 1865, in Tuouueur de l'interna-Uo.tale*

THE FOUNDATION OF THE INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION 547

"While Parisian workers remained silent and studied, European students were meeting to speak at the congress from Liège; there Tridon, Protot, Humbert, Jaclard, Regnard, they put on a spectacle for the world, fighting with fury philosophical opinions contrary to their own. » Between Pro-Mr. Testut also names the student Rey, and Humbert, all delegates to the Geneva Congress of the International; Mr. Fribourg It even says in its history that an unholy program, or Association international of freethinkers of this same student Aristide Rey found followers there and enjoyed some success. The accounts- The proceedings of the Liège congress demonstrate, down to the last detail, dence these furious battles of the students of the International pari- his own, against what Mr. Fribourg calls philosophical opinions physics contrary to their own were nothing less than the belief in God and the Catholic religion, its morals and dogmas, and the principle of nationalities themselves, as Aristide Rey did.

At the Geneva Congress, which organized the International, it was posed the question that was supposed to be the touchstone of the association.

The French delegates, who were socialists of good faith, wanted to exclude from the association those who did not engage in to manual labor, who were not workers in the strict sense In short, the speakers who had, in the past, caused them So much disappointment. But the Germans, who made up the chosen group Karl Marx's team rejected this proposal. The International therefore remained open to all revolutionary elements of any kind Whatever the case may be: this is how Karl Marx, a man of letters, his son-in-law Lafargue, Dr. Buchner, the author of Force and matter, Lucraft, employed in London at the Schoolboard, Hins, the Belgian professor, General Cluzeret and so many other Jacobins bourgeois were able to continue to be part of the association and in made it possible to direct it. The question has often arisen since in local groups, but the clever ones always managed to get by. to maintain the politicians of the Revolution in their place the association's headquarters.

548 THE UNIVERSAL REPUBLIC

V, – The doctrines of the International and those hence Freemasonry.

•»

As for the religious and social doctrines of the International, We only need to read the documents published by the association itself. following each congress.

In 1866, she sent to the Geneva Peace Congress Eu-

he expressed himself thus:

"Citizens, the most ardent supporter of perpetual peace is in Undoubtedly the worker... He wants peace; but peace is not In principle, it can only be a result. Do you believe, citizens, that you will be able to reach it by the means that were proposed to you yesterday in creating a new religion – (the religion of the God-Reason of Garibaldi) ? – No, isn't it? Far from creating a new one, reason must destroy those that exist... Every religion is a despotism that also his standing armies: the priests... Don't these armies have not inflicting on the people deeper wounds than those they receive on the battlefield? Yes: those armies distorted the law, atrocious That's the reason. Don't clear out the barracks to turn them into churches: "Leaks, a clean slate for both."

And at the banquet that concluded this congress, the Italian Stéphane por This toast was silent:

"To Garibaldi, to the first citizen of Italy, to the great man European whose contribution gave so much impetus to the first congress of the Peace, to freedom, to the true regenerator of peoples, to Garibaldi!

The following toast was given by the Russian Bakunin:

"To the future of the League and future congresses, which, developing the principles established and increasingly uniting the scattered republicans in the world, can hasten the advent of true democracy through the federalism, socialism and 'aktithêoi.ogism (1). »

The following year, at the Lausanne congress, Albert Richard went so far as to say:

(t) Annals of the Congress of Geneva (Geneva, 1868).

DOCTRINES OF THE INTERNATIONAL AND OF FREEMASONRY 549

"In matters of education, we must oppose the immoral study of the The Bible, that of useful men.

And Murat added:

"The Bible is the code of immorality!"

Fribourg supplements these details with the following account:

"The freethinking movement was bound to find followers in The Internationale. Also the following play, a work by Mr. Aristide Rey, student, – (one of those from the Liège congress who had been so large

"International Association of Freethinkers."

"Society: Act as you think."

c I. Whereas only he is an honest man who agrees aligning his actions with his principles;

"II. That good cannot exist outside of truth and that there is no truth than that given by science; that it is important to separate the mo-progressive and scientific analysis of outdated dogmas that reason... damned, and which sentiment must condemn; which conscience rejects religious doctrines that govern man through fear and the most unworthy motives; that these doctrines have divided men by distorting morality and by corrupting the notion of law... »

And in conclusion, the play ends like this:

"Not a priest at birth,

"No priest at the wedding,"

"No priest at death (1)."

"They constitute, under this title: Society act as you think, a an association whose law is science, whose condition is solidarity, for But justice.

(t) Ftibovfg. International Association, p. 154 et seq.

This satanic association continues to spread. Here is the document published in The Marseillaise of August 1379:

"N® 1750. – Membership of MC.. (Auguste).

I am a great supporter of your association for the propagation of the faith civil. However, before my membership is published, I would like to be convinced that, thanks to the organization and statutes of the Society, this membership is irrevocat ble, that is to say, that it not be taken into account in my final moments, when I do not I no longer have the mind to lihro, of such a desire that I could formulate, contrary to n today resolutely expressed.

"If this is the organization of the Society, accept my full support today."
Miss, and publish my name if you deem it appropriate.

Please keep me informed of the progress our ideas make.
municipalities.

THE UNIVERSAL REPUBLIC

"The following document was attached to this statement:

"THIS IS MY WILL:"

"My last wish is not to be buried according to the rites of any religion."

religion, and I give to . the power to represent me before my family, to prevent the desecration of my body.

This is undoubtedly for the execution of this international program.

final list of freethinkers decreed by the Lausanne congress:

"1° Scientific, vocational and productive education, and the implementation to the study of a comprehensive teaching program; 2° organization of Y school-workshop; 3° considering that the term free education is a non-makes sense, since the tax levied on citizens bears the cost, but that Education is essential and no father of a family has the right to deprive one's child of it, Congress grants the State only the right to replace the father of the family, when the latter is powerless to remedy to fulfill one's duty. In any case, religious instruction must be excluded from the program (1).

And a little later, the London General Council, in July 1869, admitted as section Y International Alliance the final stage of socialist democracy, whose program, drafted by Becker, Bakunin, Albert Richard wore:

"The Alliance declares itself atheist; it wants the abolition of cults, the substitution of science for faith and of human justice for justice Divine! (2)

Moreover, from the very first days of the International and even in relatively moderate fractions, we find the same spirit.

The fundamental pact accurately reflects Masonic phraseology in the preceding considerations;

"Considering that the emancipation of workers must be the work the workers themselves; that the workers' efforts to con-

The inclusion of the Marseillaise proves that the awful deal offered by the a* 175*0 is subscribed. The contraction and spread of this association in certain large The fact that the Paris workshops exist is, moreover, a matter of public knowledge.

Mr. Ilérroid, Prefect of the Seine, has just given official consecration to this of which every patient must, upon arrival, declare whether they intend to receive assistance of religion and cannot, outside of this prior declaration, be visited by the chaplains.

(1) Fribourg. International Association, p. 155.

(2) Fribourg, International Association, pp. 129–131*

DOCTRINES OF THE INTERNATIONAL AND OF FREEMASONRY 551

seeking their emancipation should not tend to create new privileges, but to be established for all with the same rights and the same duties;

That the subjugation of the worker to capital is the source of all political, moral and material servitude;

"That, for this reason, the economic emancipation of the workers is the great goal to which every political movement must be subordinated.

a That all efforts made so far have failed, due to a lack of solidarity between workers of various professions in each country and of a fraternal union between workers from various countries;

a That the emancipation of workers is not a simple problem local or national level; on the contrary, this problem concerns all civilized nations, its solution being necessarily subordinate to their theoretical and practical competition;

"That the movement which is taking place among the workers of the countries the most industrious in Europe, giving rise to new hopes, gives a solemn warning not to fall back into old habits. errors and advises combining all the still isolated efforts;

"For these reasons,

"The congress of the International Workingmen's Association, held at Geneva, September 3, 18(36), declares that this association, as well as all member societies or individuals will recognize, as de truth, which should be the basis of their conduct towards all men, justice, morality, without distinction of color, belief or nationality.

"Congress considers it a duty to demand not only For the members of the association, human and civil rights, but also for anyone who fulfills their duties; no duties without Rights, but no rights without duties.

"It is in this spirit that the congress definitively adopted the statutes
"The following tuts of the International Workingmen's Association."

to definitively define the rights and duties of man in the whole world, and at the Brussels congress one of them was heard them, a deputy of the Swiss workers, named Catalan, was shout, usurping a word from the apostate and high mason Sieyès, that "the The revolution of the last century was contained in these words: "What is- What is the Third Estate? Good. What should it be? Everything. Likewise Today, to summarize the revolutionary movement, we can say naire: What is a worker? Good. What should he be? Everything. that is to say religion and papacy, society and magistracy, nation nation, kingdom, and republic! To him and him alone the priesthood, the Capital and property!

052

THE UNIVERSAL REPUBLIC

It is up to him to decree truth, justice, and morality, outside or without distinction of belief or nationality. He decrees, himself, five quième, to which are added fifty-five other individuals, that truth, justice, and morality are outside of all religion, of any belief, apart from God. That's it. that they decide against the entire human race since the beginning The beginning of the world!

And what then are justice and morality? What is the truth for affiliates who, in a sovereign congress, decreed the abolition of the presidency altogether, of the very word "president," Out of hatred for authority? What is truth, apart from... reason of the centuries, against the authority and testimony of all the 3 peoples since the beginning of time?

Justice, morality, law, rights – all these ideas imply a supreme authority, a king, universal sovereign, God in one word, from which all fatherhood, all royalty, all superiority derives or presidency, any power that binds and obliges, anything that can bind and to bind men together, to constitute them in society, in any association whatsoever.

Outside of that, what becomes of the groups, the sections, the federations? rations, general councils, and the congresses themselves? What What rights do they have? What authority do they have to make statutes and... binding laws; directing the actions of other men, work their and bourgeois; to do justice and morality, truth, the Rights and duties: determining where they lie, what they are? What man has ever had such power over one or more men? My? To merely claim so, isn't that despotism in its purest form? At the highest level, a monstrous tyranny?

Poor, honest workers! How you are being deceived, how They corrupt you, just as they erase your conscience itself.
even !

Following the statutes, nine or ten questions were discussed.
tions, on which the Parisian founders and the sections of The Paris branch of the International had sent a memorandum to the congress with the French delegates. In this memorandum, signed by all the French delegates (1), but only the German and English delegates
They found it not advanced enough, we read this:

(i) Among the signatories, the following were distinguished for Paris: Fribourg, Malon, M Tolain, Varlin; for Lyon: Nichant, Sccrcluiu; for Uouou: Aubry, Tousincueurs main international or Fiauce.

DOCTRINES OF THE INTERNATIONAL AND OF FREEMASONRY 553

"Work is still the act by which man manifests his vail man's strength, his morality; through work, man tames nature.
acquires new knowledge and rises to the point of deification himself, if it is permissible to use such an expression here, because Divinity is and has never been anything but the ideal of perfection towards which invincibly tends humanity through the complete development of its faculties.

How can one not recognize the doctrines of Freemasonry here?
and of F.*. Renan teaching that God is nature, that God is a word which, although old, should be considered an ideal For the people? This is the ultimate expression of teaching Cousin's philosophical approach, bringing back the triple infinity of God, nature, humanity, to a unique synthesis.

A little further on, the delegates of the Parisian International added this statement which recalls the reception of the rank apprentice:

"It is impossible for us to do, on this question (religion), something more than a statement of principles.

"Religion is one of the manifestations of human consciousness," respectable, like all the others, as long as it remains an internal matter.
individual, intimate; we consider religious ideas and all the ideas a priori as not being subject to useful discussion; each will think, on this point, what he deems appropriate, provided that he does not to involve one's God in social relations, and to practice
"What about justice and morality (1)."

A member of the Commune, Lefrançais, was therefore indeed self-employed.
ridiculed to say, in a Masonic meeting held in Paris, on April 26

My heart was with Freemasonry when I was received into lodge 133. one of the most republican, and I made sure that the goal of the Masonry and the Commune was the kid.

After having preluded, in the congresses of Geneva and Lausanne, the International declares, at the Brussels congress: "that machines, like all other working tools, must wind belong to the workers themselves and operate at their profit...; 2° that the means of communication, canals, roads, telegraph lines, and the forests must remain in the community social; same decision regarding land, mines, quarries, coal mines, railways.

(1) Fribourg, Revue internationale, p. 84.

THE UNIVERSAL REPUBLIC

55'

The Basel congress confirmed and further emphasized this denial of the right to individual property. It was decided there:

"1° That society has the right to abolish individual ownership of land and to bring the soil back into the community; 2° that there is a need to do to bring the land under collective ownership.

There were only four votes against these decisions, and in withdrawing The congress left, as a stepping stone towards the abolition of inheritances, the following considerations:

a Considering that the right of inheritance, which is an inseparable element individual property contributes to alienating land ownership e< social wealth, to the benefit of a few and to the detriment of the most large number; that, consequently, the right of inheritance is an obstacle, at the entry of the land and social wealth into collective ownership;

a That, on the other hand, the right of inheritance, however restricted it may be his action constitutes a privilege, the greater or lesser importance of which does not destroys the inequity in law and which is a permanent threat to the law social ;

"Furthermore, the right of inheritance, in all its manifestations, in the political order as in the economic order, is an element essential to all inequalities, because it prevents individuals they have the same means of moral and material development;

"Considering, finally, that Congress has voted in favor of property corroborated by the one that follows;

"Congress recognizes that inheritance rights must be completely and radically abolished, and that this abolition is one of the conditions the most essential elements for liberation from work.

It goes without saying that Richard, Bakunin, Varlin, Brismée and the Others having spoken out against the right of inheritance, it had to be abolished. in the program of the ['International Alliance for Democracy'] social.

Langlois, considered by Fribourg as an opponent, differed little. However, the majority; here are its conclusions, reported by Fribourg:

"1° The land, insofar as it is not a product of human industry belongs indiscriminately to everyone, and, by right, it has never ceased to belong to them. 2° The parts of this common domain, of this common and inalienable property could not be granted to a few; under certain conditions. 3° These conditions, which, history tells us, are there to demonstrate this, have often been modified, will be modified again, and they will have to be in each nation, as soon as they have been recognized there. contrary to justice and the public interest.

The Paris Commune and its accomplices

555

Carteret, also in the opposition, nevertheless said:

"Any owner who wants to rent out a building proves, by that very fact* "He doesn't need it: let him be expropriated."

We cannot here explain the nuances that separate the collectivists of the communists; these are among the socialists of school questions, all of which presuppose the prior destruction of the existing social order, the abolition of private property sort, finally the reconstitution of society by the omnipotent State on an imaginary plan over which they are divided. These divisions are primarily the result of personal rivalries; one cannot assume tending indeed to ensure that the wicked escape the causes of dissension that human infirmity produces even among people of good.

But these divisions do not prevent them from coming together for the destruction: all secret societies, Jacobins, Mazzinians,

Paris commune and, after a few years of division, they have reformed into a compact body.

VI. – The Commune in Paris and its accomplices

At the Brussels congress in 1869, one of the former students The Liège player recruited by Fribourg at Y Internationale thus ended his career. one of his speeches:

You speak of federation and republic, and you think you have
He did a lot by establishing them. However, if I examine what follows, I see misery and rickets there... You need a philosophical foundation.
that in order to establish, and if you want to make a social revolution, it

You have to be atheists, otherwise you'll collapse. If you're not

As atheists, you must logically be despots, and instead of being a league of emancipation, you will be a holy alliance against the Revolution....
My conclusion is that we must put an end to everything that exists, to all to this bourgeoisie that has nothing in its head, nothing in its heart, and that 556

THE UNIVERSAL REPUBLIC

no longer stands, and it is only upon their smoking ruins that...
Socra the republic, not in their blood, they haven't had any for a long time no longer in the veins, but on their accumulated debris that we plant
"We will raise the flag of the social revolution."

And Ilins, the Belgian professor, added:

"The International is now strong enough to inspire fear and Respect. From now on, its motto must be Danton's words:
"Audacity, more audacity, always audacity (1)."

These threats clearly indicate the role that Y International played. in the explosion of the Paris Commune and in the crimes that marked his reign.

The communalist idea, that is to say the dissolution of the national bond nal, the autonomy of communal or federative groups, and their Grouping by federation is one of the foundations of the association.
No doubt the Parisian sections of the International have justice in the Commune. But they had precisely let themselves invaded by these Jacobins (2); it is voluntarily and by virtue of their principles that they had held for several years and more especially during the siege, grouped this cosmopolitan element which then completely dominated them. Now, it is this directed element by Karl Marx and his confidants who prepared the Commune and who supported it with the tolerance, if not the cooperation, of Mr. de Bismarck.

On September 7, 1870, Eugène Dupont, the council member general who directed all French sections and federations, he wrote to them from London:

The pitiful end of the imperial Soulouque brought the Gambetta, the Favres. Nothing has changed: the power still lies with them. bourgeoisie. In these circumstances, the role of the workers, or rather their duty is to let this bourgeois vermin make peace with the Prussians.

"We must take advantage of all the freedoms that circumstances will allow." to bring about the organization of all the forces of the working class. The bourgeoisie, who is currently overwhelmed by her triumph, will not notice

(1) Teatut. International Workingmen's Association, p. 34.

(2) See in the parliamentary inquiry on March 18 the depositions of Messrs. Nusse and Lagrange on the merger of all revolutionary societies into the International during the siege.

The Commune in Paris and its accomplices 557

not first of all the progress of the organization and, for the day of truth The workers are ready for war. The general council has written to all the corresponding, so that all efforts are focused in this direction to act together at the opportune and decisive moment.

And on October 17, fearing a resurgence of national instinct, he he added:

"Many of our friends have allowed themselves to be blinded by patriotism" ism, joined the chorus of the bourgeoisie who are shouting everywhere: Let's forget Despite our differences of opinion, let us sacrifice our dearest principles. Pedestrians on the altar of the fatherland! Infamous deception! For the bourgeois have nothing and had nothing to sacrifice, and the people are once again deceived Because it lacks organization.

During the Commune, the sections of the International gave in Paris there was strong support for the movement, and in the departments It was his main followers in Marseille and Limoges who...

in his favor.

At the height of the struggle, in March 1871, the Vorbote, an official newspaper sky of German socialism, wrote: "History is in the presence of a revolution that the socialist democracy of the world
The whole community should greet it with enthusiasm.

After the fall of the Commune, although Karl Marx had dressed arranged to disclaim all responsibility for his failure In this regard, the general council of Y International highly approved all his crimes are detailed in a lengthy manifesto dated May 30, 1871.
which was sent to all members of the association in Europe and in the United States, and was published in its entirety by the Volkstaat of Leipzig. "He is for the Internationale," said Mr. Winterer, "the story official account of the events of the Commune; he must be among them, before History, authorized apologetics. When one reads the manifesto, we wonder with a feeling of dread in what sphere
"You need to live with ideas to appreciate such packages (£1)."

Freemasonry itself persisted after the Commune. to show its fighters the sympathies that its lodges give were born to the founders of P International. Thus we read in the Chain of Union of 1872, that on April 17, 1872 the great
The Philadelphes and Concord lodge, which meets regularly at London, gave a banquet in honor of the Commune, where (!) Contemporary Socialism, j>. 129.

558 THE UNIVERSAL REPUBLIC

Present were the Brothers Lelubez, Cambault, and Albert May.
Mairé, Benoît, Vésinier, Bradlaugh, La Cecilia (1).

In New Caledonia, the deportees found a center for their secret meetings in the V Union calédonienne lodge, founded under the empire by Governor Guillain. Their actions, tolerated by Mr.
of the lichcria by virtue of secret instructions from Mr. Thiers, about They fired upon the escape from Uochefort. The investigation was conducted by Admiral Ribot at the request of the Assembly, establishes that the necessary funds had been supplied first by the lodge, then supplemented by a brother, receiver of the registration in the colony who was venerable of the lodge. The lodge was, until its closure, the center of communal meetings Nationalists. A Prussian also played an important role in the escape.

Some time earlier, a lodge in Bordeaux, L'Anglaise, having made a decision to exclude the Franks from French temples German Freemasons, the Italian lodges, in assembly gathered in Paler-They addressed this admonition to the Grand Orient of France:

"Dear and venerable brothers,

"When the cannons of the Porte Maillot sounded ominously until..."
that at the gates of our temples, the voice of our dear brothers from Paris... was comforting and friendly; she did not cross bayonets and dangers of foreign guests, but rather curses and weapons fratricides on both sides, where the same language was spoken, the sons of the same mother, where we shared tears, glory and misfortune.
This voice carried the holy word of peace, love, and brotherhood.
eternity, where war, hatred, evil, and violence reigned the most terrible, Cainism, fratricide.

"So, we sent our sincere approval which came from the heart; but perhaps she was not welcomed with heart-rending cries Frenchmen who fell by French swords.

But today we are struck in a more sinister way.
and even more chilling due to the "no" of the venerable lodge L'Anglaise, communiqué via your newsletter.

Freemasonry is one, just as the harmony of the universe is one; the pyramid of our symbols has as its base the surface of the globe and for summit the highest ideas of humanity. All branches, no matter Whether they are French, Italian, or German, they are connected to it and are linked to it melt.

(1) As early as June 11, 1871, the London correspondent of a Moniteur universel, him ilgnftlait la sympathie qüo rencontréaient les crimes de la Commune dau3 certains Layers of the English population. And he added: "We would make a little bit of an idco cxa of the propaganda of the national nier by assuming it is limited to the lower classes English society. In certain literary circles, the doctrines of the Commune have encountered two defenders, especially among the followers of positivism, which has in planted in England recently." (N* of June 18, 1871.)

The Commune in Paris and its accomplices 559

"His past is the catacombs of Rome, his martyrs, and the em
The worst of violence that collapses. Its present is the most beautiful of your nights, the night of August 4, 1879, human rights, the nations that res freely awaken and develop their individual genius. Its future, the realization of a threefold ideal of which Christ and the French have the glory:
Liberty, equality, fraternity! Annihilate, by your authority, the name of The Englishwoman, fraternity demands it. Annihilate him, he is against equality.
Destroy it, and it restricts human freedom, represented in you by Rousseau, Diderot and Voltaire, who fought against superstition; against human freedom, which, through your Lesseps, has pierced the isthmuses and united the seas; who, in our land, pierced the mountains by subjugating the elements; against human freedom, which will destroy the last and the most
One of the greatest evils is the prejudice that turns a universal people of brothers into

And dear brother, the symbolic triple embrace.

"The secretary,

"BrAGio la Manna."

In 1875, Tolain, one of the founders of the International, was receiving Freemasonry into the Lodge of Foresight in Paris. When questioned, F.*. Emm. Arago asked him why he He wanted to become a Freemason, and his response was essentially:

"Having entered political life, concerned with social issues and In my haste to arrive, I confess I hadn't given a thought to the Freemason. Laughter. I must even say, I thought it was an outdated institution and, While respecting it, I neglected it, believing I would find on my path more precise weapons. I recognize today that I was wrong; the Freemasonry can still render eminent services, and I come to she (1).

History has not yet clarified to what extent the Mr. de Bismarck's tolerance for the Paris Commune; but She collected numerous testimonials regarding service offerings. that the Jacobins and Parisian internationalists made to the en invaders of their homeland. Cluzeret, in the steps he was taking to Mr. de Hatzfeld to encourage him to openly support the Commune, spoke to him in exactly the same language as Mr. de Bismarck later wrote to Mr. d'Arnim:

"Let's leave that aside," he said in the report he himself published, the archbishop's case and let's talk about the common interests of your government government and to the Paris Commune. If the government of Versailles triumph, it will be a desperate effort by the monarchy to return to Water. There is no monarchy in France that can, I'm not saying... to maintain (none will maintain itself), but to attempt to maintain itself without promise revenge... You smile... She won't be able to keep that promise. Mass, I know it better than anyone, and I count on it like a a means and an opportunity for revolution (2).

(1) Quoted by L'Univers on August 11, 1875.

(2) Cited by the Gazelle de France of May 30, 1873-

II

36

A few years go by and we still see the money.

No, the Prussians' hand in the attacks by the internationalists and the Jacobins. In 1878, the debates of the Lebiez trial established that Father Duchêne's surety had been provided by the Baroness d'Eckstedt, a Prussian woman who claimed to live in Paris to spread socialist ideas. At the same time, a trial engaged between the leadership of Y Free Man of F.*. Louis Blanc and the Baron of Panaïef, where a treaty was produced by virtue of which the latter had reserved for himself, in exchange for the sums given through him, the right to direct the policy of this revolutionary body naire and socialist in the sense of pan-Slavism (1).

Here, responsibilities and complicity extend in a unique way. ly, and it is impossible not to notice the preponderant role two leaders played a role in the founding of Y International of Pan-Slavism, Herzen and Bakunin.

Mr. Rodolphus Meyer, a very well-known German writer, who, after having had a long relationship with Mr. de Bismarck, is at today, honored by him with a very particular hatred, he raised to on this subject the most serious accusations and supporting them with documents that are likely to make a great impression. We have them Let us borrow the following summary from the study SM: Contemporary Socialism Mr. Winterer's opinion, whose judgment carries the most weight.

"According to Mr. Meyer, Russian unrest in Switzerland and England, by Bakunin and Herzen, was not directed against Russia, but against Western Europe, for the benefit of Russia; Herzen and Bakunin were merely Russian agents, either in the service of the government's right, either in the service of the Pan-Slavist party; the cause of the two agitators was Pan-Slavism, not socialism.

The Internationale. If Mr. Meyer is right, one shudders at the thought of the hideous immorality of Russian politics and the fate that this Politics prepares for Western Europe. Let us hasten to say that Mr. Meyer is not alone in his opinion. Karl Marx and his followers have long accused Bakunin of being a Russian agent. But Mr. Meyer is not simply referring to the accusations of certain socialists; the life of Bakunin, his enterprises, his seems to confirm the suspicions surrounding the cynical blasé Swiss congress phemerator.

(1) Baron de Panaïev has for many years directed days in Russia institutions that propagated both Pan-Slavism and a pronounced radicalism. See on this personnago Essay on the history of the revolution in Russia, by N. de Gereblzoff (Paris, 1858), t. II V p, 361 et seq.

"Herzen was, without a doubt, an apostle of Pan-Slavism, li was socialist, but Pan-Slavism is also socialist. The dream Pan-Slavism is the domination of Europe and the world; it wants to reign over the ruins of the European social order, and to establish in the middle The site of the ruins represents the Russian social organization. It is not widely known t the basis of this organization is a kind of communism agrarian.

"This constitution of the commune is at the heart of all dreams social aspects of Pan-Slavism. Its apostles speak with disdain of pro- the clergy of Western Europe; they proudly proclaim that The social constitution of the Russian commune delivered their country from the scourge of such a proletariat. Alas! if Russia does not have this wound, she has other wounds no less deep.

"Let us now turn to Bakunin. Was he, too, an emissary..." what about the Pan-Slavism movement? After answering this first question tion, following Mr. Rodolphe Meyer, we will ask ourselves a second question, which is a consequence of the first: Baku Was nine simply an emissary of the Pan-Slavist party, or a direct agent of the Russian government?

"Bakunin's turbulent life is obviously, according to Mr. Meyer, The life of an unrepentant Pan-Slavist. The Russian gentleman Baku Nine was initially an artillery officer, according to the Chronicle. workers from Pest. He came to Breslau, in Silesia, around the year 1848, and was received into the democratic party of that city. During the same year, he took part in the Slavic congress of Prague, and published, in the name of this congress, a pan-Slavic manifesto visit. He was soon denounced as a Russian agent by the New Rhenish Gazette. The Breslau democrats having taken Taking up the cause of their colleague, one of them asked for explanations. tions to the New Rhenish Gazette. He received the following reply, which is not without interest for French readers: "If you "Do you want to convince us of the truth of our assertion, if you "Request written proof; contact Mr. Georges." "Sand; she's the one who provided us with this evidence."

"Bakunin's revolutionary activities led to his arrest at Chemnitz, and he was condemned to death in Saxony and Austria; but Russia demanded it; Emperor Nicholas himself seemed to be interfering.

to take special care of his fate. He was sent to Siberia in 1856, not as a convict, but as a simple exile. The governor Governor of Siberia, Count Muraviev, a cousin of Bakunin, showed every respect to the exile, allowed him to practice at around him a great action, and he finally charged him with a mission official who was to take him to the very border. Arrived in Nikolajevsk, Bakunin did not miss the opportunity that was presented to him. He offered, embarked for Japan, from there went to America, and appeared in London in 1861 to assist Herzen in his panslavist mission. He declared, in a manifesto published by "Kolokol", that he was determined to dedicate his life to the struggle for the freedom of Russians, Poles, and all Slavs. He asserted that the emperor Father Nicolas, shortly before dying, had thought in the same but to declare war on Austria and to incite the Slavs to revolt Austria and Turkey, along with Hungary and the Italians. The man who, in 1868, was to speak on behalf of the Internationalism was therefore preaching racial warfare in 1862. At the epicenter than the emancipation of the serfs, the revolutionaries of the West found that the Russian government was not going far enough, and they Herzen and Bakunin urged Herzen and Bakunin to declare themselves against the government Russian ment. Neither Herzen nor Bakunin obeyed this advice. Bakunin published a Pan-Slavic pamphlet under this title: "Romantism, Pugatschov or Pestel", in which he exhibited with enthusiasm fueled his Pan-Slavist dream of a new Russia, and of-commanded Emperor Alexander to establish a state such as Peter the Great had created it. "Alexander alone," he said, "could "to accomplish, without shedding a drop of blood, the most "Great and happiest... We can still do it now... We "Do not stop a people who are finally waking up from a lethargy of "A thousand years. Let the Tsar take a firm resolution; let him "He had the audacity to put himself at the head of the movement! His strength "Action for the prosperity and glory of Russia will be without "boundaries."

P

"Bakunin then outlines the program of his Pan-Slavism. He wants for the Slavic state government by the people in the municipality, in the province, in the country, throughout the state, with or without the Tsar; he wants to extend a hand to Lithuania, to Ukraine, to the Poland; he wants to liberate the Slavs who groan under the yoke of Austria and Turkey. He proposes an alliance with Italy, Hungary, Romania and Greece.

the Commune of Paris and its accomplices 563

"Following whom shall we march?" asks Bakunin.

"Pestel? Let's be frank. We would prefer to walk at the "following Romanoff, if Romanoff agreed to no longer be a cm-
"Father of Petersburg, but a czar of the peasants."

"Bakunin remained faithful to his program until his death."
Pan-Slavist. The contradictions in his life are only apparent.
The fiery agitator of the League of Peace and the International is always the Pan-Slavist, more or less disguised. He justifies it by Russia is constantly criticized for being the focus of reaction.
While we see him loudly demanding political action
He is on the side of the Slavs, he preaches complete abstention from Western European socialists. He doesn't want that the international alliance of the West becomes a power of Minante. He needs to unsettle the West, to sow anarchy there.
and the Revolution. When anarchy and revolution have exhausted themselves In Western Europe, the time for Pan-Slavism will have come; it will be will assume the general charge; he will march to conquest and to trans formation of the world.

"Bakunin, who had no personal fortune, spent the
the last years of his life in a delightful villa in Switzerland.
These are not subsidies from the International, said Mr. Meyer, nor the workers' contributions, which provided him with this pension aristocratic. From his tranquil villa, in view of the turmoil surrounded by social groups on all sides, the Russian agitator was able to to comfortably indulge in the cursed fruit of his revolutionary work.

"One objection to Mr. Meyer's opinion remains to be addressed."
socialism that Bakunin propagated in Switzerland, Spain and in from other countries, doesn't this prove that the accusations directed against Are they lacking any solid foundation? Baku socialism nine is, on the contrary, further proof of its pan-Slavic mission visit, because this socialism is essentially just agrarian communism of the constitution of the Russian rural commune.

"Bakunin was therefore a Pan-Slavist emissary; it is difficult to doubt it. The agitator's direct relations with the government Russian stances are less well established. He sometimes attacks violently.
the Tsar and his government; however, it is the government Russian government which saved Bakunin from the hands of Saxony and of Austria; it is the same government, so ruthless towards other exiles, which strangely softened the exile of this condemned man politics in Siberia.

"Contemporary events are far from displacing the es taken to absolutely absolve the Russian government. On another On the ground and in another sphere, didn't ChernaëlT exercise a pan-Slavist mission somewhat similar to that of Baku ninc? Didn't the Revolution also hail this Russian leader of The Serbian army? Hasn't Serbia been worked on in all areas? in a sense through pan-Slavist and revolutionary actions at the same time Time? Didn't Garibaldi acclaim his cause? Chernaelt Did he not depart at the opportune moment with all the blessings? tions or at least with the favor of Emperor Alexander? No Didn't he go to Prague, where Bakunin had also found the The first scene of his exploits?...

"Whatever the truth may be regarding all the mysteries of Russian politics, if one can doubt Bakunin's positive relations with the government of Saint Petersburg, it is hardly possible It is possible to doubt the agitator's close ties with the party. Pan-Slavist party of Russia, which enjoys the favor of the government ly. Truly, the projects of this panslavismo are hideous; better is still worth the motionless barbarity of the crescent. To corrupt, to tear apart to weaken Europe through revolution, anarchy, and war; to push the countless Slavic hordes upon ruined Europe; to offer the insurgent proletariat of Western Europe the lure of Agrarian communism, that's Pan-Slavism, that's the system monstrous which, at the same time as the International, threatens Civilized Europe (1).

A German writer very knowledgeable about secret societies, Mr. Rcichcnbach, for his part, recounts the biography in these terms graphic of the famous Russian agitator:

Bakunin, who died in Switzerland in 1876, played such an extraordinary role one is tempted to take it, as former interns say nationalists, for a Russian agent. His exile in Siberia was a real Just kidding. Hopefully the phases of his existence will be a better known, when the true history of the Com- is done Paris, Marseille, Carthage, etc.: Charles Marx will know to talk to us about it, as he would be a very apt man to tell us. what he needs to know about Mr. Hamburger, the private advisor, a character of German nationality and of Jewish descent, and who enjoys with

(1) Contemporary Socialism, by Abbé Wintorer, Member of the German Parliament ni;i 'd (Paris, Palmé, 1878), p. 153 to 158.

The Commune in Paris and its accomplices 565

of Prince Gortschakoff, with the same confidence that Mr. de Bis- Marck honors Mr. Bûcher.

trials of a wandering and laborious life, have learned to know the steps* unions and the secret tendencies of men, social classes and races: under the modest titles of secretaries and close advisors, They occupy, in a way, only the background of the scene, but However subdued their characters may seem, they are nonetheless them. which lead the action (1).

What responsibility do such revelations place on the chancellor who for so many years 'has governed Russia under the Emperor's name (2)! How could one not remember Mr. d'Israëli saying that Russia's secret diplomacy was entirely at hands of the Jews (Introduction VI), and Mr. de Maistre denouncing the skill with which the Illuminati infiltrated even into the most secret advice of sovereigns to use first of all their power for the benefit of their designs and to destroy them then themselves (Book II, Chapter VIII, § 1).

(1) Socialism and Reform in Germany (Paris, 1878, at the headquarters of the society (Social Economy), p. 52. In the same work, Mr. Roichenbach outlines the following: biography of one of the leaders of the German revolutionary movement in 1848, one of the afüdesdô la Jeune Europe, Struve: "A lawyer from Baclat, of Livonian origin, brother of close advisor to the Emperor of Russia, it is worth noting here that here the Russian legation in Switzerland, represented by the late Baron and Baroness Krüdner*, refugee from Bern & Freiburg im Breisgau, where she remained for a long time in the same hotel F., which was, in short, the headquarters of the insurgent movement tional of the Grand Duchy of Baden. I was assured that the chiefs Struve, Blind, Ileiker and Brentano, especially Struve, were not on too bad a relationship with the Russian legation, s

(2) On the occasion of the French government's refusal to extradite Ilartmann, The newspaper Le Gaulois, dated March 17, 1880, claimed to have received the following dis from his correspondent in Vienna:

Vienna, March 15, evening.

"The violent article published yesterday by the St. Petersburg Journal against the govern The French government, it is said, was created by the close advisor Giers. The Tsar is more irritated than ever since he received the detailed report on the incidents of do IV - Hartmann: Speaking to Prince Gortschakoff about the men currently in power If we were to see in France, the emperor would have said: "And these are your friends I s

Following the failure of the Paris Commune, the influence of Karl Marx's position on the International was momentarily shaken. Violent recriminations occurred against his authoritarian leadership. He was accused of being in league with Mr. de Bismarck and of having deliberately allowed the Commune to fail. At the congress of the Haye, in 1872, he had the transfer of the general council to New-York. It is difficult to understand the motives that may have dictated this decision: however, we can assume that he had a dual purpose, to lull European governments to sleep, to avoid an immediate conflict and direct contact with Mr. Bismarck, finally preparing for the revolutions futures of the world the powerful support of a strongly socialism organized in the republic of the new world.

If those were his thoughts, they were entirely successful. It would be a strange illusion to believe in the decadence of the International.

There was indeed a split within the association in 1873, which we will give Tliistoriquc; but we will see that it has not been that it was temporary and that the International emerged stronger.

In 1873, after the General Council moved to New York, the Jura federation led a lengthy indictment against Marx, against the General Council and against the Congress of The Hague. "Defections became considerable from 1871 to 1873, especially in Belgium and Spain. The Spanish followed Bakunin, who had been the great propagator of the International in their country. The secessionists met in Geneva on September 8, 1873, a congress where Spanish sections were represented, hol Landes, French, English and Swiss. The Lasallian party of Al-Lemagne announced his support for the decisions by telegram. congressional elections. The secessionists organized a new an international association, that of anarchists, in the form of a a simple federation of national sections, without a general council and without central direction. The annual congresses were supposed to be held in the same place of federation union; in the interval between congresses correspondence between national sections was to be between-held by the country's federal council, designated for the congress next (1).

THE CURRENT SITUATION OF THE INTERNATIONAL 567

Marxists and Bakuninists are also atheists, and they they also want to destroy private property and all the existing governments; only while Karl Marx intends delegations from different countries, the anarchists, like their

 As the name suggests, they claim to further loosen the bond social. In their social reorganization plan, not only each municipality, but also each corporate group, must have its autonomy. Freely formed economic federations would group together worldwide without distinction of country the industrial workers, farmers, artists, etc. One can see an outline of these plans for anarchy in a work de Py y Margall, the Spanish revolutionary, entitled The Nations nalités (2), as well as the transactions of the congress of the Peace was held in Lugano in 1872. Bakunin's supporters were especially widespread in Spain, French-speaking Switzerland and Belgium
 gic. But little by little he lost ground by diverting the workers to take part in electoral struggles under the pretext of to reserve themselves for the revolutionary explosion, and as, far away to exclude bourgeois politicians from socialist groups, according to His promises were fulfilled; he delivered to them the effective management of the organizasocialists, his supporters eventually came to believe Karl's accusations Marx, who identified him as the secret agent of one or two governments European groups interested in maintaining division among the ouvriers. His death, which occurred in 1877, also facilitated the reconstruction
 The Socialist Party's tuition. Two major events have confirmed this.

In 1873, at the Gotha Congress, the two major factions which German socialism, which was divided among itself, has united into one Democratic Socialist Party. Lasalle's followers, who had more or less controlled under the direction of the Prussian government, rallied to the Marxists, and all their combined forces have delivered to the German Empire this assault which has just halted the course of the Machiavellian policy of Prince Bismarck.

(t)Winlerer, Contemporary Socialism, pp. 32-33.

(2) One theft. in-12, trans. by Ricard, Germain-Bailière, 18?!). The author pro-proclaims the two fundamental dogmas of secret societies: absolute atheism and the autonomy of the individual. These are always, under other formulations, the ideas of 'Weishaupt. (W. liv. I, chap, I, jj 3).

568

THE UNIVERSAL REPUBLIC

In September 1877, a socialist congress took place in Ghent where delegates from all the dissident factions of the socialism. Karl Marx did not appear there; but his friends obtained great results for his policy.

the specialist advocated by the author of Capital were adopted, but above all, a solidarity pact was concluded between the largest part of the socialist associations of various persuasions. The delegates from the German Social Democratic Party, who, because laws in force in the country, has always maintained an organization a separate nisation from Y Internationale, y have formally adhered. The same was true of most of the groups that had been trained Bakunin.

With a few changes to the external organization, Y International is therefore more strongly united than ever. Its newfound strength is primarily due to a significant change implemented from 1872.

Instead of forming local sections grouping workers From various professions, she adopted the principle of grouping. corporate. It thus responds much better to the aspirations of workers, who above all want professional associations. Thanks to this new tactic, Y Internationale benefits from this such a remarkable social movement that created the trade unions in England and in the United States, labor unions in France. It is enough for his loyal followers to infiltrate these groups and acquire influence, so that this enormous mass of workers falls, without even knowing it, under the direction of his hidden leaders.

The goal of Y International, and this is what differentiates it pro- the foundation of the previous phases of the Revolution, it is to put economic issues as well as political issues are at stake. religious and social issues. She wants to create a workers' state embracing all of humanity, where the general council of corporations or trades would regulate the production of wealth worldwide and individual consumption. This dream of monstrous despotism The sly and brutal communism has today the greatest grip on the workers, who are suffering so badly from the disruptions of the industrial system and especially of overproduction crises. VIN The international organization claims to provide them with the means to achieve this. The following instructions cannot be emphasized enough from this point of view. resolutions adopted by the General Council of the International on January 1st 1870; they have lost none of their relevance:

THE CURRENT SITUATION OF THE INTERNATIONAL 569

"Although the revolutionary initiative must originate in France, England alone can serve as leverage for a serious revolution. economic situation. It's the only country where there are no more farmers and where Land ownership is concentrated in a few hands; it is the only countries where the capitalist form, that is to say combined labor on a large-scale, under capitalist masters, has seized control of the entire production; it is the only country where class struggle and organization maturity and universality due to its market dominance of the world; it is the only country where every change in economic facts normiques must react immediately to everyone. If the landlor* Dism and capitalism are headquartered in this country; consequently, the The material conditions for their destruction are more carefully considered there. The cou general being placed in the fortunate position of having control over the a major lever of the proletarian revolution, what madness to let it fall in purely English hands!... -Signed: Dupont, secretary of the general council.

Despite the difficulties that the International's actions present the very exclusive patriotism of English workers, however little to Little by little she gains ground among them, and we have been able to see at Congress of Trade Unions meeting in September 1879, progress of cosmopolitanism and communist tendencies.

The same is true in the United States, and the constant progress that Karl Marx's theories, the gifts, have an impact on the workers' minds born from the instructions of the general council, reported above are a very significant symptom (1). Who can foresee the dreaded What consequences will emerge from this in ten or twenty years?

In France, we sometimes find reassurance in seeing how little grip that socialist theories have on the minds of our workers and on the almost constant failures experienced by collectivists when they engage in violence against purely political elements questions of the radical party. It is to this national temperament that Yop - Gambetta's portunism owed its successes to; but the danger to come is all the more real. If the native common sense of French grasps ins- tangentially what is unrealizable in collectivism and In anarchism, socialist passion finds an outlet in him of au- all the more formidable because she doesn't bother with a plan of reconstruction and immediately seeks to destroy. The elements

V. in the Correspondant of October 25, 1879: The social question at the» Él-'ht- United, by Mr. Claudio Jaune!

570

THE UNIVERSAL REPUBLIC

Jacobins and socialists are inseparable in our country; the frightening the rise of atheism, the spread of solidarity associations emerging from the lodges of bourgeois Freemasonry, don- will give this explosion a character of savagery in comparison to which, as a follower of the Internationale said, the fires of the

I (I) The most advanced seclos are actively working to meet this audacious challenge and to push to their ultimate consequences the work begun by France So-called conservative Freemasonry. Information from various sources. They inform us of the holding, at the beginning of 1880, of a convent similar to that of Locarno in 1872 (book, II, chapter XII, g 2). The following decisions were allegedly measures taken for the different countries: – for France, to destroy religion by laws against the clergy and by secularizing public education through destruction free schools. After eight years of educating youth without religion, throw this new generation in Europe in a revolutionary war; nothing for him will resist. – For Spain, a country of fanatics in the hands of the clergy, to dishonor the clergy by all means; to attribute to them all crimes, such as fires, which can inflame public opinion. When the Spanish are once in }a revolution, nothing will surpass them in energy, – For Italy, it will be in republic republic as soon as there is no longer any opposition; we just have to let it happen. – For northern powers, for Germany and England, to break their military power by destroys the family spirit and the local spirit.

Spain is currently the subject of very intense underground work; in memo As long as official Freemasonry carries corruption into the upper echelons, the lodges serve as a vehicle for the propaganda of the Universal Democratic Alliance. The explosion in this country, as in Italy and France, appears to be subordinate to the success of the Russian nihilists who are redoubling their activity and are far from being their previous failures. It is becoming increasingly clear that the nihilists do not are nothing other than the Russian branch of the Universal Democratic Alliance, founded by Bakunin. Its progress has been very considerable, especially in Spain and in Italy, and this explains the preponderant role that seems to be expected of nir to cps country in the next explosion. The congress of freethinkers, held at Brussels at the beginning of September 1880, under the auspices of the Freemason rie, seems to have been organized to play the same propaganda role that fulfills the student congress in Liège in 1805, five years before the communal explosion (See the report of the congress in L'Français of September 14, 1851.) a large cosmopolitan socialist congress, similar to that of Ghent in 1877, is con-summoned for September 185 i in Zurich.

CHAPTER FIFTEEN

RUSSIAN NIHILISM

YES. – The crimes and program of Nihilism.

For a long time the Russian empire seemed inaccessible to The upheavals of old Europe. The social convulsions, which periodically threaten France, Spain, and Ila– since 1789 Lie and Germany, seemed to many to have for billers. For others, they were the result of the struggle undertaken by Catholicism against modern ideas, and they readily would have held the Church itself responsible.

But for the past fifteen years, Russia, despite the difference profound influence of its civilization, despite egalitarian institutions of its land tenure system and its municipal organization, despite the abundance of land that remains free for its peasants, Russia, we say, sees a sect, powerful in numbers and audacity, to launch a furious assault on the dynasty, on the religion national and at all levels of society. The demands of the most egalitarian socialists or the most radical Jacobins These are strangely outdated, and the sect itself writes on its flag this sinister word Nihilism, that is to say the Destruction for destruction's sake. Indeed, it no longer even takes place concern to develop a plan for social reconstruction. To make room clear-cut by the destruction of religion, authority, and the family, free from all dogmatic prejudice or moral sentiment, that is his sole purpose.

572

Russian Nihilism

She pursues him with a series of crimes which, even after those Carbonari, Mazzinians, and members of the Paris Commune, baffle the modern world. Five attacks against the life of Tsar Alexander II, who emancipated the serfs, who revoked the humiliations of 1856, the honor of the national flag, and which... was ready to give his people a constitution, – several leaders Police officers and provincial governors assassinated – a young Chamberlain to the Emperor, Count Nicolas Koskul, abducted as a hostage in the heart of the capital and slaughtered a few days later – of scandalous acquittals before the jury – an organization secret network that penetrates the police and the highest administrative regions tives and which in most cases ensures impunity for the culprits fires, blazes in almost every city –such as These are the proofs that Nihilism has given of its power. At the very moment we are writing, it affirms its vitality through new new crimes, despite a year of martial law and a deployment of unprecedented police and military repression measures in Russia.

This label of nihilists is well justified by the character boldly destroying the sect. It was given to him for the first time, in 1861, by the famous Russian writer Ivan Tur-Guenieflf in his novel: Fathers and Sons. Whatever the in-this name, as the beggars of old had done, the sans-culottes, and they adorn themselves with it as if it were a title of glory.

Nihilism is both an organized secret society and an action health, and a doctrine whose followers are inspired by a spirit a propaganda fanatic. For a long time he remained in that state of a moral epidemic; its followers formed small associations mysterious tions which were limited to a hostility of words and of writings against the government; but these associations have,
In recent times, they have merged into a revolutionary organization.
a society whose leaders appear to be based abroad and who find a more or less active complicity among the many members of The doctrine. They are the ones who are spreading pamphlets everywhere.
incendiary documents written in Russian and printed newspapers, the Zembla y volia (Land and Freedom), Proboudjenie (The Awakening), Wpered (In a/oant), and other sheets, which are printed in Bern, Geneva, in London, in Paris.

Adherents of Nihilism are rarely encountered except in the

CRIMES AND THE NIHILISM PROGRAM 573

educated classes. So far, his most numerous followers
They were recruited from among the professors and students. Officials ciders belonging to the less well-off nobility, civil servants Subordinates rushed in large numbers. Some merchants and schoolteachers are beginning to join; but the peasants and the urban workers thus far seem inaccessible to virus, despite the propaganda targeting them by exploiting their particular economic position.

In 1873, Count Pahlen, Minister of Justice, in a a confidential circular addressed to magistrates noted this aspect frightening situation:

"Investigations have shown that several middle-aged people, fathers and mothers of families, possessing financial resources and a position a more or less honorable social approach, far from acting against the propagandists, On the contrary, they very often showed them unequivocal sympathy.
that they helped and rescued them, as if they had been unaware, in their blind fanaticism, that such a way of acting should to have as its ultimate consequence the ruin of all society, as well as of themselves-same. Thus Endaouroff, a fairly wealthy landowner and justice of the peace the government of Penza, favored the actions of one of the men of the most dangerous actions, Voinaralsky, himself a former justice of the peace of the Goroditschi district. Thus the wife of the Oren- gendarmerie colonel bourg, Gooloucheff, far from excluding his son from participating in the movement revolutionary, on the contrary, helped him with his advice and his information. Thus, a very wealthy and already elderly woman, the owner the local peasants; not only did she personally apply herself to it eminently, but she had also determined her pupil, Ms. Chatiloff, to join her, and had sent his daughters, even though they were minors, to finish their studies in Zurich. Thus, the daughters of private advisors (the highest rank of employees) civilians), Natalia Armfeld, Varvara Batuchkoff and Sophia Pérovsky, the daughter of Major General Sofia Lechern-von-Herzfeld, and several others went to mingle with the people, taking part in agricultural work, living with the peasants, becoming their companions in work; and all these acts, Far from being blamed, they have earned the support of several parents and acquaintances. sympathy and approval. Such examples—and there are many— This blow – confirms the opinion that the success of the propagandists depended less from their own efforts and personal activity, than from the ease with which their doctrines were received in the different classes their place in society and the sympathy they found there. Thus, for example, three of the most ardent leaders of the extreme revolutionary party – the resigning artillery lieutenants Kravtchinsky, Rogatcho.T, and the student Clément – lived for several months in different families in the city of Moscow, and far from being forced to hide their They propagated theories and their tendencies. This same Rogatchoff had made the acquaintance, in the government of Penza, of a certain Soïnaralsky, who later became one of his most zealous disciples, and who sacrificed almost to the cause of revolutionary propaganda His entire fortune, 40,000 rubles (approximately 135,000 francs).

574

Russian Nihilism

Large numbers of women are being subjected to the doctrines of the sect, and they sometimes become its most active agents. The true causes of such a strange phenomenon are to be found in the The position that Russian society places on women of the educated classes in the almost complete absence of intimate religious life in these classes, finally, in the development of education without constraints moral weight given, in universities and academies, to children of both sexes from a caste of civil servants mostly without connection to the land and to whom the mediocrity of his means of existence tence is unbearable (1). The result is that idle women People initially welcomed these destructive ideas as a gateway. time, then devote themselves to their propaganda to fill the void of their existence. The very large class of female teachers especially fulfills this role, and it is to them that we must attribute the penetration The spread of Nihilism in the palaces of St. Petersburg and Moscow neck. The social decline of a fairly large number of young girls who engage in liberal professions, in the practice of medicine cinema in particular, and who frequent the which it first revealed fifteen years ago.

In university towns, one sees women wearing short hair, loose-fitting clothes that conceal the figure, masculine hairstyles and blue glasses intended to veil the gaze; these are the nihilistic female students, who begin in this way to put into practice the sect's fundamental dogma: equality of man and woman.

And here it's not just a matter, as in America, of the equality of civil and political rights means the radical destruction of the family we want to create.

Nihilists reject marriage; and if, in order to ensure rights

(I) See in the remarkable book by Schedo-Ferrotti (Baron Firks) The Xilitlum & 6n Russia (Brussels, Glassen, 1807), the cliap.VI and VU.

CMMES AND THE NIHILISM PROGRAM 575

civil marriages to children; they contract a kind of legal marriage. the husband immediately signs a deed in which he declares to renounce the use of all the rights that the law or religion gives him It would be. Often [nihilists, men and women, live by small groups, where everything is shared. To be fully independent, The woman must provide for her own subsistence.

"Since motherhood is the result of an inequality of nature, the nihilists They avoid it by all possible means, one of the historians tells us. "designated members of the International, and if they cannot achieve this, the woman "A nihilist readily abandons the fruit of his loves, or rather, of his "Natural necessities (1)."

The general destruction of the entire social order, that is the goal that continue the nihilists, and in this, they far surpass the the most extreme socialists of the Fifth International.

"You deny everything, or, to put it more precisely, you destroy "Everything," they ask Bazaroff, the hero of Ivan Tour-'s famous novel. Guénieff, and yet we must rebuild! —Gela doesn't look at us "No," he replied. "First and foremost, we need to clear the land." rain. Later, when all institutions have been destroyed, when the tabula rasa is perfect, then the existing forces, then the human manity, will crystallize again in institutions, which will be no doubt appropriate to the environmental conditions.— Bazaroff continues his thesis by asserting that there are no just relations between men, "Nor feelings, there are only sensations"; and his last word

"Distinction of animal heat."

This is not a fanciful painting. The following passages Bakunin's Revolutionary Catechism confirms this.
too authentic information:

"I. The revolutionary is endowed with a sacred character. He has nothing that is personal to him, neither an interest, nor a feeling, nor a property, not even a name. Everything about him is absorbed by a single object, by a single thought, driven by a single passion: the Revolution.

* II. He broke completely, in the deepest part of his being, with everything the current civil order, with everyone civilized, with laws, customs, morality. He is its implacable adversary; he lives only for the destroy.

(1) tfrïboürg, L'Asèôcialiàn Internationale des Travailleurs, p. Ifii, and Schedo-Iforrotti, Nihilism in Russia, p. 219,

37

576

Russian Nihilism

"III. The revolutionary despises all doctrinaire thinking and all the present science; he only truly understands one science: destruction. He studies mechanics, physics, chemistry, and perhaps the medicine; but only with the aim of destruction. He devotes himself, in the same way, to the study of living science, that is to say, to the study of humankind, of their character, of their current social conditions. His desire will be always the quickest and surest destruction of these despicable things and social conditions.

a IV. The revolutionary despises public opinion. He has the same contempt and hatred for current morality in all its forms and festivities. For him, anything that promotes the triumph of the Revolution is honest; anything that hinders this triumph is immoral and criminal... »

The nihilists appeal to the peasants by exploiting certain features of the social constitution of the Russian people.

As a result of the very prolonged duration of the patriarchal system, in the vast, still imperfectly cleared steppes which constitute the soil of Greater Russia, a very particular regime of land ownership has continued to this day. The families dwelling and its adjoining enclosure. The arable land and pastures are the collective ownership of the group formed by the inhabitants of the village who originally removed all those descended from the same stock. The chiefs families from the village periodically distributed the land between the different households. When a household disappears, The lands allocated to him did not pass to his parents. but they return to the community, which then allocates them news to another household. All the inhabitants of the village being formerly jointly liable for the payment of seigneurial dues, even today for the payment of the compensation due to the six landlords, and taxes, as well as for the conscription of conscripts, the The council of heads of families exercises discretionary power over the conduct of each household, so that its laziness does not compromise They don't put common interests first. Hence, constant interference. in what Western peoples regard as the domain inviolable privacy.

The great act of 1861, by which Alexander II emancipated the peasants, and divided the land between them and the lords, in exchange for a small indemnity, and granted the lords ownership of forests, by removing the peasants' usage rights, appeared in the eyes of the people, as the undeniable manifestation of the omnipotence of the State: "There is no true property except that of the emperor," such is the popular and legal saying which ex It prioritizes the core beliefs of the Russian people.

CRIMES AND THE NIHILISM PROGRAM 577

The settlement of the reciprocal rights of lords and peasants This could not have been accomplished without offending many interests, nor without aroused desires that could not be fully satisfied do.

The nihilists are skillfully taking advantage of this situation, and, for to incite the masses against religion and the tsar, they promise the peasants the abolition of all taxes and all royalties, which still burden them.

These explanations were necessary to make people understand... certain particularities of the following proclamation contained in the Zmlja i Vola (Land and Freedom) newspaper, April issue 1879, and where we find the entire destructive plan of the sect:

"Land and Liberty 1" These are the magic words that have always made life to win the hearts of the Russian nation: twice, they were enough to raise the country, and even today they have the power to make it tremble with a from one end of the empire to the other.

1860, our predecessors, the true representatives of genius and history of our people.

"We too will make it our rallying cry. Our conviction
The point is that there is no future except for social constitutions, which can will be their organization in human reason and aspirations popular.

"And we do not believe in the possibility of spreading it in the masses its principles, whatever propaganda we may do, contrary to those sown there by previous revolutions.

"Attempting that would be a waste of time; we know, by all accounts, popular movements of recent times, since the Peasants' War up until the Paris Commune, every revolutionary action, in its developing, necessarily also develops, purifies and spreads outwards laughter at the fundamental ideas that presided over its emergence.

"Revolutions are the work of the popular masses. The past..."
prepare. The revolutionaries are not in a position to determine the stopping point. They are merely the workers of the evolution of peoples and The interpreters of their ideas. Their role is to guide the masses.
in the spirit of progress and their aspirations, to call them to the fight to achieve its realization, in such a way that the impenetrable stops the principles of the law that governs human societies receive their application

$57

Russian Nihilism

within the appropriate timeframe. Outside of that, revolutionaries can do nothing.
But, within the sphere of action we have just indicated, they constitute kill a formidable lever for the evolution of peoples.

"At all times, everywhere, and in all possible uprisings bles. Whatever their importance, the Russian people have always returned Dedicated to the land and freedom:

"The soil, as the common property of those who cultivate it; and freedom, as a right belonging to all men to be the sole masters of themselves, as well as of their actions.

"To wrest the land from the lords and its holders; to expel, and In certain cases, they exterminate civil servants and all representatives. of authority; to create Cossack territories, that is to say, communes free, autonomous, electing responsible representatives and revocable: such has consistently been the program of the revolutionaries

"This program is undoubtedly that of the vast majority of the Russian people. That is why we, men of the Revolution, we accept it. That's why we put the questions first. the issues it raises. We will temporarily leave aside the question worker. We insist on this point so that no one thinks that we we consider the expropriation of industrial establishments to be unnecessary trials; but to establish that the social evolution which west of the Europe gave pride of place to the workers' question, on the contrary, In our country, agrarian problems have been highlighted.

"This will not prevent the revolutionary movement, while elevating putting the question of land on the map, to solve the workers' problem, and inevitably lead to the expropriation and destruction of capital, of which The grave will be dug as much by the current state of affairs as by the development of the work of the Revolution. To this end, and independently In addition to that of the countryside, an uprising must be prepared in the cities: he will inevitably encounter the one whose object the agrarian social question. Because of the truths we have just discussed To develop further, we will not touch on the concrete questions, which appear still cling to the socialism of the future.

"All of this falls under the category of future questions. Let's leave to the future what. It belongs to him. The present has a colossal task to accomplish which can be In summary: the development of the popular revolution, which alone is in state of preparing the way for the social transformation of the future such as "You understand the spirit of the people."

DISORGANISATION OF THE Nihilism

579

II, – U ORGANIZATION OF Nihilism

To avoid misunderstanding the current state of Russia, one must It is important to understand that Nihilism, like Freemasonry, is both a doctrine and a conspiracy. For a great For many Russians, Nihilism is merely an intellectual aberration. tuelle, and fashion, at certain times, has strangely contributed to its spread. But in this mass of perverted minds, the Conspiracies, real secret societies recruit from all over the world naturally.

The entire set and sequence with which the attacks are carried out nihilists, the power of publicity they possess in de- Of all the police measures, the ease with which they attest to a highly centralized organization and also to complicity in the highest ranks of the administration. The latter This point is indisputable, but it is worth noting that up to Currently, none of these high-ranking accomplices have been discovered: The sect knew how to maintain their position and cover up the secret from which depend on the astonishing speed and accuracy of the shots she has managed to strike even within the sovereign's palace.

Its main periodical publications are printed abroad. Ger, we've seen that. But where is its central committee located? It seems established abroad, but so far it has not been possible to discover if he was based in Switzerland, London or Paris.

Below the central committee are local committees, which present themselves as the embryos of freely federated groups j, We are not talking about society, but about the anarchy of the future.

Apparently, discussions are already taking place among nihilists about The organization of this anarchy, which indeed presupposes a dose of constraint and stifling of individual initiative much more greater than that of the most authoritarian societies of the past.

A nihilistic writer thus informs us of these divisions. intestines:

"There is a small Jacobin fraction among the nihilists whose organ is the Nabat (the tocsin), in Geneva, and which affirms certain trends which have often been attributed to the entire party; but this fraction has been fré*

580 Russian Nihilism

sincerely and expressly disavowed by all serious bodies and influential figures of Russian socialism, such as Vpercd (Forward), edited by Paul Lavroff in Paris, YObstchina (Commune) in Geneva, and 1 eZemblja e Vola (Land and Liberty), published clandestinely in St. Petersburg. In the no og On issues 9 and 10 of La Commune, a protest appeared, signed by the names the most prominent of the nihilistic emigration, disavowing all the tentatives on the part of the Nabat to give to the revolutionary social party Russian list of Jacobin tendencies and a dictatorial organization. It was formally stated that "the different sections of the party do not "are subject to no central directing power, but are organi- "based on federal principles and the recognition of this doctrine" "It is fundamental that the liberation of the people cannot and must not be ac- "It was complied with only by the people themselves (1)."

This divergence of views seems to us quite similar to that which The International is dividing the communists proper, collectivists and anarchists (see book II, chapter XIV, § 5) and which we mentioned earlier. Like those, we believe

From a practical point of view, they are of no importance, and yet the writer we have just quoted would not have had as his objective to mislead public opinion about the true center of action of the Having left, reading his article shows us that he fully approves all the attacks committed by the nihilists against the Tsar and the generals or provincial governors who fell murdered.

The entire party is therefore complicit in these crimes, and moreover, regardless of any disagreements among its leaders regarding the following day of the victory, it is obvious that it is only through a great concentration of forces that they can sustain in a fight to the death which they declared to the empire and the dynasty.

III. – The Origins of Nihilism

Upon reading the declarations of principles of the nihilists, it is impossible not to recognize their close connection with the doctrines born from contemporary German naturalists.

(1) The Revolution in Russia by a Russian Nihilist, North American Review, July 1879.

THE ORIGINS OF NIHILISM

581

Dr. Louis Büchner, one of the members of the congress of the Internationale at Lausanne (book II, chapter XIV, § 5), a former He emulated the radical materialism of this collaborator in his books Force and matter, Man according to science. They are both exhibitions of materialist science and practical socialism.

In Turgenev's story, which we quoted earlier, the nihilistic character pompously cites this book as the extreme most complete pressure of these ideas. One can also be convinced of their identity by comparing the following page to the German doctor of the CIT programs at the beginning of this chapter:

"One of the main arguments of those who admit that the birth and the preservation of the world must be attributed to a creative power, governing and regulating everything in the universe, is the supposed doctrine of "the destiny of beings" in nature... All something in the ship excites the admiration of those who believe in the destiny of Beings, for the profound wisdom of this superior power. Science

They only scratch the surface of things. Our reflective mind is the only the cause of this apparent destiny, which is none other than the consequence necessary for the interaction of matter and physical forces. •

"Man, as a physical and intelligent being, is the work of the nature. It follows that not only his whole being, but also his His actions, will, thoughts, and feelings are inevitably subject to the laws that govern the universe... The individual finds himself in a relationship so intimate and necessary with nature, that free will and the Spontaneity plays a very secondary role in his actions. The phenomena behaviors that have hitherto been attributed to chance and free will are re-governed by specific laws... The actions of men depend everywhere, and lastly, certain specific physical necessities...

"Let us be permitted, finally, to disregard all
A question of morality and utility. The only point of view that guides us.
In this examination, that is the truth. Nature does not exist for religion, Neither for morality, nor for men; it exists by itself.
What else can we do but accept it as it is? Aren't we making ourselves look ridiculous?
if we wanted to cry like children because our sandwiches didn't Are they not buttered enough? The empirical study of nature has no other but that the search for truth, whether it be comforting or disheartening lante according to human ideas, whether aesthetic or not, logical or not, whether it is in accordance with or contrary to reason, necessary or miraculous (1).

(1) Force and Matter, popular studies of natural history and philosophy, by

582 Nihilism busse

Bakunin is merely developing the doctrine of the German doctor
mand, when he says bluntly in his critique of theology Mazzini's policy and the International (1871),

"The moral law, which we materialists and atheists recognize sons of existence more truly than the idealities of whatever school it may be, Mazzinian or not, is not a law truly moral, a law that is both logical and real, a powerful law, a Joy that must triumph over the conspiracies of all the idealists of world, because it emanates from the very nature of human society, nature, whose true foundations must be sought not in God but in Animality.

Who would not notice how God, according to the word of the saints

Since Protestantism, and especially since 1789, it is not of expression that has provoked more anger and protests than that of divine right. This idea, misunderstood by some, deliberately disfigured by others, seems to have been particularly unbearable to modern men, and recently a frank-mason violently reminded the French Chamber of Deputies, that the Revolution consisted, in its essence, in the triumph of human law over divine law (1). Now, in turn, the Human rights are dethroned, trampled upon, and a revolutionary is no more Logic raises the flag of animality on its ruins!

To give free rein to animality, to let the forces of nature, as Bazaroff said, we must destroy all the institutions; we will then see what these forces will produce; the Nihilists imagine that they will lead to complete equality of individuals:

"All men resemble one another in body as in the soul, Turgenev has his hero Bazarov say. Each of us has a brain, a heart, a liver, lungs built from the same manner; the qualities that are called moral are also identified found in all men. They only present such differences Significant. A single human example is enough to judge everything else. The Men are the beech trees of the forest. No botanist would bother to study each specimen separately. There is no other difference.

Louis Büchner, Ind. sur la 8^e édition allemande. Paris,» Reinwald, 1865, 2^e ed., pp. 93, 247, 265.

(1) Madior-Monijau, speech to the Chamber of Deputies, session of March 16, 1880.

THE ORIGINS OF NIHILISM

583

between the fool and the wise man, between the good man and the wicked man, than between the healthy and the sick. The lungs of a consumptive are not in the same condition as yours or mine, although their structure is the even. We know approximately the causes of certain diseases Physical illnesses in women. As for mental illnesses, they stem from a bad education, all sorts of follies that are crammed into our heads, in short, the absurdity of our social law. Reform society society and you will no longer have diseases. Once society is reformed, it It will amount to the same thing whether a man is stupid or intelligent, good or "Wicked; they will all be in the same position."

and our European socialists. The Russian nihilists are nothing but plagiarists, despite their claims of originality.

In this renewed world, fraternity, this resounding word added by Saint-Martin to the program of Illuminism (book I, Chapter II, § 2), disappears. There is now only liberty and equality for These men had reverted to the state of forest dwellers. It is in all its purity the data of Weishaupt (book J, chapter I, S 3). How can one not be struck by the persistence with which re-ideas come in all forms and from all walks of life. fundamental aspects of secret societies?

Death is the great agent of this destruction towards which the The sect rushes forward. Contrary to the common feeling of the genre As a human being, naturalists celebrate it as their ally, and they fight against heredity, family, tradition, as preventing death to fully realize its effects. Listen instead to Mr. Naquet in his letter to the Journal des Débats of December 19, 1872:

"The family can now only be harmful to man... Education"
The family bond neutralizes the positive effects of death. The family prevents man from dying entirely; it perpetuates and sustains him. continue.

That is why nihilists, like the thugs of India, hasten the work of death through all the attacks:

"There's only one thing left for us to do, and that's to strangle"
"Our masters are like dogs," said one of their proclamations! No neighborhood! They all have to disappear! The cities have to be burned down; it Our country must be purified by fire! What good are these cities? They only serve to create servitude!... As if they had cannons and rifles, and that we are disarmed, it is only by fire that

584

Nihilism

We can attack and defeat them. Once the walls, behind which this rabble takes refuge in, reduced to ashes, it will be necessary that she starves to death (1).

Russia's educated youth drew their destructive principles professors in German universities. Ivan Turgenev, who has contributed greatly to popularizing the nihilistic idea, his biographers, spent three years in Berlin, from 1838 to 1841, studying Hegelian philosophy (2). It was at the University of Zurich that lists and they were soon repeated in the universities of the motherland. Finally, it is undeniable that these ideas have been originally propagated mainly by Russians who stayed in the foreigner. The eminent writer whom we quoted in the paragraph In his previous statement, Mr. Schcdo-Fcroti indicated the causes of this A strange situation that meant that the Russians for two centuries disdained their national tradition and religion to demand to spend their intellectual lives abroad. The impious ideas which since the mid-18th century appear to superficial minds to have an irresistible ascendancy, have naturally been adopted by the most part of the Russian classes that receive a rudimentary culture intellectual.

Not only did the Russians stop drawing from Germany and France ccs destructive ideas, but even they were propagated by the public education system established by the imperial authority.

Mr. de Maistre pointed out this danger as early as 1811, in a memorandum confidential document intended to be shown to Alexander I. showed how unwise it was to entrust public chairs ques and especially the training of young clergy in Calvinism your Germans, who pushed destructive principles to their limits of their sect, "of this sect united for the ruin of kings and of States, and whose spirit is to hate all forms of authority." He showed the link between this sect and Illuminism, and we can now indicate proper names where, by a Reserved by the high purpose of this memoir, it does not spoke only in general terms (3).

(1) Cited by Fribourg, International Workingmen's Association, p. 184.

(2) See The New England, July 1878. NikUism in Russia.

(3) Four unpublished chapters on Russia (Appendix), pp. 18?, 184, 185. See also Document K contains details on Freemasonry in Russia and the early origins of NiliilUuic.

THE ORIGINS OF NIHILISM

585

Emperor Alexander then had as an advisor a Frank- a highly skilled mason, the famous Michel Speranski. Son of a Pope, then tutor to the children of Prince Kurakin, he vegetated was in the lowest ranks of the bureaucracy when, in 1801 The emperor, the day after his accession to the throne, gave him his tutor, Laharpe, one of the most dangerous sectarians of the time (book II, chapter VIII, S 2), was largely responsible for this sudden fortune (1). Speranski was the evil genius of Alexander I 8r, until his sudden disgrace in 1812, which has not been further explained that his return to favor came a little later. The secret influences that Mr. de Maistre so often pointed out must have contributed to it a great deal. What is undeniable is that Speranski exercised a decisive influence on the future of Russia through the organization the emphasis he placed on public instruction and especially on education of the clergy. In this work, he used the Capuchin as his instrument. apostate Fessier, who, after having key the advisor of Joseph II in his war against the Church, had turned to Protestantism and had organized The new rite of the Grand Lodge of York was presented in Berlin. A. Friendship (Book II, Chapter XI, §1). Speranski had called him since 1809 as a professor of philosophy in St. Petersburg. There he occupied himself actively sought to propagate the principles of Illuminism. Accused of atheism by a Greek priest, he had to exchange this position for that of correspondent for the legislative committee; but later He regained favor: in 1820 he was found to be superintendent at Saratow, and, in 1834, bishop and ecclesiastical councillor at ayt-Péters-town, where he died, after having had every opportunity to throw in educated society, and particularly in universities and the sciences and literature. trinkets of radical impiety and social destruction!

This short biographical sketch will make everything clear. that there was something precise in this page written by Mr. de Maistre in 1811;

"German Illuminism is nothing other than Calvinism"
Consequently, that is to say, rid of the dogmas he had retained by whim. In short, there's only one sect. That's what no man
The state must neither ignore nor forget. This sect, which is all at once one and several, surrounds Russia, or, to put it better, the pene- attacking from all sides, reaching its deepest roots of. She does not need, as in the sixteenth century, to go up from the pulpit, to raise armies and publicly rouse the people ples. Its methods nowadays are more skillful: it reserves the noise Finally. All he needs today is the ear of children everywhere. age and the patience of sovereigns. She therefore has everything she desires.

(t) Pachlkt Der Gælze (1st ffumanitcet, p. 142 (noie). See the article devoted to Speranski in VJUycmi"* "undùuch der Freimaurcrei (naclitræge), Leipsig, 3 v. in*8«.

586

Russian Nihilism

It's not as we believe it. And don't come telling us that these dogmas are outdated; on the contrary, they are more alive and more active as ever. In the sixteenth century, they were children, and a few pages of the catechism that had been saved from the fire still impressed them; Today they are adults and no longer have any kind of restraint. This This appalling sect, which calls itself the Legion, has never been more to be feared. that at the moment, especially because of its alliances (1). »

In another passage, he referred to these men as being in front to end in nothingness, like the "nothing-goes." A marvelous prophecy of the A genius enlightened by faith! Sixty-five years later, the minister Russian justice was obliged, in the face of the attacks of Nihilism, to note that the cause of this rapid perversion The cultured classes were found in the education given to the youth nesse:

In many parts of the Russian Empire, it became a extremely criminal propaganda, which also threatens religion, the Morality and property. This evil has taken such great forms that Legal proceedings alone are powerless to suppress it, then that no one would want to stigmatize these pernicious theories such as crimes and attacks. Moreover, there are even people who Their official character and social position should keep them away from communist and revolutionary maneuvers, which not only assist im-susceptible to these events, but still have the audacity to reproach the the government and the measures it adopted against harmful propaganda which is expanding further every day.

"The revolutionaries chose as their instrument their infamous

(i) Four unpublished chapters on Russia, pp. 185 and 175. Emperor Paul I" had seized the traces of the plot hatched by the Illuminati against all religion and all authority. We have proof of this in these words that he dictated to Father Gruber, in 1800 "I see no way to stop the tide of impiety, Illuminism, and Jacobinism."

In my empire, there are other means than entrusting the education of youth to Jesuits. It is with childhood that one must begin; one must rebuild the structure from the "Fundament, otherwise everything will collapse and neither religion nor government will re (Letter from Father Gruber to Bishop Marolli, quoted by HP Gagarin in his work: Emperor Paul and P. Gruber, p. 7,} Who will tell us if the Illuminati, threatened by His foresight, however, was not the inspiration behind his assassination, which remains so propaganda is precisely what most deserves your attention. Honorable and enlightened men, I mean the youth and the school. And This is understandable: their communist doctrines, which tend to destroy crude, they can only find some credit among the like children, inexperienced young people, or ignorant individuals belonging to the common people. But unfortunately, these children and young people, instead of finding resistance in their surroundings and families rebuke to the exalted doctrines and political utopias with which they are infected, On the contrary, they often encounter only encouragement and support. Only in this way can we explain the expansion that they have undergone, in thirty-seven governments, socialist theories that have since long since condemned by true science. Like the investigation As the courts have shown, there are fathers and mothers who themselves have taught their children these dangerous theories. Such an act is to my eyes find it even more distressing than the propaganda itself; it makes to see how superficial a certain portion of Russian society is cieal and, I must say, ignorant. It strengthens me even more in this conviction that, in our culture, the family is not a support for the school, and that the school, on the contrary, must educate the family itself, something that does not happen in any other European state.

THE ORIGINS OF NIHILISM 587

"Let the teachers therefore replace the parents here – that is their duty, – that they choose favorable opportunities to do it to them to understand. "

A government newspaper, the Moscow Journal, told this occasion:

"It is not without the deepest bitterness and without apprehension* the most serious questions we considered in our youth. At twelve years old, the Fant ceased to believe in God, family, and the state; at fourteen, he he practices practical protest; at fifteen, he is a conspirator; At sixteen, he may already be a criminal; at seventeen, he closes his The result, by blowing their brains out. Such is, alas! the all-too-familiar story. "A repeated wind from our children."

In Russia, as everywhere, secret societies therefore have began by seizing control of youth education, and when they believed they had sufficiently prepared the ground by destroying in souls, regardless of religious belief or patriotic faith, they have appeared on stage as a conspiracy, grouping all the disbelievers temptations and all passions through the hope of a cataclysm social.

We have just grasped the point of convergence of Nihilism with

We will see, in the following pages, the relationships that he did not ceased to maintain contact with them, despite the very particular nature that the Russian world gives him.

IV. – Relations between Nihilism and secret societies of the West.

Nihilism revealed itself as a social danger in 1866. by the Karakosow assassination attempt; but it is especially since 1877 that he highlighted the power of his revolutionary organization, by waging a fierce struggle against the government.

But Nihilism was preceded by a long propaganda campaign Herten, whom we have already encountered as the precursor of the International (book II, chap. XIV, S 5). In 1850, in Leipzig, we saw him trying to group the first elements with Karl Marx and some Russians, among whom were Golowin and Bakunin (1).

A Republican Red and Socialist, Herten, for twenty years, From 1818 onwards, Russia was flooded with virulent pamphlets and... an underground newspaper, Kolokol (the Bell), which opened doors for him ardent propagators throughout the empire, and thwarted all the police measures. From 1860 to 1865 especially, he exercised a veritable intellectual dictatorship over the younger segment of the cultural classes. From 1862 onwards, following the advice of Kolokol, he formed a number of secret societies whose purpose was to make revolutionary propaganda (2).

Herten is now outdated and obsolete.

Around 1865, his influence was replaced by that of Chernichewsky, one of the editors of Le Contemporain, founded by the baron de Panafieu, and by that of Bakounine.

Tchernichewsky is the most original socialist writer of our time; it is he who, in his social novel: What to do? – in his Critique of Political Economy, – in his Letters Without Addresses –

(1) See the curitfux story published in the Gatelle de France on July 23, 1871.

(2) V. Scüedo-Ferrolì, Étude sur le Nihilisme.

RELATIONS OF NIHILISM WITH SECRET SOCIETIES 589

his, formulated the modern theory of socialism, the Collectivism a lot.

Tchernichewsky, because of his talent, his trial retained weaving, then his deportation to Siberia (1864), enjoyed a great prestige among Russian revolutionaries. It is in his honor that the nihilists made in 1877 one of their most important public demonstrations (2). Why him and his associate Baku Did nine supplant Herten's influence? It's difficult to say. to say, because we do not attach any practical importance to their statements Subtle distinctions between communism and collectivism? Herten was as much an atheist and a revolutionary as Bakunin. In 1848, at On the eve of the June days, he uttered this wild cry:

"What is resolved is finished, and the coming Revolution is only just beginning." We do not build, we demolish; we do not announce New revelations, we discard the old lie. The man contemporary, sad pontifex maximus, merely lays the bridge, another An unknown future will cross this bridge.

"The world we live in is dying, and the successors..." To breathe freely, they must first bury it.

"In passing from the old world to the new, one cannot change anything" to carry with you.

"Long live chaos and destruction! Long live death! Make way for the future! (3)"

This is indeed the savage genius of Nihilism. Therefore, if we we could put forward some conjecture about what is happening in the in- within secret societies, we would rather believe that the distance The current trend in Herten's thought stems from the sympathy he... showed the Polish insurrection in 1863 (4). Closely linked

(1) Some of Tchernichewsky's writings have recently been translated into French. A very good analysis of this can be found in the History of the Technical, by Malon (Lugano, 1879), p. 585 et seq.

(i) See the account in the Time* of January 30, 1877.

(3) From the other bank, letters from France.

(4) See in Malon's History of the Totalitarian, p. 577, the text of a protest d'Hilzen against the atrocities committed by the Russians in Poland and which is directed against Bakunin.

Without being able to find the true reason, one is struck by the place that the The Polish question in the founding of the /i'.fernaffanale. In 1862, in London, it was And following a meeting, the first group was formed. In the program of of the questions posed to the study at the Geneva congress, there was a ninth question tion thus conceived î «On the necessity of annihilating Russian influence in Europe by I apply the principle of the right of peoples to self-determination and the recons-to the Pan-Slavist movement, as we will show in a moment, Russian nihilists are essentially hostile to the Polish cause.

Russian Nihilism

In any case, Herten's influence from 1848 to 1864 was considerable; he is the link that connects the Russian sect to the societies •secrets of Western Europe. It's because of propaganda a preliminary point made by him that in 1870 Karl Marx had been able to represent numerous Russian sections on the General Council of the International (1).

We also saw the role played by Babunin, the founder of the Universal Democratic Alliance, the accomplice, then the rival of Karl Marx in the direction of the Internationale. He was at once criticizes one of the inspirers of Nihilism; but we have seen the Mystery surrounds his conduct and his relationship with the Russian government itself (book II, chapter XIV, § 7).

Indeed, there have been undeniable relationships between the nihilists both groups and the Pan-Slavists, and both are in communication with the most dangerous secret societies in the West.

"Tilution of a Poland on democratic and social foundations." Freiburg, to whom we owe the knowledge of this document (International Association* p. 19), in his book, p. 85: a Happier in Geneva than in London, the Parisians were able to do to dismiss the question of Poland for the following reasons: <r Supporters of "In the name of liberty, we declare that we protest against all despotisms and condemn the giquemont the organization and social tendencies of Russian despotism; but "As delegates to an economic congress, we believe we have nothing to say on the recon- "This political influence is a tactic." It is evident that powerful, very- superior to the level of knowledge of the workers' delegates of the International.' There was unrest within the association regarding, or under the pretext of, Poland.

This is the time to recall how advanced revolutionaries have always been. They are deeply hostile to this unfortunate nation. They make further compromises once pushing her into insurgents without hope, but Poland always left to be crushed and defenseless by Russia.

Garibaldi attributes Poland's misfortunes to prejudices of nationality and religion; and he wrote from Capri, December 28, 1863, to the Poles: "Cease giving the heroic struggle a religious and outdated character that alienates you "Masonic sympathies and provoke bloody reactions against you."

its, and you will be treated better. An official statistic has nonetheless established that, during the Polish uprising of 1852 alone, 33,800 young men were killed in combat, 468 hanged, 18,682 deported to Siberia, including 164 women. The number of exiles in the Ural steppes amounts to 33,780; the figure of those transported within European Russia, at 12,556, including 218 women 2,416 were incorporated into the Russian army; 31,500 were imprisoned; 620 died &v.mi judgment as a result of ill-treatment; and 7,000 convicted by contu maco to the capital city.

^1) Wintorer, Contemporary Socialism, p. 152#

RELATIONS OF NIHILISM WITH SECRET SOCIETIES 591

The following episode, which dates back to 1871, is quite significant. In October of this year, an insurrection broke out, under the pretext of some local discontent among the Slavic populations from Austria's military borders. Now, here are the details we Let us read on this subject in a letter from Vienna, addressed to Gazette de France, October 24, 1871:

"The leaders of the insurrection are well-known figures" in the country. The most outspoken is the lawyer Eugene Kwaternik, a member of Starcevic's party. The latter, an eccentric and bizarre character, member of the Diet of Agram and its representative in the Parliament of Pest, is the leader of a party sometimes called, after his name, starceviden, sometimes nihilistic, because of his affinities with the Russian party of the same name.

"The documents discovered at Starcevic's home, who has just been arrested, have proved that he had ongoing contact with the Saint- action committee Petersburg, with the International of Paris, and also with the VA sso-workers' association of Pesth, whose leaders are currently under investigation red. But alongside this socialist program, Starcevic and his friends had also a political program, and it was through this that they were getting closer to the "The national party" in Croatia. The Starcevicicians are in Croatia the presenters and agents of the South Slavic national movement. The Their goal is the creation of a vast Slavic kingdom, which would include Croatia, Slavonia, Dalmatia, detached from the Au- "cheating, Bosnia, Herzegovina, Montenegro and Servia."

"Kwaternick is what Mr. de Bismarck would call 'an existence Catiline. » In 1818, he fought with the insurgents commanded by Jellachich against the Hungarians. Since then, he has traveled throughout Europe and served several political parties; one day, he offered to sell for 200,000 flo-Rins, in Rechberg, the secret of the alleged agreements between Russia and France against Austria. Returning to his country, he wrote there... political brochures, and one day when one of his pamphlets had made him to face a heavy fine and imprisonment, he pulled a pass from his pocket Russian port declaring that it was a subject of the Tsar.

In addition to the details contained in the preceding letter, it is appropriate to add the following revelations, made by the Reform of Pest, and which was reproduced in the Gazette de France, in the same issue.

"There is no doubt that the Croatian movement is linked to the mouworkers' movement which broke out in Pest, and which, in St. Petersburg and Paris, A simultaneous revolution had been plotted in Agram and Pest.
projects of the Vienna Workers' Association having been thwarted by the pre-Police clairvoyance, Y Internationale chooses Agram, Pesth and Karlstadt for centers of its action. It hoped to find in the military confines-

H 38

592

RUSSIAN NILIFSM

to silence an army already prepared for his purposes. It is certain that the Exalted among the South Slavs were in contact with the workers of Pesth and that the joint operation had been coordinated in Paris.
The European revolutionary committee had considered nothing less than to...
He was from Pest-Ofen. He knew the area very well, and the insurrection
It was supposed to break out on August 20th, the day of Saint Stephen.

"On that day," said the plan drawn up in Paris, "the garrison was with its Unloaded weapons in the fortress. Members of the International can go there armed with revolvers, fall upon the soldiers, seize to seize their weapons, the citadel with its munitions, and take possession sion of the ministries. At the same time, another group of insurgents, disguised as peasants, they would have climbed the B'ocksberg, near the citadel, which has a small garrison, and from there launched some oil bombs on Pesth, who would thus have been led to capitulate before the new Commun no. The International could surely count on the alliance of the party national among the South Slavs.

"The plan is expressed as follows: 'The Croatian uprising must break out in "The military frontiers; first and foremost, we must seize the fortress"
"from Karlstadt, after which we will march on Agram, where the government "Revolutionary must be established." The Paris committee did not find old Starcevic, quite suited to the role of leader, which he entrusted to Kwater-Nick.

Just recently, a well-informed newspaper... commenting on the situation in Russia, signaled a rapprochement between the nihilists and the leaders of the Slavophiles, who impatiently endure ment the halt imposed on Russia in its advance in the East (1).

declared by Russia to the Turkish Empire, said La Civiltà cattolica of August 1877, and she reported the excitements that came to her of all Masonic parties, particularly the group whose Mr. Gladstone, an eminent Freemason, is the leader in England.

Leczar personally abhorred war, and he was forced reluctant to give in to the demands of the leaders and the cries of the misguided people. The audacity of the Pan-Slavists was such at that time that its leader Aksakolf was able to write to the Bohemian doctor Riéger:

“In the past, the government had usurped the monopoly on the Slavic question. Today it has passed into the hands of the people, who do not like to beg from the powerful which belongs to him by right and by justice (2). »

(t) Le Soleil of November 29, 1819.

W. Quoted by Le Monde on August 29, 187

RELATIONS OF NIHILISM WITH SECRET SOCIETIES 593

An undertaking under these auspices, having as its precursor this general Tchernaiëff, who has rightly been called the Slavic Garibaldi, the The war of 1877 caused a shock throughout the Russian nation deep-rooted, which sectarians exploited. Despite his great successes military, despite the prestige it restored to Russia throughout In the East, the Tsar, contrary to his predictions, found himself more weaker after the war than before, and from the day after the Peace, the internal question has been posed in a more acute way than ever.

Nihilists affect a great disdain for all institutions political actions of Western Europe, and they are very harsh, at needed, in words, for the socialists of the Paris Commune. The virgin soil of Russia seemed to them the only theater where the forces active forces of nature can create new forms social issues arise once the clearing work is completed. But this is a pure attitude on the part of the doctrinaires of Nihilism.

The Russian revolutionary society, as it calls itself, displays the red flag of the Paris Commune and the Revolution universal. It employs all the elements of cosmopolitanism Secret societies can provide him with information. Among the condemned... In the latest attacks, several Prussians were found.

The following facts, which relate to the month of June 1879, in clearly demonstrate the primarily revolutionary nature of the sect:

They take courage. In a suburb of Kieft, in the Podol district, inhabited by merchants, the police seized several crates containing Orsini bombs, a number of revolvers, and, it is said tend, a varied collection of poisons.

"The Jewish population itself, hitherto profoundly indifferent" to everything that wasn't trade, is now showing signs of being affected by the The most radical socialist propaganda. Countless pamphlets in Hebrew, and in German dialect, specifically addressed "to the youth" Jewish people were seized. Several Israelites were arrested. They stated, with enthusiasm, to be the apostles of the new religion, the religion revolutionary, mixing nihilistic theories in a curious jumble yourselves and biblical language. "Overthrow the whole old world of the ment dream and oppression. On its ruins will then unfold, in a radiant light, the red flag of the Social Revolution 1 » Such is the tuning fork to which minds have risen. In a situation similar blabbery, all sorts of surprises are to be expected (1). »

(1) Russian correspondence from the Sole# of June 6, 1879. Modetsky, who in the first In March 1880, he tried to assassinate General Melikoff, who was of Jewish origin.

594

Russian Nihilism

This upheaval among the Jews, in a country where they had had up to present, so greatly to praise the government, is indeed so significant. For their propaganda, nihilists do not disdain nor to make use of the History of a Peasant, of writers French Freemasons, Eckrmann and Chatrian, which they translated in Russian(l). The lawsuit brought by Mr. de Panaïefia Louis Blanc, at the occasion of their joint collaboration at L'Homme libre, revealed the close relationship that exists between Pan-Slavism and the Western socialism. (Liv. II, chap. XIV, §).

The true explanation for such a complex situation lies, we believe, in these wise words of Mr. Winterer:

"The Slavic or Pan-Slavist idea, the national idea, is not "Foreign to nihilists. Simply nihilists beyond the
"At the border, they are nihilists and Russian beyond. Like half"
"In Russia, the land is collectively owned by the municipality; there is "a way for the Russian to be collectivist without ceasing to be "Patriot. Bakunin knew how to reconcile the two things (2)."

In any case, the close ties between the revolutionaries of the
The clash with the nihilists was clearly revealed by the incidents which

Russian government to obtain the extradition of Hartmann, the author of the plot which, in September 1879, nearly blew up, near Moscow, Imperial Train.

Hardly had Hartmann been arrested in Paris, where he was hiding under Mayer's false name, at the request of the ambassador of Russia, that the French radicals rose up as one Man. One of the leaders of the left wing in the Chamber of Deputies. F.. Engelhard, having appointed his own lawyer, demanded the ability to communicate with him and wrote a memorandum in which he claimed to demonstrate his non-identity. At the same time, some me Death threats were addressed in writing to Prince Orloff, a Russian ambassador; noisy student demonstrations and a unanimous chorus from the radical press, demanding his implementation freedom; a challenge from all left-wing parties was even being prepared in the House, threatening to overthrow the government. It was then that this one, without waiting for the new documents announced by the Russian embassy to establish Hartmann's identity} has been pressed with unusual haste to adopt the conclusions of the memorandum of F.. Engelhard. lia refused Hartmann's extradition, under the the double pretext that his identity was not established and that his The attack was a political crime, and he was taken to safety. in England (1).

(U Thomas Prost, Secret Societies, t. II, p. 306* {■) Contemporary Socialism, p. 160.

RELATIONS OF NIHILISM WITH SECRET SOCIETIES 595

This incident demonstrated both the dependence in which In France, the ministry finds itself in opposition to the Masonic majority. the Chambers, and the pressure that the revolutionaries more extreme elements in turn exert influence on this majority composed of however, mostly men who were personally harmless.

Here, in fact, is the double manifesto that was published on this occasion Sion, two of the leaders of demagoguery:

London, March 1, 1880
Félix Pyat to Garibaldi
"My old friend,

The latest attack against the despot of all Russia confirms your legendary phrase:

"From the first king to the last president of the republic" bourgeois, all must disappear either willingly or by force.

"Join your voice with that of the French socialists to protest" against the planned extradition of our valiant friend Hartmann.

"French soil must be inviolable for exiles who, like We want armed action to establish the universal Republic, democratic and social.

"I shake your hand. Greet your charming wife."

Your sincere friend, Félix Pyat.

To this beautiful epistle which preaches disappearance, willingly or by force, of all sovereigns and presidents of republics, Garibaldi had to respond in the same tone. So as not to fall behind,
He even emphasized and commented on the glorification of the assassination.

(1) Harlman, in a letter dated London, March 19, 1880, and addressed to The newspaper La Justice refuted the fanciful account of the Moscow attack that he had attributed to the English advertising agency Central-News; but he does not deny his participation in the crime itself: a Neither in London nor in Paris, he said, have I ever "Tell anyone about this." And he concludes with this sarcastic remark:
"So that you may not doubt the identity of the one who writes to you, I ask my my friend, MF Lavroff, whom you know personally, to pass on to you that letter. » MP Lavroff published in Paris the nihilistic organ Le Vpered (Forward).

596

Russian Nihilism

Caprera, March 6, 1880.

Garibaldi to Felix Pyat
"My dear Pyat,

You are the popular hero of the Parisian barricades. Thank you for your affectionate letter, although I had reason to complain about the long
The silence you have maintained towards me.

Hartmann is a valiant young man to whom all honest people
Minister Freycinet and the president deserve respect and recognition.
Grévy will not tarnish their name as honest republicans by ex tradition of a political outcast; that would be worthy of the hyenas of Verdi

"Political assassination is the secret to successfully guiding the Revolution" tion. The rulers call the friends of the people assassins. The true republicans, Agesilaus Milano, Pietri, Orsini, Pianori, Monti and Tognetti They were, in their time, assassins; today, they are marabouts. Tyres, objects of veneration for the people.

« Hædel, Nobiling, Moncasi, Passanante, Solovieff, Otero and Hartmann They are the forerunners of the government of the future, the social republic.

"The assassin is the despised priest who first assassinated progress in with the help of the stake and now murders consciences with the men dream.

"It is the priest who should be deported to Siberia, not the companions" Hartmann gnons.

"I shake your hand affectionately. Greet the brave Vallès."

"Always yours, G. Garibaldi (1)."

After the publication of such documents, no man of good faith will no longer be deceived by writings that represent they view Nihilism as a historical development of institutions tutions of Russian soil, or at most as a particular evil to Moscow society.

On the contrary, we will adopt this conclusion of the revolutionary writer— Russian lutionary, which we have already cited several times:

"In reality, Nihilism is nothing other than the Russian socialism, and as such it stands ahead of all others parties, liberals or Slavophiles. He is the natural leader of the revolution present, and he will retain this position until at least one part so that all of his claims can be fulfilled (2). »

(1) Reproduced by the Union on March 14, 1880.

(2) The Devolution in Russia by a Russian nihilist, North American Review, July 1879. See, in the same vein, a letter from Hartmann reproduced by the Union du April 13, 1880.

CONCLUSION

These are the doctrines, facts, and antisocial conspiracies qn i are displayed for all to see and everywhere in the broad daylight of history. to lay bare, without fear and without accepting conditions and people, demonstrate them through numerous and indisputable examples perils and hardship, a duty of conscience; it is up to each individual, according to its position and influence, amidst the material ruins, in intellectual and moral issues that are accumulating on all sides, under the incessant upheavals of revolutions that threaten to tear away and to scatter far and wide the last vestiges of social order, that it is our duty to study them, to unmask them, to finally oppose everything that religion, love of family and his country, common sense, the instinct for self-preservation, can suggest to manage energy and strength. In these noble and necessary struggles, In this supreme struggle, the good man, whom he often calls himself redis, is not alone.

The cause he defends is indeed that of God.

Secret societies of every name, by deifying man, by seeking a song to establish the universal Republic on the ruins of all States and people of all nationalities, by engaging in a work Wild destruction, like Russian Nihilism, is not something other than preparing for the reign of the Antichrist.

The Antichrist was presented to us as an attempt at revenge. wise and powerless of the ancient enemy defeated by the cross Calvary.

Mr. de Maistre said it with great reason, the Revolution is essentially satanic. The same is true of Freemasonry. which is the Revolution in its active and living state, as we have repeated to all his followers.

This is what gives it its momentary strength, but also its weakness. irremediable.

598

CONCLUSION

The table of doctrines of secret societies, which we have outlined in these two volumes, shows us at once a singular uniformity and absolute powerlessness.

Their uniformity is nothing other than a fatal chain of events. of the error that forces them to keep going around in the same circle. The persistence of certain ideas is historical proof. testable lineage and transmission of satanic ideas, which has taken place throughout all ages. Several of their maxi- my, repeated from sect to sect with characteristic tenacity, reveal even more directly, through their perversity, the inspiration

Attentive men can recognize it at first glance.

But there is no doctrine in Freemasonry and sects that emerged from within it, no principle capable of allowing a society of life.

They perpetually oscillate between Vanarchy, freedom, and the equality of the beasts of the forest on one side, and the most monstrous Despotism of the state or of the community, on the other hand. A hundred times already. These ideas were put to the test, and they failed in the face of the instinctive resistances of outraged humanity and reactions spontaneous, of that natural order of societies whose laws have been established by the Creator himself.

Also, despite the apparent unity given to them by their spirit of destruction and their hatred of the Catholic Church, they carry in themselves are principles of contradiction and antagonism which, The day after their triumph, passions clashed that they have raised. Thus their work always tends from itself-meme to undo.

Sterility and lies, these are the two characteristics of the Revolution. tion in its multiple forms. Powerful for destroying at certain In the course of history, it is incapable of building anything, and yet less than giving men purely earthly happiness that she promises them. This very strength is given to her only to for a time: it could not definitively prevail against the Church and against this Christian society, which, upon exiting the catacombs placed the cross on the crown of kings.

So, despite their momentary successes, the good man who The fight against cults must have confidence. He knows he is accomplishing something. divine will, by defending the social order that God himself he established, and the Church which he founded with his blood.

CONCLUSION

599

The hope of final triumph must sustain him, for God who has makes nations healable, and has promised to assist his Church until the end of time, is with him, and if God is For us, what do we have to fear from the very powers of hell, when we fight with him for order and for the truth: Si Deus pro nobis, quis contra nos?

AN EPISODE IN THE SPREAD OF MASONIC PRINCIPLES
IN THE 18TH CENTURY IN THE AUSTRIAN NETHERLANDS

The history of the 18th century is inexplicable if one does not consider taking into account the secret influence exerted everywhere by the masonic affiliation.

We have proof of this in the extraordinary career (one journalist of very minor rank, named Pierre Maubert de Gouvest, who directed the Royal Gazette in Brussels around 1759, and was afterwards picked up by the greatest figures with a strange wash when we know what his background was. The attention of the persons who deal with the history of the 18th century has been called recently on this character by a reading done by Mr. Ch. Piot, in the literature class of the Royal Academy of Belgium, in January 1880. We reproduce the analysis from the newspapers. From Brussels. Our explanations will follow:

"In the 18th century, the periodical press was especially exploited in the Netherlands; Austrians by French writers, who, rejected from their country, they readily came to settle in ours. It didn't matter. Regardless of their qualities or their flaws, they were sure to find a welcome there. eager on the part of a government always willing to favor them to introduce the French spirit into Belgium through them and a taste for light literature. In terms of writers, our country... only scholars, no journalists steeped in philosophy French philosophy and even less so the pens devoted to literature of the day. We have already said a word about these trends regarding the linguistic day in Belgium.

"Currently, we will be talking about a similar position taken in favor of Jean-Henri Maubert de Gouvest, writer, born in Rouen on November 30th 1721, died in Altona in 1767.

"This very peculiar character led the most extraordinary life" centered in France and the most nomadic abroad. At the age of 19

604 DOCUMENT A

In 1740 he entered the Capuchin order, taking his vows in 1744. under the name of Brother Bernard of Rouen, professed Capuchin cleric; he... fled from the convent in Caen (March 10, 1744), and joined the army French, left him to go to Spain, then to Holland, where he arrived bearing letters from the Duke of Bouteville. His mind was restless and adventurous. He did not allow him to reside for long in the Batavian republic.

to remain silent, in the army of the King of Poland, Elector of Saxony, and there he was marked by a certain tact in the art of war. Having become a tutor from the son of the field marshal, Count Rutoswski, he obtained, through the intermediary from him, the favors of Count Brühl, prime minister of the king of Poland. Thanks to the title of Knight of Gouvest, which he had bestowed upon himself, He managed to gain access to the court. Certain very indiscretions- His inappropriate and inexcusable actions led to his dismissal. brutal imprisonment and detention at Kœnigstein Castle. During his incarceration Through his cunning, he managed to outmaneuver the Pope's nuncio. The prelate felt compelled to intervene on behalf of a converted sinner, ready, he said, to return to his monastery and do penance there. In 1752, he regained his freedom. Forced to go to Rome dressed as a Capuchin friar, he there he was subjected to continuous and very annoying surveillance for a a character of his own caliber. Finally, he managed to break free from him...

"Far from fulfilling his commitments, Maubert arrived unexpectedly In the town of Mâcon, he threw his habit to the nettles a second time and fled. in Geneva, then in Lausanne (1753).

"What became of him afterwards? According to French biographers, he was expelled" from Holland by order of the States General, then he would have been received, during the year 1759, in Belgium, thanks to the intervention of Mr. de Hesluer, the emperor's resident in Liège. This diplomat is said to have supported him to the Count of Cobentzel, Minister Plenipotentiary of the Empire- queen in the Netherlands, who received him with open arms. On the sole recommendation In exchange for his writings, the minister allegedly granted him an annuity of 600 ducats. and the privilege of the Gazette, including the management of the printing press royal. The intolerance of the Belgian people, who called him an apostate monk, would have chased him out of Brussels. That's what Mau's biographers say. Bert before and during his stay in the Netherlands.

"Mr. Piot's note corrects and completes, by means of the correspondence unpublished dance of Maubert and state papers, the biography of the publisher French civicist, when he resided in our country, from July 24th 1758, to return to Holland for just a few days. This is a whole episode intimately linked to the history of the press and liberal journalism in 18th-century Belgium; it's a picture "The island's customs and the habits of bohemian writers, so numerous at that time..."

EPISODE OF MASONIC PROPAGANDA IN THE 15TH CENTURY 605

Reading the account of this tumultuous career, where a per This seemingly uninteresting survey found everywhere such powerful protectors, we thought it was one of the creations tures of Freemasonry. Our conjecture has been found confirmed by the following indications that we found in VAUgemeines Handbuch der Freimaurerei (2nd edition, Leipzig 1863).

grand patrol of the apostate Capuchin.

"Rutowski, born May 1, 1702, died in 1794, known as the Knight of the Eagle in the Templar system. Through the creation of the lodge with the three Eagles in Dresden in 1738, he is the first founder of Freemasonry in Saxony. In 1741, he was chosen as Grand Master of the Order in Saxony. and in this capacity established four lodges in Leipzig, Altenburg, and Sachsefeld and Nossen.

As for Count Brühl, the Prime Minister of the King of Polo He himself does not appear in the list of masons given by VAUgemeines Handbuch, but his four sons were invested with important ranks in the Templar order and were at the head of enlightened. It is difficult to believe that their father was not himself frank-mason, when we see his son Frédéric-Aloys de Brühl, aged only at the age of 27, he became in 1766 the Worshipful Master of the lodge Aux trois brothers of Warsaw, at a time when Freemasonry was outlawed by the laws of the kingdom. (See Findel, Geschichte der Freimaurerei.)

Masonic influences must have followed Maubert de Gouvest in the rest of his career. We can believe it all the more. that a lodge had been founded in Mons in 1721, and that from 1742 In 1766, several new lodges were founded in the different cities of Belgium, despite the bull of Clement XII and the edict of Emperor Charles VI. It was necessary that the governor of The Netherlands was more or less in league with the brothers; hence the warm welcome given to Maubert de Gouvest.

The information we have about 18th-century figures The information on lodge affiliations is very incomplete. It is impossible to propose... a more useful application to scholarly investigations than the re-raised and the publication of the names of the lodge members with the biographical information provided by local archives Many obscure points in history would thus be clarified.

Document B

The laws of the Revolution on public education.

I

"All the Church's possessions," said Talloyrand, the Freemason bishop, belong to the State, it is the State's responsibility to take charge of its account "the obligations attached to these assets, a subsistence honest to each holder, the maintenance of hospitals, workshops charity, church repairs, public education costs "Olique, etc..."

What is property, Mirabeau wondered, on the other hand, trained more immediately in Woishaupt's doctrines? "That's he replied, the right that all have given to one person to possess exclusively a thing to which in the state of nature all had equal rights. It is the law alone that constitutes the right. privacy.

It is in the name of these false principles that Freemasonry, which, through the Constituent Assembly, became the government of the State, will throw the foundations of the broadest socialism and everything to the law of the most monstrous the most utter despotism imaginable. It is by virtue of these principles and by the force of the decrees which consecrate them Consequently, the Constitution handed over to the State all schools and colleges ges, all educational institutions run in cities and the countryside by priests and religious. He read it from memory. universities, which, according to Fleury, were merely corporations of clerics exempt from secular jurisdiction and holding the authority of the Pope himself rite upon all their members. All these foundations were laid to the street or delivered, like that of the Jesuits, according to the prophecy de Maury, prey to the masons and their accomplices. He was not not even a mention in the decree that put all the property ecclesiastical staff at the disposal of the nation or state holding office, imposed in the reasons, to provide for the costs of the schools maintained by these goods; there was only talk of the fruits of the cult, of renouncing three members of his ministers and the relief of the poor. Only ment in the law of February 19, 1790, which declared that the law cons • The kingdom's religious institution will no longer recognize monastic vows. solemn, the second paragraph of the second article added: "To Moreover, nothing will be changed, for the time being, with regard to the mai-schools responsible for public education and educational institutions charity, and this until a decision has been made on these matters."

Laws of the Revolution on Public Education 607

But the sequestration and sale of ecclesiastical property, especially the civil constitution of the clergy and the oath required of the ecclesiastics, professors, and members of religious congregations The grievous spirits soon came to overturn this supposed status quo. Less A year later, Talleyrand, mounting the tribune to denounce to highlight the urgency of a decree on public education, on which He had presented a report a few days earlier, which He expressed this significant fact in these words: "Universities everywhere have Having suspended their operations, the colleges are without subordination, without "Teachers, without students (1)." This was what the sect expected, in order to to complete the moral destruction of French nationality by The Masonic organization of education. Already a decree, the constitution had decreed the legal destruction of all the educational and training establishments of old France.

"A common public education system will be created and organized in all citizens, free with regard to educational components indispensable for all men, and whose establishments will be distributed gradually in a combined ratio with the division of the kingdom.

It was simultaneously the communism of intellects with the destruction of all equality and all freedom in a monopoly of the state. The first report on the organization of this monopoly by one of the highest leaders of Freemasonry, the apostate bishop d'Autun, is too instructive, it exposes too much the lying spirit of the sect, as well as its materialistic spirit, so that we Let's not give a quick analysis of it.

The famous report, like everything that comes out of the mason's workshop nique, begins with the grand words of liberty and equality conquises, and by a declamation as false as it is insulting against the previous teaching of the French nation, or what we have, he said, appointed until this day as instruction.

"Under the old order of things, one could not fix one's thoughts on the barbarity of our institutions, without being frightened at first by this privation total lighting that extended over the vast majority of men my, without being revolted afterwards, and the deplorable opinions that were thrown into the spirit of those who were not entirely devoted to ignorance, and of prejudices of all kinds with which they were nourished, and of discord or rather, the absolute opposition that existed between what a child was forced to learn what a man was required to do; finally this blind and persistent deference to long-outdated customs born, which, constantly placing us back in the era when all knowledge was con-

(1) Lallamaot, Choisi de rapports et discours depuis 1780, tome V, p. 136.

n 39

608

DOCUMENT 13

centered in the cloisters, they still seemed, after more than ten centuries, to be... to limit the universality of citizens to living in monasteries.

"However, these shocking contradictions and even greater ones

Constitutionally, everything was out of place, where so many interests were gathered to deceive, to degrade the human species, where the nation's government's approach rejected true principles in everything that was not intended to flatter his mistakes, where everything seemed to make a need to teach men from childhood how to deal with pressures judged in the midst of which they were called to live and die, where he had to be accustomed to restraining their thoughts, since the law told them with the threat that they were not in control, and finally a prudent, pusillanimous, who dared to call himself virtuous, had made it his duty to do to rid their minds of anything that might one day remind them of rights that he was not permitted to invoke; and such had been the case in these respects. the influence of public opinion itself, which had been managed to see the history of ancient free peoples presented to young people – (where two-thirds of the population were slaves), – to inflame his imagination by the account of their ivy-like virtues, to bring it to life in a word in the midst of Sparta and Rome, without the most absolute power having nothing to fear from the impression that these great and memorable examples (1).

"This complete reform of schools is called for both by reason of all countries, and by the particular constitution of ours. It is impossible. It is indeed possible to have absorbed the spirit of this constitution, without recognizing to be born that all principles invoke the aid of a new instruction old.

"Men are recognized as equal; and yet how much this Equality of rights would be barely felt, would be barely real, if education did not was constantly striving to restore the standard!... The constitution exists. Would it truly exist if it only existed in our code, if from there It did not take root in the soul of all citizens if it did not imprint itself there. forever changed new feelings, new customs, new habits?

"And isn't it due to the daily and ever-increasing action of the institutions? What is the plan that these major changes are in store?

"Everything therefore proclaims the urgent need to organize education," Everything demonstrates that the new state of affairs requires creation in this genre, and the rapid and almost spontaneous decline of establishments current mentalities, which are withering away in all parts of the kingdom like plants on new soil that rejects them, clearly announces. It is now clear that the time has come to undertake this great work.

(1) Lulloment, "Choice of Report," vol. V, pp. 337, 338*

LAWS OF THE REVOLUTION ON PUBLIC EDUCATION 609

"Indeed, we must consider society as a vast workshop; it does not. It is not enough that everyone works there; everyone must be in their proper place (1), fold: whoever doesn't know that a small number distributed intelligently must do more and better than a greater person endowed with the same means, but different. How quickly is it invested? The greatest of all economies, therefore, consists of to put them in their true position; however, it is undeniable that a good education system is the primary means of achieving this.

That's the principle; let's see the application, or, as the other person says teacher, the rules on the distribution of teaching.

"There must exist for all men a basic education common to all; there must exist for a large number of people an education that tends to give greater development to the faculties, to enlighten each student on his particular destination; he must exist for a certain name a special and thorough education, necessary for various states, including Society stands to gain significant benefits.

It is not necessary to highlight the legal inequality which It serves as the uprooted foundation of this educational plan. And so that this system of inequality would be more radical, more entrenched tional, more stable, its author links it to the new division territorial, which has constitutionally annihilated even the elemental and historical elements of the ancient French nationality:

c The first instruction will be placed in each canton, or more exactly in each division that contains a pri- assembly mayor.

No more parish or communal schools, therefore; pri a new resort for the inhabitants and families of the canton, ex- concluding education for the greatest number, that is to say to say the children of the villages scattered one or two leagues apart of the chief town of the canton.

What became of the foundations of these parish schools? that barely a year ago the same person claimed to have to be so religiously replaced by the State, according to the intentions founders?

"The second instruction will be placed in each district."

"The third would respond to each department, so that by this means each one could find, either at home or around oneself, everything that is important to to know.

"From this a gradual distribution, an instructive hierarchy corresponds* reporting to the administrative hierarchy.

(t) Remarks on Masonic comparisons*

DOCUMENT B

Thus, radical inequality serves as the very foundation of the law. the most common, the most general one that can be imagined, that of education; inequalities, privileges and forced labor until in the places where this instruction is distributed; and, what will to become the most odious, the most tyrannical of privileges, unequal in the distribution itself, or rather incompatibility distances measurable between the different lessons that will be the subject of it; and these legislators establish as a principle that all men are born They are equal in rights and remain so!

"Near the primary assemblies, which are the units of the political body that, among the first national elements, the first naturally takes place First school, elementary school: this school is for children and should not understand that general documents, applicable to all conditions tions.

"For a long time, people groaned to see the men of all nations, of all religions, making morality depend exclusively on this a multitude of opinions divide them; great evils have resulted from this; because, by subjecting it to uncertainty, we save it from absurdity, we have necessary It has been compromised, rendered fickle and unstable; it is time to establish it on its own foundations, it is time to show men that even if disastrous divisions separate them, it is at least in the realm of morality. a common meeting place where they must all take refuge and reunite. This The change is simple, it doesn't hurt anything, and above all, it's possible. Com How can one fail to see, in fact, that abstracting from any system, from any opinion, and considering in men only their relationships with Other men, we can teach them what is good, what is simply, to make them love it, to shape their minds early on and their conscience and make them both sensitive to the slightest im- Pressure from everything that is evil? Nature has made great advances; it endowed man with reason and compassion: by the First, he is enlightened about what is right; second, he is attracted towards what is good: this is the twofold principle of all morality. But this a new part of the instruction, in order to be taught well, requires a... Elementary work, simple at the same time, clear and profound: it is worthy of the National Assembly to call for vigils and mediation on such a matter "sentences of all true philosophers (1)."

Thus, there are men who do not want us to believe in Jesus. to the Lord Christ and to his Church, to the reason of God and to that of the ages, they find it quite simple that we train our minds and our consciences sciences and those of our children on the reason of Talleyrand, of Mira- beautiful and of Lafayette and on the compassion of Danton, of Marat and Robespierre's doctrine. That was also La Ghalotais's doctrine!

[\\) Choice of speeches and reports p. 344,34 1.

Laws of the Revolution on Public Education 611

For the high-ranking Freemason Talleyrand, morality was the foundation of the people. Ples regenerated by Freemasonry and human rights, has no no relationship with God, nor with oaths, nor with morals, nor with politics, nor even with conscience, nor with religion Catholic whose morality is uncertain or absurd and whose dogmas opinions, nor with any religion or system whatsoever; this Morality, he claims, does not change according to countries and times; it is one and immutable. What is it? Is it Plato's or Aristotle, Diogenes, or Epicurus? But each of them differed on the other hand, and was therefore neither one nor immutable. Is it that of human and civil rights, which are the rights of all and Where will everyone's duties forever reside? But the constitutions Tuitions change like clothes, and rights and duties too. which serve as their guiding principles, such as interests and passions each one. What then is enün? The life of the high priest mason you He said it: it is the negation, the destruction of all morality and of all a rule of morals; it is as one as the demolition worker's pickaxe. immutable like the ruins she piles up without ever raising them none.

To this teaching of human rights and its eternal de regarding Masonic morality, the report adds, always for the education of children, the teaching of the principles of national language, whether spoken or written, and almost, on the same level, the basic rules of calculation, to which we must add those of the, measured, then the elements of religion; but he adds: "For If it is a misfortune to ignore it, it is perhaps an even greater one to "not knowing her well," which is not without being very significant; because, while it is true that they are all merely opinions, systems themes that divide men, and from which great evils result, As he said earlier, it is clear that there must be some of them religious teachings to be given to children and others, such as those of morality, and that they will have to resolve themselves into zero.

"The purpose of district schools is to give individual faculties greater development and to have access to all the functions by far useful elements of society. Thus, the principles of the national language succeed will give district schools a more in-depth theory of the art of writing and knowledge of those ancient languages which retain the most riches for the human mind. We will add in several of these schools teach one of the modern languages that Local or national relationships would seem to recommend more.

"To the simple elements of religion we will add the history of cetio religion and the exposition of the titles according to which it commands the cons

"To the principles of morality, whose application is so limited from the outset"
In the early stages of life, we will include the development of morality in its private and public applications, and to the principles of the constitution tion, which can only be indicated for children, an exposure developed the declaration of rights and the organization of the various powers see (1).

DOCUMENT B

612

Morality, religion, etc., therefore, there is nothing positive except the constitution-
Lionetlcs human rights: it's all there*

However, this intellectual training program is further enhanced by... lectuelle swimming, Pescrtme and even dance, and for P imagination (sic), the beauties of eloquence and poetry, and the elements of the music and painting.

We almost forgot one of the most ludicrously significant objects imicatives in relation to the thesis whose demonstration we are pursuing tration: the destruction of nationalities through Masonic teaching fuck.

c. A memorial will be offered to students in district schools,
The history of free peoples (Greeks and Romans), the history of France, or "More likely French people, when one exists."

So, the old France has disappeared; it must be erased from memory.
to nirs down to the last trace and create a new nationality which will date from '89.

A word follows that sheds considerable light on this entire report:

"It will be necessary that, through useful institutions, the practice of honesty be practi a tension developed between the students; such that the relationships that constitute the morals become real relationships that extend and grow in their eyes
"They say it more and more every day."

Thus, the relationships that constitute morality are the only relationships the customs between men, and also the relationships of honesty, politeness or probity; therefore, no duty towards God, none of to see towards oneself, and the moral duties of men between them; it's the 1989 constitution, interpreted by each individual or by the State, which determines and regulates them. That is absolutely the point.
Masonic morality as understood, in the name of the Grand Orient,

Here we are at the departmental schools.

Each departmental click-place will initially contain the school of district, but it will also include the named department schools for the states to which the company reserves special means of intervention instruction, albeit with significant differences, because the public good will require that, with regard to certain states, several departments join forces for the same education.

(!) Choice, etc., ibid., p. 356 elsuiv,

LAWS OF THE REVOLUTION ON PUBLIC EDUCATION 013

The apostate bishop provides some very important developments here. to report on how he intends to have the State organize ecclesiastical teaching. It is the same thought, which later inspired Napoleon I when he had a catechism written for throughout the Empire and claimed to dictate to the seminaries the nature of their teaching. It was she who inspired Mr. Teste, the high-ranking official, in 1839. Freemason, Minister of Religious Affairs under Louis Philippe, when he re- was demanding for the government the right to have the powers to theology.

"Let the government have the right to have powers to "theology; do not renounce through a narrow idea of economy"
"which is of little importance, I admit, today, but at this "which could become much more so in the future (1;"

The firm resistance of the French episcopate, under Louis Philippe as under Napoleon I, prevented these projects from being carried out State domination over ecclesiastical education. But of In our time we have seen Mr. Bismarck trying to regain in the May laws on the education of pupils the Weishaupt plan and Talleyrand. Let us therefore follow with attention the program that the apostate follower of Illuminism was unfurling before the constituent assembly.

"The position of minister of religion is one of those to which the nation destined for specific establishments; the one where students will find The necessary instruction for them will be provided, as you have instructed. given, near the cathedral church. Each department will have the right to meet at any time for this part of the instruction at a departmental level neighboring ment.

"As for education, it should be divided in the following way next:

"1° The fundamental tenets of the Catholic religion, which will be

It is primarily up to you to restore her rights.

"The reasoned presentation of the various articles that must include explicitly the belief of each believer, who is not obliged to believe more than those of the Church of the early centuries. It becomes more that there was no need to re-engage in endless discussions that were the nourishment of the old theology. The nation, which finds itself on every page Its history bears the deep trace of the evils that so many quarrels have engendered. religious figures have the equally undeniable right to seek to defend themselves against to shape the future, by removing them from public education, what protection ge... Theology, moreover, should not be regarded as a science... it must be today what it was originally; must concern itself not with extending it, but with fixing it, with enclosing it within its limits, which too often ambitious subtleties strove to to make him cross.

(1) Official Monitor of July 14, 1839.

614 DOCUMENT B

"3° The development of the morality of the Gospel, or evangelical (1). The National Assembly will not dictate the rules for such a sign here. ment although e/Zc has the right to complain about the flaws of the old methods ... However, it can, and undoubtedly it must, order that one wait task especially to teach the students of the priesthood the moral aspect evangelical which consecrates in such energetic terms your perfect equality of men, and this religious indulgence that the philosophers themselves They dared not call it anything but tolerance, but that must be a very strong feeling purer, much more fraternal, much more respectful of suffering.

"4. Laws specific to ministers of the Catholic faith. The laws The organization of the clergy forms the whole of canon law.

"5. The principles and usual objects of preaching. And This must be true, for what could be more criminal in the eyes of a nation than a an official who uses what is most sacred to incite peoples to disobey its laws?

"6° Details that belong to a ministry of consolation and of peace, whether in the administration of the sacraments or in the government parish formation... thus, the rules of surveying and measurement, plus developed only in primary schools, the knowledge of simple things, what principles of hygiene and some of the law.

"By thus circumscribing this teaching, you are exercising an unlawful right" debatable, that of enclosing all kinds of power within their real limits.

All-powerful supremacy, universal dictatorship which, in the name of equality, has the claim to submit to the exclusive direction of the State: religion, morality, science, literature, and the arts, consciences, intelligences and wills.

Or understand after that what was supposed to be in this plan the military, medical and law schools.

"These are, to correspond to the various degrees of the admitted hierarchy administrative, the different levels of public education; and likewise that beyond all administrations lies the first or the organ of the nation, the Legislative Body, invested with all the force of the volonté PUBLIQUE, thus, both for the supplement to the instruction and for the rapid advancement of science will exist in the capital of the empire. and as if fully aware of all the instructions, a particularly

(1) The word became official in the University of Elat to designate the chair of Morality in Faculties of Theology. Do not confuse evangelical morality with State morality, universal morality. In Masonic language, these expressions Yes, that's how many different meanings there are.

LAWS OF THE REVOLUTION ON PUBLIC EDUCATION 615

national, a universal institute. And to conclude the comparison and the parallel, as the Legislative Body is invested with the full force of the will public, blind faculty, the institute will be invested with all the force of the intelligence or public spirit. It will be the papacy of reason, and it will will divide into sections of literature, science, inscriptions and belles-lettres, fine arts, and finally politics and morality.

The papacy of reason, that is to say Freemasonry, declares itself infallible leader, sovereign of intelligences and employing all the material force of the State to bend souls to its level of iron! What a profound word, what an illumination on the projects of anti-Christian sects!

But do they give their unfortunate followers the same equality they Do they promise them freedom? They deserve no less to be studied in this respect, because the entire plan of Talleyrand sanctions wealth inequality is, in fact, the basis of his new projects.

"There must be free education: the principle is indisputable"
It's possible, but to what extent should it be free? On which items?
But does it have to be? What, in short, are the limits of this?
What great benefit does society provide to its members?

The only schools in the canton will supposedly be free, that is to say maintained at the expense of the State, with common contributions budgets, that is to say, paid for by those who do not benefit from them

District and county town schools will be the responsibility of the state. for the strictly necessary part of the treatment of the institutions teachers, paid, as for the teachers of the cantonal schools, on joint contributions, that is to say by everyone and even by the many inhabitants of the cantons and communes, who do not will not benefit; and, on the other hand, by the students who will be obligated, moreover, when they do not reside in the district or the chiefs-places, to come and settle there at great expense, which will increase core by expenditures the privilege of the districts or chiefs-rieux

It is added that scholarships will be created for some children poor, of distinguished and exceptional talent; but these scholarships will be based on taxpayers' money, and will be distributed accordingly ministerially, that is to say between the children of brothers and friends. How, moreover, can we recognize these talents in the children of municipalities that will not be able to attend the cantonal school, and in those municipalities and cantons that will not be able to establish themselves on a large scale Fees to the districts? So it's privilege and arbitrariness everywhere, and inequality.

Let us now compare, in terms of equality, the freedom and free access, truly national schools of the France and Christian Europe, with the schools of Freemasonry-revolutionary lie, such as one of its highest leaders comes to provide the plan.

616 DOCUMENT B

As for the methods dealt with in the rest of this report, they They have nothing new but hatred of religion, of the monarchy, and the declamatory denigration of everything that was done before the reign sovereign gno of Freemasonry.

A single quote will suffice to give an idea of the spirit of the second part of this report.

"Man is a rational being, or more precisely perhaps, he is destined to become so; he must be taught to think; he is a being social, he needs to learn to communicate his thoughts; he is a social being Right, we need to teach him to do good. How can we help him fulfill this? triple destiny? By what means will we manage to extend and perfect to activate reason, to facilitate the communication of ideas, to smooth the Moral difficulties? Such research is worthy of our time. Here are some glimpses, perhaps some results that we share to the public.

Everything that is not him is nevertheless so dependent on him organization and the impressions it receives, which it almost seems to hold from the outside its existence, as well as its development; it is necessary Therefore, monitor these initial impressions, to which they are attached. and the true nature and dignity of man.”

a And first, let it be prescribed to banish from the new teaching everything that in the past was clearly only suited to corrupt, only to... to chain this first faculty, and the superstitions of all kinds of which one It frightened her, and they exerted a terrible power over and against her. long after reflection had dispelled them; and all these sterile classifications which, never being the expression of an idea felt, were both an overload for the memory, an obstacle to the reason; and these bizarre modes of teaching which, being classified, being valued in inverse proportion to their actual usefulness, served well more to confuse and deceive reason than to enlighten it; and these methods go ethical, which, by converting even the rules intended to act into obstacles Accelerating her pace almost always caused her to regress. It's time to break these chains (i). »

The superstitions to be banished from the new method are therefore the Gospel morality and the punishments of the afterlife or hell, which are the punishment, as well as the heavens.

But the Constituent Assembly was nearing its end, and despite the At Talleyrand's insistence, she refused to comply with a

1) Lallement, Choix de rapports, p. 338, 349, 399,400.

Laws of the Revolution on public education 617

decree to this report; she merely voted for its printing and the distribution to the members of the Legislative Assembly, so that it could serve of foundation and rule to everything that would be done in matters of en-teaching under the Masonic regime.

He

It was the Marquis de Condorcet, one of the most progressive Freemasons, who was tasked with taking up the issue of public education to the Legislative Assembly, and he did so by means of a new report which does not differ scarcely any like Talleyrand's, except perhaps in a more pronounced tone of fanatical hatred against the Catholic religion and all institutions traditions of old France. This characteristic is evident from the very first These lines of this new Masonic work:

to see to their needs, to know and exercise their rights, to hear and to fulfill their duties; to ensure that each of them has the opportunity to to improve its industry, to make itself capable of social functions which he has the right to be called upon, to develop the full extent of his talents that he received from nature, and thereby establish equality among citizens in fact and make real the political equality recognized by law: such must be the primary goal of national education, and from this perspective, It is a duty of justice for the public authorities.

"To direct education in such a way that the perfection of the arts increases lies the enjoyments of the generality of citizens and the comfort of those who cultivate them – to cultivate, finally, in each generation the faculties physical, intellectual and moral, and thereby contribute to this perfection general and gradual functioning of the human mind, the ultimate goal towards which Every social institution must be managed:

"Such must also be the object of the instruction, and it is for the power Public session, a duty imposed by the common interest of society. by that of all humanity.

We can see from this beginning the Masonic spirit in (its extent): nothing national except the mol alone; everything applies only to the human species, to all of humanity, and to a human species, to a humanity without religion, without ties, and without other principles social norms than those invented by a few men; human standard a soulless entity, without immortality and without any idea of another life; to a humanity, in short, degraded to the level of an animal species, which differs from other species only in stature and habit

A few lines later, Condorcet expresses his thought in a more even more explicit:

618

DOCUMENT B

"You owe," he said, "to the French nation an education at the level of the spirit of the 18th century, of that philosophy which, by illuminating the generative contemporary tion, foreshadows, prepares and already anticipates higher reason ii which the necessary progress of humankind calls for the future generations.

"Such have been our principles; and it is according to this philosophy, free free from all chains, liberated from all authority, from all old habits, that we have chosen and classified the objects of public education. It is according to this same philosophy, we have examined the moral sciences. political and educational policy are considered an essential part of common education.

"It is even less according to these philosophical principles, than on [experience, that the project presented to the Legislative Assembly was combined; but to apply the experience to a new nation, it was necessary "To disentangle the facts from the influence of causes that no longer exist..."

From what experience, from what influence can there be here question, if not from the experience of Catholic education which had
This makes France the first of nations, and yet it is rejected, it is rejected.
Destroyed, like the old France was destroyed?

But where will the sovereign authority of such teaching be, and the An infallible judge of this experiment? Let's listen carefully:

"The first condition of any instruction being that it does not teach than truths, the establishments that political power dedicates to them must be as independent as possible from any authority litigious, and yet this independence cannot be absolute, It follows from the same principle that they should only be made dependent on the assembly of the people's representatives, because of all the powers
He is the least corruptible, the furthest from being led astray by interests.
particular loans, the most subject to the influence of general opinion enlightened men, and especially because he is the one from whom essence emanates so completely all the changes, it is therefore the least enemy of progress of the Enlightenment, the least opposed to improvements than this progress must bring (1).

Here again is the dictatorship, the despotism of the intellects, of the consciences, souls; an assembly of men forming, so decreeing God to decide the truth and enslave the entire world to her whims, which she will call laws.

"If this plan is criticized for containing too extensive an instruction due, we can answer that with well-made elementary books and intended to be placed in the hands of children, with care taken to give to masters of the works composed for them, where they can learn from the (t) Lallomont, Choix, etc., t. XUI, p. 261, 263, 279, "SO, 295 noie.

Laws of the Revolution on public education 619

a way of developing principles, of adapting to intelligence students, we will not have to fear that the extent of this sign* ment exceeds the limits of the ordinary capacity of children.

"In the first three levels of education, only the following will be taught" elements of varying sizes. Therefore, the power must be able to The Church indicates which books should be taught. It would be dangerous.
to abandon the direction of elementary education, because the lu fearing that she might be led astray by prejudices.

"But in the high schools, of which there will only be nine, and in the highest level of education, the national society of sciences and arts, Professors will be prescribed nothing except to teach the science of which the The courses they will be responsible for teaching will bear the name.

These latest regulations show that the new plan makes closing one more level; primary school no longer began at canton, it extended down to settlements of 400 inhabitants; but secondary or district schools were just one school primary education is somewhat more developed, and the schools in the main towns of the department was still only a continuation of the two previous ones Mières, where there was nevertheless supposed to be a Latin teacher, for to introduce students to this language; the high schools, where only all the sciences will be taught in their full scope, and where will be formed The teachers of the other grade levels will number only nine. and the final degree, as in the previous plan, must not be than in Paris.

Thus, all the facilities offered are radically destroyed. to enable poor young people to train in the study of literature and sciences without leaving their locality and their family 'they that They offered them the free foundations of the old colleges. On From these ruins, a centralized education monopoly is being built, which must lead to the creation of a true financial aristocracy in Paris and philosophical-Masonic, that of the La Chalotais, of the Talleyrand and Voltaire.

The reasons given for this division and the objects of this en-teachings by the philosopher-marquis will make them even better known his tyrannical spirit and his hatred of religion and the old France:

"The old teaching was no less vicious in its form than through the choice and distribution of objects. A six-year study The progressive study of Latin formed the basis of education, and it was on this funds that disseminated the general principles of grammar, some knowledge of geography and history, some basic speaking skills and to write; it seemed they had only wanted to produce theologians and preachers; we aspire to form enlightened men.

620

DOCUMENT B

Thus the education that shaped the France of Saint Louis, of and trained all the great men of all states, of all the conditions, in literature and science, in the arts, in the law and administration, in commerce and war, this en-Free and equal education for all was only suitable for forming theologians and preachers, ignorant men, men without... Mother, unenlightened!

He said nothing, and for good reason, about his two and three years of philosophy. Sophie and physics, from this teaching which formed the Copernicus, the Galileos, the Newtons, the Leibnits, the Gassendi, the Pascals, The Descartes, the Bossuets, the Lalandes, and the La Condamines. He be careful not to say that it is this in-depth study of Latin and of the Greek, which shaped our beautiful French language with its precision, its clarity, its profound and Christian philosophy, and all the writings of those who have spoken and written it best, since Malherbe, Racine and Fénelon up to Massillon, Fontenelle and Voltaire; but these are the very properties of this language that Freemasonry had in interest in destroying, and she wanted, by suppressing the study of languages old ones in the most common levels of education, alter down to the very meaning of the main words that compose it.

He gives two other very curious reasons from the point of view of masonic: the first is that this study of ancient languages trained poets and orators (it was no longer just a matter of theologians and preachers), and that this poetry and eloquence, necessary for ancient constitutions, would be in ours the germ of a destructive corruption. And that's why we wanted the bishops and priests elected to the Constituent Assembly took an oath to the Civil Constitution of the Clergy, by yes or by no, without sentences, and that later the true Freemasons also voted without question death of Louis XVI. – The second reason is the slope towards the aristocracy, particularly noteworthy in ancient historians:

"One only needs to see the features in which the tenets were presented to us measures taken to destroy in Rome the influence of this inequality which was bound to destroy the Republic in the long run; distribution of national lands even though the rules are still reserved, there has been a change in the form of the delinquency; extension of citizenship rights; all these operations, as soon as they tend towards Equality (especially agrarian laws) is always presented, not as evil combined, containing some injustices, but as seditious, as inspired by the spirit of faction and brigandage (1). »

From this it follows that communism and land sharing, or the Banditry and theft are not unjust, and the great wrong of Ancient authors called them seditious.

i, Choice of reports, etc., vol. XIII, pp. 267, 276, 278, 294 note, 296*

Finally, since everything must be said, since all prejudices must Today, the long, in-depth study of languages is disappearing.
ancients, a study that would require reading the books they have given us Leaving them would perhaps be more harmful than helpful.

These reasons for the destruction of the old establishments of ins-public education are the same as that Condorcet argues for the creation of new teachings.

Material sciences, calculation, surveying, geometry, mechanics that which, at all levels, are the principal objects of study, the only ones, even, with human rights and their consequences these.

"Were not elementary notions of physics born from this," he said necessary, if only to protect against sorcerers and manufacturers or storytellers of miracles. I would even like to, continues the facetious and very-learned mason marquis, which the masters weave from time to time some in the weekly and public lessons: a duck of glass that comes to get the piece of bread that is presented to it with a knife; the answer to a question that one has to find in a book white; the fire that appears at the end of a pike; the pyre that lights up in sprinkling the victim; the blood liquefying; the miracles of Elijah of Saint January and a thousand others of this kind, which would be neither costly nor difficult to repeat.

"The principles of morality taught in schools and in the institutes will be those which, founded on our natural feelings and on the Reason, they also belong to all men. The constitution, in recognizing the right of each individual to choose their religion, establishing ensuring complete equality among all inhabitants of France, not per-puts a stop to admitting into public education a teaching which, Rejecting the children of a segment of the population would destroy equality.
social benefits, and would give particular dogmas an advantage.
This was contrary to freedom of opinion. It was therefore strictly
It is necessary to separate the principles of any religion from morality. particular and to not admit into public education the teaching of no religious affiliation.

"This proscription must extend even to what is called religion" natural; for the theistic philosophers are no more in agreement than the theologians on the idea of God, and on these moral relationships with humans
My. So it is an object that must be left, without any influence foreign to the reason and conscience of each individual.

And that's probably why he said earlier:

"Thus, in schools, the fundamental truths of social science" will proceed with their applications. Neither the French constitution, nor even the Declaration of Rights, will not be presented to any class of citizens comfortable tables descended from heaven, which must be adored and believed in; their Enthusiasm will not be painted based on prejudices, on habits of childhood, and we will be able to tell them: This declaration of rights, which you teaches you both what you owe to society and what your rights are. to demand from her this constitution that you must maintain at the expense of Our lives are simply the development of these simple principles dictated by nature and reason, which you learned in your early years to recognize the eternal truth. As long as there are men who do not obey will not rely on their reason alone, who will receive their opinions from an opinion foreign, in vain all the chains would have been broken, in vain these Opinions of command would be useful truths: humankind does not would still be divided into two classes, that of men who reason "And that of men who believe, that of masters and that of slaves."

Who can fail to see the falsehood and absurdity of this entire theory of morality? and of constitution?

Who doesn't see in this entire teaching monopoly the design Stop destroying all religions?

Finally, we see emerging in Condorcet's report a corporation responsible for managing this monopoly on behalf of the State monstrous in minds and hearts:

"Members of the National Society (or of the highest degree of self* (The group established by the report) will choose themselves. The first Once the training is complete, if it includes nearly the most enlightened men, We can be sure that the Society will constantly present the meeting.

"Half of these scholars will have their habitual residence in the departments, and this more equal distribution will have the further advantage of to better appreciate the value of talent and knowledge, to offer by all in the ignorance of the instructors and supporters; to the charlatanism of the enemies quick to unmask and fight him; to leave no room for prejudices no retreat where they can put down new roots, se to strengthen and expand.

"Each class of the National Society Ht high school teachers * High school teachers appoint those from institutes. As for the institutes secondary and primary school teachers, the list of eligible candidates will be made by the professors of the institutes in the district, and the choice appeared will hold for the first time the municipal body of the place where the school is located killed, for the last ones at the assembly of fathers of families of the district school administration (1).

But Condorcet's report, like Talleyrand's, was not also that an attempt; it required time and considerable strength a despotic commune to bring about the vastest machine of compression and as if in an eminently masonry mold fucks the intelligence and conscience of a great people and of a people who remain Catholic to their very core.

Laws of the Revolution on public education 623

neither

Finally, Robespierre appeared, dominating the Convention and the clubs. and the most advanced part of Freemasonry. A law makes due between August 10th and the September Massacres, August 18th, 1792, and bearing Danton's signature, came to finish destroying everything what remained of secular teaching congregations, and decree to end the sale of their assets, foundations of the Catholic faithful, their members were not to continue practicing teaching public as well as individually, and up to its defined organization tive.

Less than a year later, Robespierre himself, on July 13, 1793, for this purpose came to read the national education plan to the Convention left by one of the first enlightened figures of France, the regicide Michel Lepelletier, "a plan that the genius of humanity seemed to have" dictated, » to the judgment of the great philanthropist (1).

This plan, intended to be more national in scope, begins with the the greatest praise of previous works, that of Condorcet especially, which had just been approved by the Convention instruction committee and presented in his name with some modifications; but Lepelletier and Robespierre found too much inequality there. Wisely designed for the preservation and improvement of knowledge Human intelligence, it seems far removed from the advantages that should to offer a truly and universally national education. By conserving, therefore, the final degrees proposed by the committee, it demands a complete overhaul of primary schools. Here's what said Lepelletier through Robespierre:

"I request that you decree that from the age of five until twelve for boys, and up to eleven for girls, all children without exception and without distinction will be raised jointly at the expense of the Republic, and that all, under the holy law of equality, will receive the same same clothes, same food, same education, same care.

"At five years old, the homeland will therefore receive the child from the hands of nature. At sixteen, she will return it to society... In the cities, there will be a lincloths. Each establishment will contain four to six hundred students.

(I) Choice of reports, Aie., t. XIII, p. 316.

He

40

624

DOCUMENT B

one teacher for fifty children; those aged ten and eleven will be able to relieve the teacher in his duties, to supervise the younger children, to help for rehearsals... No servants will be employed in the institutional homes; the older children will give to the younger ones young people will receive whatever help they may need; each will do their part. their turn the common service.

"Will the public institution of children be compulsory or optional?"
tative for parents? According to the principles, everyone should be obligated to do so. everyone; for the public good, everyone must be obligated to do so. I ask that anyone who refuses to allow their children to attend the common institution shall be of the exercise of the rights of a citizen, for as long as he will have exempted from fulfilling this civic duty, and that he also pays double contribution in the children's tax I

"It will be easy for you to place these establishments in the buildings" belonging to the nation, religious houses, émigré dwellings and to very public properties.

"I would still like, failing this resource, the old cita
The doors of feudalism open up for this interesting destination.
From all sides there are murmurs and protests against the existence of these castles and those towers, odious monuments of oppression; instead of
To destroy them, let us put their ancient mass to good use... By demolishing them by handing over the owner, she will bring out of the hands of ordinary citizens palaces that offend the stern eye of equality, and this last sacrifice will serve Vira, perhaps against his will, the sad lord of the castle, currently oppressed by its colossal residence, ever since the liberation of the countryside has dried up the source of its opulence.

"Here, then, is how I propose to equip our institutions with institutes" National tuition: 1° the product of child labor; 2° income their education; 3. the surplus will be provided by the proceeds of a tax imposed on all citizens of the canton, each in proportion to his faculties, half in addition to the contribution.

So much for the promised free access in place of the old foundations!

"Expenses will be limited to what is strictly necessary. I wish that for the necessities of life, children deprived of all kinds of superfluity, be restricted to the absolute necessities; they will be laid down hard; their food will be healthy, but frugal... the wine and meat must be... to be excluded, their clothing comfortable but coarse. The salaries of male teachers will be fixed at 400 pounds; those of female teachers at 300 by giving them double the amount of food given to children older.

Laws of the Revolution on public education 655
Regarding the administration:

"Fathers have both the right and the duty to continually shower with tender and solicitude these interesting deposits of their sweetest hope... I propose that Every year, fathers choose for each school a national council, which will be established there, a council of fifty-two fathers taken from within their bosom.

"Each member of the council will be obliged to give their all" during the year seven days of his time, and each will do his week of residence in the institutional home to follow the conduct and children and teachers. Once a month the council of fifty-Two fathers will get together, and each will give an account.

"For financial administration, for revenue and expenditure, the The council of fifty-two fathers will form a committee of four members taken from within its ranks, whose functions will be to handle all purchases, to prescribe the nature of children's food according to the seasons, determine the types of physical labor they will be employed in, to set the price for their tasks, and finally to keep all the records. Each They will present their accounts in a few months.

"It's all about establishing a wise order and setting up the machine properly."

But what will the education system be like during the course of the institution? public?

"After strength and health, the fruit of a disciplined regimen, there is a good that the public institution owes to all, because for all it is of an invaluable advantage, I mean, habituation to work. In The day's schedule, everything else will be secondary, the work of the hands to work the land. We can still make them gather and spread the waste materials on the roads; the localities, the seasons, the car factories House sines will offer particular resources. Finally, I would like that various kinds of institutions be established within them tasks to which all children are suited, and which, distributed and distributed across all these establishments, would grow significantly for the republic the annual mass of manufactured production.

"What are the concepts and knowledge that we owe to our Students? Always those that are necessary for them to be citizens. and whose usefulness is common to all professions.

"I fully adopt the nomenclature for the public institution" that the committee presented to you for the primary school course: ap- to learn to read, write, count, measure; to receive principles of manner a basic knowledge of the Constitution, some basic economic concepts domestic and rural economy; developing the gift of memory by...

626

DOCUMENT B

engraving the most beautiful stories of the history of free peoples and of the Revolution French solution; this is what is necessary for every citizen, this is the ins- instruction that is owed to everyone.

"It is based on the principle that childhood is destined to receive the im- the healthy pressure of habit, which I would like to see at this age not be We didn't talk about religion at all... I would like it if during the entire course of The public institution where the child received only moral instruction universal and not the teachings of any particular belief. I I wish it were only at twelve years old, when he had returned to the society that he adopted a cult with reflection.

"However, according to the current state of mind, especially in In the countryside, perhaps you might fear carrying the discontent the situation and the scandal itself... I submit to this circumstantial difficulty to the wisdom of your reflections; but I insist in all cases that This part of the teaching is not part of the education curriculum. national, not to be entrusted to national schoolteachers, and that it be only permitted, if you deem this condescension necessary, to to take the children to the temple on certain days and at certain times closer to learn and practice the religion to which they will have been dedicated by their families.

"Such are the limits within which the plan of the ins- is enclosed public institution. Never in private schools will we find than an imperfect education. Their fundamental flaw is not to seize that of a few hours, and to abandon all the others.

"In the public institution, on the contrary, the whole child is considered by us belongs; matter, if I may put it that way, never leaves the mold; no external object will distort the modification you Give him... (1).

Thus, according to the most advanced Freemasonry, the French nation dates only from '89 or '93; her children must be raised as foundlings, without God, without religion, without any other rule of customs that universal morality, which we are careful not to define, by a handful of atheist tyrants seizing total control of their existence to cast them into a mold made in their likeness and from which they They must never go out.

A decree of the Convention dated August 13, 1793, had, said Lallement, prescribes the common education according to the plan of Lepolleticr, proposed and supported by Robespierre; but this decree was repealed on the 28th of Friday Demi-Brief Year II (October 19 of the same year), before the impossibilities bilities of the execution. Two days later, 30 Vendémiaire (October 21) He was replaced by another who did not keep previous plans. that primary schools, one per municipality of 100 to 1500 inhabitants people of both sexes and all ages.

(1) Choice of reports, etc., vol. XIII, p. 316 et seq.

Laws of the Revolution on Public Education 627

"Children, says article 2, receive their first education in these schools physical, moral and intellectual cation, the most suitable for developing in them republican values, love of country and a taste for work vail.

"Art. 3. They learn to speak, read, and write the French language. They are shown the traits of virtue that most honor men. my books, and particularly the features of the French Revolution more likely to elevate the soul and make them worthy of freedom and of equality. They acquire some geographical knowledge of France; knowledge of the rights and duties of man and citizen is made accessible to them through examples and their own experience. gives them their first notions of the natural objects that surround them and the natural action of the elements. – (This is the part of the miracles of Condorcet!) – They practice using numbers, the compass, the level, weights and measures, lever, pulley, and measurement of the times. They are often made witnesses to rural work and to workshops; they participate as much as their age allows.

decree of e.Yécu(ion relating to the location of these schools and to the
The first appointment of male and female teachers. "Their
The examination was to be carried out by a commission composed of five members, chosen by the District Directorate from a list of five citizens sent by the council of each municipality, after having consulted the supervisory committee for each of them
This place, to attest to their patriotism and good morals.
The commission sets up in the district capital; it invites all the citizens who wish to dedicate themselves to the honorable function of instituting teacher in the first schools (that's their official name) to be ins-write in their respective municipalities, with a visa from the committee monitoring the site, to similarly attest to their patriotism their morals and their good morals. Excluded from registration are all formerly noble, any ecclesiastic and minister of any religion whatsoever conch shell. The formerly noblewomen, the formerly nuns, canonesses, grey nuns, as well as schoolteachers who would have been appointed in the old schools by clergymen siastics or former nobles.

"The commission examines publicly, according to the ranking of registration, knowledge, teaching ability, morals and the patriotism of the individual, and the fathers of families, the widows mothers and guardians gather in each community a meeting to choose a teacher from among the eligible candidates on the list displayed in school districts (1).

(i) Complete collection of laws, decrees, etc., by J.-B. Du Verger, volume VI, p. 299 and 320.

6.8 DOCUMENT B

In that same year, 1793, the Convention member Lakanal pre-felt a plan for moral education for the youth of both sexes, which was based on patriotic festivals in honor of the re-A tour of greenery, fruits, harvests, and grape harvests. These
The festivities were to be celebrated with patriotic songs and dances.
Ticks. Dancing became mandatory!

This great legislator even wanted to help men and to women, whose education had been neglected under the old regime, and, in his draft law on education, he asked that a theatre be built in each canton where men come
They should learn to dance!

This was entirely the practice of androgynous lodges, of which we we have pointed out the profound immorality (Book I, Chapter IV, § ?); and it is with less grotesque forms, but even more subdued modern seeks to establish in state education the what she wants to subject the young people of Lille to in Germany, to France and in Belgium (book II, chapter XI, § 3. XII, § 9, XIII, § 3) (1).

"It would be as tedious as it would be pointless to reproduce the discussions
"sions which accompanied these various decrees," Lallemeant continued, most of them interrupted, agitated, or marked by incoherence political events. Their positive result is the law of 3 Brumaire, Year IV; these developments are found in the reports Talleyrand and Condorcet's reports, put, so to speak, in a state of hardship moniker by the report that precedes it.

This report is from Daunou, an apostate priest of the Oratory, and all faithful days in the assemblies to the Masonic doctrines of the left. He is notable for his declamations against the teaching the organization of old France, by the reasons he gives for its destruction, and by the reasons he sets forth to justify the new calf. The Masonic spirit completely dominates him.

"In 1789," he said, "education was undoubtedly flawed, but it was organized. Here, the higher education institutions, everything that provided training, so to speak, the pinnacle of education, the academies, the societies,
The high schools and theaters had honored the French nation in the eyes of all cultivated peoples. There, eloquence and philosophy were united.
sometimes to cast long furrows at the foot of terrified thrones light through the ancient night of prejudice and error. There, it is formed mastered a kind of public opinion, which was probably not always pure... but who nevertheless grew accustomed to murmuring around the governor nement, and even managed to intimidate him sometimes; in short, one could not one could not say that there was no education among a people where one

(1) See the fact-filled speech delivered by Mr. Koller in the Chamber of Deputies put on January 19, 1880, during the discussion of the F.* project. Camille gaped over the girls' high schools.

Laws of the Revolution on public education 629

began to meditate on the writings of d'Alembert, Condillac, and especially of this immortal author of Emile, who seemed to have been mistakenly thrown into our modern times and among crowds of slaves, like the representative of antiquity and freedom.

"This is what public education was like among us in 1789 in its higher degrees... In second-order institutions one does not almost nothing remained of the physiognomy and character of first. It's not that several universities, several colleges don't were justly renowned for the skill of the masters and for the emotion the disciples' conversation; but the plan that both were con-Those damned to follow misled their talents and deceived their activity. I do not childhood... where reason was insulted by the forms of reasoning, where Finally, nothing was intended to develop man, nor even to begin him.

cer. But it was especially at the gates of the small schools that the careful watch was kept ignorance, fanaticism, prejudices of all kinds.

You see, representatives of the people, that public education was bound by too many chains to the abuses that you overturned for that it could withstand the shocks of the revolution.

"Lower institutions were soon to give way to progress" from public reason, to the contagion of enlightenment, to the sudden overflow dement of philosophical ideas, which were spreading for the first times, perhaps recommended by a kind of general approval and bearing the very seal of the law.

"The intermediate institutions, hit by the same blows, have dis appeared gradually along with the corporations that governed them; and, with regard to the In higher education institutions, they were also driven by their own corruption, through this aristocratic immorality which they contained deadly seeds.

"Among the public education projects that have multiplied so much over the past six over the years, there are two to whom your committees have felt they owed attention particular tion; but a public education system could not sr.
to place alongside a republican constitution. Your committees, in drafting the project they are reproducing today has only brought together, in linking them to the principles of the republican constitution, the ideas scattered famous men who had dealt with it; we honor ourselves
We will recommend this project in the names of Talleyrand and Condorcet.
and several other writers (1).

Thus, there is no longer any doubt, the old teaching of the Franco, with its foundations, its freedoms and its free access at all levels, was completely destroyed, for two Masonic purposes

(1) Lallement, Choix, etc., volume XV. p. 402 et seq.

530 DOCUMENT B

to annihilate the Catholic religion first, the patriarchal monarchy then, double haze of our nationality, and all the trials Those tempted to create a new one have not had, and should not have had, no other purpose than to maintain and consume these two major destruction.

The law of 3 Brumaire, Year IV (October 22, 1795), which followed this report port, is in fact a summary of the reports, projects or decrees ana-mentioned above, and the evident manifestation of the dual purpose that one

1. One or more primary schools per canton; teachers examined and chosen by juries, presented by the administrators departmental offices; premises and garden provided by the State to these institutions teachers, and annual remuneration paid by each student and set by departmental administration; and finally, teaching materials: reading, writing, calculating, and elements of republican morality.

2. Central Schools: one per department; three sections per school; in the first one a drawing teacher, a teacher of natural history, a professor of ancient languages, a modern language teacher, as judged by the relevant administrative bodies departmental, and with the authorization of the legislative body.

In the second section, two professors: one of mathematics ticks, the other being physics and experimental chemistry.

In the third section, four professors: one of grammar general mayor, one of literature, one of history, and the fourth of legislation.

Examination and election of these professors by an investigating jury, and administrative approval; annual salary equal to that of a department administrator, with an annual remuneration a daily allowance that cannot exceed 25 pounds per student. A quarter of students from each section may, however, due to individual circumstances agency, to be exempt from this fee by the administration of department.

Finally, additional central schools, at the expense of the municipalities those who once had colleges, and who have lost them.

3rd National Institute in Paris, divided into three classes: physical sciences ics and mathematics, moral and political sciences, literature ture and fine arts. For the training of this institute, the Directorate The executive committee will appoint 48 members, who will then elect the other 96. which, assembled, 141, will appoint 24 associates, eight for each class.

Once organized, the nominations for the vacant positions will be made by the institute on a less than threefold list, presented by the class where a place is vacant.

The Legislative Body will determine annually, based on the statement provided by the Directory, a summons for the maintenance and works of this ins- titut.

4. In each canton of the Republic, each

Year seven national holidays: that of the founding of the Republic that, on the 1st Vendémiaire; that of youth, on the 10th Germinal; that of the spouses, on the 10th of Floréal; that of the recognition, on the 10th of Prairial; that of agriculture, the 10th of Messidor; that of liberty, the 9 and 10 Thermidor; that of the old men, on 10 Fructidor.

These national celebrations consist of patriotic songs, in discourses on morality (read by the citizen, in fraternal banquets, in various public games and in the distribution of rewards (1).

These festivals are reflected in the constitution of the Carbonari.

So again, more free services, more equality, more freedom.

no other morality than that of the republican constitution—

no more religion, no more worship, no more God than the God of Freemasons: Nature!

*

This system could only be implemented with a doubling a series of tyrannical measures. A decree of the Directory dated the 13th Thermidor year IV, was thus conceived:

"The teachers of the youth who will live in the commune, will will return with their students to the public square. They will commit to in a loud voice, in the presence of the constituted bodies, not to inspire their students than republican sentiments, respect for virtue and recognition birth for the founders of the republic.

Two years later, Chazal proposed to the Five Hundred, on the 12th of Vendée Year IV, that the "teachers and schoolteachers who would harbor hatred for the republic and its laws would be reported to the public prosecutor and deported for life.

And as the acts of violence increased more and more more to impose on the population a system in opposition if complete with their Catholic sentiments, a member of the con "Boonaire (of Cher)," cynically said from the tribune, the 1* p Iloréal ah VII:

"Either fathers of families are friends, or they are enemies of order." current state of affairs. If they are friends of him, they will abide by the laws he established, and will not hesitate to entrust their children to teachers Republicans. If they are enemies, I don't see how we could to demand for themselves a freedom which they certainly could not abuse ser (2) 1 »

(1) Complete collection of laws, decrees, etc., by J-B. Duvcrsier, vol. VIII, p. 435.

(2) See the excellent work on the laws of the Revolution concerning public education by Fr. Rouvier SJ, The Revolution as Schoolteacher, a study on secular education, free and compulsory, one volume in-12, 1880, Seguin, publisher, in Avignon, Oudin in Paris. As for the absolute state of disorganization into which popular education fell during the entire revolutionary period, V. in the Revue des Questions Historiques d'avant-P 1880, an important article by Mr. Victor Pierre V, "School during the French Revolution," 1789-1802.

632

DOCUMENT B

IV

However, the Revolution had just brought about a new development new; to the Masonic dictatorships of the Constituent Assembly, of the Legislative, of the Convention and the Jacobins, of Robespierre and of the Directory had been succeeded by that of one of the most famous Freemasons. Napoleon Bonaparte. The First Consul (statement of the situation of The Republic, presented to the legislative body, on 3 Frimaire, year X by State councillors Thibeaudeau, Marmont and Regnauld de St-Jean d'Angély) expressed himself thus on all the laws of education trials to date.

"Public education has taken a few steps in Paris and in a small number of departments; in almost all the others it is either Slight or nonexistent. If we don't step off the drawn line, soon it There will only be some light shed on a few points, and elsewhere ignorance and barbarity.

What was the cause? Roederer, rapporteur of a new the bill implied it in these terms:

"Experience has shown that most fathers wanted that their children be raised in the principles of their faith, and that they preferred schools paid for by themselves, where their religion, in free schools, which did not teach it.

Legislative Body member Daru formulated this cause more explicitly again:

"Public opinion, stronger than all laws, rejected the new institution" old, despite its usefulness. What was the cause of this resistance? tance? I don't think I'm wrong in attributing it to religious opinions. his. Nothing could be more true, no doubt, than this feeling which tells man more natural than the alarms that parents must have felt, when that they were offered the option of entrusting their children to a master who would keep the deepest silence surrounding the religion they children professed.

But this same cause is accentuated in a much different way. in the analysis of the minutes of the departmental general councils statements, made before the Legislative Body by State Councillor Portalis, in the explanatory memorandum of the concordat that had just been concluded with the Holy See.

"Listen," he said, "to the voice of all honest citizens, who in V&s Departmental assemblies expressed their wishes on what will happen for ten years, under their eyes.

Laws of the Revolution on public education 633

a II, they say, is the time for theories to fall silent in the face of facts. There is no instruction without education, and no education without morality. without religion.

"The teachers taught in the desert, because it was proclaimed imprudently believing that one should never speak of religion in the schools.

"Education has been nonexistent for ten years. We must embrace religion." as the basis of education.

"The children are left to the most dangerous idleness, to vagrancy The most alarming bondage. They have no idea of divinity, no notion of justice and injustice, hence of fierce and barbaric customs, hence a ferocious people. If we compare what education is with what it should be, one cannot help but lament the fate that threatens the present and future generations. Thus all of France calls for religion to the rescue of morality and society.

"It is the result of the analysis of the minutes of the general councils departments, which the majority of French people adhere to the Catholic faith that... The same things result from the correspondence of the government "lying with the prefects (1).,."

So, according to official findings, these are the results had culminated in a whole century of crowned Masonic propaganda through several years of revolution and bloody persecutions. And yet, far from experiencing such a brilliant and to the wishes so clearly expressed by the vast majority of the French nation, Masonic fanaticism persisted in pursuing his anti-national enterprise and resorting to making it succeed Rob *spierre's own methods by masking the violence under the guise of outside of privilege and cunning. Councilor Thibaudeau continues Next project:

"A more focused public education system has fixed thinking of the government^ Primary schools assigned to one or more municipalities, if local circumstances allow this association, will offer elementary knowledge to the children of citizens everywhere, without which man is little more than a blind agent and dependent of everything around him. The teachers there will receive treatment fixed salary provided by the municipalities, and a variable salary consisting of remunerations agreed upon with the parents who will be able to bear them. Some useful functions can be assigned to these teachers, if they can be reconciled with their primary and necessary function.

"The basics of languages will be taught in secondary schools." ancient subjects, geography, history, mathematics. These schools formed-meront or by private companies avowed by the administration public funding, or funding through the support of local municipalities, will be encouraged through concessions of public buildings, through free places in the Higher education institutions are awarded to the most distinguished students. and finally through bonuses granted to a specific number of pro-teachers who will have provided the most students to higher education institutions.

(1) Lallemeut, Choix de rapports, etc., t. XVIII, p. 8, 43, 60, 61, 127.

634

DOCUMENT B

"Thirty schools, under the name of lycées, will be established and maintained" at the expense of the Republic, in the main areas, which by their the situation and the customs of their inhabitants will be more favorable to the study of literature and science.

"There, scholarly languages, geography, and history will be taught." history, logic, physics, geometry, mathematics; in some of them, the modern languages whose use will be indicated speaker situation.

"Six thousand students from the homeland will be distributed among these thirty establishments three thousand will be children of military personnel or civil servants who have served well the state; three thousand others will be chosen from secondary schools, based on specific examinations and competitions, and in a number proportionate to the population of the departments that will have to supply them.

"Students from the merged (annexed) departments will be called in

They will absorb our maxims there, and will carry them back to their families. love for our institutions and our laws.

"Other students will be received, cared for and educated there at the expense of their parents.

"Six million will be allocated each year to training and education maintenance of these establishments, to the education of the nation's students, to salaries of professors, to the salaries of directors and staff accountants.

"Special schools will provide the final level of public education" that; there are some that are already formed and that will retain their organization; others will be established in places that suit will indicate, and for the professions for which they will be necessary.

.* This, in short, is the system that appeared to the government. to gain the most advantages, the most chances of success, and that in this During the session, he will propose to the Legislative Body, reduced to a draft bill.

"Its surveillance may be sufficient for thirty establishments; a larger many would escape his attention and his gaze; but above all, one more Many today would find neither distinguished professors who do the reputation of the schools, nor of the principals capable of maintaining a strict discipline, nor sufficiently enlightened advice to direct the administration.

a. Thirty high schools wisely distributed across the territory of the Republic

Laws of the Revolution on public education 635

will encompass its entire extent through their reports, I will illuminate, spread "will shine upon all parts the brilliance of their lights and their successes" will strike even the eyes of foreigners (1). »

We have seen, and continue to see even abroad, the progress and the fruits of these lights.

Thus, at all levels, there will be no more religious instruction. than before; republican morality itself has disappeared.

In vain did the legislator Daru, during the discussion of the bill, did he strive to show the disastrous consequences of this materialism for the very success of the law:

The mason Roederer, the government's spokesperson, was responding to citizen Daru, who, in order to bring religion into schools, had national laws, it would have been necessary to return education to the priesthood. the doctrine of the various cults, and that one could well sense how many reasons revolved around such a system, and how imprudent it would have been to two different institutions (2). »

As for the difficulties arising from inequality, from the resurgence of privileges of places, establishments and people, from the creation of the worst kind of aristocracy, that of bayonets and offices, State Councillor Fourcroy simply replied dictatorial-element:

"The government thought that in order to establish literary institutions to establish a solid foundation for research and scientific knowledge; it was necessary to dear to the pupils and to populate the classes with students, so as not to run the risk to populate them only with professors. That was the goal he wanted to achieve. by creating a fairly considerable number of national expenditures so that their funds, distributed among the high schools, may be sufficient for their upkeep. The foundation. The total cost of the new system is based on this design, of which the , grandeur is worthy of the French people, and whose suitability to the times pre- the feeling will be easily felt by all those who know how to appreciate the state of the constants in which we live.

"Those who believe that the government must provide everyone with the means The investigating judges will recognize that he has done everything he can in this regard. in the circumstances in which it is placed. It would have taken more than ten thousand lions of annual expenditure to establish, at the expense of the public treasury, two hundred and fifty secondary schools; and yet this number is indispensable sand WOULD HAVE BEEN INFERIOR TO THAT OF THE COLLEGES THAT EXISTED IN 1790 AND WHO ALMOST ALL OWE THEIR EXISTENCE TO PARTICULAR FOUNDATIONS RES... »

Yet another very significant admission in favor of the old institutions tutions; it would be difficult to state this more explicitly

(t) Lallemenl, Choix, etc., tomeXVII, p. 384, 385.

(2) Lallement, Choix, etc., tome XVIII,^ 8.

636

DOCUMENT B

the violence and injustice of revolutionary plunder, as well the sterility of efforts attempted outside the religious framework for to repair the ruins of an unprecedented despotism.

Title VII contains one of the most important parts of the draft bill; it deals with national students: out of six thousand four hundreds of boarders or students kept near the high schools, gentle fourteen hundred will be taken immediately by the government and for ten years among the inhabitants of the united departments; and four thousand will be chosen, according to a competition, from among the secondary school students.

"The basis of the system which constitutes the novelty of this plan and its diff
In comparison to all those that have been proposed so far, everything rests on entire on this last provision. When the students have finished their six years of study in high schools, their application or their pro-sandstones will find, at the first stage of their work, a new character a source of hope and success. Two-tenths of them will be placed in the various special schools, where they will continue to be educated and maintained at the expense of the public treasury, so as to acquire with glory

A secure state and existence within the Republic. Never an advantage
No greater opportunity has been offered to studious youth. Jurisprudence, medicine cinema, mathematics, physics, military art, manufacturing, diplomacy, administration, astronomy, commerce, painting, architecture, all the paths of knowledge and talent that make men valuable and useful
The doors to their peers will be open to them. Five hundred high school students will be received at the only military school; they will be cared for there during two years at the Republic's expense, they will receive all their education there necessary for men of war, either in theory or in practice ministry, either in the practice of military art, and after these two years, which will be counted as time of service, they will enter officially candles in the bodies.

"Title VIII sets the average term of six thousand four hundred pen-pensions of seven hundred francs. These pensions will be used for food, for schooling maintenance and instruction of students. Those that the parents will pay for.
Their children will receive equal government pensions... The students External students from high schools, like those from special schools, will pay a reduction proposal put forward by the high school administration offices and confirmed by the government. Not only will pensions be used for food
In addition to the care and maintenance of the students, they will also provide for the p fixed by the three administrators and the high school teachers, which will be completed by the government and deducted from these pensions. This processing fixed supplementary treatment (sic) taken from those of the pensioners non-national staff and on the remuneration of external staff; and this supplementary
The amount will also be determined by the government. This will determine merit and...

Laws of the Revolution on public education 637

zeal of the professors, the censor, and the prosecutor of each high school, receipt will receive a reward proportionate to the number of students they attract. will. It was deemed appropriate not to include in this provision the headteachers of the high schools who will receive immediate support from the government an additional fee related to their treatment and services

In other words, France no longer wants us or our brands. Our schools are empty; let's fill those that have... intended to govern France and public opinion, of our teachers, our children, and all of France, poor and The wealthy, who had to deal with the costs and the foundation on the budget, by paying teachers and students. This increases our income. we are reducing our expenses; and thereby the inspector positions, administrator, professor and supervisor, etc., all at the appointment by the government or ourselves, belong to Freemasonry; the Freemasons remain masters of opinion, of the intelligence, conscience, the army and the fortresses, and by They are from all over France. And we'll see if, with our national government and our students alone worthy of the name nationals, we will not destroy the old nationality, for to create a new nation, not French, but revolutionary and cosmopolitan or Franco-Masonic.

Such peremptory reasons were perfectly understood by the brothers and friends, and the bill went to the Court, to the a majority of 80 votes against 9, and in the Legislative Body by 251 votes white against 27 black.

Thus was completed the work undertaken against education through Freemasonry and the Revolution. Nothing less than the organization of this monopoly to put it in the hands of the State all schools in France, from primary school to the highest faculty, and to mold the entire country in its image of a new dictatorship.

The establishment of the Imperial University by arbitrary decree and anti-constitutional of March 17, 1808, (see Book II, Chapter VII, § 5j- was merely the consecration of the Masonic plan with a set despotic prescriptions intended to establish in the young generations and the educated classes, the despotism of the dictator that The secret societies had given to France.

(1; UUeaieat, Choix, etc., tome XVtll, p. 91 et seq.

Document C

Secret Societies and the Assassination of Gustav III.

We indicated in chapter VT of the second book p. 131-136 and pp. 168-160 the numerous contemporary testimonies which attract secret societies believe the assassination of the unfortunate king of

This very important fact, which until now has been shrouded in so much mystery has been definitively clarified by documents that have been published first the Moerkische Kirchliche Blættcr, then the Germania of the 9th June 16 and 23, 1878, and which Mr. Krnest Fagiant analyzed in The Universe of August 13, 14 and 15, 1878.

These are extracts from the file relating to the count's servant d'Ankarstroëm who, on the orders of his master, had assassinated Gustave III and who had subsequently taken refuge in Berlin. A magistrate went In 1812, and was tasked with organizing the archives of criminal court and found there a series of legal documents relating to this person, of whom the Swedish government had later requested extradition.

The Prussian magistrate we just mentioned made extracts of these documents and communicated them through an intermediary to these newspapers in 1877 with the permission of the higher authority. The the Prussian government, which has so many ties with France Freemasonry had long held their secret tones, but, after the last In response to the socialists' attacks, he instead found it advantageous to to incite public outrage against the fregislates.

We reproduce the essential passages of the interesting story in which Mr. Fatigant analyzed these documents.

"After the destruction of Catholicism and religious orders in Sweden, He had founded three different lodges of Freemasons which, until Gustave III, had held all the real power. This prince having To dare to escape their domination, various attempts were made to bring him back to other feelings. Seeing him unwavering, the The fanatics did not hesitate. They resolved to assassinate him.

"Three members of the nobility, Horn, Ribbing and Ankarstroëm, were They were tasked with the assassination attempt and drew lots to determine who would carry

SECRET SOCIETIES AND THE ASSASSINATION OF GUSTAVIAN III 639

Appointed to carry it out, Ankarstroëm entrusted the mission of striking the king to one of his servants, a brother serving in the lodge.

"This is how this criminal plan was carried out."

"Ankarstroëm had dressed his servant in a domino and had con due to the theatre, to a masked ball which the king was to attend (March 15) 1792).

"At a moment when Gustav III, masked, was crossing the hall of

From the gathering a shot rang out, the sound of which was almost stifled by the shouts and laughter of this undulating and tumultuous crowd killer.

At that same moment the king collapsed into the arms of Baron Essen. exclaiming:

"— I have just been injured by a large black mask (1) 1
"But already the gathering that protected and covered up the assassin, had scattered in all directions.

c The king's supporters, and this was the vast majority of those seated They rushed to his aid. They were indignant, and in the first In a moment of anger, they severely mistreated all the black masks who they fell into their laps.

"The king had a deep wound in his side. They rushed to him transported to his apartments. He thought he had sensed, he said, that someone he pressed a pistol against his chest, and, having then freed himself from a With a quick movement, he had deflected the blow. The numerous folds of His scarf had, moreover, cushioned the force of it, and he owed it to these two circumstances of not having been killed immediately. The scarf had also taken fire, and the flame then spread to the cloak; but one had been able to extinguish it by tearing off the scarf and tearing it to pieces.

"The troops appeared a few minutes later, and we were returned to the ble of their prompt arrival to the zeal and presence of mind of the son of The young Pollet, governor of Stralsund.

"Seeing the king fall, he rushed out of the hall, and he had run to warn the regiments on whose loyalty the royal party could count on it. He had taken care, upon leaving, to have the exits guarded. sentries were posted to the hall to prevent any unauthorized attendees from entering. ringers. In addition, he arranged the troops he had gone to warn on the square located in front of the theatre.

However, there were individuals who, without a doubt, were bribed by The conspirators, in order to increase the unrest and confusion, had set themselves And to cry out, at the very moment the king fell; To the fire! The hall is burning! Every man for himself!

(i) Count Aokarstrom was short in stature, but a domestic servant, who drew the A gunshot, had been fired from six feet away.

zi 41

"And the crowd immediately rushed out of the hall and surged into the corridors.

"Neither the stairs nor the corridors had handrails. But there existed at various levels, and at intervals, sorts of landings on the which sentries had been placed on. These men, taken from among the The guards carried out their duties with inflexible rigor, that the crowd had suddenly come to assail them with its disorderly waves born. An indescribable uproar ensued, in the midst of which several were hurled from their narrow pedestals and killed in the fall, or injured, some more seriously than others. However, the order could not be enforced.

"Meanwhile, the police lieutenant, von Liliens, arrived."

He was escorted by a strong detachment of reliable troops. He forced the crowd, having entered the theater, were placed in the middle of the In the room, around a table, a platoon of soldiers stood with bayonets fixed. a sharp drop; then, after having surrounded all the areas around the buildings Surrounded by an impenetrable cordon of troops, he sat down at the table, and made himself he brought in all the assistants one after the other, and subjected them to minute examining difficult interrogations.

"Count Horn, one of the most brilliant horsemen at court, had to..." to suffer like everyone else. Although he was only twenty-two years old For years, he was considered one of the most fervent members of the opposition. His distress was extreme, and the most intense anxiety was evident on his face. and in his entire demeanor. He attributed them, when they were pointed out to him, to the horror that such an attack inspired in him. The response seemed pleasant possible and dispelled suspicions. Von Liliensparre did not believe it, at least. entitled to retain it.

a The main leaders of the discontented: Ribbing, Engstrom, Bielke, Lilienhorn, General Pechlin, etc., appeared successively in subsequently, and by the firmness of their demeanor and their responses, did not provide They have no grounds for the accusations.

Finally, Count Ankarstroëm, then an ensign in the Blue Guard, He was questioned. He was, at least outwardly, perfectly calm. and master of himself. But suspicions had already fallen on him.

"At the moment when the group of conspirators had rushed into the hall, to meet Gustav III, and had surrounded him, a musician from The orchestra had seen the count approach very closely to the king. He had made the remark to several people.

"Ankarstroëm, having been informed of the matter, had begun searching for this..." man, had led him to the buffet and after drinking with him and his health, he had left her after shaking her hand. But this poor behavior acquaintance, far from dispelling the musician's suspicions, had increased them, and He had communicated the fact to Liliensparre. Ankarstroëm, however, did not

"The room was already beginning to empty. The assistants, as they were questioned, were sent back, not to their homes, but to the changing room bubble. It was then discovered on the floor, not far from where one had shot the king with a dagger and two pistols.

"The dagger had a very particular appearance and was well made for to frighten, because its shape had been calculated in such a way as to make it almost necessary any wound, even a slight one, inflicted with its blade is fatal.

As for the two pistols, they were of English manufacture, and the cannons were five inches long. One had just been fired, the other was still loaded. Two small round balls were found in the barrel, which were not of the correct caliber; a triangular piece of lead, which appeared to have been cut with a sharp instrument; another fragment of the same metal and shape, wrapped and sewn in a hide of glove; eight small nails first and two lead pellets. From this we conclude that the other pistol was to contain the same charge, and that a number of equal number of projectiles were found in the king's wound.

"Around four o'clock in the morning, people who had attended the ball before returning home. The interrogation was over, and had not provided any decisive information about the authors of the attack attempt.

"The crowds that filled the streets were expressing the most profound grief, lively and most sincere, because Gustav III was generally very well liked.

a – It was a French Jacobin who just assassinated the king, they said the conspirators to the people in the streets of Stockholm,

"And as a company had just been formed in Paris the idea of regicides, the supposition, was not entirely plausible. and justified.

"On the morning of the 16th, the police lieutenant had it announced to his... "deceived in the city that a reward of ten thousand rixdales would counted towards the person who would reveal the king's assassin. Then he summoned all the armorers in the city, in order to subdue the dagger and the pistols upon their examination.

"However, Akrel, Stockholm's most famous surgeon, had They were able to remove two projectiles from the king's wound. The entire court was gathered in the castle's great hall. The pain was painted on the greatest number of faces • but it would not always have been easy to guess whether she was sincere or affected, because some of the conspirators had had the audacity to come.

"They hoped in this way to deflect suspicion, while..." giving them the pleasure of witnessing their victim's agony. They accused highly accuse the Jacobins of being the perpetrators of the murder, and Count Rib-Bing, one of the leaders of the most radical opposition, was ranting against games with extreme violence.

642

DOCUMENT C

"The government is on the wrong track," he said in the middle of a group of courtiers, speaking in a vehement and convinced tone. The real cousins pables, these are the French. The king was preparing to wage war against them; They knew it, and they wanted to warn him.

"An infantry general, cousin of a minister, Baron Årmfeldt, he was then unable to control his indignation.

"You are mistaken, sir," he replied. "Those are not the Frenchmen who murdered our master; he was a Swedish gentleman. And although I blush for my order and my country, I do not want to Hide for longer.

€ This firm and severe response provoked strong recriminations. But the unrest was suddenly calmed by the arrival of the governor of the town, which came to announce that the real culprits had been discovered.

"One of the gunsmiths summoned by the police lieutenant had admitted the pistols and declared that he had sold them to Count Ankarstroëm, in* A sign in the Blue Guard. We immediately went to the latter's house, and After arresting him in his bed, they took him to prison, where they had subjected him to an initial interrogation.

Upon hearing this news, Count Ribbing paled and wanted to leave. gner. But he was taken prisoner. The search had already begun, without losing a moment, of all the discontented people whose intimate relationships my dealings with Ankarstroëm made them suspects of complicity.

"However, a number of conspirators escaped. Baron Bielke..." poisoned. But his corpse was handed over to the executioner, who took it to the scaffold on a cart, and buried him in the place where they were the executions. A Stockholm notary hanged himself. However, one managed to seize Lilienhorn, from the Horn counts (father and son), of General Péchlin, of Artillery General Sinclair and about twenty other gentlemen suspected of being fanatics and accomplices of the assassination assassin.

that the investigation began. But it was only ordered to appease public outrage; it was conducted with extreme leniency, and The search for the accused was incredibly slow. Everyone in Stockholm, however, was convinced that among the members of the a large number of the nobility who lived in this city had taken part in the conspiracy.

"Gustave III left only one young son, and the Duke of Suder-Mania, his brother, was appointed regent after his death. A commission was constituted by his order to judge Ankarstroëm and his accomplices. But, as he himself was affiliated with their lodge, she was only composed of fanatics.

"In the initial moment of confusion and surprise, Ankarstroëm

SECRET SOCIETIES AND ASSASSINATION THE GÜSTLVE III 643

had confessed. But afterwards he consistently refused to count them. ter, and not a single word could be extracted from him about his secret plans, nor on the number and quality of his accomplices.

"Furthermore, much insistence was placed, but with just as little success, on to make him tell what had become of Mahneke, the servant he had charged with carrying out the crime. It was not mentioned in the documents of the procedure, and for what reasons this question was returned to so often. tion, so that we do not know if the suspicions that this insistence conveys The hits were based on a beginning of evidence. But the silence obs Tiné d'Ankarstroëm revealed that he had serious reasons for not point to facilitate the investigation of justice. Mahneke could not be discovered green. We will explain later why, and what became of it.

"Many historians have claimed that Ankarstroëm was resolute," Having committed his crime, he took justice into his own hands by shooting himself. in his head. The assertion is false. Ankarstroëm hoped to escape the research; he even expected to receive the prize for the murder. It was, moreover Their end showed him to be a man devoid of courage and energy. This is further proven by the fact that he initially weakened and did not know how to to uphold the oath by which the conspirators had solemnly pledged themselves not to confess, whatever happened, and especially not to reveal to denounce each other. He was better able to control himself afterwards, it is true; He even tried, during the second interrogation, to go back on his previous statements. first admissions and to mitigate their seriousness.

"The investigation, moreover, was progressing with extreme slowness. The The regent showed himself to be neither impatient nor even eager to avenge his brother and his king. The judges could, however, have easily discovered this. the leaders of the conspiracy. But they systematically left in the shadow of all the compromising revelations for the sect of the Illu-mined.

"It was finally necessary to satisfy the people, who were demanding punishment" tion of the assassins, and, after a month of investigations and interrogations, the Count Ankarstroëm, found guilty of the murder of Gustav III, was sentenced to death and executed.

"We have just said that the conduct of the Duke of Södermanland was, in this whole affair, which is extremely suspicious. Grand master of all following the orders of Swedish Freemasonry, he acts as little as possible and always under the pressure of public opinion.

"By closely examining his habits and intimate relationships, one He became almost certain that he was among the conspirators. We are even though he is convinced today, in Sweden, that he could have saved his brother, if he had wanted to, for in his capacity as grand master, he knew everything about what was being discussed and plotted in the lodges.

"Once appointed regent, he removed all supporters of the court from the court."

044

DOCUMENT 0

Gustav III stripped them of their offices and pensions. to reward Ankarstroëm's accomplices, and didn't even bother to conceal his hatred for the deceased king.

"Among the most loyal supporters of the latter was the general Count Armfeldt. He had been his closest confidant. Gustav III He hid nothing of his feelings from her, and he had even, it was said, entrusted with the safekeeping of highly compromising documents concerning the conspirator. The regent did everything in his power to regain possession of these papers; But seductions and threats failed in the face of the count's firmness.

"— I handed over to you everything that pertained to the interests of the State," he replied Armfeldt. As for my master's secrets, I cannot divulge them. ser; but they will die and be buried with me.

"Despite this promise, he fell from grace and soon had to leave the precipice." especially Stockholm and Sweden, his friends having come to warn him one day that his freedom, his very life, were seriously in danger. He fled. in Naples; but the spies sent after him discovered him there almost that immediately, and one of the leaders of Swedish Freemasonry, the co Ionel Palinquist came there to revive it...

"Tasked by the regent with secretly abducting Armfeldt, he had made himself to appoint captain of the frigate on which he was to bring back his pre-State bell ringer in Stockholm. Lise believed success assured, having acquired court for having betrayed the secrets of the association, an unforgivable crime and always punishable by death. Armfeldt was suspected of being searching of his master's assassin, the servant of Count Ankarstroëm, and That, in reality, was the reason why he was being pursued with such ferocity. of relentless pursuit.

"Secretly warned of this new danger, he was able to escape it by fleeing to Russia.

"Count Munk was less fortunate. He was a strong-willed man and of heart, and one of the most devoted supporters of Gustav III. The Duke of Sudermanie judged him so formidable that, immediately upon being appointed regent, he reacted arrested and taken from Stockholm by soldiers. A few hours Afterwards, these men returned to the city without their prisoner, and nobody Since then, he has only known in a positive way what they did with it.

"But it was being said publicly in Stockholm that it was one mile from the city Count Munk had been shot, then buried by his escort in a deserted place. The soldiers in charge of the execution had themselves confessed.

"The orchestra musician, an eyewitness to the assassination, disappeared Rut also, and without anyone being able to discover what had become of him.

"He was Polish."

"Where was the assassin hiding?"

SECRET SOCIETIES AND ASSASSINATION BY GUSTAVE III 645

Perhaps we could have known, if we had contacted the police at the time. from Berlin.

In April 1792, a man calling himself Schultze and... said to be originally from Swedish Pomerania, a province now part of Sweden his own, had come to settle in this city. He was an individual of a exceptional size (he was nearly six feet tall), with striking features, but poorly drawn, with blond hair, whose gait seemed difficult and He was unsteady. His facial expression was usually mocking. and disdainful, and with an air of smugness, not to say vanity, was imprinted on his entire being.

"He aroused the curiosity of the respectable middle class of his beautiful neighborhood" a blow more than that of the police. He spoke fluent German and must have had a secure means of subsistence, because he lived well and paid counting, although he did not do any work with his ten fingers.

"Curiosity intensified when it was learned that he regularly attended..." the Masonic lodge on Splittgerbergasse, and was not just a

as they used to say in the language of those who claim that "Humanity, charity, and fraternity exist in all countries of the world," the distinctive qualities of the brothers.

"Schulzte, moreover, led a very secluded life. He kept to himself."
reserved with his neighbors, he almost never spoke to them and received no visitors other visits than those of a few individuals of whom he had made the knowledge within the lodge.

"Despite these respectable appearances, curiosity soon gave way to suspicion, and the rumor spread through the neighborhood that Schultze was a foreigner whom nasty affairs had forced to leave his country natal. The distrust aroused by his mysterious life increased even further during that one day we learned that we had found his apartment locked, and that we
He never reappeared.

"Soon it was whispered that this disappearance was not volunteered, but that they had come at night to abduct him with all sorts of precautions, and that at the same time his papers and his effects. It was also claimed that Schultze was not originally from the Swedish Pomerania, as he claimed, but from Sweden itself* even, and that if he spoke German so well, it was because his mother was Pomeranian.

"What was true in all these rumors and what was really going on?"
mysterious character?

"To these two questions, the author of the work we are analyzing lyse responds in the most categorical way, using official documents cielles.

"One of the files I was examining contained the procedure investigated against Police Commissioner Mahneke, known as Schultze, for forgery* ments. It piqued my curiosity, because it is very rare for functions Police officers are guilty of such crimes. I examined him in a very attentive manner. Among the documents in the proceedings was an a second file entitled: Documents (Acta) relating to the application made by the Swedish government to obtain the extradition of the 6th Mahneke, a domestic servant, is accused of being an accomplice in the murder committed on the person of King Gustav III by Count Ankarstroëm.

DOCUMENT C

046

"Here is the substance of what the two files contained:

neighborhood, in Berlin, were not mistaken in saying that he was originally from, Not from Pomerania, but from Sweden. They had no idea... The fact remains that he was the servant of Count Ankarstroëm whom they were looking for. then throughout Europe.

It was indeed the police who had made Mahneke disappear, and this The secret arrest had taken place at the request of the Swedish government. dos, who was demanding his extradition for the reasons stated above, because we had the strongest reasons to believe that he had known the conspiracy of the Swedish nobility and probably participated in the crime. It was also recommended on several occasions, and in the most express, to seize all of Mahneke's papers at the same time. The Swedish government was undoubtedly much more concerned about the pa Piers and revelations of this man than of his own person, for he had shown until then to be very little concern for prosecuting the guilty.

"Upon reading the first few pages, I soon became convinced that alongside the official instruction, a second one had been opened much more important, but kept secret, and that it was in the transcripts of his interrogations which needed to be sought to verify Mahneke's confession tables and the final word on the case.

"Curiously, the person who denounced Ankarstroëm's servant was one of the powerful figures who had hitherto protected him protection.

"The justice system and the police, whose most active investigations were which had remained fruitless, one day received the following note, emanating from the the office of the State Chancellor himself;

"Count Ankarstroëm's servant, wanted by the government"

"A Swedish man named Mahneke lives on K.. N.. Street."

"Arrest him at night in the most secretive way and with the greatest-"take precautions, and at the same time seize his papers and"

"His effects. You will send every three days to His Excellency, Mr.

"Chancellor, a report on this matter and a copy of the interrogations."

"It is of the utmost importance to keep this from all those concerned."

"Mahneke is in B... (Berlin), and most importantly, he should stay there between the "Hands of justice."

SECRET SOCIETIES AND THE ASSASSINATION OF GUSTAVIAN III 647

"One of the minutes was worded as follows:

"It was observed that he had to confess frankly and without any diss."

Gustav III by his former master, Ensign Ankarstroem, and recognized to also determine the extent to which he had become involved in the plot, if he wanted to avoid being extradited by the Prussian government, while that, if he tried to deceive the judge with lies, he should expect he was to be handed over to the Swedish government, which would subject him to the penalty. The accused responded to the most severe and harshest questions:

"I no longer want to conceal the truth, and I tell you I will tell you, without hiding anything I know, how the king was assassinated. siné.

"My master, Count Ankarstroem, had particular motives for hatred against King Gustav III. He belonged to the order of the Illuminati. B let me in, and since I was poor and couldn't pay a large contribution, I was admitted as a serving brother.

"The count was a fiery, violent, and vindictive man. Only one This example will suffice to make you understand the violence involved. of 6on character:

"While riding with several officers who were friends of his, he He wanted to lead his mount across a stream. But the animal refused. And all his master's efforts could not overcome his obstinacy. This resistance enraged the count so much that he drew his sword. and struck both of his horse's front feet until they would have been broken. Then, pointing to the slain beast:

"That's how you treat the rabble who refuse," he said. to obey.

"And crossing the stream at a ford, he rejoined his friends, who were waiting for him." daient 6ur la rive contraire.

"When he wanted to take revenge on the king, he set his sights on me, because that I was a serving brother of the lodge. He hid nothing from me, and he had also absolute confidence in his two friends, Counts Horn and Rib-Bing. One day, while they were talking in front of me about drawing lots to decide which c Tasked with killing the king, my master burst out laughing and replied:

"— It's pointless. I'm asking, as a favor, to be put in charge of hit Gustave.

"However, lots were drawn and my master's wish was granted. He was the one chosen.

"But the count was a coward, despite all the violence of his character." and his hatred; his response had been nothing but bravado, and he was not at all inclined to strike the king. Before his friends even had a chance to speak to h They were talking about drawing lots, he had suggested I do it.

"I couldn't be in any danger," he told me; "I was just a kid."

DOCUMENT G

sure to then obtain a beautiful and rich reward, because our order was too powerful to leave me in grief and not pay me a such a great service. I knew just as well as he did, he added, that the The Duke of Südermanland was its Grand Master, and that in its ranks he It comprised the highest and most powerful nobility in the kingdom.

"For a long time, I refused to consent. But one day he found in my room several silver spoons marked with the monogram of our lodge, and this discovery placed me entirely at his mercy. Con- Moreover, given the growing power of our order, I allowed myself to be persuaded to commit an action for which remorse will haunt me as long as I I will live.

"My master and his two friends, the Earls Horn and Ribbing, had had taken the precaution of having state documents delivered to him by affiliates of high value to the powers neighboring Sweden. They include were planning to use it as a weapon, in case they were forced to to flee, and use it to defend oneself. My master handed me the iron box that contained them, giving me the advice of the to leave with friends; but never to leave it for long between the hands of the same person. I still possess it; it is in deposit at the home of one of my acquaintances.

"It had been decided that I would hit the king during the ball. Like I wouldn't have been able to recognize him under his mask, my master recommends me he ordered me to stay constantly to his right and to unload my weapon in the person's chest, whose shoulder I would see him touch with his hand. The count had loaded the pistols himself. When he He handed them to me; I kept one in my hand and hid the other in a from my pockets. We were both wearing a black domino. I followed Following my master's instructions point by point, and I fired at a mask of small stature whose coat shifted when he lost his balance. and that I recognized as the king with his plaques and decorations.

"Instead of reaching the chest, the blow pierced the entrails. The king had seen me point the weapon at him, and the movement he then made with The arm, to push me away, lowered the pistol and pointed the barrel towards the lower abdomen. In the midst of the ensuing turmoil, and which The conspirators and their accomplices decided to rush towards the As I entered the room, I dropped my two pistols to the ground without that we noticed. My master likewise disposed of the dagger which he had brought with him. This did not prevent him, however, from being arrested shortly some time later.

"He had assured me in the most positive way that I would receive my reward as soon as the troubles that were to follow the king's death

we had thought. The energetic measures taken by the police lieutenant and the city's governor made the uprising impossible. He had planned and massacred all the nobles of the royal party. Upon hearing the news of Upon the arrest of the Earls Horn and Ribbing, I no longer hesitated: I took the I fled and didn't forget to take the strongbox. The countess not being As an accomplice of her husband, I deemed it prudent not to speak to her about these things papers. But I asked him and got money to earn Stettin. I know for certain that the documents I am owners are of the greatest value to the government of this country, and I am ready to give them to him. I only ask in return "not to surrender myself to the Swedish government."

SECRET SOCIETIES AND THE ASSASSINATION OF GUSTAVIAN III 649

"Mahneke's request should have been welcomed, because It was, in a way, granted in advance by the chancery, which, in his instructions to the police, he recommended, as a point of the Of utmost importance, to keep silent from all those concerned that Mahneke was located in Berlin.

Mahneke was probably not exaggerating when he said that the papers contained in the cassette were high-priced pine trees for Prussia, because He was appointed police commissioner. This is evident from the documents in his file. that he held these positions for two years; that afterwards he was arrested under the charge of perjury, then convicted of this crime and sentenced to several several years of confinement, and that, shortly afterwards, he died in Spandau prison (1).

"Thus the brothers had never ceased to follow him since his crime, and of to watch over him. After having, in a way, disarmed him by forcing him ingnant to deliver Ankarstroëm's papers to the Prussian police, in into whose ranks they brought him in to keep him even more firmly under control

(1) We will naturally be curious to know what became of the papers d'Ànkapstro'éin. Here is what the Prussian magistrate, author of this account, says:

Struck by the importance of these documents, I felt obliged to bring them to the attention tooth of the tribunal of S....; and, upon his expressed desire to examine them, I placed in his hands. Since then, I have not had the opportunity to see this magistrate again nor to write to him. But I had addressed myself, in 1850, to one of my former colleagues whose functions gave access to the registry where they were filed, in order to obtain I received a copy of two of them, and the magistrate replied that he had found no other trace of the file that this brief mention, inscribed on the register, in the margin of its Report: Transferred to the State Archives. But the statement was false, because I had occasion, some time later, to do some research in the archives, and one of them My friend, who was employed there, told me: "This file never entered here."

"This was not the first time I had noticed such errors," very deliberately committed. Thus, for example, in the article concerning the mômoi-posthumous gifts left by Prince H..., who was State Chancellor, can be found on The Celtic directory mentions 's'. Transferred to the royal family archives, and yet - dant, when they were looked for there, they were not found, and this is what they are doing.
Answer: They are in the king's study, where he reads them.

650

DOCUMENT 0

Their dependence had ensured him a peaceful existence.
had covered him with their all-powerful protection until the day when compromising himself in a way too clumsy for his fault to be Because it was hidden, he had forced them to abandon it. And then, by a a coincidence which, perhaps, was not accidental, his death had almost
This abandonment was immediately followed.

Document D

Napoleon I and Freemasonry

I

We said in chapter VII of the second book of this the work on the considerable development undertaken by Freemasonry nerie under the First Empire and the services it rendered to government.

The following excerpt from the proceedings of a lodge in Paris may give an idea of the depths of adulation to which these Proud Rosicrucians and Kadoch, destroyers of all despotism:

EXTRACT from the Annals Mac.*, dedicated to His Serene Highness the Prince

Cambacérès, Arch-Chancellor of the Empire and Grand Master of the Order of the Holy Roman France, by Caillot, R.'. C.\ (Caillot, printer-bookseller, rue de

Hurepoix, Quai des Augustins, No. 9J. - Year 5807.

Meeting of the R.*. L.\ Ste-Thérèse of the Friends of Constance, on the 15th

"...Fr. Savari, Or., deputy, is given the floor and, rising, by a sudden surge, on par with the prodigious feats of valor produced by the bra warriors who executed with the most courageous energy the profound He hesitates to consider the conceptions of genius that led them to victory. Indeed, what he should admire most in the hero of France, or of his military qualities or his moderation.

"It is no longer a Sesostris who is concerned with the happiness of his people, and who uses the unfortunate kings he has defeated to serve his triumph.

"It is no longer an Alexander who takes the mother, the woman, prisoner and the daughter of the wise and courageous Darius, who, after the battle of Arbella, was forced to flee to Media, where he was assassinated by Bessus.

"This is not a sovereign who is only concerned with his own glory; He is the protector of humanity, the friend of princes and peoples, who sacrifices his days to remind his family of their duties, in order to secure The happiness of others.

652

DOCUMENT D

"Napoleon, in Alexander's arms, is even greater than at at the head of his victorious army; he is above passions and human vanities. Each sovereign, having become his ally, will fulfill, to his For example, the sacred duties of a good prince, by taking care of himself happiness of his subjects.

"A burst of applause vividly portrayed the vivid and profound an emotion that stirred every soul... »

II

In doing so, the instruments of the reign, the same lodges Masonic, which had been active in 1789 and 1793, was not as active. more significant than it might seem at first glance.

Napoleon!*• was in effect the Revolution on horseback, as he said in a picturesque way Lamartine, or better yet the Revolution organized.

We have demonstrated this; but we like to quote In support of this, the following passage from a German Protestant writer to influence judgment and which consequently will not be suspect.

This is how the illustrious Frédéric-Jules Stahl expressed himself in his speech entitled: What is Revolution, delivered in 1859, and which produced a pro-impressive impression throughout Germany foundation:

"The essence of the Revolution and of rationalism is the man of sin" being worshipped in the temple of God. It is true that this leads to a personality, but it is the workings of a system occupying first the spirits, then personifying itself through its culmination in an individual. From that humankind is deified, it takes very little for an individual to powerful, driven by mass fanaticism, does not consider itself as the representative of the deity of this same human race and does not demand his worship.

(1) Frédéric-Jules Stahl was born in Munich in 1802 to Jewish parents; but He converted to Christianity at an early age. Initially a professor at the University of In Munich, he became a professor at the University of Berlin in 1827 and formed close ties with Auguste de Schlegel. Like him, he became deeply religious and dedicated himself no, in itself. A moment to be refuted on the grounds of the philosophy of law and history. the revolutionary and rationalist school. He became president of the central consistory. from Berlin and a member of the Chamber of Healers in 1846. He died on August 18th 1861. The pinnacle of his career was marked by the speech which we are giving Here is an excerpt, and he said it was the crowning achievement of his career, the defense political life. He left behind a history of the philosophy of law, which has just been written translated into French by Mr. Chauffard, president of the Lavaur court, (Paris, Tkorin, in-8* 1880.

Napoleon I* and Freemasonry 653

"Rationalism and revolution are not mere appearances of always identical forms. Being the product of the principle of evil, they enter history at certain moments and take shape under a a fixed form in the development of the struggle between the spirits of the light and the demons of darkness. They are the beginning of the line, the sign of the entry into the apocalyptic era.

"If, therefore, the revolution has an immeasurable depth, it would be It is childish to be blind to the means of fighting it.

"The era of revolutions cannot be closed by a constitutional charter." nelle. This charter is a revolutionary piece. The French are forging constitutions from 1789 to 1852, but the gaping maw of the Revolution was not blocked by these paper stamps.

"Nor do we close the Revolution by force, or by the empire. The French empire, far from destroying the revolution, consummated it. the idea.

"In the empire as in the republic, the natural elements Created and developed by God, they completely failed. There was nothing national representation point composed of historical elements and popular. It was the emperor who created the Senate, and the Senate created the Body legislative. There were no communes with their natural administration real. The emperor created the communes and appointed the administration. There is no had no free science. The University of France, this breeding ground of Skeptical scholars commanded science, and the emperor commanded at the University. In the empire as in the republic there was no idea of moral submission, either to a historical right, or to the religion. It lacked the principle representing in man the cons science, and what I will call state consciousness, allegiance to an order divine. Wasn't it the emperor who broke European law, who de destroys all the works of the divine order, which has scorned all the elements of nationality? Hasn't he made it perfectly clear that he has an iron will recognized no law above it? The empire, like the republic The republic is founded on the exclusive will of man. It is made with the Human reason, and serves only that same human reason. The empire, was another phase of the revolution. Through the Terror, the powers infern forces had established their power. In the empire, the powerful reigned. powers of nature, the forces of the earth. No celestial ray has illuminated this reign. With all its glory and all its intelligence, the empire was the annihilation of the true essence of man, who lives only through the radiations from the sky. The characteristic feature of the revolution is the adoration, the deification of man. In the republic, it was necessary to worship the people. Under the empire, they worshipped the divine emperor. Co was a veritable return to paganism. Now, if a Christian people re- He falls into paganism; he no longer possesses the innocence of mere powers.

654

DOCUMENT D

of the earth, the darkness of hell plays the leading role. If the revolution The solution was identical with anarchy. Napoleon would have closed the revolutionary era. Revolutionary. But if revolution means the elevation of a reign according to the human will against God's order, then, far from having defeated the revolution, he was only its hero, its missionary...

"There is one power, and only this power, capable of closing the era." Revolutions: that's Christianity. Christianity is the extreme opposed to the sin of revolution; for it places all of human life on the divine order. Furthermore, Christianity fully satisfies all the demands of the revolution.

We do not know if Stahl had read the rules of the French lodges. under the First Empire. But it was impossible to find a better example there.

baseness which completes them, the adoration of the divus imperator.

Document E

Italian unification and the Masonic conspiracy

As we move further away from the events, the various authors from the comedy performed in 1860 by Cavour, Napoleon III and Garibaldi gradually reveal the machinations they used to make people believe in an uprising of the Italian population against the legitimate governments. It is only through the betrayal of their officers prepared in the lodges, by the abuse of their privileges lèges by the ambassadors of Victor Emmanuel, finally by the numerical superiority of the Piedmontese armies than King Francis II, the Grand Duke of Tuscany, succumbed.

Lastly, here is Admiral Persano, the Inca commander pable of the Italian fleet at Lizza, which, to avenge itself on its disgrace, reveals in its final details the part played by the government Turin government to Garibaldi's expedition in 1860. The Moni-universal author, who received an advance communication from this work, published in its issue no. of March 17, 1880 the following letters sales:

It begins with a letter from Garibaldi to Persano: what emerges from it that Piedmont's support was already assured.

Admiral,

Pagan, June 15, 1860.

You have given me, in truth, very pleasant news, and I... This attests to my deepest gratitude; under your all-powerful protection I am calm.

I believe, like you, that it is better for the flotilla to come directly ment here. I therefore order Medici to enter the small port, where I will wait for him. Garibaldi.

Then a letter from HRH the Prince of Carignan, who was working, he too, as we can see, was involved in the conspiracy against Francis II;
n 42

DOCUMENT E

Tarin, August 1, 1860.

My dear Persano,

I rejoice with you and congratulate you on the distinguished manner in which you fulfilled the important and difficult mission which was entrusted to you, and at the same time I thank you for having kept informed of political events in Sicily.

I hope everything will be alright, even in Naples.

I wrote to the Count of Spanense asking him to place all his trust in you as if you were a close friend.

Baron Nisco will certainly introduce himself to you, with a ticket as an introduction on my part.

I recommend it. If necessary, protect it and offer it shelter. on one of your ships.

I have every hope that everything will end with the triumph of the cause of Italian unity and independence. But, for that, we need Prudence and a certain discretion. Eugene of Savoy.

We now give a letter from the Count of Cavour to even :

Turin, August 1860.

"Admiral,

"As I informed you by telegraph, the government desires that, if a revolution were to break out in Naples, you accept the dictatorship, if it were offered to you by the people. If the offer was done in Villamarina, which would be wrong, Villamarina should also accepting, in order to avoid the greatest of perils, that of seeing to fall power into weak or disloyal hands.

"Whether or not you have a dictatorship, you will have to assume immediate responsibility. to assume command of the Neapolitan fleet and occupy the forts provisionally, the army command.

"You will gather in Naples or in the vicinity of that city all the Neapolitan fleet, by removing all officers devoted to the king and in replacing them with proven liberals.

"Before immediately dispatching a Piedmontese division composed of from the brigades of Aosta-Piedmont to Naples, you will take care to see in Genoa a number of Neapolitan buildings and our ships to transport it.

"If the revolution does not take place before Garibaldi's arrival, we will find ourselves in a most serious situation. But let us not let's not get carried away by that. You will seize, if you can, all the forts, you will reunite the Neapolitan fleet and the Sicilian fleet, you

i/ITALIAN UNITY AND THE MASONIC CONSPIRACY 657

You will give all the officers commissions, you will make them take an oath to the king and the status, and then we'll see.

"Admiral, the king, the country and the ministry have full confidence in you." Follow, as far as possible, the instructions I send you; but, If unforeseen circumstances arise, do your best to achieve the Our ultimate goal is to create Italy without us. to be defeated by the revolution. Cavour.

But here is something much more curious and instructive: core. Admiral Persano gives Cavour details about the conspiracies errors that hinder him and on the sums that he is obliged to give them pay :

Naples, August 31, 1860.

"Your Excellency,

"I had to distribute more money! Twenty thousand ducats to Devincenzi," two thousand ducats from Consul Fasciotti, on the order of the Marquis of Villamarina, and four thousand ducats to the committee. Although all this is executed cut according to the measurements I established, without a single penny going to waste. However, this money issue, which I handled myself, eventually began to tire me out. In truth, it's not my business. I found myself forced to argue. with Devinceuzi in the presence of Villamarina; he asked me for more twenty thousand ducats, and I didn't even want to give him that much.

Regarding the people I am in contact with, here are my impressions: pressures...

What follows is a series of notes on several characters who played
Then, and ever since, they have played an important role in Italian affairs.
Universal Monitor did not elaborate further on its extracts, but the
The forthcoming publication of Persano's book will complement them and will be the latest confirmation of the narrative of the Unity of the Alians, which the Father Deschamps contributed to this volume.

(f) The Count of Villamarina was then the ambassador of the King of Sardinia to of Francis II, and was, as we can see, the principal agent of the conspiracy.
age against lut

Document F

IA RELIGIOUS POLICY OF THE EMPIRE

I

We reproduce the conclusions of the Memorandum submitted to Napoleon Leo III in April 1860, on the policy to be followed with regard to the Church, by Mr. Rouland, his Minister of Religious Affairs.

A special edition of this important document has been published first in 1873, then in 1879, under the supervision of Mr. Léon Pagès (8° brochure of 24 p., Paris, Pillet Dumoulin printing house).

We strongly encourage our readers to read the presentation of the
The religious situation is being addressed by the minister of the Empire. They are there will find the prejudices, the errors, and also the slander that,
Twenty years later, Mr. Jules Ferry brought them to the podium of the Senate.
The conclusions, except for the question of procedures in the execution, are exactly the same. Let's see:

"Should we, by abruptly changing the system, expel the congresses religious orders of men, amend the law on education, application that all organic articles, and arrive at the point that legality absolute will resemble persecution. No, because one would doubt the sin.
the sovereign's fairness, passing so vividly from the broad and affectionate protection killer in the strictest respect of all prohibitions; we would hurt everyone clergy and a host of respectable Catholics; one would suppose, Nevertheless, let us return to Voltairean prejudices, and perhaps we would have—we must defend ourselves against an anti-religious reaction that believes itself permitted in its excesses.

"The measures to be taken must not exceed the proportion of the abuses which we want to eliminate, in the interest of respecting memory their view that public opinion itself polices the mistakes of the clergy. Every time he steps out of his true role, and wants to comp to encroach upon the powers or independence of the society within society, a circle of resistance and opposition forms around him which compresses it. That's why today he's starting to get scared of this which he believes to be revolutionary passions, and which in reality are only the nation's strong sentiment rejecting theocratic tendencies questions. To remain true to the integrity of religious sentiment, – not to use do violence, – borrowing from our public law what is necessary for to stop unbearable invasions – thus separating the cause of religion, sincerely practiced, exaltations and calculations of the Roman propaganda, there you have it, one can believe, a good plan of action adapted to the needs of the time and which would obtain the approval of country.

THE RELIGIOUS POLICY OF THE EMPIRE

659

"Based on these general ideas, we might perhaps arrive at..."
to the following measures:

"1° Not to be tolerated, except for perfectly consequential local needs
tates, NO NEW ESTABLISHMENTS OF RELIGIOUS CONGREGATIONS for MEN,

whether it be convent houses, churches, chapels, and the pretext for auxiliaries in the sacred ministry, whether it be state public education institutions and general charitable works. The hospitality so generously extended by the Emperor to the congregations The practice of men, although prohibited by law, would not be so retracted. – "There are quite a few of you, surprised you didn't give the France to exploit;" – that is the sensible response to give without incurring the accusation of exclusion.

"2° To henceforth apply the greatest severity in the authorizations – the duties of women's congregations, which should not be granted that in the presence of undeniable necessities of public charity or of primary education; demanding certain proof of their resources sufficient for their existence; no longer easily accepting the conversion sion of local communities into communities with general superiors which flood France with their subsidiary establishments. – It is very- It's true that we can't prevent de facto religious congregations; – but then not recognized by law, they see each of their members remain subject to common law; and the de facto congregation, which has no of collective civil existence, cannot receive gifts and bequests, nor act as a body.

"3° With regard to authorized congregations of men or of women, bringing the Council of State back to a great severity in the assessment of the gifts, bequests and donations that need to be authorized. It is not enough to simply consider the situation and the demands the families' requests for a reduction of these gifts; it is necessary also examine the needs of the congregation receiving the benefit. There is no obligation to provide them with the means of unnecessary or abusive expansion, by authorizing them health to receive, to cope with expenses they should not to undertake. The communities, once established, would remain what they are, if the fertile source of more or less provoked liberalities and the desired effects did not stimulate the natural propensity of these communities to expand indefinitely. The spirit of rivalry that exists between For them, the desire for propagation and influence, everything pushes them towards development incessant lodging. Having embarked on this path, they need money, and they are doing their best to find and call for help, donations and alms. If the authorization system for these donations and bequests were more severe, if one were to posit as a principle that liberals should not be admitted presented as an incentive to expand spending and establishments If we were to implement these measures, we would put a stop to the excesses we complain at c It must be admitted that the congregations, whether authorized or not, always have ways to commit fraud and receive help. by hand. – There's nothing we can do about it when things are skillfully done. and the congregations are not lacking in either wise counsel or members Many rents are ready to help them in any way. But, even in this case, the the result of these frauds or these manual gifts that deprive the father thousand, during their author's lifetime, is easily appreciated. Where does it come from? They, for example, possess the immense resources that religious orders, condemned to poverty, they had to dedicate themselves to numerous and vast establishments What? The Jesuits' real estate holdings exceed 20 million. How did they buy or build them? – Obviously with the donations from individuals. Now, this is well known, doesn't it follow from this that the State's obligation to no longer tolerate new establishments, which would require further appeals to private fortunes, and the certainty, For him, is this prohibition a way to do the right thing?

660 DOCUMENT F

a 4° Maintain as much as possible, without breaking the freedom of municipal council choices, secular and primary education. If we The maneuvers are not stopped by the intelligence and firmness of the prefects. incessant pressure from the clergy, pushing municipalities to entrust their schools The brothers of Christian doctrine will soon have no more teachers. lay people, except in poor localities, which these brothers disdain. It should also be noted that efforts are being made to increase the number of religious communities They are called little brothers, who settle in isolation in the countryside. while the brothers of the Christian schools can only establish themselves by Groups of three brothers, in the same school. The municipalities that do not have Christian schools would therefore be run by the Little Brothers, known as of Lamennais, – of Saint Viator, – of Tinchebray, etc.; and we arrive would thus see the complete elimination of secular institutions. Today from today that these teachers, modest and useful civil servants, are devoted to the Emperor and render significant services in rural communities, We would be greatly weakened, from the point of view of universal suffrage, if everything a Therefore, it would be wise to no longer recognize as est* public utility building no congregation of men for the cn primary education.

THE RELIGIOUS POLICY OF THE EMPIRE 661

Primary education passed into the hands of religious orders, which depend more on Rome than on France.

"It should also be noted that it is in the boarding schools of young girls led by religious orders, in primary schools free activities entrusted to them, as in secondary institutions directed under their influence, that history books meet compiled with the aim of glorifying monarchies by divine right, of exalting the religious supremacy and indirectly undermining civil principles and political gains made since 1780. In reality, these establishments so Many are, more or less, veritable branches of the legitimate party. misti and Catholic. On the contrary, it is in our imperial high schools, in our municipal colleges, in our secular schools, where instruction is more male and more popular, keeps all the feelings in the hearts of children national ments.– Where do they cordially cry: Long live the Emperor? Assu– This is not the case in religious institutions. (1)

"5. To vigorously support state education, because it is the a true national education system, and to establish its institutions, through a sufficient budget, even to increase, to improve their installation material preparation and their means of instruction; therein lies the keystone of the future. That's what the Legitimist–Catholic party had wonderfully understood, by asking so vehemently, under Louis–Philippe, freedom of education, monopolized by the University, and by voting, in In 1850, during the presidency, the law on public education was passed. Later, At the beginning of the dictatorship, he dared to consider the absolute abolition of education government–run, in order to deliver this teaching to the clergy and to congregations; but the Emperor, well informed about the implications of such measure, refused. Nevertheless, thanks to the law of 1850, it allowed so much so that every French citizen should teach, the Legitimist–Catholic party has been able to perpetuate the division of castes and of ideas, which could disappear under the unity of university intelligence to remain silent. He was thus able to continue, through the children raised in the houses congregationalists, the existence of its social and political doctrines. It is a great evil. But however great it may be, it is impossible to think

1) On this occasion, let us recall the fact that our poor schoolteachers alone have, given more subscriptions to the asylum of the Imperial Prince than all the autici classes of society united; – that it is among them that a newspaper lives and circulates educational and political with 30,000 subscribers; and that it is they, finally, who allow us to encourage the Rural Library, reminding everyone of all that it has useful in our arts, all that is glorious in our modern history* to abolish the law that guarantees the freedom of families. That would be a An immense, fierce, and unlawful struggle. This leaves only one party.

(Minister's note).

662

DOCUMENT F

Fair and prudent: there is competition. Let's strengthen and promote it.
State education, which prepares for all careers, which is the most solid and the most patriotic, at the same time as it was made religious, moral and paternal.

6. Return as often as possible, without pushing things to extremes.
To the implementation of the organic provisions which put in place beneficial

OBSTACLES TO THE ENCROACHMENT OF POPAL POWER OVER THE CLERGERIE AND ON the State; in other words, to tolerate no attack against our civil legislation and our political constitution, whether in writing or in the pulpits.

c. Regulate the office of the nuncio, in France, like that of any other ambassador of a friendly power, and to suffer in no way that he corresponds ponde, in the name of the Pope, with the French bishops, – nor that he should do so no act of jurisdiction, – nor that he have the slightest say in the choice of bishops.

"To hold the hand firmly & that no act of the court of Rome may not be received, published or distributed in France without authorization of the government.

"Gradually extinguish the faculty, which has been left to the bishops for the past ten years to periodically convene provincial councils without authorization special government initiative.

"To resolutely choose bishops from among pious clergymen and honorable, but known for their sincere attachment to the emperor and to institutions of France.

needed before the invasion and the unrest of the ultramontane party. The clergy to its discipline, its bishops, its priests, its pulpits, its mandates, his pastoral letters and a complete government. There is no need the need to add press controversy to the ordinary means of advertising city of this ecclesiastical government. Moreover, this press, while in The third party has never been anything but the instrument of the doctrines and designs of Roman theocracy or parliamentary Catholicism. Today it is the most active fuel of religious agitation. Eliminate this source. of excitement which is spreading throughout all the presbyteries, and the clergy will be a bowling pin. The Universe has confused the heads of all the young clergy by preaching to religious supremacy, and the damage caused will not be erased before for many years (1).—To impose the tutelage of the Church on the State; —to undermine all civil and political liberties; — to undermine all institutions

(1) The suppression of the newspaper [l'Univers, despite the support it had, up to the The Italian War, given to the government of Napoleon III, closely followed the handover of this thesis.

THE RELIGIOUS POLICY OF THE EMPIRE 063

secular; — to relentlessly attack any European alliance other than that of Austria and the Catholic states; — thus bringing above The influence, ideas, and hand of Rome pervaded everything and everywhere; that was the work of religious newspapers, supported by the legitimist party.

"Finally, encourage the public study of ancient French liberties" his, and to profess everywhere and with energy the conservative principles of the independence of the State from the papacy.

"7° To maintain, moreover, a system of fair protection for the genuine religious interests and deference towards the clergy. Nothing would be more skillful and fairer than increasing the treatment of the lower clergy who, in almost all of France, are experiencing harsh conditions deprivations. — That is how it must be tied to the government. If The episcopate, through weakness or some other reason, abandoned the emperor. We would need to win over the lower clergy, who would be only too happy to oblige. than to have a little more ecclesiastical independence and who suffers sometimes episcopal despotism. — In all cases, it is very important suddenly the religious country is astonished by the noise of Roman quarrels or He remains indifferent, seeing the national cult still peaceful, protected and honored. It is for this reason that it is very useful that the allocators budget allocations should be increased to benefit construction and repair ration of churches, presbyteries and diocesan buildings.

"8. Perhaps, finally, it would be appropriate for the government to concern of large secular associations, such as Saint-Vincent de Paul, Saint Francis Xavier, etc., who, by their direction and nature of their works, are really in the hands of the clergy and the party legitimist.

"The conferences of Saint Vincent de Paul now transcend the number 900, they penetrate all ranks of society, and until than in high schools and colleges, where they enroll children under the title of prospective members. They connect to a main conference, in each department; – they are governed by the general council of this society, which presented a report to the Holy Father in Rome on the general state of French conferences. It is a formidable association than that which, having so many members and resources, form like a secret and complete government. Our laws do not admit Nowhere is there an independent organization of such associations. Everything recognizing the charitable and Christian purpose of the Society of Saint-Vincent de Paul, the benefits for which we owe him, the excellent in the minds of many of its members, it is impossible not to notice see the tendencies of men who have the privilege and the thought of his direction; it is also impossible not to be concerned about an organization tion so vast and so skillful, with the help of which thousands of citizens can receive this or that impulse or this or that command. The

664 DOCUMENT P

Selfless charity knows how to do without such propaganda, and the Charitable organizations do not need, in order to exist and do good, to leave their locality, nor to affect the spirit of affiliation and solidarity a trait that until now had only been encountered in secret societies your revolutionaries. Isn't there a risk that they might be replaced, do the sort of, the old Catholic restoration associations, that the The people then called: the Jesuits in short robes – or the congregation?

It is beyond doubt that one no longer enters these societies uniquely. out of love for charity or out of a taste for religious exercises; They are so numerous, so well recruited from all ranks of society a society where one finds a powerful solidarity for family interests and career.

"The Society of Saint Vincent de Paul, which was shown earlier" introducing children in our high schools and colleges, has entered the school po high school and in all state administrations. It is developing Loppe in the army, in the judiciary, in the bar; everywhere, in short She manifests her secret influence and unites all her members through bonding of mutual support. To be a member of the Society of Saint Vincent de Paul today is not simply an act of religious affiliation, It's entering a hidden, highly organized world, acting... on all sides regarding the feelings and affairs of society; it is to procure active and influential back protectors, and prepare all the ways success in the various fortunes or directions of life.

"The Democrats had wanted to establish republican solidarity. The Clericals and ultramontanes, allied with the legitimists, established the mu- The tradition of Saint Vincent de Paul. What an immense lever this could be!

To reiterate, the power of associations is such that people come to them through purely temporal motives. They weigh, more than one might think, on the determinations of families, and it's quite a strange spectacle that that of a considerable number of our civil servants enlisted under their banners, while their children, fleeing state institutions, receive their education from the Jesuits, the Carmelites, the Marists, the Dominicans.

This Memoir was not simply the work of a Gallican legal expert, whose brain was bound by the ghosts of another age. was the exact expression of the Emperor's policy, and what The proof is that, some time later, the Y Universe newspaper was removed by administrative measure, according to the proposal of the Minister moire, and that all the government's actions towards the Church were, from that time until the end of the reign, the application exact tion of the rules of conduct drawn up by Mr. Rouland.

THE RELIGIOUS POLICY OF THE EMPIRE

065

H

The heir to Napoleon's blood, Prince Napoleon Jérôme, the a Freemason of sound principles (Book VI, Chapter X, § G) hastened to seize an opportunity to affirm the essentially revolutionary in the Napoleonic tradition, despite the interest It was obvious that he had to win over religious men, who admitted They deliberately gloss over his past.

Already in the session of the Chamber of Deputies on March 16, 1880, at the moment when the Gambettist majority was about to dictate to the ministry a war program against the Church, one of the main deputies of the The Bonapartist party had not hesitated to assert from the tribune the existence tenancy of laws condemning the individual rights of French citizens, Catholics committed by vows of conscience to live together in the same residence.

Mr. Jolibois, former prefect and State Councillor, had the sad courage to claim the legacy of Mr. Rouland's policies and to highlight its advantages over the more brutal one of Mr. Ferry. Here are his own words, as collected at the analytical report at that very moment:

"The empire, for its part, found a liberal law, that of 1850; it lived with it, containing even those you call the powerful and their

to become factious. It is to the honor of the empire that we recalled what they had Messrs. Rouland and Duruy did. These men, in terms of liberalism, have no... lessons to be received from no one (1).

This was only a prelude, and three weeks later, Prince Napoleon Leon violently brought his party back to the Napoleonic tradition. by giving his solemn approval to the decrees of proscription tion of March 29, 1880.

Here is the text of the manifesto that he had published in the newspaper The Order in the form of a letter addressed to a friend:

there

"Paris, April 5, 1880.

"My dear friend,

"You tell me that our friends are hesitant about what course of action to take in struggle being prepared against the decrees issued by the government

(I) The effect produced by these words was such that the speaker's audience dis to appear from the stenographic report published by the Official Journal the expression of factious people, which applied to the Jesuits. As witnesses to this session, we can to affirm the accuracy of the stenographic account. Our memories assure us Mr. Jolibois even described Mr. Rouland as a great Minister of Education, public and that he called Mr. Duruy his eminent successor.

666

DOCUMENT F

on religious congregations. You ask for my opinion. I don't I show no embarrassment in expressing it to you; I don't like to hide in the silence of shadowy machinations, and I believe that it is through the honesty that wins the trust of a people like ours.

A Napoleon could not, without lying about his origins, appear The enemy is either religion or revolution. Religion, he said. My uncle on Saint Helena is a pillar of good morals, of true character. principles. » The destiny of my family, in 1800 as in 1848, was to save the Revolution from the royalist reaction.

"Napoleon reconciled these two forces equally through the Concordat."

immortal work, he traced with the foresight of genius the domain respective of the State, assured to society the most precious of goods, peace religious, and to every citizen, the most sacred of rights, the freedom of awareness.

"Two types of aggressors threaten this pacification charter: the sectarians of theocracy, who dream of a return to a state religion oppressive and intolerant; the sectarians of disorder, who pursue the organization of a society without God and without moral law.

"I have always been and will always be an opponent of these two extreme demands. When the budget for the worship services or the closure of churches, I will oppose them. When one tells I will defend one of the principles of the Revolution.

"The recent decrees do not constitute persecution: they are not that the return to an indisputable rule of public law. The principle which subordinates the existence of a religious order to the authorization and supervision The vigilance of political power is found in all societies; The Bourbons themselves acknowledged this. To abandon it would be to destroy it. the State and place it at the feet of the theocracy.

"Why would our friends attack these decrees?"

"Is it because they are based on the laws of the empire and that they are renewing the Concordat's provisions, which have been neglected for too long? That would be a strange way to show oneself to be a Bonapartist.

"Is it because they are the work of the Republic? Only the oppositions without principles and without morality deny good out of hatred for the the hand that makes it happen.

"Is it out of fear of dissolving the Conservative Union?"
This disastrous fiction has gone on for too long. There is nothing in common. between the legitimists, who are conspiring against 1789, and us, who have rendered invincible; between the men of the white drapery and the faithful of the National flag. It's time for everyone to reclaim their colors, their tradition, its principles, and that all ambiguities cease. Of all the errors of not being ourselves, the most disastrous would be that which would make us, in the eyes of the nation, united in the hopes of the year the old regime would lead us to reject the legislation of which the Napoleons are the authors and would make us the auxiliaries of the party forever condemned one who lowers Religion to being the instrument of passions and of calculations of a retrograde policy, hostile to civilization, to science and to true freedom.

RELIGIOUS POLICY IN THE EMPIRE 667

She obtains the approval of our friends.

"Napoleon Bonaparte (Jerome), has

Document G-

The Role of Freemasonry in Revolutions

from Spain and Portugal

The revolutions that have taken place in these countries since 1812, were mostly caused by rivalries between different factions of Freemasonry, which are always united to fight between the Christian social order, but which tear themselves apart as soon as they are mistresses.

The same thing happened in Mexico, as it was as evidenced by the declaration of the country's nobles at the time of the accession of the unfortunate Maximilian, a statement reproduced by The Moniteur, the official journal of the French Empire. Someday we will return to the history of Freemasonry in America than from the south, but for the moment we just need to justify what we have just stated regarding the revolutions in Spain from a few extracts from Le Monde maçonnique. We reproduce verbatim, by pruning only digressions without any In relation to the point in question, two important communications that were sent to this newspaper during the year born in 1875 and which complement each other.

I

Communication from a Spanish mason very knowledgeable about matters res of his country, says Le Monde maçonnique, April 1875 issue.

"At the end of the 18th century, there were indeed some masons in Spain a group among elite men, belonging to the aristocracy, at the bar and to literature, won over to the cause of the French encyclopedic school, and initiated into the mysteries of our association through trips to France and in England. These men formed a particular society in Madrid. which never missed an opportunity to expand by attracting to itself the best minds; but they were not organized into lodges; one could not monks of our temples; but they cultivated the Masonic spirit, li-They knew and spread good books, fought against the Jesuits and inspired the 1812 constitution with their spirit.

THE REVOLUTIONS IN SPAIN AND PORTUGAL 669

"The return of King Ferdinand, after the fall of Napoleon I, put Their influence came to an end. An era of persecution began for them. All were either captured and imprisoned in castles or in prisons, or pursued like wild beasts and driven to the border, from where they They fled to France, England, and Italy. But they had left behind them, on the beloved land they were forced to leave, friends, fellow believers, who under their direction began to work ardently to the triumph of liberty and civilization. It was then that societies were founded in secret throughout Spain conical schools frequented by the youth and the bourgeoisie, and which worked milked with fervor, despite the threat of the greatest dangers. Woe, Indeed, to the brother whom the government caught in the act! The gallows of the assassins Sins was the punishment for his recklessness. How many, alas! honest fathers family members and courageous young men gave their last penance there.
Pir! The 1820 revolution, soon crushed by the French expedition, drew these societies out of the mystery in which they lived. They revealed themselves to big day, surrounded by the prestige they owed to their work and to the persecutions they had suffered. But the return to the ab- regime Solu soon made them return to the shadows, where they resumed their conscientious activities reusing their old work, braving the same dangers and the same tortures. After this new ordeal, which was as harsh as the previous (1), they triumphed again, at the death of Ferdinand.

"We understand, from this brief explanation, how Freemasonry's space
Gnol was led, by the persecutions she suffered, to play,
In these difficult times, an active role in public affairs, a role

(1) In support of the opinion expressed by our colleague on the rigors exercised of the attacks carried out at that time against the followers of Freemasonry; we will suff of Granada, where seven Freemasons, caught in a meeting, on August 6, 1825, at the time where they were undergoing an initiation, they were thrown into dungeons with their feet i
They were summarily tried and finally hanged on September 9th.

Here are the names and qualities of these unfortunate people:

Don Felipe Azo, Lieutenant Colonel, former commander of the guides squadron of General Morillo.

Don Juan Sanchez, captain.

Don Antonio Lopez Quintinilla, ex-notary.

Don Francisco Meslo, retired lieutenant.

Don Ramon Alvarez de Toledo, Second Lieutenant.

Don Francisco Alvarez, lieutenant.

Don Jase IbarreUa, colonel, venerable of the Lodge.

The recipient, Don Manuel Suarez, was sentenced to eight years of exile.

DOCUMENT F

unfortunate, which distanced him from a studious, peaceful and fraternal existence that which is the very life of Masonic societies and which constitutes their grandeur and their glory. Objects of unspeakable violence, constantly threatened with the most cruel tortures, the Spanish masons, although ex-united exclusively for a work of civilization, peace, and love, They were bound to slide down this disastrous slope. That was the cause main of the tensions that dismembered Spanish Freemasonry and most of the misfortunes that have befallen her. Accustomed to mingling In public affairs, the masons of the Peninsula long believed time to persevere in this disastrous path which was bound to compromise everything to put it into practice. Division crept into their ranks, and the institution, agitated, Fragmented, fragmented, it lost all its strength in internal struggles, until she disappeared in the bloody clashes of the conservative party and of the progressive or liberal party.

Around the year 1848, amidst the prevailing turmoil in the minds of the people At that time in Spain, some progressives in Madrid and in Barcelona the Masonic banner; but once again they were trained to give their work a political slant. This is not that those who were convicted, or even just suspected, were always hanged known to belong to Freemasonry. No. 1 The new regime was more humane. They were simply sent to the penal colony. Nothing At least, the new societies appeared formidable. They were credited with the a coup against the life of General Narvaez, the priest's attempt Merino against the queen, the uprisings of Madrid and Catalonia in 1846 and 1848. But it is of the utmost obviousness, although some-Some of those who played a role in these events were Freemasons. like Merino for example, it is perfectly obvious that the blows The attacks against people were not the work of Freemasonry. The attempt against Narvaez stemmed from the impatience and hatred of a a small number of men; the attempt against the queen, of hatred per Merino bell.

"The competition among the Lodges had a wide influence on the movement" liberal of 1854; but it did not prevent the opponents of Freemasonry the idea of taking charge of affairs. The Lodges are not discouraged They didn't return and continued working. Their work had, moreover, a more sensible, more practical character than before. We had days, their own, deputies belonging to Freemasonry and imbued with his a truly conciliatory and fraternal spirit. The authorities were indeed persecuting

It was something that had been won.

"Then came that terrible struggle, which began in Parliament under the directed by Messrs. Olozaga and Ribera, and completed in Cadiz by the generals Prim and Serrano. Queen Isabel's throne was attacked and ren-paid after many setbacks. The Bourbons left Spain and the The lodges opened into the light. This is the third period of Freemasonry. Spanish nonsense.

THE REVOLUTIONS IN SPAIN AND PORTUGAL 671

"Our readers will no doubt have noticed that there is no difference The essential difference between the two periods we have just outlined is... since they obviously had the same concerns, the same trends. However, an interesting point is the internal discipline of lodges differed completely in the two periods. During the reign of Don Fernando, that is to say during the first period, the lodges They operated under an iron discipline. No one was accepted without having gathered the most rigorous information. One did not make an initiation only after subjecting the candidate to all the tests. On would only open an outfit once it had been carefully ensured that the The work would be protected from any surprises or betrayals. It is It's easy to understand the reasons for this extreme caution. A negligence could have cost the lives of a hundred, and perhaps a thousand, honest good people. During the second period from 1844 to 1868, it was all something else; far fewer precautions were taken, because the Persecution had weakened and caution was less necessary. At receptions, we easily relied on the word of one or two people. brothers, and the initiations took place almost without ceremony. However It should be noted that from 1846 to 1854 the lodges were more easily accessible difficult; but from 1856 to 1868 there were hardly any lodges in the strict meaning of the word, because, although there were dignitaries cons within the framework of a Grand Orient, the brothers worked generally without constituting itself. It is also worth noting that, in these Lately, the upper ranks of our association counted good a number of men belonging to the Liberal and Progressive Party; while that the majority of Freemasons holding the first degrees attached to the democratic party. The first were old ma lessons having belonged to the lodges during the time of the great persecutions; The latter were newcomers. Such was the situation of the Spanish Freemasonry at the time of the September Revolution.

a. At the time we arrived, the lodges multiplied quickly. Madrid, Cadiz, Barcelona, Valencia, Zaragoza, Malaga, Seville, Valladolid and other cities took an active and glorious part to Masonic work. But at the heart of this situation, if While seemingly satisfactory, within this very progress lies a sense of unease.

masons. On the other hand, accustomed to drawing resources from Freemasonry-sources for their projects, all parties wanted to seize the , direction of the lodges. Their efforts deeply disturbed the association tion and gave rise to continuous storms within our great fa-

43

672 DOCUMENT G

A thousand. In vain did the well-meaning seek to banish politics In Masonic workshops, it was impossible for them to make themselves heard. reason to those who had taken to the unfortunate habit of putting the ins-a position serving the interests of their party. We know how these things turned out. Misunderstandings. Spanish Freemasonry split into gentle great fractions: the group of those who believed it necessary for the general interests the desire to associate the lodges with political unrest, and the group of those who intended to place the sphere of action of Freemasonry in calmer regions. This deplorable split deeply affected the true Freemasons, who took the most active steps to reconcile, the two parties and bring them to recognize each other and to lend themselves to each other help and assistance. But Brother Ruiz-Zorrilla, grand master of one of the groups, having renounced the Grand Mastership after the king's abdication Amédée, the plans for reconciliation were abandoned. Far from it to follow, the lodges which had been headed by Brother Ruiz-Zorrilla They elected as Grand Master Brother Juan de la Somera, a full Freemason of ardor, whose zeal seems entirely limited to forcibly bringing back the Spanish Freemasonry, united, and which does not hesitate to launch the excommunication action against lodges that refuse to work under its authority. We sincerely hope that this violent attempt, which cannot to achieve a serious result will quickly slow down. It is no longer time for the Spanish masons to wage war and fight amongst themselves The time to unite and reconcile has come.

"We had thought of stopping here; but it seemed to us that the sketch would not be complete and that these indications would be missing historical tions the idea of the struggle that Spanish Freemasonry has supported resistance against clerical fanaticism. This struggle was fierce in the pre-in the early years and recently, it has been almost nonexistent in the first middle period. In the early days it was terrible and without glante, because our enemies were powerful against the order, while that in recent times it had no serious consequences, because that they were powerless.

II

Following the publication of this note in Le Monde maçonnique, The Grand Orient of Spain sent this newspaper a further notice extensive which appeared in the June and September 1875 issues and

It begins with some details about the destruction of the archives of the Grand Orient. A few names are worth noting at passage :

THE REVOLUTIONS OF EPAONE AND PORTUGAL 8*73

The former mason Narvaez, once very zealous, came to power, and exercising dictatorship, persecuting or deporting his former brothers, he allowed his agents to commit an indignity, which would have been repugnant to his character. The outgoing secretary of the Grand Orient was won over, and we discover He revealed the place where the archives were hidden. This secretary was a priest; and it is quite peculiar that the two major denunciations against the Ma-Spanish nonsense, that of the middle of the last century, and that of the middle of this century, were made by priests, seemingly very zealous masons.

"The current Grand Master had just been elected in December 1847."

The resigning Grand Master was succeeded by the Infante Don François, Grand-Father of King Don Alphonse. Lieutenant Brother Couder (Nephtali) and the Secretary Jean Cruz communicated via a board, which was autographed.

And that Brother Caubet has the power to call new elections. So be it.

Brother Cruz's resentment at not having been re-elected, or other reasons more criminal, he proposed to sell his brothers, and began under various pretexts were used to delay the inauguration of the newly elected official.

Deputy Grand Master Brother Pinella, betrayed in his trust, left him time to carry out his act of treason. Meanwhile, the con

The effects of the February 1848 revolution were felt in Spain.

The government took all sorts of violent measures. Brother Pinella, Fearing the seizure of the papers, he carried them, with the help of Brother Cruz, to a a hiding place known only to them. But during the night, the idea came to Pinella that The papers weren't there in a safe place; he got up very early in the morning, had the most interesting seals and papers transported and left that some useless papers in case the police were to decide to break into the house.

"Shortly afterwards, Brother Cruz rushed breathlessly to Pi-

Nella told him that the police had discovered the hiding place;

that there was no way to save the papers; but that being compromised

Having been put in charge along with Pinella and all the brothers from Spain, he only had dear, trying to warn those we might meet. Pinella very-

Calm asked Cruz how he knew the papers had been taken;

In his confusion, he gave very confused explanations; then the brother

Pinella told him that he should reassure himself; that he had been deceived and that No one was compromised. Furthermore, the fate of Brother Cruz was very...

unhappy; no doubt consumed by remorse and conscience.

Public contempt led to his premature death.

"The earliest traces of Freemasonry found in Spain"

in 1717 in England under the name of philosopher. This name and that Accepted things, which are generally not understood, stem from affiliations. which, as we have said, took place within the brotherhood of masons in other professions and trades, admitting members who They were not of the profession. They were called accepted. These in 1717 made the Masonic brotherhood a philosophical symbolism in of which all men were brothers.

674

DOCUMENT G

"Well, in a quarterly session of this meeting of brothers, at the place called Crown Tavern, near the London Stock Exchange, on Wednesday On Wednesday, April 17, 1728, the delegate of the Grand Orient communicated a letter from some masons from Madrid and other parts of Spain, saying that they had taken advantage of the Duke of Wharton's presence to found a lodge called Matritense, on the main street of San Bernardo; we meet there knows the first Sunday of each month. The date of the letter is the 15th January 1728 and is registered by Philip, Duke of Wharton, delegate of the Grand Master, Charles de Labelye, Venerable Richardi, first vigilant, Thomas Hasson, second (pro tempore, for time) Eldnage, Diusdale; André Halluy, etc., etc.

c. Consequently, the first authentic fact about Freemasonry is Pagnole, as evidenced by documents still existing in Madrid and at London demonstrates that the institution began, as in France, by delegation of the English Grand Master, and that a Frenchman was the first venerable.

The Grand Orient's notice then recounts the history of the order in Spain:

"The introduction of the Scottish Rite into Spain is due to the Count of Tilly, relative of the founder of the Rite of France.

"It is not necessary to recall here the origins of the Scottish Rite" old accepted, nor to examine the value of these words: Old Scottish and Accepted. There are few people who know the history of Freemasonry. stupidity that could not appreciate the serious reasons that one might have to dispute the three qualifications of this rite. As for its antiquity, one knows the history of propagandists from Bordeaux, and the patent of the ad-joined to the Grand Master of France in the second half of the last century; We know of the regularization of the rite in Charlestown, its introduction in France at the beginning of this century by the Count of Grasse-Tilly; and its later introduction to Scotland, where since the 12th century there had been

A family of high nobility occupied the Grand Mastership from father to son. Therefore, the Scottish Rite as we know it, which has no the kinship with the ancient Freemasonry of Scotland is much less similar to Freemasonry as practiced in Spain and less Scottish than this Freemasonry, daughter of English Freemasonry, which was sister of the ancient Scottish Rite. As for the title: accepted, we have already explained its meaning; people were returning to the brotherhoods of art and offices to associates who were not of the profession. Thus he there is no reason to apply it to the Charlestown rite imported in Europe by Grasse-Tilly's brother, who was never a member of the brotherhood of stonemasons in the literal sense of the word. The apparatus The development of this rite was a simple evolution of philosophical Freemasonry. that.

THE REVOLUTIONS IN SPAIN AND PORTUGAL 675

"Some may find that what we are saying here is a digression" unnecessary and even inappropriate; but our first duty as a Frenchman—A Freemason's duty is to tell the truth, even when that truth may turn against him. ourselves.

"Moreover, the Scottish rite can easily do without subterfuge, because the The foundation of its institution is an important development in the history of the Masonry.

"As we have indicated, its introduction into Spain had place shortly after its appearance in France, due to the kinship of the Count of Grasse-Tilly and the Spanish Count of Tilly.

"This last character was a Guzman, therefore belonging to the oldest families, but enjoying a rather modest fortune cre, and a genius that drove him towards adventures. He was close by rent from this Guzman, who played a considerable role during the great Revolution of 1792. After traveling across Europe without much success In his ventures, the Count of Tilly returns to Spain with an au permission of his relative, the Count of Grasse-Tilly, to propagate the a new rite. He first tried it in Seville, and he took advantage of his stay. in the peninsula to ensure the triumph of the May 1808 movement against Napoleon's invasion, knowing the popular movements through the learning he did in France, he was able to master and control them. to rise in the shadow of a former minister, named Saavedra, made by him pre-President of the Junta (committee), of which he was the soul. His rivals and hastening campaign preparations, French forces advanced, towards Andalusia. He displayed remarkable organizational skills, Cunning and energy to crush his competitors. He will reunite in a month forty thousand men, rather poorly armed, it is true, but who formed at Baylen the large network that paralyzed Dupont when he was attacked by the veterans of Reding and Castanos, whose Tilly had decided

Appointed by the Junta, Tilly was the company's director, the head of the combination, and in that capacity drafted the capitulation of Baylen.

"Napoleon harshly criticized the conduct of those who had were the victims of his mania for ordering everything in Paris, without knowing this gorge of the Sierra Morena, where any army that ventures there when The country is in turmoil, especially in summer, and people are bound to die of thirst. or to have been put to the sword.

676

DOCUMENT G

"If Napoleon had known that the man who commanded the camp in Nemi was the leader of the Spanish Freemasons of the new rite, of which his Brother Joseph was then the Grand Master in France, and who counted undoubtedly a large number of followers in the divisions that came He would not have failed to capitulate, with his frivolous and sullen character conneux to attribute the defeat of his armies to treason, when he This coincidence should have been seen only as reasons to soften the rigors of war and to alleviate misfortune.

"Tilly, following his successes, was appointed one of the two representatives tantrums of the Seville committee to the central government, which was established & Aranjuez, September 21, 1808. On the same day, he was at the council supreme of Scottish Freemasonry, of which the members were part government liberals, among whom we knew the great poet Quintana, who faithfully transmitted to our generation the evè elements of time.

"Then one of those anomalies called cosas of Es- occurred." pana. The Scottish Rite that introduced the higher degrees was the Rite of those who tended towards democracy, while Freemasonry... three grades was, at least as far as its grand master was concerned, the defender sister of the aristocracy and absolutism.

"While Tilly was dying in prison, a victim of freedom, Montijo devoted himself to the triumphant liberals from 1810 to 1814 implacable hatred. Upon the return of King Ferdinand, after the fall of Napoleon Leon, in two councils where the king brought up the question of knowing if it were necessary to proclaim the Constitution or restore absolutism, Montijo repaired itself with its colleagues of the high nobility who wanted the Cons a constitution of national sovereignty or at least a granted charter while the councilors drawn from the people (another anomaly) of demanded the complete restoration of the old regime.

cut the deputies who had given him his crown, Montijo tried to do to give the restaurant a semblance of popularity by rallying the The slums of Madrid, defiling themselves to the point of giving the password to the fanatics around the prison, whose gates they almost forced open to massacre the liberals.

"But, endowed with a light and fickle nature, he changed his behavior" three years later. Being in Granada, as captain-general of King Ferdinand, he protected the masons of both rites, and brought the rite that he was heading towards uniting with the Scottish Rite, which after Tilly's death had been led by Vellido and Vellesca, capable and honest ministers, but without notoriety. To consecrate the union, a Chamber of Rites was created under the management of Montijo.

"Since then, and for six years, the history of Freemasonry is the history of Spain. She fought against the absolute power of Ferdinand and took part in the 1820 movement, which restored the constitution of the year 12 and which spread to Portugal and Italy, and was nearly to precede 1830 in France. But Montijo had previously separated himself from the movement lodges led primarily by the heads of the Scottish Rite, which had triumphed in practice. Driven by prejudices or aristocratic calculations As far as his changeable nature allowed, he kept his distance from ticks. and finally, in 1821, he ceased his duties as Grand Master and was replaced by General Riego, the leader of the 1820 movement.

THE REVOLUTIONS OF SPAIN AND PORTUGAL 677

"Riego was a fine character, albeit eccentric; still at Today, to praise liberalism, we say: More liberal than Riego. Under his great mastery (yet another anomaly), as a politician that he was rather the leader of the democrats or the zealots, but affiliated in Freemasonry with all the distinguished men of Spain by the Birth, wealth, talent, or service, he found himself separated from more advanced, who had formed a democratic society, under the name of Gomoneros. Thus Riego found himself almost always torn between the respect due to his distinguished colleagues and the acclamations of the masses the rival company.

"We know the sad end of this liberal phase of Spain, La Sainte-Alliance, threatened by a movement that had spread in Italy and which threatened to spread in France, hastened to suppress it in Naples and in Sardinia and to distract the revolutionary spirit with the military spirit silence.

"Freemasonry having been accused of contributing to the revolution From 1820 onwards, no one questioned after 1823 whether it was meeting innocuously decently or for conspiring, she was considered a rebel. In 1825, it was decided to reproach its members for nothing other than having been found wearing aprons, They were thrown into prison, tried quickly, and executed. seven.

"Until the year 1828, when the uprisings of royalist fanatics..." Yourselves and clerics informed Ferdinand that there were, among his former supporters, men who called him a mason for not having wanted to reinstate the Inquisition, and who wanted to replace him with his brother, the spirit of persecutory continued to display itself in all its horrors reurs. The impossibility of organizing Freemasonry continued; only The sacred fire was preserved thanks to the care of the Duke of San Lorenzo and some friends of the Sovereign Chapter, aided in this by high officials Ferdinand's followers who had belonged to Freemasonry, So it happened that, exiled from Madrid, San Lorenzo passed through Valencia, where the man invested with (the highest authority, by a happy coincidence, recognized him as a brother and made him stay in that city, surrounding him with every kind of consideration and protection.

678

DOCUMENT G

"After the defeat of the Carlists in 1828, a relatively liberated spirit Ral reigned around Ferdinand; the old masons, among whom Many belonged to the high nobility, and had their entry to palaces began to form a nucleus of the opposition liberal party to the absolutist party.

cc And as monarchies never lack a member of the royal family to sponsor an opposition party, to Don Carlos and to his Portuguese wife, there was the younger brother, Don François, and his wife me, from the House of Naples, who patronized liberalism. This This phase was also a new era for Freemasonry.

The revelations in which the Spanish Grand Orient launched were undoubtedly compromising, because Le Monde ma Connique never published the continuation of this notice. But one can to see that in its broad outlines it confirmed the first com- communication that reveals your full role in Freemasonry revolutions of contemporary Spain. Most of the pro- nunc-.amicntos had as their point of reference one of the fractions between which the lodges were divided.

The same divisions continue today within Freemasonry. Spanish riots and foreshadow new revolutions (see a letter) (from F.*. Ferez in the Free-Mason of August 14, 1880). The document emanating from the Grand Orient presided over by Brother Sagasta, who represents published at the end of volume I, it clearly indicates the anti-Christian spirit of the last revolution in this country that we have mentioned (book II, chap. XII, § 3, note).

III. – Freemasonry in Portugal

has

We reproduce without comment the following extract from a communication addressed by F.'. Chabirand, lieutenant of vessel, to the Chain of Union and published in this journal years 1872–1873, pp. 581–581. It confirms everything we have seen here–above, relative to Spain, and can be considered as supplementing the truncated account of the Spanish Grand Orient •

"The origin of Freemasonry in Portugal dates only from..." beginning of the 19th century. It was then inaugurated almost in at the same time by English and French lodges.

"Until the fall of the First French Empire, the workshops were able to work successfully in Lisbon and Porto. They were also open protected either by the French or English authorities, who successively governed the country at that time.

But after 1815, under John VI, King of Portugal, Freemasonry was subjected to one of the most violent persecutions in history make mention. Several Freemasons were condemned to death for their opinions and executed in Lisbon, Porto and Terceira.

there. Freemasonry in Portugal 679

c The Grand Orient of Portugal then had as its Grand Master the illustrious Fr.'. Gomez Freire d'Andrade, a brave general officer, who had gloriously commanded a division in the French army during the Russian campaign. The military services of the illustrious Fr.–. d'Andrade did not protect him from the vengeance of the political party which pursued Freemasonry in Portugal. Sentenced to death, he was hanged ignominiously on October 17, 1817, along with several members of his obedience.

"This execution dealt a fatal blow to Freemasonry. The lodges..." closed and did not reopen until around 1824, at the continuation of the liberal trends manifested by the Cortes assembly.

John VI died in 1826, leaving his son Don as his successor Pedro, Emperor of Brazil. Don Pedro came to Portugal, ceded the crown to his daughter Dona Maria, then seven years old, during the regency of Don Miguel, second son of John VI, and, giving to Portugal the famous constitution known as the Portuguese Charter, returned

Don Miguel immediately usurped the throne after his departure, restoring the absolute regime and inaugurated its advent with a new persecution against Freemasonry.

"The reign of the usurper Don Miguel was fortunately short-lived." duration.

After a civil war that lasted a few years, Don Pedro He drove out Don Miguel and restored his daughter to the throne; in 1834 he gave to Portugal adopted a new constitution, which guaranteed the country's freedoms, and he himself returned to the darkness, content with the satisfaction of having inaugurated among the peoples of the Lusitanian race the reign of freedom.

Freemasonry had played a major role in the revolution. which ultimately led to the act of 1834. She was to remember it. for a long time. A large number of Portuguese masons did not consider giant that the political results, which had in reality only been the as a consequence of a huge liberal movement in the country, in attrition They gave all the credit to the influence of Freemasonry.

"They wanted to continue to make order a political instrument." This disastrous trend was bound to influence the foundation of as many Orients as there were political parties in Portugal.

"In 1840 there were as many as nine Masonic authorities: too many" Indeed, it must be said, Freemasonry was often called upon to play a role. a leading role in the triumph of a party.

"Internal divisions will subside in the long run, thanks to the fruits that sooner or later, Freemasonry was bound to adopt the wise constitution of 1834. She herself eventually began to feel the effects of this beneficial influence.

"In 1859 the Grand Orient of Portugal, which was essentially the authority..."

DOCUMENT 0

Masonic tradition is ancient and, as such, legitimate, and Qni had the honor of counting among its great masters the glorious martyr Gômez Freire d'Andrade, established himself on new foundations and chose for Grand Master the illustrious Fr.*., Count of Paraty, managed to gather under His obedience largely encompassed the workshops.

"At that time, there were four different Masonic authorities" in Lisbon, outside the Grand Orient of Portugal:

"1° The Grand Orient of Portugal;

Marquis de Loulé, had been able, on several occasions, to maintain relations fraternal ties with the Grand Orient of France;

"3° A supreme Scottish council;

"4° A Grand Provincial Lodge of Iceland, a foreign authority relating in front of the Grand Lodge of Dublin.

In 1863, the Grand Orient of France officially recognized the Grand-Lusitanian East. after* having thoroughly inquired and acquired the certainty that Brother*, from Loulé, no longer belonged to any of the obediences these existed then in Portugal.

In 1867, the Grand Orient of Portugal and the Masonic confederation that the Portuguese joined forces and formed the Grand Orient
The illustrious Portuguese F. Mendes Leal was elected grand master.

This new authority was only temporary. Thanks to the efforts of nis of the FF.*. Mendès Leal and of Paraty, the Portuguese Grand Orient met at the Grand Orient of Portugal on August 10, 1869. The Ma- power conic, which was thus formed by the fusion of the entire Portuguese family Gaise took the name of the United Lusitanian Grand Orient. The Count of Paraty was elected grand master, and Brother Mendes Leal was declared grand master lifetime fee.

The Scottish Supreme Council is on its way to meet at the Grand Orient. The Grand Orient of Portugal had, in 1870, under his authority, fifty-six lodges, including twenty in Spain.

Document H

MR. DE BISMARCK'S RELATIONS WITH THE SOCIALISTS

Here, in essence, are the statements made by the socialist MP Bebel made this statement in the Reichstag on September 26, 1878, during the debates on the law against socialists; they complement what we have said (book II, chapter 11, g 2, p. 405):

"The workers' movement began in 1862 in Leipzig, where it was A steering committee was then formed. A man named Eichler presented himself. to this committee, claiming to be sent by the Prussian government, and offering even the material support of the government, if one agrees was determined to fight the progressives. An initial sum of 60 to 80,000 thalers were to be given to participate in the foundation tion of a production company. »

Bebel also provided detailed information on the en around 1863–64. One day, the Bavarian ambassador had to wait at the Bismarck's door, which was in conference with Lassalle.

"In these conferences, the main issue was..." universal suffrage and a state subsidy for the establishment production companies. Prince Bismarck elaborated fully committed to Lassalle's plan; he only refused to acc to immediately implement universal suffrage, as required Lassalle; he believed that this would not be possible before the end of the Schleswig-Holstein War. This disagreement led to further very. It is not Mr. de Bismarck, but rather Lassalle, who intervenes broke off negotiations.

Bebel went further in his revelations:

"The leader of the Socialist Party after Lassalle, Dr. Dammer, recommended to his successor Fritsche that in the meetings which would take place in the kingdom of Saxony, one should not be born gliger, while affirming socialist demands, to ask of the unification of Germany under Prussian domination. Fritsche had to report to Mr. Bismarck personally on the re-results obtained in these meetings. According to Bebel, Fritschp would have refused, but his successor, Mr. de Schweitzer, would have accepted, in 1866, to stir up trouble in favor of the German Tunitô, of consultation with the government.

DOCUMENT H 682

The socialist Liebknecht, a member of the Reichstag, claimed from his on the side of having been subjected to unofficial solicitations; he was also told to* would have offered to address social issues from his point of view in the Norddeutsche allgemeine Zeitung; he was reportedly given a card white on this point.

Document X

The enlightened Montgelas and compulsory education in Germany

This war machine against Christian morals of people was introduced to Bavaria as early as 1807 by a disciple of Weishaupt, who, thanks to the support of the sect, was hung fifteen in the absolute master of this country, under the high domination of

on this character from Michaud's Universal Biography and Didot's New General Biography:

"The Count of Montgelas, from a family originating in Savoy, was born in Munich in 1759; the origin of his great fortune was the friendship with which The duke's brother, Prince Maximilian Joseph, later king of Bavaria. When this prince succeeded Elector Charles Theodore, Montgelas followed him to Munich and soon rose to occupy the important position of Minister of Foreign Affairs, to which he added in 1803 the finance department and in 1806 the Ministry of the Interior. It was according to his advice, which Maximilian, changing his ways, abandoned the coalition and became a vassal of Napoleon I. Until the end, he sought to keep Bavaria within the empire's orbit and he did not withdraw, of power only in 1817, when Marshal de Wrède declared himself his adversary. During his all-powerful administration, he distinguished by a large number of reforms which earned him the nickname Pombal of Bavaria. He was with Abbot Salabert at the head of a society of zealots, and both ruled over the weak, less busy prince of business as of pleasure; a declared opponent of the Jesuits, he provides to the historian Lang the documents necessary to compose Y History The Jesuits of Bavaria, a violent pamphlet against this order. He is* no less hostile to other religious groups and to the old privileges of the clergy, which he significantly restricted. He played a leading role in the secularization of ecclesiastical principalities in Bavaria and all of Swabia. At the same time he attacked the nobility in its privileges and completely changed the laws of Bavaria.

DOCUMENT I

684

Arndt expressed himself thus regarding this nefarious character:

"Mr. de Montgelas, whose dignities and titles are accumulating" Year after year, he comes from Savoy... He came from a good background school, the school of the enlightened, which gave us the Dalbergs, the Benzel-Sternane and others. We have not forgotten the time when, at the beginning of the French Revolution, this Mr. de Montgelas, Mr. de Zwach and some other followers of their school, who were suspected by the government, wandered to the borders of Germany. Montgelas returned in Bavaria with the current king whom he completely dominates, and in the name from which he ruled all of Bavaria like a despot. He was a gentleman. Impoverished and burdened with debt, he now possesses millions; his Immorality and corruption are an affront to German probity. Skilled, with a lighthearted character, and extravagant, he never hesitates to He has nothing to gain in order to reach his goal, and that is what makes him dangerous. All Bavarians curse his regime, which two words can...

convenient potism, able to bend everything to general formulas, and k to undermine all religion and all morality (/). »

(1) Arndt, Beheizungen vor der Wiener Congress, 1814.

document J

Thiers' secret dealings with Gambetta and Rociiefort

in 1*871

The quarrels between opportunists and intransigents come to uncover documents that show how narrow were Thiers' secret relations with Gambetta at the time where, in his public speeches, he called him a raving lunatic.

In July 1871, Rochcfort, on the advice of his lawyer Albert Joly wrote a letter to Gambetta in which he told him ordered intervention on his behalf, and where we read verbatim this passage: "You must have, my dear friend, a very significant influence laughing at Mr. Thiers, who is forced to reckon with you more than with anyone.

ftochefort having sought to cast doubt on the circumstances Gambetta made to respond with the following note published in the French Republic French decree of December 15, 1880:

"In response to questions from several newspapers, we are my authorized representatives declare that the letter from Mr. Henri Rochefort, published by Voltaire, was handed over to Mr. Gambetta, 12 rue Montaigne, to the end of July 1871, by Mr. Albert Joly. Mr. Gambetta immediately...
They assisted Mr. Thiers with the procedure that was requested of him by Mr. Rochefort.

Rochefort was quite right to count on the situation where Thiers was located opposite Gambetta. Thiers, compliant to the the request made to him weighed heavily on the pardons commission to save Rochefort's head and the followed by his acts of kindness as far as New Caledonia.

Bans all the letters published on this occasion by Rochefort
The following assertion must also be noted:

"From all sides – one only has to read the newspapers of the time – it was repeated that Mr. Gambetta was the true leader of the Commune, that he would lead was being handled through Mr. Ranc, and there was talk of apprehending them both.

DOCUMENT J

686

In a letter from Paschal Grousset, his escape companion de llochefort, written on December 18, 1880, on the occasion of these Controversies arose, and the following passages stand out:

"An honorable merchant from Nouméa, a good republican and a good man – mason, who had come to see me on the Ducos peninsula and whom we had the joy of meeting upon disembarking in Sydney, kindly agreed to us spontaneously cover the necessary sum to meet our initial expenses. Upon my arrival in London in July 1874, with

Mr. Jourde, I knew that Mr. Rochefort, who had arrived there first with Mr. Pain had received a visit from Mr. Edmond Adam... It was only the following year, in March 1875, I learned for the first time, of the mouth of a member of the Paris City Council, visiting London, at his brother's house, that the 25,000 francs sent to Sydney were the proceeds of a subscription organized by Gambetta.

Other Communards were the object of very special protection. Mr. Thiers's cial: such was notably the case of F.*. Roques de Filhol, later mayor of Puteaux after the amnesty. He obtained in Nouméa, on orders from Paris, an exceptional position nelle.

What is evident to the reader from all this po-
The key point is that the four characters named there were at that time partly linked or at least negotiating crudely with each other.

JSL document

Freemasonry in Russia and Poland.
THE INSURRECTION OF 1830 AND THE JULY REVOLUTION
THE ORIGINS OF NIHILISM.

Unfortunate Poland was, as a Catholic nation, the the Church and the Christian social order. On the other hand, Russia is of then for several years the scene of the decisive struggle between them all. These considerations lend great interest to the study of the Ma- stupidity in these two countries. We borrow the elements from them. a highly authoritative work by Mr. Georgios Michalof published in Leipzig and in Amberg in 1877, under the title: Die geheime Werkstätte der Polnischen Erhebung von 1830 mit Streiflichtem auf Russland und France.

I

Freemasonry in Russia. —• From the earliest years of During Catherine II's reign, lodges were greatly multiplied in the Russian high society, and Saint-Martin propagated his doctrines there by the intermediary of the Polish Count Grabianka and the Russian Admiral Pleschtschejev. The Polish Freemason historian Valerien Kran- Sisky, in his Religious History of the Slavic Peoples (Paris 1853), tells how St-Martin lived in the Russian lodges a field a very large area open for the propaganda of his ideas. In Moscow was established a typographic society, which, with the works of Jacob Boehme, d'Arndt, and de Spene published all the manuscripts and all translations of French works imbued with reli- The moral zeal of the sect. All the literature of the country was soon to be influenced by imbued, starting with the famous historian F.*. Karam-

ii 44

688 DOCUMENT K

sin. The soul of this society was Novikof, grand master and director intimate author of Russian Freemasonry.

“Every member of Freemasonry,” said Kranisski, “used to his noble works not only his talents, but his authority, his influence, his relationships. Were some being discovered in the provinces? A man of talent, he was remembered and highlighted. Those which among the Martinists could not contribute financially They gave their time and energy. Some sacrificed their entire estate, like Senator and Criminal Advisor Lopu- China.

The Martinist lodges thus penetrated the Church and spread there rent, through high-ranking officials, the spirit of Calvinism. the pious appearances with which Martinism cloaked itself had for the aim of attracting religious souls to him, to hide from the police its political aim, to lull the im- empress, who was born into Protestantism and was very zealous for civilization, and to spread the ideas of liberty and equality in

The social state of the Ilussic (Hamburg 1854) is expressed as follows:

"The first serious action that gave a different scope to the dilettante-literary ism, from Freemasonry. At the end of Catherine's reign rine II, she was very widespread in Russia; her leader Novikof was a of those prominent figures in history, who perform wonders on a scene that must necessarily remain in the shadows. He was one of the propagators of these underground ideas, whose work becomes all of it suddenly became visible at the moment of the explosion. In all the expensive publications he produced were strongly supported by the order of Freemasons, which united for a common purpose of then great lords like Prince Leopuchin, up to the "Poor environmentalist teacher and district surgeon."

Catherine II, in the early years of her reign, had declared the protector of Freemasonry and had built in In 1784, the Imperial Lodge was established in St. Petersburg. In 1787, there were 145 men lodges in Russia and 75 in Poland.

After the explosion of the revolution in 1792, the Tsarina changed of feelings, and when she learned that the Grand Duke heir Since Paul I, who had been initiated by Novikof, she wanted to put an end to it.
with Freemasonry. Novikof was thrown into the fortress of Schlussebourg, and the princes Léopuchin, Nicolas Troubetzkoi, Turgenjef relegated to their lands. But only a few heads remain.
The members were struck. The rest of the affiliates worked even harder.
actively working behind the scenes.

Paul I, on the day after his accession, restored freedom to

Russian and Polish Freemasonry 689

Novikof and again favored Freemasonry, but at the com
At the beginning of 1797, he closed the jousting lodges and exiled the most dangerous affiliates. "Despite this, to use ex-Despite pressure from Kranisski, the Martinists did not continue.
less to pursue their philanthropic goals." Alexander I, in Despite his good intentions, he fell under their domination, and In 1803 he revoked Paull's ordinance. In that year he-even entered the order, thus adding his name to the list of sovereigns who serve as playthings for the skillful leaders of sects.
It was Bober, the State Councillor and Director of the Cadet School. which thus earned the lodges imperial favor; and so it was great Grand Duke Cons Tantin, Count Potoki, organized in the very courtyard of lodges set up on the largest footing. Several lodges practiced riale under the name of Wladimir to the order which consisted of high-ranking members and representatives of the lodges joined. (1).

The campaigns against Napoleon fostered Freemasonry. In the army. Military lodges formed within its ranks. They fraternized with all the lodges they encountered. In their race across France, Holland, Germany and Poland (2). We now know what the secret direction of the movement was. It was understood by the war cry of 1813: liberation of the peoples from foreign domination; it was, in essence, absolute independence. The man of all religious and civil authority. The Russian army was gradually infected by these ideas.

Freemasonry had long been working to Protestantize the Russian church through Bible societies. It was served at the emperor's court by Mme de Krudoner, a Protestant mystic. "Under his influence," said Kraniski, "he surrounded himself with martialists, chose as minister one of their own, Prince Galitzin, who was charged with an affiliate, Labzin, (to propagate Russian translations) and founded several religious works in the style of Stilling and founded for this purpose the Messenger of Zion, which soon numbered numerous subscribers." A characteristic passage from the Journal de Vienna for the Freemasons of that time shows us the interest with which Freemasonry followed this religious evolution of the emperor. For his part, Herzen points to the biblical societies, like the forerunners of socialist Young Russia.

While the emperor charged two brothers, Karamsin and Speranski, to prepare a draft constitution, the Sufi lodges sensed the insurrection in the minds of the young nobility and were to dangle before his eyes the prospect of restoring the old republic.

(1) Allgemeines Handbuch der Freimaurerei, (I. III, p. 112.

V. Allgemeines Handbuch von Fedtogen.

690 DOCUMENT K

Russian aristocracy. From their ranks a young phalanx detached itself in which young men distinguished themselves by their zeal literary, such as Pestel, von Wiesen, Narischin, Juchniewsky, Murawieff, Orlof, the writers Rulejef and Bestuschef, the princes these Obolensky, Trubetskoy, Odoevsky, Wolkonsky, the count Tchernichef. The Alliance, of salvation, that was their name, and at their head. At the top, we could still find the old master of the lodges, Novikof!

The first group was organized in 1813, within a regiment of the guard, modeled after a lodge, and in 1815 Pestel tied all reds. At the same time, for foreign propaganda purposes, a Public Good Society, divided into four sections, one of which having the first object being works of philanthropy, the second being civilization intellectual and moral development and the spread of schools, the third the oversight of courts and officials, the fourth the study of the national economy. Impossible to ignore the identity of this company with similar companies, which were created at that time in France, Spain, Italy, and Switzerland, in Germany.

The conspirators' actions opened the emperor's eyes, who, By a decree dated August 22, 1822, all secret societies were forbidden. particularly those of the Freemasons. A special provision The civil service extended this prohibition to residents, consuls and embassies. foreign soldiers. The emperor must have acquired proof of the part that several members of the diplomatic corps took to conspiracies, as has happened so many times since.

But only a revival of the Christian spirit could have stopped the evil. In November 1825, Alexander I commissioned Count Tschernitschew chief to search for the conspirators; but he only spoke of hastening his tin, and he died suddenly on December 1st, in Taganrog.

The conspirators did not intend to rise up until 1829. Prisâ l'im- They burst forth unexpectedly without sufficient preparation and appointed Prince Trubetskoy was appointed dictator. We know how energy Nicholas I finally overcame it.

The Salvation Association now had to hide underground and taking refuge in two even more secret societies, the Northern Union, which had its directorate in St. Petersburg, and the Southern Union, which had his own in Podolia.

There was also another secret society in the South, which in In 1823, the Masonic lodge "The United Slavonians" was founded in Kyiv. and which had a total of 33 members. This small number should not to downplay their importance; the centers of action in the Secret societies are still few in number. Their rituals were exactly those of the higher degrees of Freemasonry; their symbol bole, the dagger, as in the 30th Scottish grade (Kadosh). As for their goal, the Calligraphy of the Slavs presented it thus in style Masonic:

Russian and Polish Freemasonry 691

"Through a federal alliance and an egalitarian republican government—to remain silent, but without prejudice to their respective independence, to unite the "eight Slavic countries, whose names were inscribed on a seal with eight

"Dalmatia, Hungary (?) with Transylvania, Servia with the "Moldova and Vatachio. They wanted, at the geographical center of the "Slavic country, found a federal city and raise on a throne there the "Goddess of civilization!"

This is a goddess who strongly resembles the goddess of reason from 1793.
We have in this outline the federal republic Slave, a new proof of the antiquity of the sects' plan which want to establish the United States of Europe with republics federated, Romance, Germanic and Slavic.

The United Slavonians, who were in contact with the Southern Union Did they join the 1825 insurrection? We don't know.
Proof of this is that at least they did not take an overt part in it.

Even before the establishment of the United Slavonians, societies Russian Cretans had close ties with secret societies from Warsaw, who exploited Masonic patriotism Polish, as was happening in France, Germany and in Italy.

What characterizes the Russian movement from 1817 to 1825 is the idea National-Russian-Socialist, which proves that the defendants in the trial of 1875 were mistaken when they claimed that the movement Socialism only dated back to 1870. "In the beginning," he said
"Herzen, the company had a constitutional tendency in the "English meaning, but it soon took on a radical character, which in
"It alienated many members. But the core of the conspirators..."
"was a republican. He wanted to establish a revolutionary dictatorship-
"Nairo, in order to be able to proceed with a republican organization"
"of the country... Pestel, as soon as he took over the management of the company, asked immediately addressed the agrarian question and put forward the principle of "The expropriation of property... If the plot had succeeded, it would have been him "who would have been a dictator..."

II

Freemasonry in Poland. – Already, during the reign of Frei Deric-Augustus II. There were a few lodges in Warsaw. In 1742 the Count Stanislas Mniseck, André Mocranowski and Prince Cons tantin Jablonowsky opened a lodge in Winiesvitz in Volhynia;
But they were mostly French, Longchamp. Jean de Thoux de Salverte, General Lefort, who were in this country the propaleaders of Freemasonry.

In 1744, Brother François Longchamp opened the Lodge of the Three brothers in Warsaw and the lodge the Three Goddesses in Leraberg, in 1717. In 1749, F.*, de Thoux de Salverte appeared in Poland and founded in Warsaw the lodge to the Good Shepherd, in whose name he established several Masonic lodges in different cities in Poland.

During the reign of the Saxon kings, under the leadership of the two great Masters von Brühl and Zimoisky, there was a lodge in Warsaw

A German lodge and a French lodge working together.

On April 30, 1778, Brother de Thoux de Salverte erected the Knights lodge of Saint Charles, friends put to the test, which was a chapter of the high grades and which included among its members the Brothers Charles de Heyking, G. Wilhorski, Count Jos. of Hulfen, of Woiwode, Joseph Zaikeseck and General Dzuski. Two years earlier, at the end of 1776, the merchant Jean Mioche had founded in Warsaw the lodge Le Parfait Silence, which asked the Grand Orient of France its constitutions and introduced into Poland the system which was practiced. This is the one that Count Pobcki chose to prevail in 1781. when he had been chosen for the second time as grand master.

Nevertheless, the progress of Freemasonry in Poland was not not very fast at first; the Masonic World (vol. VII, 1864, p. 727) He blames "the influence of the Jesuits, which hindered the direction too much." "Order so that he could establish himself in this country as firmly as possible" "that it was at that time in many other civilized countries" "Lized." After the destruction of the Jesuits and the first dismemberment In Poland, Freemasonry experienced a great boom, and one It had 70 lodges in 1784.

The Polish legion of 20,000 men, which Dombrowski commanded under the reign of Napoleon I or, became a hub of propaganda Masonic, because, like the French officers of the time, the Poles also organized themselves into lodges. Among them was Ramorino, the famous Carbonaro. Freemasonry thus took root in Poland an ardent patriotic character, so much so that Brother Maurice Mochnacki was able to say: "In Poland all insurrections are "Exits from secret societies (1)."

Around 1818, a society that borrowed its entire organization from Freemasonry was formed under the inspiration of Dombrowski and the direction of Second Lieutenant Prondzynski, of the prince Jablonowski and Teraszinshi. Other former officers of Napoleon-Poleon, Freemasons already, the FF* *. Lukazinski, Wierzbonski. Macliniki and the lawyer Schroder formed a law firm in Warsaw in 1819. lodge, whose purpose was essentially political and which was the home of the 1831 insurrection. "The words signs and degrees," said the "The Masonic world, they were entirely Masonic, and the members pledged by oath to help each other, to endeavor to devote all their efforts to the triumph of the national cause." * Major Lukasinski was appointed Grand Master. » After various

(1) Powstanie Narodu Polskiego 1830 i 1831. Posen, 1803, 3 vols.

changements dans l'organisation intérieure, nous voyons en 1821 la société réorganisée par le général Uminski et Sazoznieski-« Ils groupèrent autour d'eux, continue le Monde maçonnique, un « certain nombre de vieux maçons "politiques comme il en faut dans"
« les circonstances suprêmes... Le comité central s'établit à Varsovie.
« Seulement le succès de cette nouvelle organisation exigeait en« core que la dénomination de Maçonnerie nationale et celle de « Kossinieri (les faucheurs, en souvenir de la guerre de 1794), fus-« sent remplacées par celle de Société patriotique. » Ces derniers mots montrent bien que la Société patriotique et la Maçonnerie polonaise n'étaient qu'une seule et même chose. Elle comptait, en 1822, 5,000 members. All three were leaders, Uminski, Louis Sobanski Lichowski and Jordan were long-time Freemasons.
as in Freemasonry, the supreme and absolute power, which directed the entire association, removing it from the hands of a very-few in number, consisting of only seven members.

As it does everywhere, Freemasonry skillfully made use of popular associations, which bring together ardent men in large numbers without initiating them "into any secrets and allow him to do to maneuver them as she pleased while remaining true to herself behind the scenes. The strength of patriotic sentiment greatly facilitated things.
In Poland, the formation of associations of this kind. In imitation German Burschenschaften, or student associations, or in the same spirit of impiety and republicanism, they formed among Youth in Vilna, the Society of Rascals, the Student Society Polish people from Berlin and Breslau and the Radiant Brethren. The president
The first member of this latter company was an enthusiastic young man.
Thomas Zm is, moreover, quite honorable; but his real director
It was history professor Joachim Lelewel who played a role important in the 1831 insurrection and who later took refuge in Paris, where he died in 1861. This last association had a marked social trend. "She proposed," a document states.
* time, to unite the rich and the poor in brotherhood.
Dissolved by the police in 1821, it reformed into a society called linked to the Union of Philanthropists. in memory of the German Tuqndbund, which acted both as a public association and as a company secret. In the first capacity, she exercised great influence.
influence in Vilna by maintaining a hundred poor students at the university books and by forming a publishing agency, which published a collection Selection of Polish classics. Through the Patriotic Society, It establishes corresponding centers in Lithuania, Ukraine-ne, Samogitia, and thus covered all of Russian Poland with a a network whose threads were wrested from the hands of Freemasonry. But The Philaretes were also a secret society, because they above them was the Committee of Philomaths, composed solely of a group of twenty members chosen from among the most reliable and advanced

They forged a close alliance with the Templars of Volhynia.
denie. high Masonic chapter.

In 1821, Alexander I extended all societies to Poland secret; but Grand Master Lukazinski had parried the blow by eliminating the least reliable members from the lodges for two years previously, so that, while ostensibly forming the Lodges, Freemasonry continued its existence. However, the police Having obtained secret proof that he was preparing an insurrection, he was arrested along with four of his accomplices and sentenced to ten years of prison. Other brothers were able to conceal their participation in plotted and reconstituted the central committee, of which members Krzanoxvski, Piichta and Grzymala. Shortly afterwards, the government
The Russians discovered the revolutionary activities of the Phuaretcs. and the Philomalhcs, and in 1821, twenty of these young men were convened condemned to deportation.

However, these associations constantly reformed under other names; moreover, the prohibition of secret societies is not was not so rigorously applied, that in 1825 the grand master
The rule of Freemasonry in Poland could not be offered to the count Stanislas Soltyk and accepted by him.

It was then that the Polish secret societies formed two very important alliances, one with the Templars of Volhynia, the other with the socialist political societies of the Russia.

The first of these companies had been founded in 1819 by the ca
Captain Majewski, who had received the high Templar ranks while he was in Scotland as a prisoner of war. To the three symbolic grades, she added a fourth, where, as In the rank of Knight Kadosh, one swore hatred to death to triple and hideous despotism, that is to say, to the papacy, to the monarchy and in the army. The lodges were called encampments and the large lodges large encampments (1). In 1822, the Templars entered mass in the Patriotic Society and the two associations merged they practically fit into each other.

The Warsaw Central Committee also entered into this period relationship with Russian secret societies in the North, South and United Slavonians. The Southern society especially promised to the polo-the independence of Poland and its return to the kingdom parts of Lithuania that were not Russified, from their
On the other hand, the Poles were expected to rise up at the same time as the Russian conspirators, contain the Lithuanian army, assassinate the Grand Duke Constantine, if necessary, and proclaim the republic

(1) Nolo the spread throughout Europe of this order of the Templars that we saw at the time the preparation in France of the July Revolution (book 1, ch. VIII, g 5) or closely united to the Haute Vente italienne (Editor's note).

Russian and Polish Freemasonry 695

between the president of the Polish committee, Prince Krzyanowski, and the two Russian conspirators, Bestuchef and Murawiev; a second had place between Prince Antoine Jablonowski (the son of the founder of lodges of Volhynia, in 1742) and the Russian leader Pestel, in the castle of Prince Wolkowski. There Pestel revealed his plan, which consisted of to kill the entire family of the Tsar and to proclaim the republic. Prince Jablonowski recoiled in horror before these pro-assassination plots and refused to hear anything about socialism, but only liberation and independence for his country (1). It was agreed, in order not to break off relations, that Poland would have the choice of his government. The Russian conspirators gave to the Poles the assurance that alliances had been concluded in Germany, Italy and Hungary (2).

We have seen how the death of Alexander I precipitated in Russia's explosion, a conspiracy originally planned in 1829. The Poles did not want to risk everything while joining in. However at least, they were compromised in the investigation of the trial of conspirators, and more than 200 were arrested, among whom were the old Freemason leaders, Senator Castellan, Count Stanislas Soltyk, aged 77, Andreas Plichta, Alb. Grzymala, Adolph Lichowski, who, in 1831, was to write the ultra-democratic newspaper that, the Polish Courier, finally Prince Jablonowski. In the arrests were also made in the Grand Duchy of Posen. among others those (the Nepomucene Uminski, by Jean Krzyanowski, by Prondzynski, by Mathias Mielzynski (3). These last names clearly prove that the two governments were on the same page tracks.

In vain did Nicolas forcibly contain the dangerous elements relations in Russia; relations nevertheless continued between the former Russian conspirators of 1825 and the future Polish insurgents from 1830. Marc Fournier, in his book The Mysteries of Russia (Brussels 1844, p. 40;), informs us that "the secret societies of "The two countries had continuous relations; the Russians proposed "to Prince A... J... and Count Peter M..., later chiefs of the del-"Polish uprising, to exterminate the imperial family in a way "to thereby redeem all the crimes of the Russian government against "Poland. This proposal, although it was not accepted,

"proves the existence at that time in Russia of a liberal party He was very passionate about it.

A lively political unrest began to be stirred up in the youth schools under the direction of Lelewel, by Julien Ursyn Niemcewicz, Boleslas uestrovvski and Kempawiecki, so well

(1) Onorowski, Polish Insurrection, y. 93.

(2) nr Spazior, Geschic/itc des Aufstandes des ponüchen Volkes, 1830-i83I (AHenltorg, 1832, vol. I, p. 93).

(3) Cliodsko, Dits ti'iederuuflebea Potens, Brussels, 1831, p. 257. Cùodsko case' agent for Polish companies in Paris, in 1830 and 1831.

696 DOCUMENT K

that a police report in 1826 could provide the names of 2,600 affiliated. During Napoleon's wars, most of the officers had been received as Freemasons, so that the Masonic apron The in-nice was quite fashionable in military circles. The in-nice Greek uprising and Turkey's war against Greece (1828) circumstances appeared favorable to the Poles. We have certain that there was a large presence of Poles in the Russian army significantly paralyzed the 1828 campaign, and that knowledge a concerted plan between the Poles and the Greeks prevented the the czar in the midst of his triumphs to push on as far as Constantine nople (1).

The leader of all these movements was Lelewel. He attracted into his Valentin Zwierchowski, MP for Mnejechow, network of intrigues who, moreover, was already a Freemason and who became the head of the op-position in the diet. The Freemason Vryzinski, Count Ro-Inin Sollyk, Count Gustave Mulaohowski, were also won by him. Lelewell himself reserved the correspondence with Lithuania and all the annexed provinces, where he was strong widespread and where he had an in-depth knowledge of all secret societies, even those composed of nisses(2). A witness of the time recounts that every day the followers could go see him at the library library where he was bent over a pile of folios. The less he puts himself The more zeal we put into going to him, the further ahead we went.

Under his inspiration, a society was formed on December 15, 1828. secret within the Warsaw cadet school, which took part decisive in the 1829 insurrection, Tsar Nicholas was to be assassinated without ceremony during the coronation festivities: Accidental circumstances caused this attack to fail (3). Finally, the insurrection broke out on November 29, 1830. "The last- "The last remnants of Freemasonry emerged, so to speak, from "Their catacombs," says Le Monde maçonnique, "and were quite "Happy to die perhaps; but before dying, they

III

The Masonic character of the Polish revolution. – The true
A defining characteristic of Freemasonry is cosmopolitanism. It has shown this well.
during the French Revolutionary Wars, by destroying

(1) Poland, by brougham (Russell), p, 153.

Ç2) Spazicr, Geschichle des Anfstandes des polnischen Volkes 1830–1831 (Al-(CDlmg, 183?), t. I, p. 1H.

(3) Moelinaeki, Pomtania N-irodn Po'slcivgo wiroku 1830 i {831 (Poson, 1803, 3 vol.), t. I, p. Vj'2.

(4) See also the Zirkd (Compass), Masonic journal of the Viennese lodge Uumanilns, n" of August 15, 1870, which recalls the bet taken by Franc-maconnerie el l'ordre ues Templiers à l'insurrection.

Russian and Polish Freemasonry 697

to its benefit all neighboring nationalities. It did not take any* their nationals than when the despotism of Napoleon I" had stirred up the people; but this is only a mask for her.
This was also the case in Poland.

Immediately after the revolution of November 29, 1830, the
The Poles split into two parties, one truly national and Conservative, the other radical and Masonic, at the head of which found the old revolutionary doctrinaire Lelewel with his Patriotic society, and one that was much less willing to fight in the Russia, the enemy of Polish nationality, is the principle of narchic. Let us listen on this point to Brother Jean Czynski, vice-president President of the Patriotic Society (1):

"While in the Warsaw Diet there were elements monarchists and conservatives inclined towards compromise, the thought revolutionary democracy found its expression in some newspapers, notably Gazeta Polska, edited by Nep. Janowski, and Ludw. Zukowski's New Poland. Its home was the Polish Society Lelewel's triotic, where a large number of the early authors of the revolution, peasants, bourgeois, soldiers, workers, merchants, Israelites-people from all walks of life, no longer concerned with privileges, you waged an irresistible national war by means of renovation cial. There, proposals were made for improving the lot of the pays without Jews. Prince Czartorisky, head of the section, was denounced. diplomatic, which relied too heavily on the aid of the poorly arranged courts. There, the affairs of the people were dealt with against with whom the kings had conspired, had forged a holy alliance.

who played the role of beggars near the courts. There, they wanted to break with the courts and we wanted to turn towards the people First to Poland, and from there to all the peoples of Europe. The Society patriotic therefore addressed an appeal to the Russian people as to unfortunate brothers deserving of a better fate. And she celebrated by a solemn ceremony, on January 21, 1831, in memory of the mar Tyrants of Russian freedom, Bestuchef, Pestel, Muraview, Rylejeff, Ka-chowski (2).

...“If a happy success had crowned the 1830 enterprise, the ar
A victorious Polish army would not only have dethroned the Tsar,

(t) Die Ereignisse in Warsehau am 15 August /8Si, by J. Czynski, Irad. of Polish, Deux Ponts, 1832.

(2) The anniversary of this scene was celebrated in Paris in 1832, by the radi-the hold of Polish emigration. A medal was struck on this occasion, on the which one saw from a commando, liberty trampling underfoot a throne on which was On the other side, he wrote the name of Nicholas, and on the other, the names in Russian c Pestel and his companions.

698 DOCUMENT K

But she would also have brought freedom to oppressed Europe. That was it.
the destiny of Poland, the goal of the patriots who had undertaken the revolution ”.

Here again, Lelcwoll was the secret mastermind. At the second com commemoration of the Polish revolution, celebrated in Brussels in 4846 by the radical part of the Polish emigration, it is said ou-clearly stated that "Lelcwel represented the socialist element as early as 1831"
"And that he wanted to make it prevail in the Polish movement!"
Among the speakers at this festival, we note (two workers)
Mands, Kats and Pollcring, Wallan, president of the Union of transporters German valiant men of Brussels, S nault, F. Engels, the Jewish lawyer Lublincr,ct Kahl Mabx!

This socialist element did not exist among the Polish people.
but he removed it, introduced by Freemasonry, whose doctrines all lead to socialism (1)... Freemasonry showed itself
So, here as everywhere, it's anti-national.

Things came to a head that after having made a revolution tion against Russian domination, they wanted to make it one against the better social elements in their own Polish homeland. This plan, which was carried out on the fateful day of August 15, 1831, had been prepared by Lelcwel, Czynwiski, Franz Nakwashi, Ant.
Ostrowski, Zwierkowski, Szamieski, Kemprowiecki, Franz Dmochowski, Casimir Pulaski. A furious mob rallied

Raux Llurtig, Jpnkowski, Bukowski and others. Czywski said on this occasion with rare cynicism: "The people felt their "dignity and strength; and as the enemy withdrew near, he saw" "that his cause was compromised by the weakness of the government" "By the underhanded dealings of the powerful; his anger turned "about the traitors and spies who had long been "Arrested and not punished." Gzartorisky had to flee. under a Warsaw disguise; the aristocratic party in which included the noblest patriots, was driven out of the country see and the Patriotic Society played the role of the Paris Commune. But the Polish cause was soon finished.

We now understand why F.*. Kossuth, the the Hungarian dictator of 1818, was already working as a zealous agitator for Poland in 1831 and why the Masonic part of the emigration The Polish tion always and everywhere takes part in insurrections. Major Michalcwski was the leader of the uprising. Frankfurt am Main, April 3, 1833, with the Privatdozent do Gætlingue llauschcnplat. Bolim ligure dans l'insurrection vien-

(1) The around do la hrochuro quo we analyze proves that proposition by do Numerous extracts from Masonic newspapers and writers? This is a demonstration new to ajoulor to colio that P. Doschamps made in book I, "lmp. VI do eot work. (Publisher's note.)

Russian and Polish Freemasonry 699

noise of 1848, while waiting to join Kossuth in Hungary, then to embrace Islam. Mirolawski is with the insurgents Baden in 1848.

TV

How all the sons of the Polish revolution left from Paris. – The overthrow of Charles X in 1830 was caused by the in triges of Masonry and mainly of Marshal Maison, who belonged to the lodges and committed himself to his prince and in his most shameful treasonous service. All the chels of the movement, Laftite, Lafayette, Dupont de l'Eure, Schonen, Gé-rard, Odilon-Barrot, Mérilhou, Teste, Bérard, Manguin, Audry de Puyraveau, Labbey de Pompièrcs, Alexandre de Laborde, Dupin The eldest sons were Freemasons. It should never be forgotten that the High-ranking Masonic figures, the Templars, constantly pursued a political goal. F.-. Schwerman, in a speech delivered in Brussels on March 22, 1822, said: "We who almost "We all know the high ranks, we know very well that in some of them

"would never be permitted by governments." Likewise, at no dynasty was hated by the sect to the same extent as the Bourbons. Already the evil genius of Louis XVIII had been the F. Decazes (1)..

Thus, we understand why Louis-Philippe, the Bourbon king geois "who boasts of being one of us," as the Franks used to say The Freemasons of that time were brought to power by the lodges, and how the The constitutional monarchy was proclaimed the best of republics. bliques. Let's just recall one coincidence: it was in 1829 that the Pestel conspiracy was to erupt, including his premature death Alexander's hastened the explosion. What would have happened if he had for his preparation, for as long as he wanted!

By around 1820, secret societies had extended their network to throughout Europe and provoked movements in Portugal, in Spain, in Naples, in Romagna, in Piedmont, in France, in Belgium, Germany, and as far as the banks of the Nawa; the The route departed from Paris.

Polish Freemasonry, as we have seen, was a daughter of French Freemasonry: in 1781, in particular, when Count Ignace Potocki was elected Grand Master of the Polish Logos his, he drafted statutes similar to those of the Grand Orient of France, which were definitively adopted when André Mocra-

(1) Here the author of the brochure reproduces the evidence of Masonic activity Duke Decazes, more or less as we have given them in the work, book II, Chapter VIII, § 2, and he cites, to complete his demonstration on the action of the lodges against the Bourbon government, the very important passage of the Templar of Asweld which we ourselves have given, book II, chapter VII, g 5. (Editor's note.)

DOCUMENT K

700

Nowski definitively organized Polish Freemasonry in 1785. opposite the Grand Orients of France and England. Bous l'em- worse than Napoleon, the alliance became even closer; the Grand- The Orient of Poland was reconstituted in 1811, and on March 12 of the same In the same year, a concordat was reached between him and the Grand Orient. of France. That same year, a chapter for the higher degrees was established in the province of Posen directly by Paris.

From 1821 onwards especially, the maneuvers of the lodges, the societies semi-public entities that they constitute are the same in Poland and maintained a special agent in Paris, F.'. Léonard Ghodsko, who in 182b he published his History of the Polish Legions in Italy.

Immediately after July 1810, Emperor Nicholas formed the a plan to combat the revolution and proposed for this purpose a combined action by Austria and Prussia. These powers have not had not rejected its openings. Only one thing could appear to lyse this action, it is clear to occupy the llussic at home by means of a Polish uprising. French secret societies covered it up immediately Europe, through their emissaries, to plot new movements, particularly in Poland and Belgium gic. "It was," said Lucien de la Jloddo, who gave the details "More precisely on this subject, the means of diverting the gold.'ige which me- "was about to erupt from the work of the revolution. The great states "were on their guard and were able to stop these maneuvers; but "Two small peoples, the Belgians and the Poles, allowed themselves to be-

- to drag (1). »

It was a Masonic newspaper from Paris, La Tribune, that said even in 1833: "Regardless of the large wheels which con They all led from Paris to the capitals of the absolutist states, there is also

* an underground path, and when the appointed day breaks, we "We know where burning fuses are placed which "will shatter the thrones into dust."

In Warsaw, at the beginning of October 1830, a dispatch from Grabowski, Minister for Polish Affairs in St. Petersburg, at Prince Lubecki, the kingdom's finance minister, where he was the question of a campaign on the Rhine, of an eventual mobilization guardianship of the Polish army and financial support from the kingdom, an essentially confidential dispatch was made public, thanks to an inexcusable carelessness. Public opinion immediately went completely astray. lying in the direction of the secret society. The latter took advantage of this to prepare for the November explosion.

Let's be clear: four long months had passed. since the July Revolution, without public opinion having It was a turbulent summer. But in France, at the beginning of autumn, 1 the Freemason ministry, of which Laftite was the head, was located between

(1) History of Secret Societies from 1850 to 1818, Paris, 1850, p. 38.

Russian and Polish Freemasonry 701

The anvil and the hammer. He didn't want to abandon Belgium. and feared a war with the great powers. Despite all efforts, proclaim the principle of non-intervention abroad and the

Dear. That's when Poland exploded. We know the joy with which news was received in Paris. The Minister of war, F.*. Sébastiani, the same one who under Napoleon had commanded a Polish corps, knew the country well enough to knowing that it would take Russia several months to triumph over Poland, and afterwards, an occupying army of should still stay there for a long time. The war that Nicholas deserved The Franco affair was therefore postponed indefinitely. mine.

In Warsaw, however, a French army corps was expected. But the French cabinet continued to offer delaying tactics. to the demands of Poland's friends (1). Everything he did was to send, but without men, a tried and tested Carbonaro, the general Romorino in Poland, where he was immediately provided with a commandment (1)... Poor and noble people unjustly deceived and sacrificed to the most secret schemes of the sects! Which later clearly demonstrated the obligations undertaken towards the insurer Polish administration, "these are the aids that for so many years The July government included funds in the budget for emigrants. It was obviously not a simple matter of humanity, but the paying off a debt, a way to shut men up my obligations towards those we had committed to.

"The lodges distinguished themselves in this task, as the F.*. Rébald, History of the three major lodges of Freemasons in France, p. 151.

"This period of 1830 is memorable in the annals of France-Freemasonry. After the events of July 1830, the Polish people he sought to shake off the yoke that still oppressed him, but he succumbed in the struggle, and a great number of its heroic remnants took refuge lodges were established in France; Masonic lodges of all countries, those of France in particular welcomed them as brothers and striven to alleviate the plight of these valiant defenders of rights of the people. Most of them were initiated, and their participation The work of the lodges gave them new impetus. Grand Orient places no obstacle to these demonstrations of sympathy ques. »

(1) S. A few words concerning the order given to the corps of General Ramorino, Paris, 1832, p. 4 et seq.

(2) The German brochure sets out in detail this conduct of the government of Louis-Philippe, who is very well known in our country. See also Spazier, Getchichte de Aufstande» des polnischen Volket, 1830-1831, t. I, p. 268.

This passage suggests a reflection: if the Polish refugees had received the light for the first time in the French lodges As apprentices, how could they have given to their work a new impetus? For that, it was necessary that the most of the emigration had long belonged to the sect and read in the high ranks 1....

V

The universal, democratic, socialist republic of Freemasonry in Russia and Poland. – We have seen how the left wing of The Polish insurrection had, as early as 1831, turned to pure socialism. The same was true of emigration, and from 1832 to 1848, we find Poles involved in all the insurrectionary movements which agitating the various states of Europe. In 1848, the idea of the republic the United States of Europe, with three Romance, Germanic confederations Nic and Slavic, explodes. On March 25, 1848, a manifesto is published Title: General Federation of Free States, dedicated to the friends of people, by S. Gordaszewski (Paris, "general" bookstore of J. Bry). Time passes, the sect's ideas remain the same, and In 1867 we find, under this title: Universal Republican Alliance saddle, Polish department, an appeal to the Russians in which all the principles of the democratic, social republic, are exposed and where an appeal is made to the people to rise up against the Tsar's government. It is signed for the steering committee of the Polish republic, Bosak-ianke, General Bulewski (1). It was an echo of the Universal Republican Alliance, which was formed was killing in New York at that time, and from there, as from a safe place, radiated throughout Europe (see Book II, Chapter XIV, § 2). The Alliance Republican television is the diplomatic television of this army of the revolution. tion, the bulk of whose troops are supplied by this International which, in 1872, also moved its center to New York.

But Polish socialists can do nothing as long as Russia is their enemy. Hence the necessity of an alliance with the revolutionaries Russian officials. As early as 1822, Pestel had forged links between them which have never been broken.

Freemasonry particularly hates Russia (2), and it is in

(1) The full text of these documents is published in Mr. Goorgios's booklet Micbalow.

(2) Russia and Austria are the object of the particular liaison of Freemasonry. Here is what the monthly journal Der Freimuurer illustrierte Zeitschrift für wrote. die gemmle Freimanrcrei (Visuno 157G, n° 1< On all the earth, Austria and the Russia are the only two countries where the Mnçonnerio no poul pas deploying its full son activity, and these were precisely the countries that needed it most urgently. This is being printed under the watchful eye of the Austrian government, and they would l Say more! Why do Austria and Russia have a more pressing need for

c. social initiation?

Russian and Polish Freemasonry 703

It was in vain that Alexander II in 1857 allowed the reopening of the lodges and they were given complete freedom in their work.

The man behind this alliance was the Russian refugee Bakunin, who holds a high rank in Freemasonry.

Without going back over his life, an outline of which has already been given in the body of the work (book VI, chapter XIV, § 6), here is the summary of his policy, as he himself outlined it in a brochure work entitled: To my Russian and Polish friends (translated from Russian, Leipzig, Wolfg. Gerhard, 1802, in-8°)

"The current social relations in Russia cannot continue."
Two parties are involved: one wants reforms, the other revolution. radical solution; the first forgets that the entire governing organization The mental state has been a corpse ever since Peter I diverted Russia from its historical development. Russia must therefore fall like the Austro-Hungarian cheating and Turkey, but with this difference that the latter must wind disappear completely while, after the ghost of the Russian official, must appear the Russian people, that child who has centered in the Rascol against Czaropapism and official Russia.

Quite different is the party of the radical revolution. It too has its roots born into a segment of the Russian nobility, which, instead of weakening In contact with the West, it actually recovered. This contact awakened in them a new feeling: love for humanity; They were counted in the dozens under Alexander I; today they are hundreds today. In 1815, they demonstrated the purity of their views, but also their powerlessness. Among them, Pestel, that powerful genius,

The first recognized the need for a social revolution in Russia.

Peasant Russia is the only one that has life and to which the future appears yours.

The main means of bringing about social revolution in Russia, According to Bakunin, it is union with the Poles.

"We must," he said, "extend a hand to all Slavs, and above all others to the Poles, who are our closest neighbors. As long as we will hold the Poles under the yoke, a close alliance will reign between the three German governments, which are based in Berlin, Vienna and St. Petersburg. Once this solidarity was broken, the Germans did not form will no longer have bodies, and we will no longer have to take care of them in Petersburg. There are very few Russians left who deny the need to liberate "Already, Tsar Nicholas, anticipating a war with the Austro-Hungarians..."

cheating, had thought of making an appeal to all the Slavs of Austria and from Turkey, as well as to the Italians and the Hungarians, and to do the a czar of the Revolution instead of a czar of despotism.

45

II

704

DOCUMENT K

proclamations to the Slavs and Poles previously freed.
were already signed (???)... The Slavs, the Poles are necessary to ussaires. They themselves will help us when the time for Pan-Slavic battle comes.
visit will have come, when all Slavic land is claimed in the East Prussia, in Poznań, Silesia, Bukovina, Galicompany, Bohemia, throughout Austria and Turkey. That's us,

Russians, who must pave the way for the great chosen ones (1). »

Bakunin had already expressed the same ideas on the necessity of the union of Russian and Polish socialists, in a speech delivered in Paris on November 17, 1847, for the seventeenth the anniversary of the Polish revolution, and he had invoked the memories of Pestel, of Rylejef, of Muravief, of Bestucbef, and Rohoffski, who had been executed in St. Petersburg as the martyrs of this idea. He concluded:

"The reconciliation of Poland and Russia is an ongoing work" comparable and worthy of our complete dedication. It is the deli
The surrender of sixty million men is the deliverance of all the Slavic races groaning under the foreign yoke; this is finally destruction radical dismantling of all despotism in Europe.

The events which, since 1872, have demonstrated the power of socialism in Russia, show that the socialists did not
They wasted their time; but one other thing has also been quite remarkable,
This is because socialism has almost exclusively confined itself to the

to the former Polish kingdom, either within its former borders, or in its latest, most restricted form, have been completely exempt. The explanation is quite simple. The revolutionaries Russians were inside the country, while Polish socialists not only were they physically distant from Poland, but hated by her and by the best part of the emigration. This, Mr. Georgios Michalof aptly adds, is an indication tion which should benefit those who hold power.

(t) This last expression, borrowed from Masonic rituals and which designates Freemasonry as the revolutionary force par excellence, as indicated by Baku Nine belonged to the higher ranks. It will also have been noted, in the passage cited Above, this expression of love for humanity, quite strange under the pen of the Russian nihilist, but which is characteristic of Masonic doctrine 1

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Pages.

BOOK TWO

The Action of Secret Societies and Modern History {Continued}.

Chapter Three. – The Spread of Freemasonry
t in the 16th century and the philosophers.

1. The distinctive character of the 18th century.
2. Spread of Freemasonry in continental Europe. 2
3. Adoption Freemasonry. 9
4. Lodges and parliaments. 11
5. The philosophers and the encyclopedists. – Crush the in-fame. 15
6. Attacks by philosophers and encyclopedists against social order. 34
7. The first conspiracies against the monarchy ... 39

Chapter Four. – The Destruction of Christian Education yours, the first object of the Masonic conspiracy, and the abolition of the Society of Jesus.

1. Overall plan agreed upon in the lodges for abolition of the Jesuits. 43
2. Pombal and the destruction of the Jesuits in Portugal... 50
3. Choiseul and the abolition of the Jesuits in France. 56
4. The abolition of the Jesuits in Spain and Naples. D'Aranda and Tannucci. 66
5. New schools that Freemasonry wants to replace to Catholic schools. – The La Chalotais plan .. 73
6. The origins of state education. 81

06

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Pages.

Chapter Five. – The preparation for the explosion tionary.

1. The Revolution of 1789, the result of a conspiracy according to the Testimony of Louis Blanc. 87
2. Concentration of French Freemasonry under the great Mastery of the Duke of Orléans. 89
3. The lodges of the Illuminati of Saint-Martin .. 93

5. Wcishaupl and Illuminism.102
6. The Willieinsbad convent in 1782. .. 105
7. French Freemasonry penetrated by Illuminism.
– Mirabeau.♦.115
8. Cagliostro and Cabalistic Masonry.12.3
9. The war chest of the Revolution129

Chapter Six. – The Revolution in France and Europe. –
1789 to 1800.

1. The Revolution, the result of a conspiracy. – Testimony de Mirabeau, de Robison and d'Haugwitz.131
2. Regicide and the Masonic Convention of 1786. 134
3. Composition of the lodges in 1789. 137
4. Terror halted in the lodge of the United Friends 142
5. The Martinist lodges and the constitutionalists. 147
6. Philippe-Égalité.*.. 149
7. The European Revolution. 150
8. Masonic work in Germany and in the countries
North.155
9. Masonic work in Italy.161
10. The Battle of Valiny, Dumouriez and the Duke of Bruns wick.164
11. The assassination of Gustave III. . ..167
12. The triumphs of the revolutionary armies.169
13. The alleged dissolution of the Masonic order by

14. Freemasonry and Theophilanthropy.175

15. Bonaparte and the destruction of the temporal power of Pope.177

Chapter Seven. – The Napoleonic Dictatorship.

1. The failure of the Revolution in 1799. 189

2. Bonaparte's Masonic background and his role revolutionary.191

3. The development of Freemasonry under the emperor worse. 196

4. Attempts to subjugate the Church and the des Construction of the Pope's temporal power. 200

Pages.

5. The creation of the university monopoly..207

6. The Revolution on horseback and its accomplices in Europe.. 210

7. Napoleon abandoned by secret societies, 1809–1815. 215

8. The Return from the Island of Elba.219

Chapter Eight.—Secret Societies from 1815 to 1830. —The coal mining and the constitutional government.

1. The Tugendbund and the Holy Alliance.. • • 221

2. Freemasonry and the Constituent Government

tional.224

3. The Carbonari in Italy, Spain, and France.. 232

The Congress of Verona.242

5. The July Revolution.243

Chapter Nine. — The War Against the Papacy and the Republic universal, 1880 to 1852.

1. The July Government.253

2. Rivalry between the Haute-Vente and the Action Party.

The Italian uprisings.256

3. Diplomatic intrigues against the papacy.263

4. Mazzini and Young Europe.272

5. The Revolution of 1848. 280

6. The first assault on the temporal power of the popes. ^35

7. The Roman expedition of 1849. — Louis-Napoleon and Palmerston.300

8. Palmerston's plan for the reconstruction of the Eu-

Chapter Ten. – The Destruction of the Temporal Power of Pope and Italian unity, (1852 to 1870).

1. The establishment of a dictatorship in France.315
2. The Convention of Secret Societies in 1852. 321
- 3 The Crimean War.324
4. The Italian War. 330
5. Italian unity'.. 356
6. The Napoleonic idea or domestic policy of the empire. 381
7. The fall of Napoleon III and the capture of Rome, on the 20th September 1870. – Freemasonry, the dominant force in Italy. 388
8. The reign of Freemasonry in Italy.394

Chapter eleven. – Prussia and the Masonic empire.

1. The Masonic Genesis of Prussia... 397
2. German unity. ..400

708 TABLE OF CONTENTS

Pages,

5. Freemasonry, master of education in Germany.406

4. Masonic work in Austria.409

5. The Masonic Empire and the Kulturkampf.411

6. The triumph of the Jews at the Congress of Berlin.415

7. A Masonic threat.417

Chapter Twelve. – The Republic of 1870 and the War in Christian teaching.

1. How the work of the Revolution was compromised by the elections of February 8, 1871.419

2. Freemasonry and the Commune.421

3. The failure of the monarchical restoration . . . * . . . 425

4. The Gambetti dictatorship and the elections of 1876–1877. 436

5. Freemasonry in power. 443

6. The radical program and Masonic doctrine . . 463

7. The League of Education. 469

8. The Ferry Laws.476

9. Freemasonry and Women.484

10. Freemasonry and the expulsion of religious figures .. 487

Chapter Thirteen. – Freemasonry in Belgium.

1. The universal war against Christian teaching, work of Freemasonry.489

"

3. The war on Christian teaching.505

4. Freemasonry and Charity. 517

5. The Masonic triumph and the outrage against the Papacy . . 518'

Chapter Fourteen. – The Universal Republic, the International nationalism and socialism.

1. The latest development of the human idea 519

2. The Universal Republic.521

3. The student congress in Liège, in 1865. 525

4. Socialism and Freemasonry.535

*

5. The founding of the international association of tra-vagrants. – Karl Marx and Mazzini.510

6. The doctrines of the International and those of Freemasonry nerie .513

7. The Paris Commune and its accomplices.555

8. The current situation of the International.566

Chapter fifteen. – Russian Nihilism.

1. The crimes and program of Nihilism. 571

2. The Organization of Nihilism.579

TABLE OF CONTENTS

709

Pages.

3. The Origins of Nihilism /. 580

4. Relations of Nihilism with Secret Societies

the West. 588

Conclusion.597

Appendices. – Document A. An episode in the spread of Masonic principles in the 18th century*

Austrian Netherlands.603

Document B. The laws of the Revolution on education public education.606

Document C. Secret Societies and the Assassination of

Gustav III.638

Document D. Napoleon I"and Freemasonry. 651

Document E. Italian unity and the conspiracy

Masonic. • . . . •.655

Document F. The religious policy of the empire .. 658

Document G. The role of Freemasonry in

The revolutions in Spain and Portugal 668

Document H. Relations of Mr. Bismarck with the socialists. 681

Document I. The enlightened Montgelas and the sign

Document J. Thiers's relations with Gambetta and Rochefort in 1871. 685

Document K. Freemasonry in Russia and in Poland. – The 1830 uprising and the revolution of July. – The Origins of Nihilism. 687

French

English

Full text of " Pere N. Deschamps Les Societes Secretes Et La Societe Tome 3 "

See other formats

IHE

SECRET SOCIETIES

THE COMPANY

OR

PHILOSOPHY OF CONTEMPORARY HISTORY
BY N. DESCHAMPS

VOLUME THREE

NOTES AND DOCUMENTS

COLLECTED

Mr. Claudio Jannet

AVIGNON

SEGUIN BROTHERS

PRINTERS-PUBLISHERS
13 – rue Bouquerie – 13

PARIS

ÜUDIN BROTHERS

PUBLISHERS

51 – rue Bonaparte – 51

<http://www.liberius.net>

© Saint Libère Library 2008.

Any reproduction for non-commercial purposes is permitted

THE

SECRET SOCIETIES

AND

THE COMPANY

AVIGNON.

IMPRIMEUR SEGUN KIKUES.

PREFACE TO VOLUME THREE

The notes and documents that we are publishing today, form the complement to the work of Father Deschamps.

Faithful to his thinking, as much as it was within us, we have not ceased to collect confessions and testimonies emanating from the sources these most diverse, which, in recent years, have come to confirm his assessments and his accounts.

The Memoirs of Prince Metternich, the revelations so curious—Mr. Diamilla Muller's comments on the relations of Victor Emmanuel with Mazzini and Napoleon III are, to name just two examples, sources of information, that we can no longer neglecting, at the risk of reducing history to the reproduction of official journals.

We also followed, day by day, the traces of the part taken by Freemasonry in the great struggle engaged against the Church in Spain, in Italy, in Belgium and especially in our France. The place it ostensibly holds in the government at the beginning of the Third Republic, the penetration of all the forms of social life in which she engages before our eyes, do not confirm that too many of the deductions drawn by Father Deschamps, with such insight, from the analysis of internal principles of the sect.

However, the extent of its action and its methods vary depending on the country. The particular temperament of the peoples changes are made to it, which the impartial observer must to note. Therefore, we have devoted a series in this volume from chapters to secret societies in England and the United States, in Canada, Ireland, Brazil and the republics of South America. We also studied them in the events Eastern movements. Finally, we have grasped their manifestations extremes in the recent attacks by the Anarchists.

PRAYER

We repeat once again, see exclusively the Freemason* to be mistaken in the events of modern history would be beyond to draw the legitimate conclusions of these studies,* the life of peoples is too complex for everything to be reduced to a single cause unique; but the underground work of secret societies has not no less was, at certain times, such an important factor so much so in the great assault waged against the Church, that one cannot make of it abstraction.

And this is not simply a matter of purely subjective appreciation historical.

Good people, who, in order not to break with tradition outdated party structures or old ways of thinking, would persist in ignoring this very important element in the social life of this century, would voluntarily place themselves in their powerlessness to react effectively against the evil, of which they the effects are regrettable.

The authority of the work "Secret Societies and Society" is today consecrated, we might say, by the highest approaches the positions he obtained in the episcopate and in the political world tick. We will judge for ourselves by reading some of the letters that Their Excellencies the bishops deigned to address us on the occasion of his second edition.

But we were particularly encouraged to continue these works through the insistence of His Holiness Leo XIII, since the beginning of his glorious pontificate, has put to note to the princes the grave danger that sects pose to the civil society, and to warn the people of hidden agendas hidden beneath the specious formulas of freedom and emancipation. Addressing, in February 1882, the preachers of the station of Lent, Leo XIII focused on the general movement of This serious judgment, which, it seems to us, confirms a strikingly the general data of the Father's work Deschamps:

III

Today, note this well, incredulity and corruption, which are the primary sources of all civil and moral disorder, do not derive solely element of ignorance and the gratification of passions, but truly they are rather the The result of this relentless and ferocious war, which the sects have declared to Jesus Christ and his Church, with the unholy aim of annihilating and destroying it, if It was possible. Today, in fact, it is through a premeditated design, with a firm resolve and arrested and by all sorts of means that one attacks the truths of the faith, which are propagated more criminal doctrines and that one foments the baser appetites.

These words cannot be pondered too deeply. They do justice to the mistake of those who attribute the critical situation of society contemporary exclusively to the abuses of the old regime in its decline, due to culpable failings or political errors of certain princes.

There is something else at the root of this immense evil which, like a A pestilential cloud envelops the Christian world at this very hour. path.

The systematic action of the sects has exasperated all the sufferers* these; she prevented all remedies; she gathered in one fell swoop-that formidable thing, all the passions and all the desires^ that original sin incessantly excites humanity fall.

IV

PBÉFÂGE

These sects are themselves instruments of a more powerful action deep.

An illustrious religious figure, Dom Guéranger, in his book Le Natu Realism in history has maintained the great Christian tradition yours, by showing the predominant role that the element the supernatural power of divine grace had in the constitution of the Christian society and by putting in the background, – without for this denies its scope – the political and social causes which had contributed to this prodigious renewal of the world.

Similarly, the other side of the story, the one where the sequel takes place attacks against the Church and the chain of heresies remain misunderstood and unintelligible, if we do not place in the foreground the ins- inner aspiration that modern sects, like ancient ones, they receive from the father of all lies, from the one who was a murderer from the very beginning.

No, the hatreds of Freemasonry are not purely human, and, after the new picture that we are going to draw of it, we will repeat with even more conviction the luminous word of Joseph de Maistre: The Revolution is satanic /

Liberalism, which eliminates the influence of this from its calculations hidden engine, is the political expression of rationalism^ and its his inability to control events is a consequence of his false conception of the whole of human affairs.

We will not dwell further on these considerations: they will find at the beginning of this volume a masterful development in the letter that Bishop Gay, the worthy colleague, was kind enough to send us builder of the great Cardinal of Poitiers.

Paris, March 1883.

LETTER ON FREEMASONRY

By Bishop FAVA, Bishop of Grenoble

To the editors of the Catholic Review of Institutions and Law on the occasion of the book by P. Pesohamps and U. Claudio Jannet (1)

MBÂSIBURS,

Several times, you have kindly asked me to...
to send, for your excellent Review, of which my diocese is an honor, to respond to your invitation, such an opportunity, that it is It's impossible to keep you waiting any longer.

Mr. Claudio Jannet, your learned friend, and also mine, had Pat* intention to send me Father Deschamps' work on the So-secret societies, to which U. aLionté an introduction and a complement I feel it is my duty to express my gratitude to her.
on occasion, and I believed that nowhere was my reply to her gracious letter
The sending address would be best placed in your Review. I am persuaded, gentlemen, that upon his return from America, our excellent My friend will be happy to see that in his absence we have done something his memory.

I will speak here about the three fundamental ideas that were suggested to me.
Read either the introduction or the work itself:

"Freemasonry is the true mother of the Revolution, which" has been stirring up the world for one hundred and fifty years;

2® Freemasonry has been able to conceal its actions, by commanding the secret to its followers;

3® Freemasonry claims to become the schoolteacher

(1) Bishop Fava has written two letters about this work, (/ui under a
The Syatbetic form constituted a very complete study on the work of Freemasonry.
We would have liked to reproduce them here in their entirety; but they form a bro-propaganda book, which is on sale at the bookstore of the Bibliographical Society, k Paris (195, Boulevard SuGerman). We must therefore publish what These pages, which have been and remain for us the most precious encouragement.

VI LETTER FROM MONSIGNOR FAVA

of humanity and to substitute, on this quality, for the Church ca^ Catholic.

9

This is the doctrine that Freemasonry undertakes to teach.
and that she teaches, as much as she can, and more and more, at the ehfapt, to youth, to middle age, to old age, to the rich, to poor people, to all of humanity. It is to fulfill this mission the idea that she wants to ruin the Catholic Church, that she is closing the economies the congregationalists, expelled the Jesuits, destroyed their colleges, dis perse the unrecognized congregations, pending her decision-^ persecutes the others and that it reaches the clergy, the bishops and the Supreme Pontiff.

It is through this complete organization, as we were told earlier the F.*. Goblet d'Aviôla, that Freemasonry is in a state of rioa- User with his great enemy: the Church of Rome.

Since Freemasonry regards the Church of Home as a enemy, if Freemasonry the pcul, it will reduce this enemy to Silence, obviously; and Christianity, he hopes, will have lived.

Let no one accuse us of exaggeration; here is how it is expressed master himself, one of the sect's leaders, always in agreement with the Doctor of all lodges: "Our ultimate goal is that of Voltaire" and so the French Revolution, the annihilation forever of Gallicism and the child of the Christian idea, which, remaining standing on The ruins of Rome, that would be their perpetuation later on.

Such is the ideology of Freemasonry and secret societies crests.

Let us conclude by saying that this idea, for fifty years on- everything was ardently promoted by the lodges; she penetrated into modern philosophy, which draws inspiration from it, in the sciences and the arts; it spread among the people and especially among the class working class in large cities.

The three or four million Freemasons, who are spread dues in the world, belong to the bourgeoisie, for the most part Part. Well! These are the gentlemen who adopted the program which we have spoken of: 1. "Destroy all government; 2. all religion; 3* all property.

We understand that they consent to the destruction of the government. the Church and the Church which hinder them; but the tour of the property will come. How can these good bourgeois not see that the The priest is there to say: You shall neither take nor withhold the property of others. dras d ton escient; the magistrates to condemn the thieves to the Prison; and the army to stop the looting? – They're leaving the sect to overturn the walls behind which property is sheltered, and Then, soon, they will be surprised that it is being questioned and that...

LETTER FROM MONSIGNOR FâVA

VII

To truthfully apply this maxim: We are the children of our works.

But what can be done, one might ask?

What would need to be done, if it weren't so late—and it's never but too much to do right — that would be to leave the Catholic Church to freely fulfill its mission; to ensure respect for the magic to cultivate and to honor the soldier, by providing him with the means to maintain one's faith and religious principles.

What should be done is to close the lodges and re- to know that the Bavarian Weishaupt caused France more than evil, through its impious doctrines, that the German armies with their cannons.

Here is some practical advice to give your readers, gentlemen, It is to read the work of Father Deschamps and Mr. Claudio Jannet. This work will prove to them that Freemasonry is destructive:

1* Of any religion;

2* Of all morality;

From the family:

4° From civil and political society;

5* Of the property.

The second book was admirably completed by Mr. Claudio Jannet. He proves abundantly how right F,* was. Malapert, when he said: "In the 18th century, Freemasonry was so widespread throughout the world that one could say that nothing was done since that time without his consent.

Grenoble, July 2, 1880.

i AMAND-JOSEPH,
Bishop of Grenoble.

LETTER FROM Bishop Sébaux

Bishop of Angoulême

To Mr. Claudio JA^NET

Aiigoillême, January 2, 1882.

Sir,

First of all, please accept my thanks for referral that you were kind enough to give me of your fine work on ScCHtcs Companies.

But these thanks go further. Father's research. Doschamps, the documents he had gathered and arranged Yours are for us and for the cause of the Church of the most Seriously interesting. I had already read these lovely volumes in an edition previous, and from today I can tell you my thoughts on it.

Thanks to already valuable works, we knew the so secret societies with various names; they had not been able to shroud themselves in darkness so thick (their organization, their mind and their Rostassout's designs in a mysterious plot. The writers who Those who had revealed them had well deserved the Church's, by justifying them the condemnations issued by the Sovereign Pontiffs and in pre-protecting the faithful against deadly training. But the facts and authentic texts cited by you in such a high name They conclude a salutary demonstration in its sadness. There is no there is more reason to doubt that secret societies are essentially enemies of the Church and of social order, and that their rites, sometimes childish and sometimes sacrilegious, do not cover the most sinister of breasts.

Among the members of these societies, we know that there are some who inexperience, youth, lack of discretion, or scruples religious figures whose secrets 011 conceals; who do not see in them than philanthropic associations, useful to their interests or to help them in their distress; who join them through persuasion or by fashion, and which is deemed prudent to leave at the entrance, where they They maintain their illusions. They are no less than lethal recruits. to whom we will know how to appeal in times of struggle, by reminding them their daring commitments.

LETTER FROM MGR SÉBAUX

IX

We also know that in the past, and in certain regions, these societies^ In order to gain acceptance and establish themselves, they presented themselves under the harmless forms; that they initially seduced the imprudent, friends of novelties, who would not, however, have lent themselves to freedom of faith and that even religious convictions were surrounded displays of apparent respect. The innermost thought remained, and one She understood that one day she would be the dominant thought.

It is claimed that several companies have abandoned their bizarre ceremonial, probably judging it to be outdated and now useless: It is possible; and we understand the boldness inspired by the success and the hope of a future triumph.

But whether or not they have abandoned the rites of their initiation successive tions; that from time to time, they even emerge shadows, everything demonstrates to us that with regard to the Church, the Holy-Seat of the clergy, of the religious state, of Christian teaching, the plans have remained the same, and may they continue with a satanic agreement. Recent events have provided us with one new evidence

So you have rendered a genuine service, sir, by gathering and presenting documents to serious men equally capable, by their sheer number, of dispelling their power. all doubts. For Christians who absolutely accept the di-the salutary governance of the Church, the repeated and formal acts of the Holy-Sieve resolve the question: Homa locuia est^ causa finita est. Si some, for themselves, or with a view to giving advice, want to gain more insight, less extensive works than the Yours may suffice. But there are more demanding minds or Those who are more prepared should read your two volumes.

For us, and for all those who are called upon to preserve the souls or to remove them from the wrong path, to justify the decisions of the Popes and to subdue their minds, to defend the order As a Christian and social work, your book is of paramount importance, and is, in a way, essential to any serious library. We do not Let us not condemn without knowing; but from now on we will know better Again, the sects themselves are revealing their secrets to us.

I will not stop at simply reinforcing these considerations with texts Your book is there, and that's all that's needed.

I therefore add my vote to those you have received.

I beg you, sir, to accept the expression of my sincere regards. respectful demotion.

f AL,

Bishop of Angoulême.

Bishop of Anthedon, Vicar Capitular of Poitiers.

4 Mr. Claudio Jannet

Sir,

Poitiers, February 2, 1881

I took longer than I would have liked to thank you.
I am very pleased with your two fine volumes on Secret Societies and Society.
You were aware of the reasons for this delay, and you excused it.

Today I was able to read part of it and browse through it in its entirety.
I consider it my duty to third your important work to congratulate you loudly and even publicly, if you judge Get the right thing.

By republishing, after having skillfully done it yourself and learnedly revised and completed, the already valuable work of R.
P. Deschamps, you have given back to the Church, to France, to Europe,
I will be able to tell the whole world, a first-rate service.

To discuss, as you have just done, the actions of companies secret societies, and particularly those of Freemasonry, concerning the socontemporary society, that's putting your finger on the wound. Alas!
Is it just a sore? Isn't it rather leprosy, or something?
an even more serious internal evil, and are we not reduced to to say of the modern social body what God said of his people in the time of Isaiah: As a result of the terrible evil which, despite so many laws, warnings, and pardons—he neither knew how nor wanted to defend himself.
dre, "from the soles of his feet to the top of his head there is "Nothing healthy left in him (1)"?

You make the day (a day all the more frightening because it has more of brilliance and strength) upon these living and active darknesses, that So many fascinated souls prefer the light, even claiming that they are the true, the unique, the universal light. You tell us Refer to the living sources of the Revolution, that is to say, to the principle .of this movement of pride, impiety and hatred which, as

(1)IaBi. J, 6.

LETTER FROM MONSIGNOR GAY

never before has it seized the civilized world and swept it away to supreme ruin. You're pushing me to all extremes. You're showing us the great opening of what Scripture calls "the pit of the abyss"* adding that smoke was escaping from it as from a furnace toothy, but so thick that it obscures the sun and the air: fertile smoke in its own way, for in this night where it... dives, she gives birth to some unknown mysterious beings who, having They have the appearance of men, yet they are true animals, redubious, hostile, and very powerful enough to do harm, especially since they form an army and obey a sovereign leader, hidden in bottom of the abyss, from where he inspires and guides everything.

The Book of Revelation gives the name of this odious monarch, whom it condemns. simultaneously declares himself to be a fallen angel. She calls him "the Ex-terminator," which clearly indicates that he lacks genius and passion. and of such force as to devastate and destroy (1). It is he who, according to the testimony of Saint Paul, holds the empire of death and governs it (2). This is the one Jesus Christ was finally saying to the rebellious Jews:

"Your father is the devil, and you want to accomplish, in killing me, the desires of your father, who has been a homicide since the beginning (3).

We cannot read your exposition of the doctrines, the designs, of the organization, history, and hidden or public influence of Freemasonry, without seeing, and even before the obvious, that, under its various names, with its multiple, changeable forms and despite its divisions and internal struggles, this execrable and highly criminal such a society is merely the body constituted by anti-Christianity and the infernal counterfeit of this holy Catholic Church, of which Jesus Christ is the invisible leader and the Pope the visible leader. Furthermore Several highly esteemed authors had begun to collect them. evidence; gathered by you into a bundle and supported by documents Whether unknown or recent, they impose on the mind a conviction that leaves no room for the slightest doubt.

It is therefore both formulated and established there; it is there, alive. and operating with superhuman weapons, a formidable activity, Alas! And a prodigious success, this old "mystery of iniquity" which, in the time of Saint Paul, already had its place and its action in the world, and whose ultimate fruit and sovereign agent must be "the man of sin, the son of perdition," the Antichrist, the great

(1) And saw putoam Abyssi; and asceadit fumus putei sicut famus fornacis magna, et obscuratus est sol et aer de fumo putei. Et de fumo putei exierunt locustae in terram.....Et dolum est ois ut cruciarent. Et similitudines locustarum similes equis paratis in proelium.... et facies earum tanquam facies hominum. Et babe-bant super se regem angelutn abyssi, cui nomen bebraice Abaddon, grace autem Apollyon, Latin babens nomen Exterminans. Apocal.^IX, 2, 7, 11.

(2) Ad. ffebr., II, 14.

(3) Joanii., VIII, 4i.

XII

LETTER FROM MONSIGNOR GAY

possessed and Satan's master craftsman (1). He will be, continues TApô-three, the opposition, the objection, the contradiction personified^ which adversatur. In his pride and audacity, he will rise up against everything that bears the name of God and is honored as such, extollitur suprà omne quod dicilur Deus aut quoi colitur, i.e.
that he will rebel against the adorable Trinity, the one God, created author and lord of all things; against Christ, the eternal son of the Father, and one God with him; against all authority, whether divine, be human; against all grace and natural paternity; against all power exercised in the name of the Most High: priestly power, political, civil or domestic. He will rebel against any law, in as long as the law presents itself as being based on a higher right to man and dominating his will; finally, rising above
He will trample everything and people underfoot, in the name of humankind, of which he will proclaim himself king, the word and even the God, for that is where he will go, and it is inevitable that he will go there. Saint Paul announces it in explicit terms: "This monster will lay his seat in the temple of God, he writes, making himself the center and master of all religion as of all power, and the object of the only cult that, under his reign, will be legally permitted, Ua ut in Umplo Dei sedeat oslendens se tanquam sü Deus (2). *

And here, looking at the Ktat that we call modern, still that it be precisely the ancient state, the pagan state, that of the old monarchies of the East and the Caesars of Rome, the State as the Freemasonry dreams of it and wants it, as it began and having succeeded in establishing it in the world, the State that dominates everything, cer and absorbs everything, can do everything, and intends to do so without control, being the nation itself and this sovereign people "who have no need," says Rousseau, to be right in order to validate his actions (.1) », – it is necessary to re- to know and confess that the prophecy is already becoming history.

Freemasonry is the field that will produce this abominable fruit.

of this deified tyrant, reigning on behalf of Hell and inau managing the state here below. She prepares everything for the advent and the triumph of the Antichrist; click smooths the paths for him, reconciles him she wins the minds of men in advance and gains their sympathy; she He creates his resources and trains his organism in every country political; she popularizes its principles and formulates its dogma me; she propagates her morality, which, starting from lies, leads to perversion; it is the basis of his teaching and ensures its monopoly; it recruits its army; it provides for it to have its scientific, literary, and artistic apparatus; it builds its theatres

(1) Nisi Tenorit discossio primum et revelalu» fuedt homo peccati, fllias perdi-tionie... Nam inysterium jam oporallir iniquitatis. (lU ad Thessaloe. II, .1 et seq.)

(2) IbM.

(3) Rousseau had borrowed this maxim from Minister Jurieu, as one can see it in cb. .59th of the V* warning of Bossuet to the Protestants.

LETTER BS MONSBiaNEUR GaT

Ein

very; she sets up her platforms for him; she preludes her legislation and She invents his language; she keeps her press all ready; finally, in building her throne, which she knows will one day be an altar, Above all, she shapes his people, this blinded, degraded people.
and the servile nature it takes for him to be acclaimed, followed and obeyed.

Father Deschamps writes, at the beginning of his book, that he is like the philosophy of contemporary history; this title is all too much justified. As it is impossible to understand the work and the* took secret societies without understanding the mystery of Jesus* Christ, who is the divine foundation of all things (1), the great question of the centuries, the sign posed to the contradiction (2) and the cause principal, albeit indirect, of the disputes and wars that fill history; likewise, if one ignores the mystery of these harmful societies, one cannot explain what, since the pretense Reform, but especially since the first half of the last last century, took place in France and around the world and is being fulfilled still before our eyes. In your introduction you have already... watch.

Ah, how wise the Holy See was, and has continued to be so! that he has shown himself and continues to show himself faithful to his mission of pa universal charity and charity, when, since 1738, through the bou-up to Pius IX and Leo XIII, he relentlessly denounced to the authorities rains and to the peoples these infamous societies as the great peril of our time and a diabolical power that threatens everything invade with the firm intention of destroying everything that holds society together standing. Alas! It has been the same with the vicars of Christ as with Christ himself, who said: "The judgment," that is to say, what will serve as his thesis me and for too many will make it so formidable, "the

 "The judgment is that light has come into the world," this light which is my word and the testimony I bear to the truth*
 "And men have loved darkness rather than light," because their works were evil (4). We have not listened to the Holy See; they scorned and ridiculed not only its warnings and alarms, but also sentences of excommunication cation with which he struck the heads, members and perpetrators of these shadowy associations; kings and peoples continued to march dear in their ways, carrying, without always being conscious of it This, the shameful yoke imposed by the lodges. Everyone knows what, by Next, they became kings; we are learning what becomes of the people.

For us, sir, who has long been aware of the facts and gestures of Freemasonry, we eagerly hope that your

(1) Omida in ipso constant. Goloss. 1.17.

(2) Positus est hic in signum eut' eontradieetur. Lake. II, 34,

(3) GootÛtaÛo In eminenii, 4 Kalend. Mayi.

(4) Joann. III, 19.

XIV

LETTER FROM MONSIGNOR GAY

May this book spread throughout France and Europe, may it be read and pondered upon? by mature men, by young men, by all those who their position puts or may soon put them in a position to exercise at around them a political or social influence. Our conviction is formed: either society, disillusioned and weary to the point of no longer more power, will break these impure and tyrannical chains of the Freemasonry, which increasingly surrounds and enslaves him; or Well, plunged from abyss to abyss, she will return to barbarism. by way of slavery. But if God allows her to escape and that, above all (a necessary thing), she wants to be saved, it will only be so through a frankly Christian power, very much in loyally united to the Holy See and valiant to the point of heroism; for to personally brave a death decreed by thousands of voices having thousands of arms at their service to carry out the sentence.

In any case, these will remain blessed by both God and men.
who, like you, sir, will have used everything they have received in talent and strength, all that they acquired in knowledge and of authority, to serve and defend the holy cause of truth, which is that of God, of the Church, and of souls.

Please accept the expression of affectionate feelings.
With the utmost respect, I am your humble and devoted servant.
author in NSJC

Charles

Bishop of Anthedon, Yicaire-capit. of the diocese of Poitiers.

BOOK THREE

WjW^H secret societies

AND E% REWOEVTI0IV VIVlWERSEELiE

NOTES AND DOCUMENTS

to follow up on the work of Father Desohams

c Aojourâ'huit rymarqaaz-le bien, riacrédnlité et corruption, which is the primary source of everything Civil and moral disorder, do not derive solely from ignorance and the gratification of passions, but In reality, they are more the product of this war.
implacable and ferocious that the sects declared to Je-to the Church and its Church, for the impious purpose of Tax* to annihilate and destroy it, if that were possible. Today today. Indeed, it is by a premeditated destein^ with a firm and determined resolution, and by all kinds of means, that the truths of the Faith are attacked, that the most criminal doctrines are propagated and that fomented the basest appetites.

(Words of His Holiness Leo XIII) preachers of Lent in Rome, the

PRELIMINARY CHAPTER

SPECIAL CHARACTERISTICS MASONRY ACCORDING TO THE TIMES AND THE COUNTRIES

SI. – The unity of the purpose of Freemasonry and the diversity OF ITS mode of action

Father Deschamps' work highlighted with what per Despite its severity, Freemasonry pursues the same goal everywhere:
namely the constitution of the company on a purely human basis Maine. Liberalism, State Caesarism, the Commune and the Nihilism—these are the three stages she goes through, carried away by the logic of the principle of lying posited at its source. His hatred has as its main object the true Church, which is the great obstacle key to the realization of these designs, and with it the institutions social structures that serve as an external defense of religion. It is at then tackles all religious denominations which, admitting Revelation retains a part of the truth. This unity of the Freemasonry, whose three fundamental degrees are the expression sion, is revealed by the identity of the attack methods, the measures legislative changes it inspires, currents of opinion it has shaped to create.

However, it could only be a grim counterfeit.
fifty of the divine unity of the Church. Therefore, it is imperfect.
and is it never fully realized? Kon only His doctrines are always contradictory, like error and

III 1

2. SPECIAL CHARACTERISTICS OF MASONRY

the lie; but also the Masonic sects, according to the Time and countries obey two distinct trends, although not absolutely opposed: some would like to maintain a gold social and material benefits, from which their members reap the advantages;
They direct their attacks only against the Catholic Church and the dynasties who, faithful to their mission, are the auxiliaries of the their active instruments or at least their accomplices by an inculpable difference between good and evil: they would accelerate even the Church, if it could be reduced to the role of a simple organ police force for the people and renounce fighting the vines. These are the human beings in revolt against Jesus Christ.

But this measure in evil is not a position that these sects can maintain their power indefinitely. A vengeful logic. This pushes more advanced sects behind them, recruiting both the majority among the disinherited of the social order and those governed by distinguished minds at times, than by destructive fanaticism alone. This new layer of the Masonic army accepts always, as a first step in clearing the land, the destruction of the Catholic Church, which began with the first ones, but it pushes further the hatred against the work of the Creator God and claims to destroy the entire natural order of societies, civil government, Property, family. The International, the democratic movement. Socialism and Nihilism currently represent this fraction of the army of the sects: it would be in antagonism with the Masonry properly speaking; but the attentive observer perceives the ties that prevent them from dividing, at least as long as the aim is to fight the Church.

The action of Freemasonry in different countries is naturally really influenced by the circumstances specific to each people. And in every era, man is a complex being and life social development presents a very significant complication. In the development of a historical situation, as in the formation of the moral state of a soul, multiple causes come together to mingle their influence to the action of dominant causes, and it is necessary to know how to relate to know each other. We don't hesitate to say so. very high up: it would be a serious exaggeration to see everywhere and exclusively the actions of secret societies. The truth is that this action is one of the important factors in the events and that at certain times this factor was predominant.

CATHOLIC AND PROTESTANT COUNTRIES 3

We will clarify our thoughts with two factual considerations:

The prosperity and social stability of Protestant countries compared to the decadence of Catholic countries is for our contemporary issues a major source of scandal: we will explain in a moment how the action of the sects must have moved so close exclusively on these latter countries; but we must also consider account of a milk of another order: from the 16th century onwards the large trade routes having diverted from the Mediterranean basin Spain, Italy, and southern Germany were hit. of relative inferiority, while England, Holland"

Perity in this economic situation.

Currently, in France and in parts of Europe, the irreligious education given to youth for a century and the The impious press has done its work: a considerable fraction of the nation is imbued with false ideas and prejudices, which correspond They lay too well the secret desires of passions not to to spread like wildfire. Many people have all the ideas of Freemasonry before being affiliated with its lodges. That is Obviously, there's a display of things there, which must be taken into account for the practical solution to certain government issues. But It is nonetheless true that this situation is the result of the propaganda of secret societies in the 18th century and in the first half of it. Even now, Masonic action nique gives all these bad elements a different direction a precise statement regarding the harm they would not have suffered if they were delivered to themselves; it prevents the healing action exerted cons particularly on society through the Church, and above all it acts powerfully within the sphere of international relations.

§ 2.—Why Freemasonry has a

LESS REVOLUTIONARY CHARACTER IN PROTESTANT COUNTRIES
AS LONG AS IN CATHOLIC COUNTRIES.

A notable difference exists between exclusively pro-testing countries like England, the United States, and the Scandinavian States naves on the one hand, and on the other the purely Catholic countries thus that those where the Church has, coincide with the confessions pro-testing, a constitutional position, like Germany of North, Switzerland, Holland.

4 GAAACIÛIIES PARIIÇULIERS DE LA MAÇONNERIE

In the first ranks, Freemasonry is currently viewed having largely lost its anti-religious character and antisocial. The political institutions there exhibit stability which is their strength, and the Church in fact enjoys a freedom there that We are reduced to envy: Some conclude from this contrast that Catholicism is precisely the source of political conflicts social and cultural issues that are devastating France, Italy, Spain, the Belgium, South America. This is the thesis put forward by Mr. de Laveleye, in a pamphlet that the sect had translated into eleven languages. We do not have to refute it here.

Sincere Catholics, but imbued with liberalism, pre and the intensification of their antisocial character in these countries have primarily political causes, and stem from vices governments. They are thus promoted, in defiance of the signs Church statements, to look at the overthrow of governments legitimately established, as a good thing; moreover they fa unconsciously accept the opinion of our opponents, admitting both as a proven fact that Catholic countries have been and are still the most poorly governed, with the complicity of the clergy, until they felt the benefits of movement from 1789.

When we studied the subsequent actions of secret societies and Knowing their generating principle explains this contrast easily.

The largest faction of Freemasonry, the one that has which has hitherto held the preponderance, continues almost exclusively the destruction of Christianity. This is the adorable person of The incarnate Word, which is the very object of his hatred; for, not to open it Let us not forget, Freemasonry, like Devolution, is essential satanic ment.

However, Christianity is not found in its complete, living and expansive, as in the Catholic Church. Protestantism, poorly despite all the natural and supernatural virtues, even though few It is possible to have a good number of baptized and well-intentioned Protestants. is merely a Christianity in a state of decay. Of itself, by virtue of the principle of free inquiry, it gradually disintegrates.

Catholic Countries RI' Protestant Countries 5

little; the less it is opposed externally, the more this result is achieved. hundred, and, two centuries after Bossuet's Warnings, a A large number of Protestant pastors no longer believe in divinity. The Community of Black Lord Jesus Christ. Protestantism and the Freemasonry thus moves towards one another, without this the latter needs to act. Moreover, the savage hatred against the Papacy, incited by the apostates, authors of the Rôformation, the fact that a large number of Protestants are acting in good faith complicit in all the attacks directed against the Catholic Church lique. The governments of these countries, particularly those of the Prussia and England, under this impetus, too often propagated the Revolution they were fighting in Catholic countries. were at home. It's hardly been since the beginning of this century the most enlightened men of the Franchise set of these pre*-judged.

Protestant countries should therefore not be affected by the flood destructive, that when, the Catholic Church having lost its position sects to attack the natural social order. The progress of social-democrats in Germany, internationalists in Switzerland and in Denmark, radicals in England, nihilists in Russia, are a first symptom of this barely sketched evolution Again.

This demonstration, to which reasoning leads us, is corroborated by positive statements made in the boxes.

Thirty years ago, a very important Masonic journal said knows that Protestantism was half of Freemasonry. (Book I, Chapter II, paragraph 14.)

In 1874, Brother Conrard, Worshipful Master of a lodge, wrote in the Leipzig Bauhütte;

As for Protestantism, which has remained lamentably confined within the swamp of scrofula to the letter of a book, and mistletoe, deprived of a discipline" Pliny, a living force pushing forward the work of the mind, broke and fragmented into Confessional parties without power, they no longer need to be taken into account except as of a statistical section. Only the organization, so strongly coherent Catholicism is still an active factor, capable of stopping by a powerful barrier the formation of limonies in view of humanity independent.

"• Here is CO that the wicked, concerned about their oaths, did not san't

6. DISTINCTIVE CHARACTERISTICS OF MASONRY

Forget. He who aims for the highest must reach the highest. In the sense of the infallibility of the Roman papal Catholic Church, a frank* A mason absolutely cannot (Christian). This Church is a challenge thrown not only to the Freemason society, but also to all Civilized society. Do we, like worthy Freemasons, want to progress? In keeping with the spirit of our association, we must therefore resolutely say with Strauss; We are no longer Christians, but only Freemasons, nothing more, nothing less! That's enough! We must concentrate focus our strength on that which is truly useful to man, Vassocial-humanitarian mission. Masonic dilettantism contributes little. of benefits to humanity and little consideration for our association. It's either one or the other (1)!

The main efforts of Freemasonry have therefore been directed against Catholic countries for a century and a half, and that is what which explains the constant political upheavals they have summer Je théiUrc. There memo, its lactic acid varied according to certain circumstances constants of time and environment that must be presented.

§. 3. – Special tactics of Freemasonry in

SOME CATHOLIC COUNTRIES.

Not understanding the supernatural assistance of which the Church of Jesus Christ is the object, the skillful directors of Freemasonry They had long believed they could achieve the to attract, at least in some countries, that they could spread with the complicity of legitimate governments and a clergy to corrupt morals, their practices and their anti-principles Christians. This was the ancient method of the Gnostics, of the Mani-Christians, Albigensians, Templars. Weishaupt has some, in his The tour, the sketch, and the complete plan finalized in 1818 by the Roman High Vendée, to install a confidant on Peter's seat himself!

Such plans seem to us absolutely insane. ses. However, strictly speaking, their realization jiarlicllo would be possible in certain particular churches, if divine Providence and

(1) Rcproilult by Paclillcr, Stille Krieg gegen Thron nnd Allar, 2® edil, p. 58.

A SPECIAL TACTIC 7

The vigilance of the Apostolic See did not intervene. In the In countries where Freemasonry has adopted this tactic, it does not attack the ecclesiastical property nor the privileged position of the clergy; the external pumps of religion are maintained as a a kind of police force for the people. It would suffice for him that the clergy of these the country became expressly or at least de facto schismatic and plunged thus into those abysses of which an ancient man said: optimi corruptio pessima.

Didn't this lodge tactic, at the end of the 18th century, key, received some implementation in a part of Germany, in northern Italy and Tuscany, at the beginning of This one in Portugal? Some indications will be found in this volume. cations on Masonic activity in the latter country, which confirm this assessment. What is certain is that such was the plan of the lodges in Brazil, such a profoundly Catholic nation, that the sect could never have launched an open attack on it at first. Religion. He was fortunately thwarted by vigilance of Pius IX, who sowed the seeds of regeneration in this country by sending bishops whose science and energy have broken these plots so treacherously designed.

When Freemasonry reaches this period of action, it pro

It is tempting to be hostile to him. But she seeks to separate the clergy from the a center of unity, it pushes civil power to extend the limits of its powers in mixed matters and even to encroach on the essentially spiritual attributes, under the pretext that it is Bishop from outside. Gallicanism and Febronianism have been in their time very useful auxiliaries of Freemasonry, although Most of those responsible were probably unaware of it. Also, the sect is not afraid, on occasion, in certain countries, to to revive these outdated memories enshrined in civil law, However grotesque the evocation of principles may be in his mouth also contradicts his theories of a purely human.

Religious orders, whose mission is precisely to re-inflaming zeal in the Church is particularly odious to the Freemasonry, and it has always sought to separate their cause from that of the secular clergy. When the necessities of his tactics forced him- She was careful not to attack all religious orders at once. no need to distinguish among them those whose management is in Rome

8. Distinctive Characteristics of Masonry

**

racrne and which thus contribute further to strengthening Catholic Unity lique. That's the secret of their attacks against the Company of Jesus. She always tries her strength against herself first, and when She manages to divide honest people about herself; she has won. a major point. The war in Jerusalem in 1760 and under the Refuge "Tauration" was his watchword, like the famous cry of today; Clericalism, that is the enemy.

S. 4. – Freemasonry and legitimate governments.

The conduct of sects towards legitimate governments my has always been south-ordered towards the supreme goal that they for-follow.

Where the heads of the national dynasties have agreed to put themselves to be at the head of the war against the Church, as in Prussia and in Pie- They cheered them on the mountain; they gave them at least for a time, these kingdoms of the world, of which they seem to see available.

Where local circumstances have allowed for the raising of difficulties They did not attack based on the order of succession to the throne. itself is the principle of legitimacy, whose good effects are material. They limited themselves to choosing, among the branches prevailing by a legitimate right of accession to the throne, those whose chiefs promised them their support (1).

This behavior was particularly pronounced in Portugal and in Spain. The regent Maria Christina, who came to power in invoking, rightly or wrongly, the principles of Spanish public law, inaugurated the course of the Revolution in this country. Within this A unanimously Catholic nation, constitutional rights have were spontaneously recognized in the heresy and the error, which thus acquired all the facilities for propaganda; the clergy was stripped of her property, religious orders were outlawed. Queen Isa Belle, having refused to continue this political course, was expelled.

(1) V. (Ifin.? CO voIiiiTjoIo chapiiro VI inlitiild : The» Secret Societies in Spain of- p read the XVHl* siede ji*q'i'en o' parliciüère'noul Ij g 1.

LA MaGONNEBIS and LEGITIMATE GOVERNMENTS 9

After a few years, his son was raised to the throne by those the same ones who had expelled the mother, to avoid above all the Don Carlos triumphs. The young Alfonso XII is today – probably unconsciously – the example of what can to be a legitimate king of the Revolution. The attempts made to then his reign to take away the education of youth from the direction of the clergy by the ministry of Canovas del Castillo, the foreigner the proposal for settlement made to the Jews of Russia by the Sagasta's ministry clearly shows that here too the sect is pursuing the plan established in its central directorate, independently and by above any purely national political question (1).

When Freemasonry found itself facing dynasties, who, despite the individual failings of their members, are, by a providential arrangement and a glorious tradition, the servants of the Church, defenders of the truth, she leads con between them all his effort.

Such was the fate of the Bourbons. Liliapedibus destrueQ^i de- Then, in the 18th century, the motto of the sects. History... temporary is there in its entirety to attest with what perseverance France, he was executed.

Not to mention their own duty, which obliges citizens to that country to enforce national public law, guarantee of all private rights, the tactic of backing sects indicates quite clearly the in-major interest that Catholics have in wanting the opposite of this that the Church's adversaries so stubbornly want. This interest The rêt exists primarily for French Catholics. It cannot be their countries like ours, are delivered into the hands of a dictator chosen by the sects, or belong to the prince, who openly professes of wanting to make him reign supreme. Let no one say that the Customs make the laws, and persistent efforts on the ground exclusively religious practices will eventually revert to Christian customs. born in our country: these efforts and works of zeal are assured It is indeed an imperative duty, but he must do this and not omit the rest. For this action can only be very slow, if even she is not completely paralyzed by the torrent of revolutionary measures. On the contrary, experience demonstrates

(1) V. in this volume to chajitro intiulé: Freemasonry in Spain under Alf~ Phone XII.

10 DISTINCTIVE CHARACTERISTICS OF MASONRY

ê ^

the powerful and much more immediate influence than laws and the impetus given by sovereign power has on morals public: the majority of men is determined in its con directed mainly by the iu)i)ressions it receives from the outside. However, the chances of survival are much greater for the individuals, if the environment in which they live is Christian. That's why rKdisc has always condemned all forms of daii^e- a reuse theory of the separation of Church and State; that's why On the contrary, Freemasonry seeks to establish everywhere what may call for the secularization of your social life.

Here we are dealing with a common interest among Catholics of the whole world; nowhere could they be indifferent to the res the establishment in France of a truly Christian power.

The particular situation of many countries, the mixture of Races and beliefs make it impossible, probably because always, the establishment of the Christian state, that is to say the realization practical application of the doctrines that the Holy See has not ceased since a century of teaching and which have been summarized in the SijUabus. The establishment of a fully Christian power in France, all by scrupulously respecting the civil rights acquired by the separate religious denominations, is rendered])ossibl both by the national tradition, through the logic of the French spirit and finally by the very violence of the struggle undertaken at this hour by the Re-evolution.

However, the realization of the Christian idea in a country reasoning/sounding like France, must exert a very strong influence world and on maintaining Christian consciousness in its integrity.

The complete lack of practical application of the teachings given in our century by the supreme magisterium of the Pontiff Romain would be, as far as one can humanly judge from the views of Providence, a subject of scandal for weak minds, on all in the countries where Catholicism began to take root in the mid-place of heretics. This (Jew is only r/////}o///é.ve commanded by The circumstances of time and place would risk taking little gradually in people's minds the superior place which belongs, unique-inherent in what must always remain the thesis of the wall of the threads subjected to Church information.

Beyond the reasoning, the spectacle of the fury in the boxes

LA. Freemasonry and Legislative Governments 11

of all countries faced with the possibility of a monarchical restoration A little bit of chic in France would be enough to enlighten people. You'll find some of it very informative testimonies in the chapter entitled: The Great 1873 plot.

What we have just said about the Bourbon dynasty, also applies to the noble race of the Llabsburgs.

When the Revolution cannot overthrow the true dynasties Christian women, she seeks to paralyze them by enveloping them within the constraints of the constitutional regime. That's what she has Made in France in 1814, under circumstances which have been fully clarified in the work of Father Deschamps; that is what she Made in Austria today.

An explanation is necessary here to avoid misunderstandings.

Certainly, the constitutional, or parliamentary, system is a form of mixed government that is perfectly legitimate in itself, as well as the Republic. The Church, which does not shy away from one form of government, accepts it like any other, provided that in the country in question it be established according to justice, That is to say, in accordance with the national constitution. The free constitution of Aragon in the Middle Ages, the almost Poland's anarchic policies were approved by it; it is uni a certain kind of alterity to the people, instructed by experience, to correct the flaws inherent in these kinds of constitutions.

But when Freemasonry became propagated in this century As guardian of the constitutional regime in Catholic countries, she has had only one aim; 1® to establish as a legal principle protected by freedoms of conscience, of the press and of association, in substituting this false principle for the recommended practice of tolerance mandated by the Church within the limits of the particular needs of each country; 2° to weaken the authority of dynasties, of which it knew the attachment to the church, and to prepare for a long time their overthrow at the heart of press freedom, liberty which always degenerates into license, where the law of God is not the undisputed foundation of institutions.

This is a practical point of view that must be taken into account, if we want to appreciate the true scope of France's efforts Freemasonry j) restoration of the constitutional regime in France, Italy, Spain, Portugal and Austria,

12 SPECIAL CHARACTERISTICS OF THE MAGDNNERIE

Certainly, when governments of this kind function for many years and that civil relations have established on this basis, Catholics must loyally respect the Church, "as happens in human affairs, is the constraint of sometimes tolerating evils that it would be almost impossible to make money without exposing oneself to calamities" "and to even more disastrous troubles (1)." But something else is a respect for the situations actually, also in accordance with the great policy which inspired Henry IV when he issued the Edict of Nantes, than to the prudence that the Church has always recommended to Christians here, without thereby betraying the inalienable rights of the truth; something else entirely is a blindness to the maneuvers of the sects, which in the past has led to the falsification of history, and in the present to do Play the calholi((ues the rhyme of dupes.

A better understanding of the facts would have prevented certain publicists, whom it is pointless to name, represent the struggles Catholics against this tactic as ridiculous attempts of the supporters of the old regime and of monarchical absolutism-ohique, M. d'isracii, in his latest work, has perfectly ex-
Awarded, with his extensive experience, this sensitive political point Practical information regarding the July Revolution:

It wasn't the bourgeoisie who erected the barricades, I know the people who made them; they do not form a nation, but a con Brotherhood... Their secret societies cover Europe with a network. They are widespread throughout Spain; Italy is ruined. The same The organization exists in Germany and in Itussio. The wiglis do not admit that a remedy, and according to them infallible; the constitutional government They assert that "secret societies" cannot coexist with representative institutions; I may deny being mistaken, but it seems to me that secret societies will instead make representative institutions disappear

This proves how indifferent secret societies are.
to the constitutional regime taken in itself, when the circumstances tances do not allow them to derive any particular profit from it, that is that they favored the absolutism of all the princes ([who have

(1) Brief from NSP Leo XII to Cardinal Doelians, Archbishop of Malinos, August 3, 1881 •

('2) Knndfjmion (London, 1880), 1, i, oh« VU.

THE TWO PHASES OF MASONIC ACTION 13

They wanted to serve their purposes, so that they would eliminate councils everywhere.
the most liberal traditional institutions, such as those of Tyrol and the Basque countries, that they destroyed the autonomy of the republics the freest republics, such as those of the forest cantons in Swiss.

§ 5. – The two phases of Masonic action

What has just been said will help to understand how the action of Freemasonry in Catholic countries, a success story tively in two phases: in the first, it lays its principal principles in the laws; in the second, when legality revolutionized tionary has taken root; it directly attacks morals Christians through the organization of an impious and corrupt teaching author.

The entire system of Masonic legislation rests on This error: that the State – (delegation of the sovereign people, king absolute or organ of positive science) – creates law, and can making laws without regard for dependence, where is man?
vis-à-vis God in all aspects of his activity.

Voltaire expressed this idea as early as the mid-18th century*, in his tragedy of the Guebres or Intolerance:

Honored and submissive, upheld by the laws
And by these same wisely contained laws.

The Guebres will now be free
To follow a secret cult that has long been persecuted.

May each person peacefully seek the light in their heart.

But the law of the state always comes first.

Another advanced Freemason, Odilon Barrot, said bluntly
In 1828: "The law is atheistic and must exist."

The publicist of the German Masonic empire, the f.*.
Bluntschli said, more hypocritically:

"The modern state is founded on human nature."
The State is a human community of life created and administered by

14. Distinctive Characteristics of Masonry

Man for a human purpose... The modern state is an organization Human constitutionality; the law of the land is governed by public law. Its Politics seeks the public good according to the principles of reason.
human beings using human means... He feels independent and free even in the eyes of the Church, and he even asserts his right over it high (1).

From this stem the equality of religions before the law, the freedom of the press understood in the sense that there is no crime of opinion (to put it more accurately, in a manner of speaking or opinion), civil marriage, the denial of the Church's own right to exist as an independent society dependent, to administer itself according to its own constitution, to teach to gner, to possess the goods necessary for the maintenance of his ministries their temples, the destruction of religious orders or their assimilation to other associations.

Legal formulas vary according to the particular spirit of the law.
to link to each people and the historical development of its legislation lation.

Thus, for the French, a people with a logical mind, friends of the equality, accustomed to centralization, the watchword of the Freemason
The question is: Christians must be subjected to common law.
a cunning mule, of which Bishop Aiguiecy recently showed the destructive character of Clericalism (2). –In Italy, where the
The people are fundamentally religious, but where they are eclipsed by glorious historical memories applied in the wrong direction, that was The free Church in the free State. – In Germany, a country covered green still of traditional associations of all kinds and where the corporate life has an indestructible vitality, the formula of oppres-
The Church's position is this: "The Church is in the State and is not "before him that a corporation with subordinate rights as
"The others."

Despite these differences in expression, the Masonic program is still the kid.

We could see from the general plan of the works of the large

Introduction, § 4), how adept the sect is at exploiting the ideas of the time, what the 'principles' want to say for her of equality, liberty, fraternity, which she seeks to introduce

(t) General Theory of the State, French translation, in-So. pp. 50-55,

(2) Common Law, by Mgr Isoard, Bishop of Annecy, in-8o Paris, 1881.

15

THE BEST PHASES of MASONIC ACTION

d<ms public institutions^ the spread of knowledge- these popular, secularized educational institutions and of charity. This will be discussed in a chapter of this volume. how in this noble country the sect has already taken root and progress is being made little by little towards the realization of this plan.

When, following work of this kind on opinion and In public assemblies, legality became revolutionary. Freemasonry takes a second step and sets out to corrupt the people by destroying Christian morals, the fruit of ten-eight centuries of faith, which serve as a basis for beliefs, pushed individuals are influenced by external factors and seem may be necessary for the ma- in a given society The majority of men practice religion.

Father Deschamps' work revealed in all its details the systematic plan to corrupt the family pursued by The lodges for a long time. A chapter on the current state of dogma and Masonic morality will complement them all too well.

Today they seem to have more need to resort to covert maneuvers. They claim to corrupt nations on a large scale through the education of younger generations, that they completely wrest from the Church's control to to make it a state monopoly. But the state has become their property. They took care to seize political power beforehand. tick, and under this direction Public Instruction becomes a propaganda continues to promote atheism and immorality.

Separating education from religion, that is, at this moment, a From one end of the world to the other, the direction given to the lodges.

We are witnessing the most complete development of this plan in France and Belgium.

Since Freemasonry ostensibly reigns there, it adds to this activity which have the avowed aim of replacing Catholic worship in the popular customs: these are only baptisms, weddings and burials Masonic practices. The flaws of the Tæuvre du Sou of secular schools and of the League of... the Freethinkers, the Masonic lodges white ones take the place of our processions, forbidden by the arbitrary administrative. All scientific and professional organizations are being invaded by the sect, and it is making use of all these natural groupings of men are all means of retaining the populations under their rule. As well as all life

16 FEATURES OF MASONRY

Social life among Christian peoples was deeply influenced by religion. of a child in a nation given over to Freemasonry, she is penetrating entangled in its venom in all its manifestations, while waiting the day when, according to the prediction of the Apocalypse, it will be necessary to wear on the forehead the mark of the beast to be able to buy and sell {\),

§6. – The exploitation of national issues by the

Frang-Masonry

The cosmopolitan principle of Freemasonry is essentially contradictory to the national principle: its aim, as we have seen, is r

restoration of the state of illuminy; it must therefore sacrifice to it One after another, all the nationalities, and, in fact, the destruction of a considerable number of independent states, autonomous entities centuries-old wedges, was the consequence of the ascendancy it gained in the general politics of the world.

But, when it comes to inciting a people against governments established elements and to introduce into social life elements In terms of disruption, Freemasonry excels at exacerbating issues national and to exploit them.

The same sect which, in 1815, delivered Catholic Belgium to Holland and the Rhineland to the Prussians, who, in 1817, destroyed the autonomy of the small Swiss cantons, which, in 1832 and 1876, dealt a fatal blow to the ancient popular constitution of In the Basque Country, this same sect, we say, exploited against Austria, the Italians' al-riological sentiment, and it became The idea of unity became a weapon against the temporal power of the Popes. the most national power that ever existed.

the most national movements, and introduce elements into them dissolution processes that cause them to miserably abort.

This is a lamentable history of Poland in 1830 and 1863.
that of Ireland in 1881.

The Catholic Church is a mother; and she multiplies her solicitations studies and his tenderness for those of his children who are suffering.

(1) Apocolypse, cb. xui, 16, 17,

EXPLOITATION OF NATIONAL QUESTIONS 17

Among peoples who enjoy the fullness of their national life
In her later years, she carefully withdrew into the spiritual realm. and leaves temporal matters to the civil authorities. But when a nation is in mourning, when it is widowed of its memories legitimized and independent, then we see the bishops and the monks tending the bleeding wounds, supporting the failing soul the people's hearth, and the sanctuary thus becomes the sacred home where Beneath the ashes lives the patriotic spark, the promise of resurrection future!

Under these conditions, Freemasonry is careful not to do the War on Religion, it hides its true purpose; but, temptress Treacherous, she promises temporal victories to oppressed peoples but, if they accept the help of the Cosmopolitan Revolution. The Church inevitably opposes such disastrous compromises, and few Gradually, Freemasonry created a party in these countries, which then separated firstly, the direction of the bishops on the ground of national action national, then gradually becoming hostile to the Church itself even.

This is how the Revolution lost Poland. (See the Secret Societies and the Society[^] t. ir. Attached Document K. The Freemasonry in Russia and Poland. – Insurrection of 1830 and the July Revolution.)

Some words escaped from men very advanced in the The secrets of the sects even make one doubt that they ever wanted to sincerely the resurrection of a country, which would have formed a great Catholic nation and would have been an impregnable bulwark opposed to the Revolutionary Pan-Slavism (1).

A similar situation is occurring today in Ireland. If this noble people have preserved their nationality and distinctive qualities
The freedom of his race, he owes it to Catholicism. But his demands cannot go so far as to authorize insurrection against a government principle of property. By its very mission as guardian of the uncorrupted The Church, vulnerable to the principles of morality and social order, finds herself obliged, while energetically seconding the movement national of the Irish people, to indicate the limits that it cannot to surpass. Anti-Christian sects skillfully take advantage of this to

(1) See in this volume the chapter entitled; Poland and the religious sects-naires.

III

2

18 CHARACTERS PAUTICÜLBRS DE LA MAÇONNERIE

to incite the people to shake off the yoke of their pastors, to sow the distrust of the Holy See, and finally to push it in back roads of violence | which open the way to crimes more atrocious.

11. 7. – The agonistic objection against the Church in

THE GERMAN COUNTRIES.

11 is a number of countries, whose governments are Protestants, but where Catholics form significant minorities and where they had rights recognized by the national constitutions, the CPII ensured the necessary freedom to the ecclesiastical government. Such was, and such still is in right, the condition of the North Charleroi region, of several cantons from Switzerland and Holland.

This situation is certainly not acceptable to the Church. poses as an ideal; however, given the circumstances, She was acquiescing for the sake of peace. As long as the governments All things respected and loyal, these peoples have enjoyed all inner tranquility, which is compatible with the division of beliefs. We will reread with further insight, in the work of Mgr de Kellelcr iulilulated: CALlemaiino after the war of 1860 (1), the conslatalioii of the re.sullals lieurciix of this stall of choice their, that they contrast with the deep troubling of consciences which The reversal followed.

It was the Erauc-Masonic that demanded the Kultur-Kampf as pledge of his contribution to the work of the German institution. We nor to retrace the various steps of this new persecution tion, (jui a eu son cofiIre-coup dans toutes parts du monde.

It is only necessary to give here its legal characteristics discs.

Neither the German government nor the Bernese government has... ficheut, like ff. Gambetta and Ferry, the pretension of sub-to treat the nalioiii to what they call reveries and supers-

(i) Trans. French by Abbot JJelet, 1 vol. io-8*'» Gaume, 1866.

WITHOUT GERMAN PASTA

19

tuions (that's what they call Religion), to replace it
The empire of positive science, that is to say, a brutal materialism.
No; these countries are not yet advanced enough, and the Freemasons conservatives (see above 1 and 2) who lead the movement, find in the state churches j)rotcslantcs an instrument too compatriotic period of government seeking to ruin the people any religious idea.

The KuUur' Kampf consisted of denying any rights inherent to the Catholic Church, to recognize only granted rights by the State as to the Protestant confessions, then to him to impose in its discipline and administration the pro-close to the country's Protestants, but who essentially repugnant to its constitution. *Thus, in Bern and Geneva, as well that in Germany, the Kultur-Kampf had been forced to interrupt all relationship with Rome and destroying the religious orders. The difference
The inconsistency of the procedures is only evident in this: the laws of prudence his own, known as the May laws, on the education of clerics and the nomi nation with pastoral functions, tend to impose on the Church Catholic, the direct interference of the State, which is the law of the con evangelical federation; while the laws of Geneva and Bern on the election of priests they attempted to subject it to the democratic regime cracy of these countries. That's what one might call the es-legal department of the Kultur-Kampf.

As for its outward appearance, the most characteristic feature Tunion is a united front, fueled by a shared hatred against the Catholic Church.
lique, Freemasonry and the faction of Protestantism called liberal, that is to say, one that no longer recognizes the divinity of Our-Lord Jesus Christ.

Masonic lodges in Germany, the Netherlands, and Switzerland (and we could add also among French Calvinists) is considerable.

The history of Freemasonry in Germany presents two phenomena contradictory terms only in appearance on which we draw attention; on the one hand, Freemasonry in certain Certain systems have taken on Christian appearances, have borrowed part of its rites to Christianity and excluded Jews from his lodges; on the other hand, it is the country where the Jews, by means of higher lodges have certainly exercised and continue to exercise The most active core leadership within the entire sect. One cannot to tire of repeating that part of the practices of Freemasonry The main purpose of this is to deceive minds. Let us explain. Thus, how could such a considerable number of ministers protest? Many enter the boxes.

20. Distinctive Characteristics of Masonry

Franc-maronncric does not thereby relinquish its hatred of Our Lord Jesus Christ and all revelation. Spend more earlier than what F. Es. Van Schaick said in the Official Almanac Dutch Lodges 1872, on the use of the Bible in the lodges:

"As things stand, the Bible is placed on the altar of the Lodges" as a mere extra. From whatever point of view we consider If we laugh at the Bible, we do not hesitate to declare openly that it is no longer in its place in the works and cannot be there since the doctrine of humanity is its basis and is proposed as the means to improve man" (1)^

Therefore, it is not surprising that we see a writer, Ecclesias. Protestant tic, Dr. Guerike, declared, as early as 1840, that the "p& birth of the Eranc-inaconcrie in the Protestant churches has toncontribué like a hammer striking relentlessly to destroy the Positive Christianity, to erect a tower in place of Christ temple, and that it made use of the principle of fraternal aid as a powerful system of corruption and monopoly for to invade all official positions and jobs having a influence in the Church and science (2).

§8. – On Freemasonry in Anglo-Saxon countries

Saxons

the same anti-religious and anti-social character in England and to United States as well as on the European continent and in America South. The vast majority of SCS members do not see it as that an opportunity for friendly gatherings and a supporting institution mutual. Nevertheless, English lodges consider themselves as

(1) Cué by Pachŭor, Sllk Krleg gegen Tkron und Allar, 2* ôdit., p. 111.

(2) llandbuch dtr Kirchengeschŭchte, t. II, p. 253, cited by Pachtler, ibid., p. 118.

IN ANGLO-SAXON COUNTRIES

21

being part of Universal Freemasonry, and they do not refuse not on occasion, in accordance with Masonic oaths, the aid fraternal to their brothers on the continent. Therefore, there is in this a special characteristic of English Freemasonry that is a difference in the intensity of the action and not in the essence of the principles. The Holy See was not mistaken, and it has always maintained the application to the lodges of these countries of the censures imposed by all The sovereign pontiffs, since Clement XII in 1738. They have were extended specifically in America to VOdd-Fellowshlp, which is merely a simplification of Freemasonry for the use of people.

The causes that led to this situation are numerous; it To completely outline the whole story, it would be necessary to sketch it out. political, social and religious development in England since the 18th century* century. Therefore, we dedicate a special chapter in this volume to the situation and trends beyond Freemasonry in these two countries. In this, as in many other things, the Anglo-Saxon race follows very different paths from that taken by the races Latin and Germanic. By diverting from the odious conflicts anti-religious groups that exhaust these communities, by rejecting the interference of The state's influence on private life creates elements of superiority. which foreshadow a leading role for him in the near future. Failing the 19th century, the 20th century may perhaps see the realization of the glory of the Church, the famous prophecy of M. de Maistre, announces assuming that England will unite with France for the propagation of the truth in the world.

However, one fact must be taken into account, namely that, under the violence of persecution, Catholicism for nearly two centuries disappeared almost completely from England and its

The nonsense fell asleep. The movement, which resulted in making Civil liberty for Catholics, had as its main propaganda The religious struggle between the Usonters remains very intense. here and the established Egliae. On this subject, a very distinguished English priest we were told that the disastrous form of the Episcopal Church did not pre- would offer no real advantage to calitolytics. On the contrary, The result would rather be to turn against them all the fanaticism intolerance, which still exists in Protestant sects.

This can be seen in the United States, where for a quarter of a century Catholics have become numerous enough to be a factor important social. Their progress was followed by attempts to nominate breuses to awaken both Protestant intolerance against the Papism, which posits the principle of the supremacy of the modern state. according to the Masonic program outlined above.

22 PRIVATE GARAGES OF MASONRY

"#

It will likely not be without struggles that the people Anglo-Saxons will succeed in eliminating from their social constitution the venom that heresy has infiltrated.

S 9. – The ROLE OF Jews in Freemasonry

The anti-Semitic movements in Russia and Germany, some recent events that have highlighted the financial predominance Israelites on the stock exchanges of London and Paris called Attention is strongly encouraged regarding the role played by Jews in the poli- modern tics and especially on their connection with Freemasonry rie (1).

It is impossible not to be struck by the fact that the principals nihilistic and communist agitators, whom the recognized leaders radical parties in Germany, Russia, and Switzerland are of the Israelites. The author of a remarkable article published in the Nineteenth Century of January 1882, under this significant title, The dawn of a revolutionary era is expressed there in this way;

The most remarkable feature of all the upheavals that took place Returning to the continent is the predominant role of the Jews. While that some of them seize major financial powers, other individuals of their race are the leaders of this revolutionary movement the revolution we have outlined. Those who consider the Jews point of view.

The work on Secret Societies contains in this regard the observation the presentation of a number of facts, to which the reader who wants to have a precise view of the subject. (Book I,

(1) Among the works responding to the nctlc iiréoccupaliou, we must particular-romont report the volume iuliliile: Fruiivs^rnnavotts H Juifa^ stem üeVFglise itaprh do Sî-AimIiù (In-tîi", IHSI}. 6or liter

irii|i'|n«? sufü^'imiincul read of ainjucl view isf jiÎLiê the iulrur.

THE ROLE OF THE JEWS 23

chap. II, §9, Book II, chap. V, § 6; chap. VIII, § 3, chap. XI, § 6, chap. XII, 2, chap. XV, § 4.)

We have specifically mentioned this in the Introduction (§ VI, note) the indications from which it would follow that the Jews are mostly in the central leadership of the sects which likely-menla its headquarters in Germany. What other clues have been gathered? Since then, we have become more inclined to admit the data.

For a long time, the Israelites were excluded from most German, English, and French loges. They then founded special rites like that of Misraïm in France, of the Beni-^Berith in the United States, which allowed them to benefit from advantages ensured by the universal nature of Freemasonry and to communicate with all lodges as needed. However, one will find in this volume (chapter I) proof that, even at mid-18th century, a number of Masonic lodges that the Jews received into their midst. Martinez Pascbalis, the founder of the French Illuminati, who, according to our latest studies of, would have played a very important role in the spread of sects at that time (see chapter P'', S 3, cf. book II, chapter V, 3) was a Jew.

Moreover, the internal movement within Freemasonry has overturned almost everywhere the barriers that a remnant of Christian ideas or social prejudices opposed the admission of Jews into the ordinary lodges. Freemasonry in Catholic countries, that of France, Italy and Spain were the first to admit them. Germany has followed suit in our time. In the United States and England On earth, only certain rites are accessible to them. Of since most German lodges have lowered the old These barriers, we see even in the Masonic world, no without a certain amount of dread, the influence that the children of Israel have there gressistG and national-Uberal^ has become 'i)liculièremnt désa- agreeable to the Grand Chancellor. One of his writers, Theodore Mommsen, in a pamphlet entitled: A Word on the Jews, he reproached them for their ingratitude and addressed a curious apj)cl to them the alliance with the Germans against France and Idlomontanism.

In France, we don't have a social question to address.
To speak frankly: the numerical proportion of the Israelites is too

(1) v. P,.-AC. V)n \Ve<!<ill, Vnrurllilcil nder hercc/tUocr llux, UorWn, 18X0,

24. Distinctive Characteristics of Masonry

s»

low, but the number of official positions they hold is without any proportion to what the general population reported. Furthermore, all those among them who have reached a certain position, are involved in Freemasonry and exercise a considerable influence. One of them, Brother Créinieux, has, during for many years, Grand Master of the Supreme Council of the Rite Scottish. Another, a chief rabbi, Brother Dalsace, is one of the the oldest members of the Grand Orient. The Masonic Mummy that of 1878, said of him: "that he glorifies the Jewish name by the the way he leads Freemasonry.

Judaism is, moreover, in itself a form of Freemasonry. times by the close solidarity that unites its members, l)ar 1(3 cosmopolitanism which places the Jew above all ties of homeland, finally by his hatred of Christianity. With the decline of Talmudic worship, a new organization, the Universal Israelite Alliance, was founded in 1858, to create a bond between all Israelites mun on the bases we have just indicated, independently traditional rites that many no longer care about. Here are how Brother Cnhuieux explained the purpose of this association:

<tVAlliance üraélUc universal how barely and already its influence Its salutary effect is felt far and wide... It doesn't stop at our worship alone. It addresses all faiths. It wants to penetrate all religions. gions as it penetrates all lands... Well! gentlemen, Let us continue our glorious mission. May enlightened men, without distinction of worship, unite in this universal Israelite association saddle, whose purpose is so noble, so broadly civilizing... To give a A friendly hand to all those men who, born into a different religion than the ours, extend their fraternal hand to us, recognizing that all religions, whose foundation is morality and whose summit is God, must (Hre friends with each other; thus breaking down the barriers that separate what must one day be reunited; there, gentlemen, is the beautiful, the great mission of nolro Universal Israel Alliance... I call on our

How eagerly we will go to them... The time has come to found on an indestructible foundation, an immortal association. (1)

It is difficult not to be struck by the identity of this program with that of Freemasonry.

Judaism and Freemasonry are two parallel institutions.

fl) isvArlfin l, XXV, p. dII cl s iiv,

THE ROLE OF JEWS

25

This thought is not exclusively ours. It has been expressed by the Chief Rabbi of France at the prize distribution to students Israeli vocational schools, December 27, 1879, at the hotel of the Grand Orient:

"Listen, my friends, there is a coincidence in this meeting that something strikes me, and I want to share it with you. Do you know where you Guests, where are we? – We are in the salons of the Franc-masons. They kindly agreed to make them available to us. I told them Please send me my gratitude.

The Freemasons! What hasn't been said against them? They have been I am nothing but a bunch of troublemakers, disturbers of the public peace, impious, atheists I don't know what else. They've been bombarded with misery, they've been slandered, persecuted 1 They tried to drive them out, to exterminate them, as We !

But they are here, standing just like us! They are not, like you, You know, neither rebels nor atheists! I know many of them, there are even among us in this meeting, and I assure you that this They are men of heart and honor. They preach, as we do, tolerance and charity; they preach, like us, fraternity, the Work, human solidarity; and that is why we live together. and the others, and that's why we live despite and against all odds. Ah! my friends, brotherhood cannot be stifled. Truth cannot be killed(1).

Ten years earlier, on June 29, 1869, a large synod convened in Leipzig there are Orthodox, Reform and Liberal Jews of all kinds all the nations, and made the following decision:

"The synod recognizes that the development and realization of ideas Modern euros are the most reliable guarantee for the present and future of the "Jewish nation and its children."

This nonsense powerfully serves the particular interests of the Jews. Also It must be acknowledged that the material and economic transformations global standards are increasingly increasing the value of remarkable abilities of the Israelites, and demonstrate superiority an indisputable ethnic identity that they have preserved throughout the centuries. The growing influence exerted in our societies by their pen- their writers, their artists, their financiers; their pener- tration in certain populations such as in the United States, where they tend to merge with the large, indifferent mass

(1) chain of union do nioi-juiii 1880,

26 CHARACTERS PARTICIPATING IN MASONRY

to Christianity: these are providential events whose consequences The consequences will only become apparent later. Let's just note that the Jews still hold fast to the belief with great tenacity to the Creator God, to the living God (1), while more and more The lodges suddenly became positivist and materialistic. If The apostasies of the Christian peoples filled the measure, did they? through them, according to ancient prophecies, the return would take place of riiumanity to its author?

(1) V. onfre autres l'ouvragod'im israélite, M. Bonlæw, former dean of the Faculty des lolllrcs do Oijon^ The laws of history (iii-S*. Germer-Uaillère. 1881).

CHAPTER ONE

Freemasonry in the 10th Century

b

§. i.-Some new historical sources.

Mazzini, in 1868, wanting to bring the Italian Freemasons to to work for the restoration of the Republic, he cited the example the core of 18th-century Freemasonry, which had taken part preponderant to the great Revolution of 1789 (1). This is the ve^ historical truth, and it must now take the place of legends those who represent it as a spontaneous movement of the oppressed nation. Father Descamps (Book II, Chapters III, IV, V and VI) provided the general elements of this demon. tration, by broadly following the course of events and eu

In this chapter and the next, we propose to complete his work, by summarizing numerous research projects on the history of local history in which either French writers engage Freemasons, or independent scholars. They allow one to grasp on the spot, social and political activity carried out by the lodges, and by there they allow us to grasp the action of hidden mechanisms, which have produced the major events of general history. Another An equally important source consists of the numerous writings which were published in the 18th century on Freemasonry.

M) Quoted in the Philosophie italienne (Turin, Iluux cl Favalo, 1880, in-S®) p. 383.

28

FRENCH MACONSERIE IN THE 18TH CENTURY

^ ê

It is very surprising to see all governments banning it from the outset. its beginnings, and it is particularly remarkable that the gou Protestant governments may, in this respect, have preceded the Holy-Seat (V. S 9). There is therefore a great interest in collecting in the dust of libraries the authentic testimonies of The contemporaries' assessment of the new society. These are brochures and books for the occasion, which the absence of m- literary ritual has caused it to fall into oblivion, but those who haven't less of great historical value. They fully trust the action. repressive governments. Some of these writings are from the memoir of the Revolutionary period; they emanate from men who have taken part in the events, who were themselves involved in the so-secret societies; these are irrefutable witnesses, who come to confirm in a striking way the accounts of Lefranc and Barruel.

The history of Freemasonry in France can be divided in three periods.

From 1721 to 17C0, Freemasonry was propagated across the continent by the English and the Scots. It is outlawed by the auloritô royal; but the application of these measures is done with so much leniency on the part of the magistrates, - l)eaucot!p are themselves followers - that propaganda is hardly hindered by. During During this initial period, the lodges mainly attracted young people. people, men engaged in philosophical innovation, the libcrins^ as one would have said in the previous century. On the usually in cabarets. We have very few documents writings on the lodges of this egregious creature: either because of the necessity SC hides a little more, either jrarce (pic h's foiulateui'S des hjgcs, the vncrablcs^ the mailrcs of coniiiiiic we called them then, they were in (some way) and kept by towards them the constitutions and the verbal points, (thus the Freemasonry continued to progress, and lodges were established. from the middle of the century in many more cities than those which are mentioned in the work of Secret Societies (Book II, chap. III, 2). We will encounter this fic ((uemrnenl riidicalion in the course of (V*s eludes.

The second period begins with the rninistèi'o of the Duke of Choiseul, 1702, and the destruction of the Jesuits. It is marked by absolute tolerance, by the very favor of the public authorities.

A BOOK FROM 1747

29

In 1772, the Grand Orient was founded, with the Duke of Chartres for Grand Master; Freemasonry then spread rapidly extraordinary situation and at the same time takes on an organization more focused: she is preparing for action.

Finally, the Convents of Willemsbad, in 1781, and of Paris, in 1785, inaugurated the period of active and decisive conspiracy.
The Revolution breaks out, and the men of the lodges become the key players in the events.

Abroad, the development of Freemasonry progressed by little closely followed by the kids' phases.

§. 2. – What was thought in 1747 of France

Masonry*

has

Contemporaries were not mistaken about the importance that al milk to acquire this new company, which claimed to be only a charity and fun gathering, like so many others formed then under the influence of the customs of the time which had become easier. The number of works published for them against the

One notable example is the one entitled: "The Freemasons Crushed" first published in 1747 and which had many editions. Its author is Pérau, one of the most serious publicists and the best informed of that time (1).

The previous year, he had published The Order of Freemasons, betrayed and the secret of the Mopses revealed (in-8°, Amsterdam), in the which he merely described as an explanation of the organization of the lodges and the rite the reception at the three symbolic grades.

In "The Crushed Freemasons," he points out the danger they present for religion and civil society. The following pages These sales are interesting to reread after the events have taken place. have given such confirmation:

R The order of Freemasons is a society which, under the special title two of the closest brotherhood, united together and in the same

(1) See Miebaud's Universal Biography, article Peru, and Barbier, Dietiorv-black of anonymous. This work has also been attributed to Abbot Larudan.

30 Freemasonry in the 18th century

views an inBnity of people, without the diversity of characters, of Inclinations or religion present no obstacle. A policy ad admirable, widespread in the doctrine which it teaches, animates it, sustains it and extends not only to the brothers it gathers, but also on all the inhabitants of the world.

This doctrine, which is like the lifeblood of society, which animates all of it the members, is nothing other, according to the Freemasons, than this principle natural, that this primitive law engraved in all hearts and which must to be the basis of all our actions.

Every candidate is informed of this principle on the day of their interview. that he is always made to consider, nevertheless, in the light of approval and usefulness, and in proportion to the penetration and intelligence that it made it apparent to those whom the lodge had charged with the task of indoctrinating him.

However, it should not be inferred from this that every brother once received deposits Suddenly the prejudice to which he had been enslaved until then; no, the air of The lodge does not immediately inspire that grace which is called grace of state and does not work in hearts those marvelous changes, which hold The wonder. The diverse feelings, far from being destroyed, They remain exactly the same as they were before. All reli- gion retains its rights there; the Catholic and the Protestant, the Jew and the Christians gather there under the same banner, without deviating from that of their sects. The prince and the magistrate lose nothing in terms of homage.

Here the reader undoubtedly awaits with imi)atience the explanation of this doctrine: he is already asking me what science is subtle and profound, what charming and inconceivable art could have gathered together in a Even the sect, the followers of an infinite number of others, and becoming the miraculous a cultural and universal concept that unites them all without prejudice to any?

Here are the main points:

Liberty and the Palliated: these are the precious prerogatives that the so-the company claims to be able to put each person in possession of them. bres; it is they that produce this admirable effect, by drying up the poisoned sources from which all human evils stem, I mean ambition and avarice. The former makes everything disappear. An unwelcome and mortifying idea of superiority. Through it, man, having returned in its original rights, no longer recognizes either ranks or dignities, including the The sight wounds the gaze and shocks his self-esteem, Subordination is now nothing more than a chimera which, far from finding its origin in the decrees of a wise Providence that made it necessary, does not find it more than in the whims of fate and the extravagances of pride who wants everything to bend beneath him. The second, finally, produces this delightful peace, this trust so sweet and so enviable but incomprehensible compatible with avarice, whose designs it ruins, by making it corn

A BOOK FROM 1747 31

muns these goods and riches, the possession of which costs man so much of care and the loss of so much remorse.

Such is the essence of Freemason doctrine; but let us not it is not expected that it will suddenly be exposed to the public eye or in such strong to Mels's aspiring asset: a subtle and agile mind could draw from it consequences too disastrous for the intentions it conceals.

Dogma is proportioned to capacity in this order; to facilitate this... to legitimize progress and to publicize its importance to a greater or lesser extent, one distributed it into three different classes, the first of which is that of penetrating minds, the second restless and anxious minds; the third me, credulous and superstitious minds...

The true meaning soon becomes apparent in the first one, whose enlightened members, instantly dispelling the cloud surrounding it, that the leading roles belong to, such as those of the enthusiasts and to the drivers of society, delicate and important responsibilities which are part of its first columns and main supports.

The second, a mobile and restless troop, did not reach this high condition only by degrees, which are its emblems and similarities, that are presented to him to guess and which captivate him with their difficulties* fickle imagination, whose deviations could cause some disorder.

As for the last one, which I can call that of the fools and made ex-Ready to house ignorance and superstition, nothing else is required of it. than to blindly and unreservedly follow the spirit of the doctrine that he insinuates, to embrace him warmly, to support him strongly, and to remain inviolably attached to these divine oracles, that a prophetic "Fury," he repeats to her constantly. This is how the insensible communicates itself. This light, which is meant to illuminate the universe, is consumed by this system. which must purify it and restore its original excellence, but that however

We always take great care not to develop abruptly.

Regarding this Liberty and this Equality, if the Freemasons could read the hearts of their candidates, if they could ascertain of their tastes and their characters, they would soon explain it by the return to that first state in which man found himself upon emerging from the hands of its Creator; by this independence which, according to them, would have been the eternal prerogative, if ambition and avarice had not changed the face of its condition by subjecting the weakest to the tyranny of the strongest; by one word, by this salutary antidote that they want to use against the progress of an evil too deeply ingrained not to tend towards the unfortunate humans a propitious arm that breaks their chains, crushes tyrants and the finally restore to them the rights whose loss has cost them so much pirs.

32 Freemasonry IN THE 18TH CENTURY

This is the precious time of the Golden Age that the Freemasons want to bring back to earth; but, as for a change so sudden it does not It would take nothing less than a miracle and a hasty execution. would become prone to too many incidents, the policy found about to first introduce this Freedom and this Equality among the brothers, of the y foment, to perpetuate it without interruption, until society sufficiently strengthened, it can finally rally under its banners. entire .

This is the current method adopted by Freemasons for to conduct oneself with certainty to the brilliant denouement of this plot.

Masonic doctrine, through all the allegories of the rebuilding—the destruction of Solomon's temple, aims to destroy of all revealed religions in order to bring man back to the pure natural religion and discredits them all equally by confusing their followers within its ranks. He also shows how the Freemasonry undermines the entire order of civil society from its very foundation:

This respect owed to princes becomes a weakness and a cowardice. te, as long as it is not measured by their wisdom and equity; so than to obey them in circumstances where neither has any To share in their crimes is to share in their crimes, to execute guilty parties. tensions.

This abolition of all authority, which the true Freemasons, that is to say—to say that those who are perfectly aware of the society's views, do not cease to preach among themselves; this independence to establish, these scepters to break to break, to dissolve this harmony that reigns in the universe So, are all these things merely simple revolutions? details that should be viewed with indifference and which have no influence whatsoever On civil order and society?

The author also points out the role of dupes that are played. to the princes received into the order (I j. Belonlui, if the order of the Franks—Janson had not yet provoked any violent uprisings, it was because the time has not yet come. H tells a story a number of murders ordered during his time by the lodges and executed by their henchmen against some of their own brothers who had betrayed them. (Cf. Liv, II chap. V. §2.

(I) It also mentions the arrest of twenty-five brothers by the watch on May 22nd 1240, in Paris; They were immediately dismissed because of their condition, says the autho

A BOOK FROM 1747 33

At the end of the book, the author describes the reception into the rank of arohU tecteu. Scottish (Past Master)i in which, at that time, a more advanced introduction was provided:

On the evening of his reception, he was told nothing else, except that the freedom and Yégalüé between brothers are the Tunic, the goal of society, and that the temple depicted, the mysteries, the emblems and the metaphors are similarities that conceal the true purpose from weak minds, things that they gradually give a taste of the true meaning to the point of making them embrace their feeling; after which they say that this freedom and this equality do not can only be acquired with a singular firmness of spirit. During this At that time they were already tasting among themselves the sweetness of that state... The gives signs of perfect docility towards the company's purpose, then we reveal the hidden agenda, or rather the key object of the society, which is to reduce all men to a mutual equality and to give humankind natural freedom. Finally, after some During assembly days, they openly say that the expression "to make all" men are equal among themselves and the free human race includes indistinct* all persons of whatever quality and condition they may be, without even excluding princes, magistrates, the Both adults and children. Once this big step is taken, they have nothing left to do. than to imagine the means of achieving their ends... The Freemasons they find nothing that frightens them more than the power of sovereigns and the authority of magistrates.

I have always recognized in their speeches that the spirit of society was quite similar to Cromwell's conduct, and this was so evident the doctrine, the projects, the actions and the thoughts were as many copies of this original.

It should be noted that Brother Louis Blanc appreciated it exactly. in the same way the influence of Freemasonry on the neck rant of the ideas of the 18th century (Book II, chapter V, § 1).

The author of "The Crushed Freemasons" appears to have penetrated the more secret designs of the sect. He attributes its founding to Cromwell, and he goes into very specific details on this subject. ciés, which he claims to have learned from one of the great masters of Tor- dre (î). If this testimony, collected a century later, amplifies

(1) The tradition, the most generally accepted throughout the 18th century, fai^ going back to the supporters of Charles I*', after the Wuitehall crime, the organisation Freemasonry in a Potential Society. A summary can be seen in the Archi- Literary trends of Europe, by Suard, Morellet, Ségur, etc., no. of January 31, 1805 We must conclude from these contradictory statements, as we have said (book, II,

3

III

34 Freemasonry in the 18th Century

..

perhaps a tradition from which we have, moreover, collected other three echoes (Book II, chapter II, ^ 3), the insistence with which The author emphasizes the regicidal nature of Freemasonry. or a very wonderful premonition, or rather the testimony the lodges. He claims to have frequented a large number of them, namely in England, that is, on the continent.

S III. – The High Degrees. – Illuminism. – The Philosophy

LALETHE. –MartINEZ–PaSCHALIS. –BaINT–MarTIN

The author of the crushed French maps only speaks of Freemasonry. symbolic nonsense, which was therefore the most widespread and which was aimed at the masses. He only heard about va– the organization of high Scottish degrees and philosophical systems, who were trying to supersede English Freemasonry.

We have gathered together (Book II, Chapter 11, 3 and 4, Chapter III, § 2, chap. V, 3) some indications on the origin of the high degrees.

We explained how the Btuartistes had clicked to get involved to establish a foothold for their businesses on the continent.

But after a few years, after the knight's death

In Hamsay (1743), Charles Edward had fallen into the hands of trigants of all kinds and had made himself a source of revenue from the sale of constilulious chains of high grades. Already, in

In 1738, he had conferred upon a Spanish Jew, Marlinez–Pasclialis, the power to establish lodges. If we are to believe a letter

This character, his father, is said to have founded, as early as 1723, lodges in Aix and Mars (Miss (1). For over thirty years. Mar– ti nez–Pascha lis traversed France, clKMchunt to i[n]»larj{er les high ranks in the Synboliri lodges. That's how we

We find him operating in Bordeaux in 1702 (2 days). There, as on chap, II, g iÇ, quo Here P0cii'*l('>s <ic fr.inrs–ma'ons have been playing since the 17th a political role in An.lu erre cl that the clillèfci.is j/ariid avaienl esscyu successi–vemetil (Jo s'uii servir.

(1) V. CCS documents published by the f, '. Henri de Loucelles in the Chaîne d'Union. 1880, pp. 277 cl suiv.

(?) Ibid.

THE HIGHEST GRADES AND THE ILLUMINAS 35

On several points, he encountered strong opposition; but his The influence was nonetheless considerable. We have reported the very important testimony of Joseph de Maistre on this subject (Book. II, chap. V, § 3).

Jewish, and it is impossible not to compare his actions to that of certain Rosicrucians and Hermetics of the 17th century.

In 1723, Naudô, in his Atis to France on the brothers of The Rosicrucians, in their secret doctrine, pointed out the following points hidden in the middle of a jumble of alchemy:

That by their means the Pope's triple diadem will soon be reduced in powder form.

a. That they recognize only two sacraments, with the ceremonies of the primitive Church, renewed by their society.

That they recognize the fourth monarchy of the Emperor of the Rota hands for their leader, as well as for all Christians.

A quarter of a century later, a character whose real name is unknown, but (he calls himself Eyreneo Philalethes, travels the France, England, Holland, America, speaking of a new a new humanitarian religion that must be established. His writings have a A very pronounced Jewish influence. Humanitarianism is evident. already in place of Christianity (1). This is obviously not without a certain prior relationship, that this designation of Philalethes was taken at the beginning of the 18th century by the Toland's group (Book II, Chapter II, § 4) and later by the elevs the most advanced aspects of the sects (book II, chapter V, § 7).

It is generally believed that the Jews were only received from our days in the lodges. Reflectively, they encountered opposition situation when Freemasonry wanted to expand, and it was necessary that it to organize, in order to attract the simple-minded, the mystification called the Christian lodges (see Book II, Chapter VIII, 1). But at the time, pri- In the past, Jews were received in symbolic lodges. The author Freemasons crushed, claiming to have seen three receive in a lodge in London. They were made to swear an oath on the gospel. of St. John, which indicates either a desecration of the holy books

(!) V. History of Hermetic Philosophy accompanied by an annotated catalogue Writers of this science (by Lenglel-Dufornoy), 3 vols. ia 12, Paris, 1742, l. 1, p. 402.

36 Freemasonry in the 18th century

or the existence of specific books in the lodges. Elsewhere, He says that the essence of Freemasonry is to disregard all religious beliefs, to also receive the Jew and the Christian here. (1) and having spread it throughout France, Martinez-Fuschalis disappeared, whether he had to leave Europe for America, as It is commonly believed that he died obscurely, thus as his disciple St. Martin seems to indicate, but the sect does not survived no less. She indulged in the practices of the Heurgy and She made great use of the support she received through her writings. Count of St-Martin, so famous under the name of the unknown philosopher.

Born in Araboise in 1743, into a family of the local nobility, He was initiated in Bordeaux by Martinez-Paschalis. Later, he separated from his disciples, who had their principal headquarters in Lyon (2), because he was averse to the very frequent and sensitive displays and very real in these lodges. He nonetheless propagated them through his writings and conversations, in aristocratic salons, the fake mysticism, which Schroder, St-Germain and Cagliostro exploited so skillfully for the benefit of the revolutionary sect, and which opened the aluminum door, a much more active alternative to Weishaupt's.

We find some interesting indications] Kîs in a correspondence the relationship he had from 1792 to 1797 with a Swiss gentleman, Baron de Kirchberger-Liebistorf, member of the Grand Council of Bern. It revolves mainly around mysticism and the ancients. Authors who have written on this subject:

"In the school I attended more than twenty-five years ago, the communalities of all kinds were numerous and frequent, and I have I had my share* like many others, and in that share all the signs The Repairer's instructions were included (3). However, you are no longer unaware

(1) Around 1750, the lo^es of Bordeaux decided not to receive the Jews, mewe masons rrguliert, ni comme visUour, ni à aucun tilro. {Chaine d'Uunion, t87v, p. 347.) there were therefore no Jews in the inaçoouiurio à ceUu ('p<a{uo.

(2) pans the last loved ones of the old regime, the general lieutenant of the police in Lyon, Anloiuo-Fraçois Prost do Roger, email, under the name of AntouiuS eques ab Aquila, member of the Strict Observance, Grand Prior of France and administrator of of the second province (l.yün) {Allgemeines lianbduch der Freimaurerei bv). This is how the nionnrcliio éiait servie I

(3) Unpublished correspondence of SC de Saint-Yartin with Baron de Kircltberger, published by L. Sebauor (!n-8*, Paris Üeutu tstiü). - Letter of March 6, 17a6 In a later letter dated July 11, 1796, Saint-Martin expressed himself thus: "Our first school has two precious things. I am still tempted to believe that"

THE HIGH GRADES AND THE ENLIGHTENED 37

that this repairer and the active cause are the same thing. Despite this, as I had been led there by an initiation, and that the danger of the initiations

This is what happened to Adam when he initiated himself in his imagination, (Memch) Werdung, Part 3, Chapter 6, No. 1j, and that his desire was not total
As for God, I can only answer through the forms that were communicated. to me were not forms borrowed; for the door is open to all initiations, and that is what makes these paths so erroneous and so suspicious. I know that Germany is full of these initiations; I know that the Berlin cabinet conducts itself and its king only in this way ^
But so far he has no reason to be pleased with it; I finally know that the earth is filled with these wonders; but I repeat to you that unless things
"They don't leave from the kids' center, I don't trust them..."

We have seen (Book I, Chapter II, § 2) what authority Saint-Martin in Germany. During his lifetime, despite his secluded life, he had a considerable nobility, and it is very significant to to note that in 1791 the Legislative Assembly appointed him to Louis XVI as one of his candidates for the office of governor
The young Dauphin's father. To make the representative of the monarchy
A very Christian, enlightened one – what a masterstroke for the sect!

Throughout the Reign of Terror, Saint-Martin lived peacefully.
In his correspondence with Baron de Kirchberger-Liebistorf,
He rarely alludes to the terrible events that were taking place.
So. No doubt, prudence dictated it to him; he lets it to hear it repeatedly. But the crimes of the time did not concern him.
did not cause the horror felt by, for example, the unfortunate Cazotte. On January 6, 1794 (17 Nivôse, Year II), he wrote:

"I hope the political outlook doesn't seem entirely as dark as it was some time ago. For me, I never doubted that Providence should not interfere in our revolution, and it was not possible It's possible she'll back down. I believe more than ever that things will go... their term and will have a very important – and very instructive finale for humankind.

He and his correspondent seem very opposed to impiety.

Martinez-Pasqualis, whom you mentioned (and who, since it must be said, was our master) had the active key to everything that our ciar Boelimo exposes daa.'< his tliéorios, but that he did not believe us or state to bear these high truths.

I am convinced that we would have eventually succeeded if we had kept you.
longer; but scarcely had we begun to speak together when he Death has taken him from us.

38 Freemasonry in the 18th century

brutal, to the crude materialism of the men of the sect of Nî-intense hostility towards the Roman Catholic Church and the regular priesthood that J. de Maistre pointed out in them (book II, chapter V, S 3), unites them in definitive with those whose methods most shock their ins- aristocratic tendencies. They dreamed of a theocratic government- that, like St-Simon and Auguste Comte later, and, in 1797, They thought they were touching their millennium.

We anticipated the history of sects during the Revolution resolution. At the time when Martinez-Paschalis began to introduce In France, the high ranks, around 1750, the Strict system Observance was spreading in Germany. It was being reproduced in its higher grades the allegories of the Uose-Croix (2). 11 spread also in France, concurrently with the various Scottish systems and Martinists.

We have said that we find in the history of the lodges the trace of much opposition was raised against the various systems based on the high ranks; however, these eventually triumphed.

In 1776, a treaty of alliance was concluded between the Directories Scottish and the Grand Orient, according to which the former con served complete freedom to establish chapters of the high ranks within the lodges, the Grand Orient reserving only exclusive jurisdiction over the three symbolic grades (3).

The Stuartites were definitively eliminated; but the Marlinis- The Swedenborgians allied themselves with Weishaupt's Illuminati. and both triumphed at the Willeinsbad convent.

This alliance was further sealed at the Paris convent of 1785. (Book II, Chapter V, 7), in which Cagliostro took an active part, as representing high ranks, despite the scams and crimes of all kinds to which he had just indulged during his stay in Lyon (4).

(1) Ibidem, p. 195 ot seq., ot p, 284.

(2) European Literary Archives, no. of January 31, 1805.

(3) Masonic world, 1880, p. 81.

(i) Caglioslro's stay in Lyon, from 1784 to 1785, A, P, (Anloiiilo Poricaud), Lyon, Kossary's imprimorio, in-8* (1832).

PE 1760 to 1789

#

TÈRE GiioISEÜL JUSQÜ'a LA CONSTITUTION DU GrAND-

East.

After 1760, Freemasonry experienced a great boom. The destmc-
The Jesuits completely occupy Choiseul's ministry:
there is no longer any question of the police orders that prohibited the assets of Freemasons; in the lodge registers
From this period, we see the inclusion of the councilors in a large number of figures.
to the parliaments and magistrates of the bailiwicks (1).

The appointment of the Duke of Chartres, in 1772, as grand master of the Grand National Lodge or Grand Orient, finished hasten the movement. The highest-ranking figures hastened rent to be initiated: it was like a way of doing their court; in the provinces, the momentum was followed. Between 1772 and In 1785, in every town, in every regiment, one sees to form lodges through the initiative of the upper classes of society society. Even clergymen are not afraid to do so part. We are no longer concerned about the excommunications brought by Clément XII and renewed by Benedict XIV.

The great influence that the Jesuits exerted on education
Moreover, the youth movement did not make its presence felt in this new development. generation. Religious defense is also weak at this time* that the attack is bold.

High-ranking magistrates, intendants such as M. de La-Koré, in Besançon, Mr. Leberthon, First President of Parliament In Bordeaux, they are not afraid of being at the lodges. These take advantage of every public event to assert themselves at the top outside of an institution, and they engage in activities to that end acts of philanthropy to which they give prominence theatrical.

In Bordeaux, in 1775, they took a public part in the festivities to celebrate the return of Parliament, the pre-

(1) See, among others, H. de Louceiles, General History of Freemasonry in Normandy (1739 to 1875;, in>S", Uieppe, printing house of f.*. Qmile Dclov.igo, 1873.

40 The Freemasonry in the XVIII* CENTURY

First President Leberthon was one of them, moreover. "The Francs-superb triumphal arch... The Venerable harangued M, Lebertuna and invited him to the prepared meal (1).

Father Desebamps published the considerable chiler which They had arrived, about seven hundred of them. There were even some... in the smallest towns; thus, in Normandy one could find them in Pavilly, in Gournay, in Caudeboe, in La Ferlé-Mare, in Carenton, in Isigny, in Pagny-sur-Eure. They were also trying to establish some in the countryside. The same is true in Aunis, Sainlonge and Angoumois. Cognac, Oléron, Saint-Jean-d'Angély, Marennes, Aulnay-en-Poitou has lodges like Saintes, Angoulême, and Rochefort (2).

When we went through the lists of lodges from that period, we sees it as a reflection of the society of those times: France-Freemasonry loudly proclaims, in its statutes, absolute equality men's view: all distinctions drawn from social conditions Commercials are ephemeral; nobles, bourgeois, artisans will therefore make them part in the same capacity. However, the various classes have a a tendency to separate, to form distinct lodges. This is very visible, particularly in Troyes: we take this example between a hundred others like them.

A lodge had been founded in that city as early as 1751. It reconstituted in 1773 under the title of Union and Sincerity and Until 1790, it displayed great activity. One of its Deputies, including Milony, took part in the work of the constitution in 1777. tuition of the Grand Orient. It has about fifty members brothers who all belong to the upper middle class. As for the As members of the nobility, they initially kept to themselves. But soon they enter a military lodge, the Regularity, which for the officers of the 2nd company of the King's bodyguard, then garrisoned in Troyes, and whose composition is very aristocratic. It is the Duke of Crussol (who, on March 2, 1787, came reinstalled in the name of the Grand Orient. At the same time, the new-

(1) Historical journal of the evolution carried out by Maupeou, t. VII, p. 217.

(2) V. un très intéressant mémoire de .VI. Jules; Péliou sur les loges maçonniques de l'Angoumois, de r.Vuai3 and la Suintonge, read at the meeting of the companies scholars at the Sorbonne, April 21, 1881. The kind author was kind enough to communicate the following document with a bicavoilliMicu duil nous 'ouons & lui osprimer ici toillK DULru gralittulc.

FROM 1760 TO 1789 41

The old lodge decides to admit to its work the most honest people from the city.

grades and those of approval were very high (8 louis for the first 24 pounds for the first grade, 24 pounds for the other grades, and 5 louis for the affiliates; for the military, the rights respectively removed from 6 louis, 12 livres, 72 livres). It is therefore not surprising that the war chest of the Revolution (Book II, Chapter V, § 9) had been so abundantly provided, although certainly very little of the Members of the lodges suspected what use was to be made of their contributions.

Although composed of different social elements, the two lodges maintained very frequent contact. Their delegates assisted each other in their work (1). Above all, the dependence on the Grand Orient was becoming increasingly energetic. To feel and bring the scattered groups back to unity: thus, it attracts gradually, the lodges founded by the St. John lodge came under its authority. of Jerusalem of Bordeaux which itself went back to Martinez-Paschalis (2).

Within the Grand Orient itself, both elements are easy to be distinguished. Take the State of the Grand Orient for the year 1777, The list of honorary officers includes the biggest names of France. They are the ones who preside over the extraordinary gatherings of the lodges; but the reality of power belongs to the chamber of administration to the chamber of Paris and to the chamber of provinces. They are composed of men from the Third Estate, lawyers, and... doctors, men of letters. From that date onwards, we see the inclusion of Dr. Guillotin, Bignon, Guy Pingré, Savalette de Langes, who was expected to play such an important role in the revolutionary explosion. He is the secretary of the Grand Orient and is in charge of monitor all printings relating to Freemasonry: by Among them, there is only one man of high birth, Moreton of C..., who was therefore heavily involved in Templar rites.

The Grand Orient, once constituted and placed under the direction of the Duke of Orléans, exerted on Freemasonry at the same time a work concentration and a purification process.

(1) 2/1 Freemasonry in Troyes. by Emile Socart, in the Memoirs of the Academic Society of the Department of Aube, Volume XLI, 1877.

(2) V. mo.ajoire cited from il. Joies Péliissoa and History of Freemasonry in Normandy, by the f.*. de Loucollcs,

42 La Franc-Maçonnerie in the 18th century

•J

The diversity of social elements, which were brought together by the brotherhood

The Grand Orient decided, through two successive circulars, that the Craftsmen will not be able to do so by way of the lodges. He explains in a This very serious attack on the principle of equality "To be silent," he said, "the masters of arts and crafts do not have independence." The dance required by Freemasonry, they can fall themselves in need and no longer able to take part in the works of philanthropy, which is the object of the order There is, it seems to us, a pretext for expression here, that the true directors of the lodges reserved the right to apply com they renlendaicnl; for, in the states of the Grand Orient of the an- In subsequent years, we see, notably, a certain number bre d'artisans figurer comme vê'uh'ablca des logos.

The task of concentration consisted of bringing back all the lodges who practiced the symbolic grades under the obedience of the Grand Orient, while leaving the workshops of the high gnules to function to function within their ranks; to defend the lodges from being engaged in public places, which removed the guarantees of secrecy and made it pre- to dominate the character of a gathering of pleasure which had hitherto been theirs there served as a mask; to suppress rheredib* the functions of veneration rables; finally, to impose Icrenoiivclk'inentdn as the watchword of the lo- every six months. Thanks to this latest measure, Elahlie definitively established by a circular dated the 21st day of the 9th month of the year born in 1778, secret communications, made through the intermediary diary of the lodges, present an unknown security in the pass.

In 1774, the Grand Orient attempted to group the lodges into so many nudes in the provinces, Masonic pics: there would have been in each generality a provincial logo-mèn'provinciale which served him as an intermediary with the local lodges, and thus given beautiful this made its action more effective; but these people were concerned few of those organizations, which deprived them of their autonomy and increased their contributions (I). The project had to be abandoned given a few attempts.

(1). See the cited memorandum by Mr. Jules Pélissou.

WHAT DID GALLICANISM SERVE?

When we browse the lists of lodge members, we are struck by the relatively considerable number of ecclesiastics and of religious figures who are part of it.

Read, for example, the General History of Freemasonry in Normandy by the late 19th century, from Loucelles; one sees in almost all the lodges, established at that time, of the priests, the canons. This fact had not occurred at the time of the founding of the lodges in the mid-place of the century. Had the Gallican priests come to ignore the very serious censures imposed by the sovereign pontiffs, or Should we see their presence within the lodges as proof of the corruption which, at that time, had gained a share of the first state order, which was bound to lead to so many defections during the Civil constitution of the clergy? Both explanations are true. Both, depending on the person.

At that time, there were convents that were transformed in the boxes almost en masse.

Thus, the lodge La Triple Unité was founded in Fécamp in 1778. by twenty people, among whom there are nine Benedictine religious abbots of the abbey, a priest, three cantors of the abbey and seven brothers belonging to the best society in the city (1).

In Champagne, we also note the presence of nom- religious figures in the lodges:

On March 6, 1785, we find in the minutes of the lodge Union and Sincerity that "a letter was sent by Mr. Galien, re- <t religious of Glairvaux, by which he appears to be asking to establish in "His place was a regular lodge." The lodge of Troyes, which was then in all its expansive force, welcomed this opening ture. Also on the 28th of the same month. Lodge of Virtue in the East of Glair- Vaux – as she is called – wrote again to the one in Troyes, inviting him to appoint members of parliament to come and visit his works, in order to to then obtain constitutions from the Grand Orient of France. Three

(1) H. de Loucelles, Uisl. General of Masonry in Normandy^ p. 134. The other Ecclesiastical authority must intervene, because in 1780 the religious withdrew en masse t the logo, p. 135.

44 Freemasonry in the 18th century

deputies were appointed, the V.'. ir.. Bertrand, the fr.'. Odin she fr.. Dhuyelle. The account they gave of their visit and the reading of The tracing boards of Clairvaux led the lodge of Troyes to support the request drawn up by the friars of the East of Clairvaux to obtain Constitutions of the Grand Orient. These constitutions were obtained immediately. She was even put in charge of installing the new lodge with all possible speed. Three deputies were appointed to the ballot; the ff.. .,. Odin, Adino and do Montineau, to transport themselves at Clairvaux. It seems that the abbey of Clairvaux. – because the news lodge had formed in her care – was impatient to see the arrival of the day of her installation; the following April 20, she was elected deputy for Dreux.* at the lodge in Troyes to expedite this ceremony, assuring that the ff.*. .' deputies would have all the necessary approvals and freedom to proceed with this installation, even with the written consent of the procure and other officers of Clairvaux Abbey. It was only at the month of July following the installation, as can be seen by the tracing board of August 15, 1780 (1).

The lodge La Régularité^ forinCe in Trdyes, as we have said, by the officers of the second company of the guards of the body, had established itself in premises rented by the Cordeliers fathers of this city. Soon some of them were incorporated there. Among the admissions of March 4, 1787, we note that of the re-Antoine Germain, a religious, superior of the convent and that of Brother Henry, prosecutor.

In Dieppe, it was the Miniine religious order who melted open Position with the ordinary to enter Freemasonry. Here is this that we read in a History of the lodge of Üb-Louis^ created in this city in 1760:

Mac. had many admirers; in religious congregations her of this era. Lise/. the minutes of the meeting of October 7, 1873 and

Think about it. Brother Hamel has just died! Despite the appeals tions of the ff.. . at the Parish Priest of Saint-Jacques, a funeral service is refused. The religious Minims, through the intermediary of F.-, De.«cassins, They spontaneously offer to provide this service... The Reverend Father Minim Erasmus Duchateau goes further, he offers to perform this ceremony according to the rite of the de The convent chapel is decorated with this style. The choir is draped in black in its entirety. The gentle lodges, the Venerable Masters at the head, the L.,, of adoptio in pomp at the convent of the Minims religious, where the service is celebrated Masonically. All the FF.*, religious, attended this magnificent ceremony. The ceremony was a formal affair. The costs were paid by the community, which refused any salary.

(1) Freemasonry in Troyes, by Imilo Socart. Memoirs of the Society academician of the Aube department, t. XI.I, 1877.

A few days later, Erasmus Duchateau came to request initiation. I don't need to tell you, my Brothers, that his entry was ac-shouted by the masons.

"My soul still filled with the sweet emotion caused by our presence"
In his temple, he delivered, according to the official record, a powerful speech, of energy and eloquence that moved all the Freemasons.*. *. »

In that same year (1788), Charles Delacroix, parish priest of Rouse-Mesnil, The 70-year-old man was initiated. The younger brother, Jean-Baptiste Maillard de la Martinière, a captain in the Poitou regiment, gave him his hand and guided him in his symbolic journeys (1).

In Guise, in 1774, it was in the Minims' own convent. that the lodge La Franchise is established.

"We left from the East of St-Quentin," said a relative of time, at 7 a.m. Arrived at the Or. *. of Guise at 10 a.m. and descended, at the gracious invitation extended to us, to the conventual house of:; RR. *. . PP., . Minims, whose supé-Rieur received us with the most sincere welcome, and who, by his gestures, words, etc... he revealed himself to us as a mason, and immediately to Venerable Master of the aforementioned lodge, at the Or., of Guise... The installation was marked by an admirable speech by F . Loth R.. P.*, Minim.

The lodge of Guise was represented at the G.'. O., by F.. Loth.
Do we want to know how this MP understood his obligations? What read the letter he addressed to the Grand Orient of France on February 5, 1776:

My state and my commitments call me to Brussels.

(1) In the lodge on the Ile de la Réunion, a similar event had occurred, if it must be
According to this account published in the Masonic Mold of June 1877, p. 55:

"Brother Derieul de Roland (Ils, has just published a very useful procedural summary*" Interesting history of Freemasonry on Réunion Island. Our institute
The tuition shone brightly on that island. It counted among its members the Bomiuos remained celebrated in Laos, the Masonic fasts: the Beurnonville brothers, of Ponds, sons, the governor Ripaud Ponlaudeverl, the governors Farquhar and Roating, etc... But we must not forget, says the author of the summary, Brother Collin who, parish priest of Ste-Marie, was part of the Triple Union of St-Benoû, at the closing of that lodge is affiliated as a Rosicrucian to Perfect Harmony^ giving, and for the price of its qualities and its affiliation,)a masso of the dead and the mass
"The &:-Jean, which he will say every year for the workshop." Brother Collin's leltie is still in the lodge's archives. This fact is, in fact, quite original, for me

46 Paanc-Masonry in the 18th century

"to preach the next Lent at the court of Prince Charles;
"My status and my Masonic commitments require that I not leave"
"Not rOr.'. do Paris without warning you, begging you, TT. JJ.FF.,
"to take into account the reasons for my absence, without diminishing in any way the "zeal and fervor that I will always be proud to show for
"The A.R., and the sentiments with which, etc."

The Franchise within its ranks the FF.', of Martigny, lieutenant-general of the ducal bailiwick; Desmoulins, lieutenant-general of the bailiwick royal; Leynoux de la Framboisière, reporting commissioner for the item of honor; Menechet du Ilaquet; Violette de Bretagne; de la Beyrie Cavenue, superior of the Minims, venerable; Dercassins and Loth, Minim friar; Leynoux de la Framboisière, canon of Guise, and Menechet, canon of Origny. (1)

In Bordeaux, the general lodge of July 22, 1759, dealt with the religious Freemasons and decided that "in the future he would be asked to religious laypeople who would present themselves for initiation if the The statutes of their order did not impose an obligation on them to disclose to reveal to their leader the secrets of Freemasonry and that in this case They would be refused. » Some responded satisfactorily doing, because 16 2'! September 1770 \iL Frenchwoman of Aquitaine toa-Creta to admit religious brothers free of charge to its banquets of all orders. It must be said that every year the lodges do know how to celebrate a mass for their festive occasion! (2). The simple people could be mistaken.

We see, on the list of members of one of the lodges in Annonay, said Father Bélat, men such as Abbot Mourmeson and Abbot MontgolBer, canon of the collegiate church, of the Reverend Father Pounet, provincial of the Cordeliers, of Abbot Bonlils, parish priest of Annonay, of Abbot Froroageot, prior of Goudargues. The bourgeoisie, then liberal, was there. represented by members of the most honorable families of Anno nay, and we see many names of the nobility of the surrounding area (3).

The situation in Maine is roughly the same.*

"For about half a century," said Dom Piolin, "associations Masonic activities had made deplorable progress in our province.

(1) Le Monde maçonnique, May 188t, p. 4.

t2) Chain of Union of 1882, p. 348.

(3) – 1881, pp. 192, 193.

WHAT WAS THE GALLIEANISMFI 47 USED FOR?

Members of the clergy had entered, and canons were reported. of St-Pierre-de-la-Cour as notoriously affiliated with these companies, including The primary goal is the destruction of Catholicism. What is certain Damn, it's because several of these canons professed the doctrines philosophical views most contrary to Revelation. The cis- abbeys the ternéennes of Epan-Clermont and Fontaine-Daniel were considered very lax in terms of discipline; these rumors had too real a foundation; we nevertheless ensured ourselves by irrefutable testimonies that took place in each of these meetings, Until their last day, a few religious men led exemplary lives... Philosophical doctrines had not, in proportion, achieved as much progress among the nobility of our province. (1).

The discipline and morals of the clergy suffered greatly from this neglect of Church discipline, into which so many clerics had fallen siastics. In Maine, the trade union assembly of 1788 and the ass The assembly of the clergy for the elections to the Estates-General were marked driven by a great insubordination against the venerable bishop of Le Mans, Mgr de Joulfroy Gonsans, when the monastic orders ques fureut abolis, les religieux de l'abbaye de l'Epan ainsique the U.' collars of the Fléché quiillèrent en musse their monastery (2).

These are painful details to recall; but history has its rights and its lessons. Some fault always preceded the major crimes: the canons and Freemason religious figures are the explanation of the sworn and apostate priests, that, thanks to God and the form of discipline of our contemporary clergy, we We will never see each other again, whatever the misfortunes of the times.

The priests, from that time onward, – and they formed the im- The majority of the clergy–severely judged those of their colleagues who were members of the lodges. Mr. Mathieu, in his A truly remarkable book: The Old Regime in Lorraine many details were taken from the diary of the priest of St-Clément, a strict priest, very learned in morals; now, here is how this priest recounts a scandal that happened right before his eyes;

"1774. D. Bernard Malin, prior of Beaupré, has just had removed, by lettre de cachet, D. Ricatte, his religious brother, and has him taken to (!' Uom Piolin, History of the Church of Le Mans during the ReooluUon, vol. I, pp. 7, 12, 13, 14.

(2) Ibid., pp. 148–149.

40 Freemasonry in the 18th century

Sept-Fonds. We do not know the cause of this violent and scandalous act. them. This superior is not one to stay put; he is He himself is a Freemason, a gambler, and associates with people who speak rather rudely. of Religion (Ij. »

§ C. – The Episcopate and Freemasonry

ON THE EARLY DAYS OF REVOLUTION

Among the bishops, some indulged in an in fatal dulce. One of the most culpable in this regard was Bishop de Conzié, appointed archbishop of Tours by the favor of Brienne who had employed him, in 1778, on the commission of regulars, tasked with secularizing the monasteries, under the pretext of reform. In several letters addressed to Brienne, we see that among the Cordeliers there were a number of free-masons. Bishop de Conzié sought them out in preference, because to place them at the head of the convents that he was uniting with each other others (2). In this affair, Bishop de Conzié had found himself in opposition with many of his colleagues in the episcopate, no particularly with the venerable Bishop of Quimper, Mgr de St-Luc, which we will have to talk about soon.

At the same time, a bishop of Savoy, Bishop Biord, had also to crack down on Freemason Cordeliers. We borrow read the following account in Le Monde maçonnique (3), which reproduced it himself, according to the Swiss Masonic newspaper VALPINA. In the middle of his venomous tale, we will see the no less zeal shine forth that of the long patience of this holy bishop.

In tTG-l, Freemasonry was emerging from a long lethargic sleep. that and set foot on the fertile soil of Savoy, depilated by the monarchy and the clergy.

(1) The Old Regime in the Province of Lorraine, in-S, p. 85.

(2) Cos lollrcsont ôlo published by M. Oorin in the Revue des queslions histo-riques, l. XVII, pp. 112, 113, 1875 Happrüchoineiit caraclérislique. The family of Conzié had been the great champion of Llobospierro in his early days in Arras. do ses égarements, commo t-mi d'auircs, .sous lo coup des événements, Mgr do Conzié In 1790, he joined the bishops' protest against the Civil Constitution of the Clergy. and died a Christian in The Hague in 1795. See Biography of Miebaud.

(3) N« of December 1880.

Convents and monasteries were plentiful in Savoy; but, uh Fortunately, among the religious there were intelligent and generous women fertile natures, understanding the miseries of the people and associating themselves with legitimate expectations.

Considering the critical situation in which he arrived at headquarters episcopal, Bishop Biord – appointed in this same year bishop of Geneva, residing in Annecy, – captivated his clergy with his zeal and through his zeal in creating new churches and new presbyteries; He won the favor of the masses through the establishment of schools and institutes. charitable trusts (i).

To consolidate clerical power, to wage war against philosophical evolution phique, by gradually seizing all the points where instruction A secular approach could have made the torch of truth shine with a brighter light. Order, such was Bishop Biord's plan. In the fervor of his zeal and upon learning of the existence of Masonic lodges within his diocese, He rages against them. Chambéry, Annecy, Thonon, St-Julien, Ru-Milly, Evian, etc., became the 'phylloxera-ridden joints,' where the clergy had to use the episcopal remedy to destroy the insect.

Pulpits are being uttered with words of condemnation against societies secretive activities and threats against their members. And this adds to the Holy terror will intensify the struggle; this is the strange news. that religious figures have joined Freemasonry, and this at the disregard for the excommunication pronounced by Pope Benedict XIV.

On the other hand, Bishop Biord had received confidences from an officer already advanced in rank. This officer told him he had been frightened oaths were required, and he was subjected to an ordeal where a dagger was placed in his hands, telling him to defend himself against any prince, king, etc. power that would seek to hinder freedom.

This statement confirmed the bishop in his own judgments; From then on, he openly denounced Freemasonry as a danger for society, the throne and the altar.

The opening of the Rumilly lodge provides the pretext for a correspondence pondance, which reached the king. At the urging of Bishop Biord, His Majesty sent successive orders to the commander Mr. Desolières so that he would have to close the lodges not only in Rumilly, but also in Chambéry and Annecy, which is accomplished successively vement in all the Savoyard towns where they had taken up residence density.

It remained for the bishop to discover which religious figures could be free-masons, in order to act against them with certainty and rigor.

(t) We will note in passing this testimony, wrested from hatred and returned to zeal, that needs of the times.

III

50 THE FRANG'MAÇONNERIB in the 18th CENTURY

Bishop Biord began with the Cordeliers of Annecy, affiliated in sufficient numbers a large number at the lodge known as Sie[^]Marie,

Complaints had already been made to the king against Father Montaut, provincial of the Custody of Savoy. The oldest religious figures were trying to exert a despotic authority and to have[^] at the time of the last chapter, sidelined the best subjects of the order and tolerated the participation of some fathers in lodge meetings

Armed with these documents, the court of Turin warned Bishop Biord that Such disorder could not be tolerated and it was necessary to demand to the Pope the suppression of this religious house, as well as that of Evian, whose religious figures were accused of facilitating smuggling.

It was a complete revelation for the bishop.

His surprise was even greater when Father Montaut came to him to announce that, by order of the king, those who had been imprudent enough to be admitted to the Ste-Marie lodge would be divided into the houses of the Custody and replaced by other religious orders until the arrival of the chapter.

The general of the Jesuit order (???) (1) having been informed of this event, he himself came from Rome to gather information; he consulted Tata, the dissension existing among the religious leaders, and the relaxation of their discipline. He immediately went to the court of Turin, and there he learned that there was talk of abolishing the Cordeliers convent in Annecy, to convert it into a bishopric, and to cede the church to the canons for the cathedral.

Bishop Biord was consulted for the execution of this delicate point. He, sensing that he was about to lose the sympathies of the most religious figures prominent figures in his diocese replied that it was better to attempt a reform and keep these religious figures.

But then, by order of the Pope, someone arrives in Chambéry on Father Honoreo Marcantini of Sommariva, with the title of Vicar Apostolic. He had received from the Pope, in agreement with the King, a mission to establish in the Cordeliers house in Annecy the reform, of the strict observance advance according to the rule of St. Francis of Assisi or to proceed to a secularization. He first warned the religious leaders, and made them feel the need to return to the spirit of their vocation, through the practice of

This meaning applies not only to the Cordeliers of Annecy, but also to those of Évian, from Cluses, Moutiers, Mians and Chambéry Everywhere he encountered formal opposition from religious leaders.

Their community was dissolved on August 24, 1781 by a papal brief. Clement XIV.

(I) At the time this story takes place, the Jesuits had been abolished by Clement XIV (1773).

The Episcopate on the eve of the Revolution 51

The Freemason religious figures distributed themselves among the houses of Franciscans in Savoy and Italy. As for their house in Annecy and to its dependencies, they were granted to the bishop, and their church with all his furniture and sacred vessels passed both to the bishop and to the chapter. This liquidation was completed by Father Salietti.

The Freemason religious of Savoy, stripped of their possessions by their mother church, gave a great example of the strength of their convictions and their loyalty: they continued not only to frequent Masonic lodges^ but also to include the most capable subjects their order's members.

As for Bishop Jean-Pierre Biord, who believed he had destroyed the a philosophical seed planted on the soil of Savoy, he died on March 7th 1785.

As early as 1776, the Bishop of Quimper, Mgr Conen de Saint-Luc viewed Freemasonry as the main center of the impiety and the revolutionary spirit. The following episode that we were piling up on the touching tale of PX Pouplard: A martyr in the final days of the Terror, Victory of St. Luke (1), shows the vigilant foresight of this prelate at work, and in At the same time, the sect was taking over all the powers public.

In 1776, Bishop de Saint-Luc had summoned about forty clergy* scholars of his diocese, distinguished by their learning and eloquence and their virtues in order to give the jubilee, in the form of a mission, in its episcopal city. Among the subjects of major importance on which It was deemed necessary to educate the people; a common ac Freemasonry, which was involved in more than one class of citizens the most deplorable. The country folk themselves were seduced by emissaries of the sect who promised to make them rich, provided that they pay, upon enlisting, a certain sum which is given to them gave a receipt.

Moreover, the scandal and damage caused by the clan assemblies
The lodge's frequent and dubious activities were all too well known. as the principal chiefs held a rank and an office in the city!
The qualities that made them formidable meant there were obvious risks involved.
laugh, by openly attacking the sect.

The bishop, whose conscience could not resign itself to hesitation

(1) One theft. in-18, Lille, St-Augustio printing house, 1882.

These facts, completely unknown until now, are taken from manuscript memoirs.
writings of Abbot Boissière.

52 Freemasonry in the 18th Century

Faced with a real danger to souls, he declared to the missionaries that It was his responsibility, as the first pastor, to expose himself first and foremost and, after having thought it over carefully before God, after having sought the advice of cooperative members, it was decided that it became all the more necessary and ur
It was a matter of raising their voices, as the Freemasons were saying loudly that "The bishop would not dare to do it." The prelate therefore mounted the pulpit, and, in the presence of a huge crowd and people from the sect, who had come In fairly large numbers to swell the audience, he attacked the Freemason negativity, both in its principles and its consequences; it unveiled a part of her depravity; he showed that it was opposed to the laws of the State as well as those of the Church; in short, he argued with a apostolic zeal all the reasons and motives that should have distanced to manage these assemblies every good Christian as well as every good citizen and every faithful subject.

This speech made a profound impression on the audience; it was the talk of the town.
many in Quimper and the diocese. As for the Freemasons, dis Feigning resentment and ill will, they merely did inform Bishop de Saint-Luc that, if a second negotiation were to take place
This matter, as he had announced, would lead to him being denounced in court.
This threat could not intimidate the holy bishop; it encouraged him.
rather than deliver a final blow to the sect. He did so, and with a new vigor, the day before the mission's conclusion. Upon returning home, he found in the vestibule of the palace a summons that had been thrown there to Rinsu of his people, and who ordered him to appear the next day before the criminal lieutenant "to testify as a witness on a ser my sermon in the cathedral, circumstances and dependencies, etc. » My
The lord had a plea of decline served on the King's attorney. The decline
The appeal was not accepted, and a new summons was issued to the prelate. He then felt obliged to appear before the tribunal; there he already offered other witnesses, mostly chosen deliberately, and pro ready to embark on the project of stirring up a serious affair with His Lordship laughing. The criminal lieutenant ordered the complaint to be read aloud. brought against the Bishop of Quimper. My lord, seeing that he is interpretation and a twist worthy of the most refined chicanery and

The most cunning one then takes up the pen himself, and to prevent any Surprised and affected by the bad luck, he wrote his deposition in these terms: * Toussaint-François-Joseph Gonen de Saint-Luc, bishop of "Quimper... declared that he only appeared here to obey the law-
"and to give his diocesans the example he owes them in all "genre; but that, as soon as there is talk of a sermon preached by him,
He has nothing to deposit, being accountable for his doctrine only to God and "to his superiors in the hierarchical order, etc."

Nevertheless, Your Grace, to fulfill his religious obligation...

The Episcopate on the eve of the Revolution

gion and his dignity, felt it his duty to instruct the Keeper of the Seals and The general agents of the clergy of what was happening. The first ordered the presidial court of Quimper to send him the procedure.
ce; and shortly afterwards, he wrote to the prelate to give him advice that he had sent, on behalf of the King, following the Council of State, the place criminal prosecutor and King's attorney. My Lordship, who was then in during pastoral visits, he hastened to reply to Mr. the warden of seals and to beg him most earnestly to send back the two magistrates in their positions. But, despite the reasons that the cha the bishop's order alleged in his letter, the Minister of Justice the rights
He stayed in Paris for several months.

From that time until his death, His Grace put everything into work to prove to these two magistrates how far removed he was from to retain the slightest memory of their shortcomings towards him; he He showed them on every occasion full consideration and attention.
born of delicacy, and rendered them all the services that depended on him.

While the Minister of Justice acted as we have just to say it and punish the magistrates who had so publicly insulted the Bishop of Quimper, Cardinal de la Roche-Aymon, Minister of the sheet of profits, informed on his side of the persecutions and the disasters the feelings he was experiencing led to his appointment, without warning, to the bishopric he was from Saint-Flour, and in announcing this transfer to him, he was making him to consider the advantages he would find in this new seat. Bishop of Saint Luke was very touched by the goodwill of the cardinal-minister, but he hastened to write to her, after having expressed his gratitude sance, "that His Eminence already had to reproach himself before God for <t having placed him on the seat of Quimper; but that, since the Provi-
"Having thus allowed it, he would not leave his wife... That the "Fear of the persecutions themselves had not appeared to Saint For Francis de Sales and so many other great bishops, one motive was sufficient.
"sant to change seats, and that he was determined to imitate them at least

"deep recognition and at the same time his formal refusal... That at
"He remained, he hoped, with God's grace, to win through his good deeds—"
"those of his flock who had strayed from the sentiments they
"They owed it to their pastor..."

Cardinal de la Roche-Aymon having shown this letter to the king Louis XVI, His Majesty was greatly edified by this and did not insist on that Bishop de Saint-Luc should change his seat.

54

LA. FjtANC-MASONRY IN THE 13TH CENTURY

7. – The concerns of an honest Freemason

IN 1785.

We repeat once again, although the most prelates Enlightened people consider Freemasonry a dangerous breeding ground of errors and even conspiracies, good number of people upper classes, nobility, even the clergy, were making themselves illusion about its scope. In those days of Gallicanism, it was repeated willingly Index non viget in GalUa, what a man of wit has translated as: "We do not want to lose the precious right of
"We are mistaken in France."

The conduct of many Freemasons who, during the Revolution, showed great loyalty to the monarchy, until tifie that appreciation. We have before us a number considerable number of speeches were delivered in the lodges at that time:
Most are filled with warm sentiments about virtue, duty, love of men; the lodge meeting provided their authors, they constantly remind us, at least, of the means of better to cultivate these feelings.

However, all these discourses exude naturalism and the exaltation of human reason; revealed religion has passed either silenced or drowned in a haze of empty phrases. It was
It is already a great deal for the sect to take away the Church's role cial and to separate morality from its teachings. The lodges contributed in this way, along with all the philosophical literature of the time, to dethrone Christianity. Even if they had done only that, a considerable share of responsibility in the final catastrophe should be allocated to them: we have proof of this in the abandonment among upper-class men, even in families more devoted to the throne and the altar.

Sometimes, however, honest people were astonished by certain bold remarks were being made around them in the boxes. We owe it to the kindness of the Marquis de Virieu the communication of a very curious document in this regard, and which dated 1781 or 1785.

CONCERNS OF AN HONEST FREEMASON IN 1785 53

Its author was obviously driven by ideas and feelings the most irreproachable. He thought he noticed that Franc-ma- stupidity, she was coming from the straight path... she forgot her origin spotless... He shares his impressions with his brothers and their in discourse on the means of improvement. His speech is entitled; Observations on the circular invitation to a fraternal convent eternal, written by the council of friends assembled by an annal nyme. (Cf. Book II, chap. V, 7.)

At the top of the first page is this verse from the Proverbs verbs: Hominis animam preparare and domini gubernare Un- Guam.

After having said that the creation of higher grades is re- center, that it is wrong to represent them as giving the true science, he adds.

I will confine myself to pointing out to you that the allegories of the pre- The first degrees never make one view science as anything other than a reward. thinks of virtue. I therefore think that it is by straying from the true the spirit of Freemasonry that some brothers, seduced by illusion that the other grades present, imagined that it contained truths hidden secrets, which could only be discovered through a series of investigations ches and correspondences. And I will conclude that, the truth being super While they may be the conduit for human institutions, they can also serve as institutions never the deposit, because the truth, always active, circulates and does not stop Never rest. I therefore think that to restore Freemasonry to its primitive institution and derive all the advantages that it can offer To understand, we must limit ourselves to destroying prejudices, which impair faculties. the traits of man, to remind him of primitive equality, of the feeling of the existence of his soul, his correspondence with his author, to the ob observance of the duties that derive from his relationship with God and his similar and prove it to him, through lessons, or even better through examples ples, that he can only find his happiness in the laws emanating from Divine wisdom... Such is the desire of a brother zealous for all that interests his peers, desiring to see them follow the simple path, from which he derived the greatest advantage, that of the entire conQanco in divine providence.

That is surely the language of a good man. He had suffered the enthusiasm of his time in believing he would find the practice of virtue in a new society instead of being content with practices of religion. A little reflection and perspicacity made him to glimpse frightening thoughts from behind, as Pascal said, in the machinations of those who led the lodges. His state of mind dutétrc that of many honest Freemasons, at the time where events began to take shape and where they saw the part that the lodges took.

56 Freemasonry in the 18th century

§. 8. – Freemasonry in the Netherlands

0

Austrians.

We have published (Volume II, Appendix A) an episode of the propagation of Masonic principles in the countries– Austrian stockings. Much more extensive information are provided on similar facts by two interesting sources memoirs on the propaganda of the French encyclopedists in Belgium gique, who shared the prize in 1879, in an open competition by the Royal Academy of Belgium. One of them is authored by Mr. Kuntziger, a liberal writer—we know the meaning of this name in Belgium; – the other, Mr. Henri FrancoLe, one of the young public The ciders of this country that show the most promise.

In 1756, a French writer, enrolled in the brotherhood of encyclopedists and who served in their ranks with great Pierre Rousseau, an active participant, conceived the project of establishing one day literary and philosophical center in the city of Liège. This helit the country was then the seat of a dependent ecclesiastical principality of the Empire. By virtue of its political status and position, it offered very large facilities to operate throughout Europe. Circuits particular constants, as we shall see, allowed Pierre Rousseau believed that he would find in that ecclesiastical principality siasliquc plus de liherlô, même (pi'en France, pour la propagation philosophical ideas[])lii([Ucs. There was, in eirel, i)Our prolecteur and in– Introducer, Count of Ilorion, canon and grand provost of the prince– Bishop Theodore of Bavaria.

“People may be surprised,” said Mr. Kuntziger, “to see the Prime Minister the prince–bishop's favor to grant his protection to one of the sect's followers pliilosnpliique. But we must not forget that this man was himself involved as the prince's ambassador, and had witnessed the movement

IN THE AUSTRIAN NETHERLANDS

57

who fascinated everyone. A man learned in the arts and letters, he did not share the narrow ideas of the Liège clergy and did not he couldn't have asked for anything better than to foster a literary renaissance in the principality, by welcoming French writers there. Here the portrait left to us by a contemporary: "Incomparable in Politics, said Vevarth, educated in secular sciences, with a taste exquisite in fine literature, perhaps more versed than required by the faith in fashionable criticism, he was not the first of his kind in neither theological sciences nor Christian instruction.

Lecomte d'Horionet, his brother, who removed the Grand Mayor of Liège, They were Tun and the other Freemasons. Upon his arrival, they filled They showered Rousseau with favors and privileges. In particular, they did exempting his newspaper from ecclesiastical ceremonial restrictions, the great pre-vôt reserving to himself the right to remind him of the principles caution, if he deviated from it.

P. Rousseau set to work under the most favorable, and quickly gained 1,500 subscribers. Some dim allowances for postage costs were granted to him in France and in Germany. Lemagne. The sect carried and supported him. "Voltaire and all "His friends enthusiastically joined an enterprise which "They knew the true purpose and appreciated its usefulness to the cause." "commune". (as its title indicated, the Journal Ency- The clopédique was, in fact, an echo of the famous dictionary. In all On this occasion, Rousseau affirmed solidarity with the doctrines. philosophers of Paris. He had called upon a certain Abbé Yvon, whose portrait was thus drawn by a contemporary: "He was He was widely criticized in Paris for his religion, his morals, and his affairs. with some of those who work on the Encyclopedia."

Mr. Francotte very subtly outlines the hypocritical methods used by the journalist to insinuate his doctrines:

Those who would read it today, without knowing exactly to whom they are dealing with, would be quite willing to believe the pompous declarations Rousseau's rations, and to answer for his scrupulous orthodoxy. They would wonder where the basis, the pretext for the accusations lies. mules against him. If, here and there, they encounter some passages whose bold tone astonishes them, ten lines below, the attenuations, the Retractions, reservations accumulate until they satisfy consciences.

lack of decision <l;ms the defense of the attacked truths, an admiration too exclusive a concept for the leaders of the Encyclopedist party, that's all.

58 Freemasonry in the 18th century

which we could include in this collection today. In any case, No fanaticism, none of those fierce and intolerant hatreds that one is entitled to reproach Voltaire for, no obscenities, no pleasantries "Santeries gro.«sières, a tone always serious and decent., ..

Read the Journal Enct/rloiu^dùjue carefully, and pay close attention to it. By exploring thought in its twists and turns, you will soon discover what you You hadn't noticed at first: you will distinguish what is necessary to take seriously and the part of what one could not believe without a excessive credulity.

In the places where Rousseau affects a zeal for religion that he if you do not experience it, you will rediscover the mocking smile with which Vol- "Silence," wrote the preface to his Mahomet. "Remove everything that is not..." that are merely rhetorical precautions, mere concessions to the prejudices of Listeners, read as their contemporaries read, between the lines. like them, keep your mind constantly alert to grasp beneath the surface the the tricks of language, the ideas that dare not appear in broad daylight, and you you will soon be convinced that Rousseau, as he wrote to him Voltaire thinks like a true philosopher.

The Liège scholar was also Roco. Tiniandable by his science than by his virtue. He soon realized the danger of the The Journal Encyclopédique demanded its suppression. But the The prince-bishop resided in Germany and cared little for affairs of his diocese. Besides the brothers of Ilorion, Pierre Rousseau had a protector at his side in Velbruck, who was supposed to to ascend later to the episcopal seat and whose role we will see. Pierre Rousseau went so far, he replied, ([iie the faculty of Lou- Vain censored his newspaper. Horion's brothers died one one after the other in 1759; the prince-bishop, finally yielding to the demands repeated demands from his superior, the newspaper was suppressed.

Pierre Rousseau then wanted to settle in Brussels. There was a no less fervent protector in the Count of Cobentzel, mi- Cobenzel was imbued with the power of the plenipotentiary minister of Maria Theresa. Voltairean ideas and involved in the high Masonic degrees niques (l). He had promised Rousseau that he would let his newspaper in Brussels. But Marie-Thérèse refused, according to the opinion from the nuncio and the faculty of Louvain. Pierre Romsseau then went to settle, he and his newspaper, in Bouillon, in the Ardennes, from He created a center of propaganda. It was there that the most immigrated.

part of the impious and immoral books, published without indication of (1) See Allemeinen Ilandbuch det Freimaurerei, 2nd edition. Leipzig, 1869, h, v*.

IN THE AUSTRIAN NETHERLANDS 59

place or with false indications, which were spread widely.
sion during the last third of the 18th century (1). His day nal, which lasted from 1764 until November 1793, played quite at that time the role that the Revue des deux now fulfills Mondes. It was Voltaire's official publication.

Cobentzel did not cease his protection; he obtained for Rousseau subsidies from the Austrian government and all sorts of facilities for the circulation of his newspaper in the Netherlands,

P. Rousseau, upon leaving Liège, had stated that his work had not been sterile. The seeds of impiety that were there seeds developed under the reign of one of these ancient protectors, Henri de Velbruck, who became Prince-Bishop of Liège in 1772. His reign removed the "edebre" (a derogatory term used by all the Encyclopedists).
as the golden age of philosophy. According to Mr. Francotte, this is not
He was not an absolutely impious prelate, like some others bishops of Germany at that time; but he was imbued with New ideas, lighthearted, fun-loving.

The philosophers asked for nothing more. During During his episcopate, Liège became one of the main centers of pro-encyclopedic pagan.

"We will never know," said Mr. Francotte, "the honor of the
The city has nothing to gain from it, what it has printed in books within its walls, for a period of forty years. They ran around the world, hiding carefully their birth certificates and as if disowned by their father.

No one knows to whom they owe their existence, nor where they come from;
But each one has met them, for there are no distances they cannot cross.
They cross, and there are no police who can stop them along the way.

When it was stirred, at the back of an old, rather crude library printed materials bearing the title Isfahan, London, Frankfurt, Rome, etc., some unhealthy productions from the last century, there are It's a safe bet that we have Liège works in our hands: this large piece of paper of poor quality, these tastelessly drawn characters, and especially the im
The morals of the book are like so many trademarks.

figure that of counterfeiting, and of the most audacious counterfeiting, the most brazen one that ever was; it seems to be a twist of fate who designated Megève as a haven for press freedom, everywhere outlawed; in France, the censorship has redoubled its severity; in Holland, The printers' license no longer allows the government to close

(1) V. Francotte, op. cil. p. 63 et seq.

60 Freemasonry in the 18th century

the eyes; and it is in an ecclesiastical principality that he comes to to shelter a trade, whose neighboring states are reddened...

Plomteix, the bishop's printer, used his presses for... works much less orthodox than episcopal mandates. unabashedly mixed the sacred with the profane, and published in 1771 the works Voltaire's works and partnered with Panckouke for a new edition tion of the Encyclopedia. At the same time, he was profiting greatly from the impression sion of religious books. This wise man had, as we see, two strings to his bow.

The edicts that subjected books to censorship existed all days; Velbruck renewed them again ^ but the same and all his officials had tacitly agreed not to apprehend them explain.

Freemasonry, with its secret organization, was... behind all these maneuvers. Here we give the floor to Mr. Kuntziger, the liberal writer:

Other circumstances further contributed to this propaganda: These were, to mention only the three main ones, the suppression of the Jesuit order, the establishment of Masonic lodges within the order itself of the episcopal city, and especially the founding of the society of emissaries lation

Freemasonry had established itself in Liège from the very first years of the second half of the 15th century (I). This institution, which hides his actions under the veil of mystery and whose avowed aim is to fight ultramontane doctrines were to exert a more or less significant influence considerable on the intellectual development of the nation. Lille was held in high esteem in Liège, where we arrived. The men my most distinguished by their science and their social position in fact Bishop Velbruck, who was part of it, tolerated it, resenting the anathemas of which 1 had struck Clement XII and Benedict XIV. It is even reported that he

(1) Mons already had one logo in 1721. Maesiricilil already had three in 1769: the first one which dated from 1?.'')!, before 11th for 11th La Concorde; the second one wa

The first lodge in Liège was founded on December 10, 1771, by Pierre Io clievalicr de Sicard cl porla lo nom do ['Union des cœurs. Le 12 octobru <775, elle so fondit en uno aulrc, erected under the au«jiices of the ('irand-Orient do èVancc; cetlo dernicro It took the name of the Vnrfailc intelligence. Read 1776. The great logo of France establ Liège colle do la Parfaite égnUlr ; oiinu, Io n mars 1778, la grando logo do Hol- Lande established the Temple of the Invisible in Spa. (See for Ions cos dclails an opus- cule of M. ülys.ºo Capilainc, intilnlô: Historical overview of Freemasonry at Ld'ge before iS'i0, and inserted in the ISIilIctindc the Liège Archaeological Institute (tl, pp. 406 and snivanlos.)

61

BANKS IN THE Austrian Netherlands

was part of it (1). What is certain is that many priests had been received by members of the lodges, among others, Abbot HJ of Pais, treasurer of St-Lambert, who wrote even in favor of the institute* tution a heroic poem entitled: The Praise of Freemasonry (2). However, the prosperity of the lodges in Liège was not long-lasting. After Velbruck's reign they declined rapidly, and, at the time that of the Liège revolution, they had fallen into oblivion complete.

Mr. Francotte also cites among the main figures who were part of the Liège lodges of Go6r d'Haltine, president of the ordinary council, of Bourguignon and Hodeige, mayor, of Lantremange, treasurer.

Several lodges in Liège were affiliated with the Grand Orient from France.

But the influence of Freemasonry was exerted primarily in the means of a public society, a supposedly literary society that it secretly directed and which served to prepare followers for him. This is the method she still uses today (V* Intro~ (duction^ § 5). Nothing is as persistent as its traditions. But Let's continue. Mr. Kuntziger:

The Society of Emulation was founded in 1779. It was founded by Velbruck himself saw it as the most effective way to develop in his principality the taste for literature, science and the arts. There

The V. Bassenge, the Régnier, the Henckart, and the Ches- families gathered alongside the Villenfague, Anciaux and a host of other laypeople, who formed the elite of Liège society. The good idea was to... also admit some active and enterprising foreigners, refugees Mostly French, who had settled in the city. We quote

Peravi, who was appointed Speaker of the society⁽³⁾ and delivered the speech opening during the formal inauguration, which took place on June 2nd

(t) Or read in Michaud's Universal Biography, article RobUon, that this— Having arrived in Liège in 1770, he was invited to dine at the Prince-Bishop's residence; To the surprise of all the guests and the prince himself, wearing the insignia of France.. masonry; that he was persuaded to go there and that he obtained, during his stay i Liège, all the successive grades of the order from the title of apprentice to that of Scottish mailro.

(2) See Ulysse Capiuine, Historical Overview of Masonic France, [, c, R de Paix, in 1789, renounced Freemasonry and placed himself in the first rank defenders of the Church. See the work cited by Mr. Francotte, p. 170.

(3) Note this Masonic designation.

62 Freemasonry in the 18th Century

1779, in the presence of the prince-bishop and the principal members of the high clergy. As for the philosophical and social doctrines which pre-public opinion was so deeply preoccupied at the time, it's easy to imagine that the Members of the Society of Emulation did not refrain from discussing them. The regulations did, in fact, forbid them from dealing with any other matter. which, directly or indirectly, may harm religion or to the government; but they weren't looking at it so seriously.

The Emulation Society did indeed become a propaganda center philosophical, and naturally ends up attracting the hatred of a great part of the clergy, who did everything in their power to bring her down, or of the less to make him lose the support of the prince-bishop; but it was In vain. Velbrück himself followed the movement, and far from fighting He favored the ideas of progress that were emerging from all sides. knew as much as he could; he had understood his era and its aspirations of his people.

Is it really true that the lodges ceased their activity after the e Velbrück's episcopate? 11 It is more likely that they concealed it. rent under his successor, the Prince-Bishop of Moensbroeck, who was driven by entirely different feelings.

In Liège, a very active revolutionary party existed in 1789, and Seconda, the French invasion. A very well-informed contemporary. Cadet Gassicourt, claims that the leaders of the Liège revolution were affiliated with the Masonic-Templar center of Paris: one will find further on his testimony (book, III, chapter II, § 3).

After the Revolution under imperial rule, the functions French leaders, and in particular the apostate Saiqt-Marlin, reconstituted that the ancient elements provided them with the first nucleus.

Moreover, on this reconstruction, one will find the linked lodges geois, some very interesting documents in the large work by Mr. Armand Neut: Freemasonry subjected to the great day of advertising^ volume I, Biographical and historical documents torics concerning Freemasonry in Liège.

The same writer found in the archives of the Privy Council from the Netherlands, now kept in Brussels, correspondence official dances which established the importance that the lodges had captures in Belgium at the end of the 16th century. The protection of the f.*. Cobentzel had been effective. At the accession of Joseph II, he
There were twenty-one civilian lodges and three grouped military lodges.
under the authority of a provincial lodge, formed by the great

In Germany and in Russia 63

Officers of the order and delegates from the lodges. The Grand Master was the Marquis de Gages, chamberlain to the emperor, and member of the Noble State of Hainaut. When, in 1785 and 1786, the emperor Joseph II wanted to keep a close eye on Freemasonry and placed In the dressing rooms under police surveillance, he met a muted resistance. The Fays-Bas privy council and the minister plenipotentiary, Prince Belgioso, defaced themselves as much as possible to mitigate the application of imperial edicts, and the lodges were still very influential in Brussels in 1790 (1).

§9. – Freemasonry in Germany
AND IN Russia

The history of the sect, present on the other side of the Rhine, is not far off.
following almost the same phases as in France. In its early stages, the authorities they prohibit it.

On November 30, 1735, the States General of Holland issue an edict, which forever forbids Masonic meetings ques. In 1737, a lodge having assembled in Amsterdam, the magis-
The treaty made the offenders arrested and the Estates-General renewed slow their edict.

In the same year, the Elector Palatine of Bavaria issued an edict against the Freemasons. In 1738, the magistrate of Hamburg, Frederick I, King of Sweden, Emperor Charles VI in his Estates hereditary, in 1739 Augustus II, King of Poland, took the same measures. In 1743, the Grand Council of Bern defended the forbidden, under penalty of deposition, to all pastors from doing part of the lodges. It was based on the secretive nature of the society, on the oaths she demanded: as for the bond of fraternal love eternal union that it claims to establish among its members, the Christians They have, he rightly said, a sufficient one in their religion. Finally, in 1763, the magistrate of DanUig defended Franc-Freemasonry by an edict, the details of which were reproduced by Father Deschamps astoundingly remarkable (book II, chapter 111, § 4).

(1) y. Amand Neut, La Frane-maçonnerie tounise au grand jour y in«80, 2 « ed. 1866, Ghent and Bruges, vol. 1, p. 62 et seq.

64 LA. Freemasonry in the 18th century

It is remarkable, however, that in Prussia there was never any prohibition of this kind of thing (''fô porlôe. Kiiire the sect and the desceiidatits of the apostate grand master of the Teulonic order there were secret alfinilùs.

Despite this, Freemasonry spread throughout all states Germans, because it recruited affiliates from the very first day among the high-ranking civil servants and religious monks who had to carry out the orders of the sovereigns. The systems of the high The ranks spread the most dangerous mysticism there. One must read in the work of M. (k'oITroy: Giistavelfl and the court of France^ the curious chapter devoted to the Illuminati and Freemasonry nyah. We will see there how these sectarian hahilis had, towards 1775* seduced most of the princes with their charlatanry, and they took advantage of this to spread their conspiratorial meetings with impunity pirates. Mr. George Troy does not hesitate to attribute a major role to them. in the aftermath of the Revolution: these accounts all agree on made with those of Father Deschamps (book II, chapter V, 4 and 8, and Chapter VI, § 11. See Volume II: Annexed Document C.)

We are talking about the failure of the ecclesiastical authorities; we has already been able to see (Book II, Chapter V, Section 6, and Chapter VII, Section G) s information on this subject.

Father Pachtler reports the affiliation of a certain name to the sect. br of German and Italian prelates at the end of the 18th century. Thus Prince Michael of Liriggido, Archbishop of Laybach, was received, in 1778, into the high degrees of strict observance; AloysFickert, prior of the Augustinians in Prague, was so in 1791 (1).

Grégoire also mentions among the members of the Illu-mined, Martinowicz, imperial advisor, provost of the cathedral d'CEdenbourg, abbot of Zagras, ([who, he said, removed a large parish proponent of revolutionary ideas, and took part in attempts to support

However, the regular clergy were far from being considered to portray Freemasonry as harmless, and we have preserved in Aachen the memory of the sermons of an eloquent Dominican friar Louis Guntzman, who denounced it vigorously a few years before the Revolution (3;.

(1) PacliUor, Der ilüle Krieg gegen Thron und Altar, 2nd edition, Amhorg, 1876 p. 44.

(2) Grégoire, History of religious sects (new edition, 1828), vol. II, p. 13.

(3) See this fact recalled in the Masonic Bulletin of the Grand Symbolic Lodge, ecoMAiie, June 1880, p. lit.

SBGTE IN ITALY 65

The Viennese Masonic newspaper, Der Zirkel, published, had 1880, a study on the history of Freemasonry in Russia, hence We extract the following passage:

It seems that Peter the Great, upon his return from a trip abroad, was part of a Masonic lodge, and that his favorite, Lefort, was Grand-master.

But the introduction of Freemasonry took place in 1732, by the English general, Lord James Keith, and the most distinguished persons of the empire were part of the lodges. The poet Sumarolaof should be mentioned. and the historian prince Scherbatof.

In 1770, a large provincial lodge was founded in St. Petersburg, named Jelaguin System Society, by the initiative of the director of the imperial theatre. The various lodges that formed worked following the English system; but in 1777, one was founded according to the Swedish rite, by Prince Kurakin, who was returning from Stockholm.

Their activity manifested itself through philanthropic works and through the publication of moral books. But, in the time of Catherine II, after the death of General Chernishef, protector of Freemasonry and The governor of Moscow, his successor, Bruce, imprisoned the impostor Novikof first, and the masons were persecuted throughout the area of the globe. In 1796, the last year of Catherine's reign, all the lodges were closed (1).

Information on the activity of lodges in Russia at that time can be found on the website 1 particularly on Novikoff, details in the anr- Document nexé K ^ 1 published at the end of volume II of Secret Societies and the Company.

§ 10. – The sect in Italy

The sect, which primarily targeted Catholicism and the papacy, was supposed to seek early on to establish a presence in Italy. We find in the Masonic Bulletin of the Grand Symbolic Lodge dco55aw0 (September 1881) the following indications, which complete those of Father Deschamps (Uv. II, chap. III, § 2).

(1) Translated by the Masonic Bulletin of the Grand Symbolic Lodge of August 1880.

ui 5

66

FaANC–MaÇONNEHIE in the 18th CENTURY

The first traces of symbolic masonry appear around 1732 in Florence, where an English duke, Charles Sackville, founded a lodge, who established others in Milau, Verona, Padua, Vicenza and Venice. From 1735 to 1737, Allome worked in an English lodge of the Scottish Rite., anc.. acc.*. In 1737 Pope Clement XII, in concert with the cardinals Ottobonc, Spinola and Zadederi ordered the dispatch of an inquisitor in Ferrara, where the lodge committed the crime of receiving indiscriminately Catholics, Protestants and Jews.

Towards the end of 1737, Gaston de Medici issued a decree against the Freemasons*. and several were arrested; but, at his death, the new Grand Duke (who later became Emperor Francis and married Marie-Thérèse), being himself a Freemason, took the Freemasons of Florence under his protection.

On April 27, 1738, the famous bull "In Eininenti" was published, and soon after a French Freemason writer was burned at Home, and a doctor Cru-Deli, in Florence, only narrowly escaped the pursuit of the inquisitors. tion, thanks to the help of some English brothers.

As we have already noted, several Protestant states had Freemasonry was outlawed before the sovereign pontiffs.

The jubilees celebrated in Rome from time to time brought about frightening revelations about the ungodly sects that were forming in the shadow. We still preserve those of a Freemason today. who, after converting, wrote in 1759, a notice on a so-secret society where he had been employed for twenty-five years previous ones, and where he himself had received more than two hundred per put into Latin, the maxims of impiety and libertinism that one finds there practiced:

"1. Nos per nos.— 2. Nullus super nos. — 3. Quæcumque ubique and quodcumque comode, bibe, hotaro.— 4 Cum quocumque quacumque conjunge et disjunge, diimodo convenias .«iimui. — 5.Da necessaria atl victum, veslitum et voluplatcs signatis nostris indigenis. — ü. üxorom, lilios, tilias» serves, ancillas cum aliis convenientis non impediatis. — 7. Neque aliorura hbertati, etsi contraria volentium, resists. — 8. Nil est quod sit malum, et occisio voluntaria imo. — fi. Honum necare qui vol unite priestess nobis. — 10. Morimur et vivimus et ilorum .'omper. — 11. Possumus omnia facere quu) vülumus absquo levi etiam culpa. — 12. Ergo semper liberi sumus (1).

(I) Hui)ru(lit in the Memorie documetUali per la tloria deüa JHvoluzione lluiiana harvests from i'aolu Ueucacci (iu-8o lluiua 187!)) t. 1, pp. 44-46.

THE SECT IN ITALY 67

Certainly, such maxims should not be attributed to the generality of Masonic lodges of that era: but it is within their midst and under the cover of their secrecy that this a company had been founded. Moreover, it should be noted that these remarks These sites contain the essence of all of Weisliaupt's doctrines. and of Saint-Martin; only it is expressed with concision and the frankness inherent in a confession made to shed light religious authority.

We can therefore understand the alarms of the sovereign pontiffs and of the most serious doctors of the Church, such as St. Alphonsus Liguori. gori, who knew of this terrible outpouring of impiety. It was the knowledge of facts of this kind, gathered on occasion of the Jubilee of 1750, which in 1751 determined the great Pope Benedict No. XIV to renew the condemnations issued in 1738 by Clement XII.

In Northern Italy) continues the Masonic Bulletin of the Great lodge that we mentioned above, despite the excommunications of Popes, Freemasonry continued its work; around 1762 a Grand Master of province, Manucci, was appointed from England, and in 1772, another The English lodge, L'Union, was created in Venice; several Masonic works Important articles were even published in this latter city around 1780. The large cliap* of Lombardy, in Turin, had branches in Modena, Verona, Ferrara, Garmagnola, Borgoforte, Padua, Vicenza, Mondovi, Tortona, Gberasco, Aosta, Vogliera, Alagno, Savona, Trino, Mortara, Alba, Messala, Bondeno, Treviglio and Milan, under the rit.', Scottish.'. ancient.', acc. *.

century; in 1801 the lodge L'Heureuse Rencontre was founded in Milan; in 1803, in Mantua, the lodge "The Friends of Glory and the Arts"; in 1803 a sup.'. cons.', is created: Grasse-Tilly, Peyron, Renier and Vidal directed its constitution and Prince Eugène Beauharnais was appointed Grand M.'. with Galepio as his deputy; on his side Murat, former king of Naples, and lodges in Naples, Genoa and other places.

English Masonic newspapers recently published an anecdote relating to the year 1781 which paints a good picture of these times :

"Two young French Freemasons, François Cartier and Adolphe Lemercier, had attended a lodge meeting in Venice, where there existed several workshops, and where many works were published around 1780. They knew that the Council of Ten, having taken offense at

68 Freemasonry in the 18th century

Freemasonry, thanks to its countless spies, had discovered the names of most members of the Venetian lodges (not all fortunately) as well as those of their visitors. The St-Marc lodge in Venice being more specifically suspected, the Council of Ten... ordered the immediate arrest of all members and visitors, including the names known.

Two days later, while the gondola carrying these young people glided by on the canals of Venice, they were approached, blindfolded on their eyes, and thrown into an underground dungeon. Shortly after, taken away by masked men were led into a room and found themselves they see in front of five figures seated at a covered table of a red sheet.

They were told of the accusation against them; they defended themselves. They did the best they could, citing their ignorance of the laws of the country, adding that in France, as in England and Germany and in many other countries, the heads of state belonged to the order and were its great masters.

At the moment they were made to withdraw, they noticed that one of the judges made a Masonic sign to them, and they recognized him as one of the members of the R.'. L.'. St-Marc. They left feeling more reassured than when they arrived in Venice. Soon, in fact, a man dressed all in black came to inform them they were free, but they had to leave Venice in the twenty-four hours.

A few years later, the two French brothers met in Paris, an Italian man was making the distress signal to them. It was their judge of Venice, whose progressive opinions had forced him to leave his homeland (1).

(1) Reproduced in the Masonic Bulletin of the Grand Symbolic Lodge Eoss., Tfi of May 188t.

CHAPTER TWO

THE SOCUËTËTBS DURING THE FRENCH REVOLUTION

&

§. 1. – Influence of Freemasonry in the ELECTIONS OF 1787 AND 1789.

At first glance, it would be surprising if the considerable force re-resulting from the number of lodges, from the close solidarity which obliged the brothers to help each other in civilian life, of the secrecy which guarantees knows all communications made under Masonic cover, had not been used by men determined to overthrow the mo-anarchy in the elections to the Estates-General of 1789. "In "The electoral operations, we said, where the investigation is taking place"
"With all power gone, the lodges had taken their revenge on the "drafting of the monarchical notebooks, which they had been unable to en-
"to sin, because that would have required facing a discussion"
"public and to blatantly go against universal sentiment"
"of the nation. » (Liv. II, chap. VI, § 3.)

Several documents published since then have demonstrated this preponderant action of the lodges in elections and in the provincial gatherings of 1787, which served as its preface.
One of the most significant is the history of the Joigny logo, the Phoenix^ as recounted by the Masonic World in its December 1880 issue. We reproduce it in its entirety.
ment:

70 THE SEGRATE SOGLËTS AND THE FRENCH REVOLUTION

It was on October 13, 1777, that the Joigny lodge was installed under the title of Eagle of Saint John. It had twenty-eight members, including Here are the names:

Saulnier de Moulins, honorary councillor in the election of Joigny, venerable; – Saulnier de Montmarin, infantry captain, 1st on-king in the election, 2nd supervisor; – Bourdois de Champfort, warden of the Mr. d'Artois's body, orator; – Bourdois de Peschoire, officer of Fanterie, secretary; – Badenier do la Perrière, lieutenant of the bailiff ge, assistant secretary; – Boullard, merchant, Keeper of the Seals and stamp bre; – Landowner of Gliesne-au-Roy, squire, tax collector, l*® Master of Ceremonies; – Louvain de Pescheloché, lawyer, 2nd Master ceremonies; – Bazille de Villars, merchant, tiler; – Gharié son, alderman of the city, steward; – Bazille (Gabriel), mayor of Joigny; – Bourdois de la Perrière, canon of Sainte-Geneviève; – Bourdois de la Motte fils, doctor of medicine; – Boit de Grèvecœur, Knight of Saint-Louis; – Marquis of Briqueville, officer of the dragons; – d'Hermand de Gléry, vice-consul in Lisbon; – Ferrand des Fourneaux, dragoon officer; – Gillet de la Jacqueminière, di Postmaster; – Gondot, War Commissioner; – Jacquinet de la Goudray, Knight of Saint-Louis, dragoon officer; – of Risle, comptroller general of farms; – the Worker, commissioner of the generality of Paris; – ■ Marchand, notary; – Meignen, merchant; – Perroté de Richebourg, Knight of Saint-Louis; – Soufflet de Pâlotte, farm controller; – Vougino de Waufourand, officer foreign infantry,

The list of founding members of the lodge had been accompanied a certificate attesting to the regularity of the work on the new lodge, attested Signed: Maret, parish priest of Saint-Savinien, Venerable Master of the lodge Concorde of Sens.

The Sens logo, loaded (the installation was represented by its venerable Brother Sendrier, advisor and prosecutor to the king at the bailiwick of Sens; by its orator, Brother Larcher, first advocate of the king at Sens, and by Brother Dalmières, lieutenant of the first surgeon of the king.

Brother Larcher's speech ended with these pieces of advice;

(c Let us observe the ancient rules, the true principles of our Cons-Institution, the precious maxims of wisdom and equality! What the love of good and the noble emulation of filling the gullies of the Great-Let the East be the rule of our work and of the example it leaves us. "They will come after us!"

The venerable Brother Saulnier of Moulins replied to him in these terms:

examples, to devote ourselves entirely to the practice of virtues and trades values of the Masonic order, and to make Freemasonry formidable to all vices.

The following year, under the Venerable Master Brother Bourdois de la Motte, The lodge was tasked by the Grand Orient with establishing a lodge in Auxerre. titled; The truly zealous.

In that same year, the number of lodge members increased fifty, including twenty clergymen, canons, Benedictines, etc.

In 1773, the lodge proceeded once again with the installation of the lodge. Friends gathered at Tannerrel

Brother Bourdois of 'a Motte remained venerable until 1782. His successors The cessators were Brother Dufour, receiver of aids (1783–84), and the Brother Gillet de la Jacqueminière, receiver of bridge tolls, who directed gea the workshop until the Revolution

And here it is appropriate to pause for a moment. What was the role of the mem- The sled's breeches of the Eagle of Saint-Jean, at that time? Brother Bérillon was careful not to leave this point in obscurity, and we will summarize In short, what it teaches us:

From 1788 onwards, with the creation of the provincial assemblies, the Ba brothers> Zille, Meignen and Badenier de la Perrière had been appointed members of the third estate in these assemblies.

Brother Gillet de la Jacqueminière, elected public prosecutor for the the district of Joigny, laid the foundations of the new territorial organization territorial and administrative which is still in force.

The election to the Estates-General was, as we know, conducted indirectly. The primary assemblies of the voters of Joigny had six deputies at to appoint someone to draft their list of wishes and elect the representative of the Third state. They chose five of the lodge's dignitaries: Gillet de la Jacqueminière, venerable; Gharié, alderman, orator; Ragon des Essarts, King's Attorney, Secretary; Badenier de la Perrière, Lieutenant (cf.) nant of the bailiwick and councillor, treasurer; and Bazille, mayor of Joigny. The commune of Joigny belonged to the bailiwick of Montargis, where it was to hold the election. It was the venerable Gillet de la Jacqueminière who, by a large majority, was elected deputy of the Third Estate to the Estates General. His deputy was Brother Bazille. Both had taken the most part important for the drafting of the final notebook.

At the Constituent Assembly, Brother Gillet was part of the committee of. agriculture and commerce; in 1790, he made the report to which two the abolition of toll, haulage, measurement and standard fees swimming. It also led to the adoption of several important measures on plantations, maritime trade, and freedom of trade Grain, mail services, etc. In 1793 he was appointed to the council.

THE SECRET SOCIETIES AND THE FRENCH REVOLUTION

Ginq>Gent8. He then moved to the Tribimat, where he was secretary, then president of the finance section. He was finally one of the first conc master seillers of the Court of Auditors.

A. The suppression of the provincial "embiées," three other members members of the lodge were called upon to sit on the General Council of Joigny; this was rent, in 1790, the Foacier and Badenier brothers of La Perrière; in 1792, the Brother Gharié-Bérillon. Brother Bagon des Essarts was elected vice-president of the district.

In 1792, Badenier de la Perrière was appointed public prosecutor of the department, and Boullard, district prosecutor. Saulnier des Moulins was mayor, and Saulnier de Montmarin commanded the guard national of Joigny.

Shortly afterwards, the lodge had to go into dormancy, like all all the other lodges of France...

Father Deschamps noted the Masonic affiliation of all prominent men in the National Assembly and the Convention tion; the same was true for obscure deputies, whose votes The silent ones gave strength to the bold. We might find some more The trail for almost everyone.

Thus, Mr. Jules Péliisson in the interesting memoir that we we have cited, noted among the members of the Amiable Con lodge cord^ in Rochefort, in 1776, the name of a f.*. Romme, who was the brother of the famous member of the National Convention of that name.

In 1792, the department of Haute-Garonne sent for his representative at the Convention, a deputy who was secretary of the Assembly, Julien Bernard Dorothee de Mazade. Now, he finds himself it was understood that this character had been a propa~ for many years active promoter of Freemasonry (1). So it was with many others that their obscurity alone allows them to escape the investigations of history.

S 2. – A final warning in 1789

At the moment when the Revolution was about to break out, a few men courageous men pointed out the source of the evil. We know the vigou several writings of Abbot Lefranc, superior of the Eudists, who perished

(I) V. uDo üoMco on Mazalo in the Masonic i/onde of June 1880.

in the September massacres. Before him, from the very first
In 1789, a man of letters, of a completely different character, the Marquis de Luchet published an Essay on the sect of the Illuminati, in which, through great emphasis and a certain vagueness wanting to avoid compromising himself too much, he signaled the existence of the Illuminati sect, headquartered in Germany, and accused him of working to destroy all thrones and the religion to establish anarchy on its ruins. Luchet has great Care is taken not to mention any proper names, but it clearly refers The Weishaupt Illuminati and the Martinists. In closing, he urges all honest people to open their eyes to save the French monarchy.

He rectifies, with very good reasons, the crude fable he has thrown forth.
in public by Mirabeau, after the discovery of the papers of Weishaupt, claiming that the Jesuits were the directors Crets of the sect of the Illuminati (1). (Book II, Chapter V, § 7.) He shows that she uses Freemasonry as a pre-order a competitive examination, where trials and secrecy allow him to recruit with his followers. Here is how he describes the organization active in the sect;

Each member of a circle also belongs to all the others.
so that a Venetian (2) arriving for the first time in Breslau, introduced into the circle of this city, is admitted to the secret children that those who have been part of it for ten years.

These circles are therefore the points of correspondence, the beacons placed on this sea of iniquity; and, to better grasp this invisible chain
If possible, I will go into more detail. Frankfurt am Main Mein, for example, instructed Mainz, Darmstadt, Neuvied, Cologne, Weimar. Weimar illuminates Kassel, Gottingen, Wetzlar, Brunswick, Gotha. Gotha brings its light to Erfurth, Leipzig, Halle, Dresden, to Dessau. Dessau takes charge of Torgau, Wittenberg, Mecklenburg-Berlin is a town. Berlin connects with Stettin, Breslau, and Frankfurt. on the Oder. Frankfurt takes care of Königsberg and the Prussian cities.
Following this scale, we can clearly see that there are some fairly significant links.

(1) He makes a very judicious reflection for a man of letters (note X, p. 198 of the first edition, 1789): "Without the destructive bull of Gan-Ganelli, perhaps we are the first Jesuits against the Illuminati, like Louis XIV and Madame de Maintenon launched them against the Jansenists.

(2) Note this mention of Venice, which is by no means thrown without purpose. The Illu-
Minimism had a number of followers there. (Book III, Chapter I, | 10.)

K»

squeezed between Mainz and Poland, and that an entire country is soon known in its most secret parts.

That the reader now etc. this communication of kingdom to kingdom, and that he supposes a center where the plans of those would end Those who govern Europe, we see who the true masters of each country.

Luchet, who claims that "the content of these horrible services-
"Menls revealed to him the key by people lost in the te-"darkness of the Illuminati and to whom the proposal to enter a
"Such a conspiracy has restored reason and courage," Lu Chet is fully aware of the sect's plans and of its centers of action. Its indications regarding Germany are of a rigorous accuracy, and he mentions the outfit very precisely.
from the Willemsbad convent. As for France, he doesn't want to, ev-deliberately, without going into any specific detail, to threaten managing people; but it very clearly involves, in Vayer-tissement placed at the beginning of the book, that she is threatened with a Troy-a major upheaval.

Although Germany was the source of these fatal errors, although they They enjoy high protection there; they are not entirely foreign manages other nations. Franco is not entirely pure; and if,
In the crisis that torments us, the Martinists dare not, or perhaps
If they cannot make themselves heard, they will reappear with even greater danger when... that calm will have returned.

Five years have passed: conspiracies have been carried out,
Torrents of blood flowed, the mnnarcbio collapsed, equality
He paraded his level everywhere, the cult of reason was celebrated at Notre-Dame. Hardly any freedom of the press has been restored. reappeared, after the Thermidorian Reaction, (here is a witness escaped from Récliaraud, who comes to denounce the unlenrs of all these crimes, and this time by calling them by their proper names.

The story of the revolution as told in 1794 75

§3. – The history of the Revolution as told in 1794.

Charles-Louis-Cadet de Gassicourt, son of the illustrious chemist of that name, had followed very closely, as a lawyer and journalist, the first uprisings of the Revolution, and he was one of the one of the most active supporters of the Thermidorian Reaction: he was barely the scaffold. Yet he was not a religious man; In his writings, he reveals himself to be Voltairean and full of prejudices. among the Jesuits. Under the Restoration, he became one of the coryth phemes of the Parisian liberal opposition. Now, in year IV (1794), While he was still in prison, he published a book that made It caused quite a stir when it appeared, and it's titled: The tomb of Jacques Molai^ or secret and abridged history of the ini- Ancient and modern ties^ of the Templars^ Freemasons^ Illu^ MinaSj and research on their influence in the Revolution French, with this epigraph: Neither gold nor silver pays would make my silence (1).

The entire Revolution with all its crimes, he said quite clearly. This was the result of a plot hatched in higher lodges. a group of enlightened individuals, who formed the Order of the Templars and who used they viewed ordinary Masonic lodges as an instrument more or less unconscious.

He traces the founding of this back to Jacques Molai sect, and claims that it has always existed since then, and has formed early English and Scottish Freemasonry. He does not give any further their lack of evidence for this assertion other than tradition lodges and some historical comparisons (Cf. Book II, ch. I, § 5 and ch. II, § 1); but his testimony, as to the facts. contemporary, with great precision, we shall judge it;

All the ceremonies of ordinary lodges, although conforming to the association's goal, since it only concerns avenging death

(1) First edition, in-S*, Paris, year IV of the French Father, edition, in-12, year V.

76 SECRET SOCIETIES AND THE FRENCH REVOLUTION

%»

of a certain Hiram, architect of Solomon's temple, serve only to to conceal the constitution of the order, and to test those who will be called to know the great secret; for one cannot present oneself to chapter, even if we were aware of its existence.

There are therefore a multitude of Masonic lodges in Europe; but they mean nothing from a political standpoint; they are merely truths bles sfminairei. The true 'fempliers' masons are only one hundred and eight out of the earth: it is they who, through vehemence, ambition, and system, have sworn to massacre kings and to achieve the independence of the universe (1).

Only two sovereigns knew the whole truth about Freemasonry, and did not They weren't afraid: it was Frederick and Catherine. The current King of Prussia,

An insignificant comedy, but he is surrounded by initiates; and when their party will be stronger, William will suffer the fate of the King of Sweden.

The Duke of Södermanland is not the only initiated prince. The uncle of William is a Templar. Prince Potemkin, that famous minister of Catherine, her lover, and the assassin of Peter III, was a Templar. believes that the Grand Duke is an initiate, and that this is one of the reasons that led refused the crown at his majority (2).

Such, in a few words, is the mystery of Freemasonry, denied, Ignored, ridiculed for five centuries. Gela may seem like a fable to anyone who is unaware of the immense resources of this sect; but that he be admitted once into a simple lodge, and the spirit that reigns there He will make him judge who should lead the leaders.

What wouldn't the followers of Molai have done in France? the horror of tyranny, if the feeling of true freedom had not brought about the 9th of Thermidor! For a while, people believed in the reign of laws; the Jacobins, everywhere unmasked, hid the shame in the shadows and the contempt with which they were covered; but they were plotting new schemes the plots; they sharpened new daggers, and the massacre of Vendémiaire, the Grenelle revolt, the Babœuf conspiracy, prove what they hope for, what they are still pondering.

All the memories of that time reveal indiscretions... blables, pailiellles revelations of the niaçonnitjuc plan, which produi.saienl in the heat of the action. One day, in the living room from the Count of Nikolai, first president of the chamber of competencies states of Paris, shortly after the reopening of the States-General rau.x, a discussion had arisen on the question of whether the

(1) In the construction that one can make of these diirôronles bases, it is always necessary to fight the Initiates of the Freemasons (Note from GG).

(2) See on rorapcrrur Paul !«»• Book II, chapter XV, g 3.

The story of the revolution as told in 1794 77

France had a constitution: did it need one? Would it have one?

This removed the topic of discussion, which involved many participants. right-wing MPs, such as Maujy and Cazalès, were philosophers. such as Laharpe and Marmontel, and other lesser-known men. Standing apart was a usually rather quiet figure, who was thought to belong to Masonic societies and to know them the secrets. But why a written constitution? they said. members of the right wing; France has one that the centuries have gradually made it happen, and it is doing very well in the end. England alone has a clearly formulated constitution, continued in this vein, each remaining of their own opinion, when the per Silent sonnage stood up and spoke the words in a confident tone.

following: "We don't need a constitution, that's true;
"But we will have one, and this constitution will make the
"Around the world. She will go as far as Russia, as far as Constantino-"Pie. Yes, a day will come when there will be a constitution in Cons-
"tanlinople" (1).

It is very striking to see how this word constitution for three-quarters of a century, it was the rallying cry of the revolutionary sect in Russia (Book II, Chapter VIII, § 4) also although in Italy and Spain. The strange prophecy of the adept the plan of 1789 was to be fully realized in our time, where in 1877 the Young Türkiye party tried to establish a constitution in Constantinople and even Cairo.

The Templars, whom Cadet Gassicourt mentions, were the leaders Parisian lodges, the active members of the Grand Orient.
recounts in great detail how, in order to weave their plots and to stir up public opinion, they used charlatans such as Saint-Germain and Cagliostro, false mystics like Saint-Martin and Lavater, whose pantheism shook the believers these Christian women, magicians like Swedenborg, Messrs.
sea, Schræpfer; all these elements of moral disorder and de-

(1) Mr. de Nicolai was a member of the French Academy. He received guests in his salon, his colleagues from the Academy and many political figures, belonging belonging to various parties; he himself was very devoted to the monarchist cause and was very struck by this conversation. He recounted it several times to his family before to mount the scaffold. We owe the communication of this curious story to a of his descendants.

*78 SECRET SOCIETIES AND THE FRENCH REVOLUTION

social organizations contributed, under their skillful direction, to to prepare for the great work.

You who see in this writing only the dream of an imagination Exalted, whether it's a game of wit or a mystical deception, explain it to me, I'll tell y pray, why, in./e muxcuni German (January 4788, page 56) Ga-Hlidonne and Schwedemborg clearly announce our revolution, in saying; "A very political revolution is going to take place on our globe "remarkable, and there will be no other religion than that of the pa-"triarebes^ that which was revealed to Gagliostro by the lord, of which "the body is surrounded by a triangle s.

Explain to me by what means, if not by espionage and the rapid and secret correspondence of the enlightened and initiated, the duke d'Orléans managed to have so many murders committed at once;

they rose up that same day, at the same hour as the Parisians, who marched against the Bastille. Explain to me why the movements revolutionaries have always been in exact relation to time and motifs in different parts of the Republic.

Cadet Gassicourt then recounts the rapid multiplication of lodges in the years 1787 and 1788, although a good number were sent composed of people who would have been horrified, if they had known, of the designs to which they would contribute.

The lodge attire served as a means of correspondence and of meeting with accomplices, who could not have met otherwise. He lies without arousing the suspicions of the police. He tells the story in grand style. details a solemn outfit at the time of the convocation of the Estates-generals, where all the venerable masters of the lodges were to meet under the presidency of the Duke of Orléans, and which was intended to unite the supporters of Necker were among them. Mirabeau was there. d'Aiguillon, d'Espréménil, Lally-Tolendal – The pretext was the reception as a Freemason of Madame de Staël, the daughter of Necker.

The main insiders, who played a role in the French revolution French figures include Mirabeau, Fox, the Duke of Orléans, Robespierre, Clootz, and Danton. Dumouriez, St-Fargeau. The current Grand Master is the Duke of Suderma. neie, regent of Sweden.

The Revolution began with the storming of the Bastille, and the Those in the know singled her out for the people's blows, because she had been the

The story of the Revolution as told in 1794 79

Jacobus Molay prison. Avignon (1) was the scene of the greatest atrocities, because it belonged to the Pope, and because it contained the hundred The Grand Master's offices. All the statues of the kings were torn down, in order to to remove that of Henry IV, which covered the square where Jacques Molay was executed; it was in this same place, and nowhere else, that the Those in the know wanted to erect a colossus that would trample crowns underfoot. and tiaras, and this colossus was but the emblem of the Templar corps folds. How many features I could recall; but I limit myself to the principals main facts.

The King of Sweden was an ally of Louis XVI; during the flight to Va-Rennes, Gustave came all the way to the borders to receive him and take him teger, but the Duke of Southermania had his brother assassinated by Ankas-Troem, a Freemason, who was previously convicted of theft, was hanged, had obtained a pardon from the king. As any Templar can govern ner, but cannot regulate, we immediately saw the Duke of Southmania to form an alliance with the Jacobins of Paris, to take away from the Swedish nobles many of their privileges, restricting the prerogatives of the young king

On the other hand, the Grand Master of the Paris chapter, Philippe d'Orléans, orchestrated the downfall of Gapet and his family to achieve the goal marked by the initiates, it was necessary to strike big blows, and to strike them quickly. For two years, the followers held chapter meetings in the the Grand Master's palace, then in the village of Passy. It was there that Sillery, Jacob Frey, Dumouriez, d'Aiguillon, Clotz, Lepelletier, Mer..., Abbot S..., the Lameths, Mirabeau, D... - C..., Robespierre, prep would have the plans they delivered to the second-order conspirators, who were in charge to translate them into a philosophical-revolutionary language.

Philip's gold is not spared; first the parliaments are, Divided, they can then be destroyed. To put the people in action, d'Orléans seizes the wheat (2) and exports it to the islands of Jersey and Guernsey, while its leaders accused the government How to orchestrate the famine. Their agents roam the countryside? They massacre the nobles, the rich, the priests, and burn down the castles. and ravage the me. "5, eons. The propagandists seduce the troops and they regroup abroad; they prepare there the assassination of Gustavus, the Berlin movements (3), the disintegration of Poland (4), the

(1) Avignon has always been preferred by initiates, and by Freemasons, in this city, are much more educated than elsewhere. (Note by O. G.)

(2) See Philippe's History of Your Conspiracy, 1796. (CG's note)

(3) All the newspapers of the time agree that it was in their boxes ma- conical plans were being made for these movements; the authorities stopped them in time. (CG).

(4) Everyone knows that Kosciusko came to Paris to receive his instructions and that he frequented the Duke of Orléans. (GG note) dissension in Holland, the insurrection of the Liégeois, and the uprising Netherlands (1).

80 SECRET SOCIETIES AND THE FRENCH REVOLUTION

After spending the days of October 5th and 6th, Philippe goes himself in London to conspire with Fox, Stanhope, Sheridan, the Doctors Price and Priestley. The initiates establish the Jacobin Club. and recall the Grand Master. Shortly after his return, the days of the June 20 and August 10 overthrew the throne (2). Philip had exhausted his coffers, and his ambition was his undoing. After the king's death, for which He had voted himself, he believed he was taking the reins of the state; he would have succeeded. No doubt, but the insiders were divided. The downfall of the Bourbons, sworn. by the Templars, only allowed him to govern by losing his name; he believed it was enough to renounce it; he disowned his father from the tribune of the Jacobins; he protested to the commune that his mother, a prostitute, had received

He humbly begged that his name be taken from him, and he took the name of Equality, But Robespierre already had a party, and d'Orléans, despised even by His accomplices were sacrificed.

What Cadet Gassicourt says about the predominant lolc of the Masonic-employee sect, which manipulated all the ordinary lodges, is confirmed by d'IIaugwilz, whose e.^- are as follows textual pressures in his memorandum to the assembled princes Verona:

"The Order of the Temple was in possession of the secret, and the facts"
"have shown that it was not by pure chance that Louis XVI
"was led to the Temple, from which he only emerged to be sacrificed"
"to the spirits of Molay" (3),

Cadet Gassicourt thus continues his account of the events of the Revolution:

The emperor soon perished, a victim of the sworn enemies of kings; Leopold, He was not long in following him; the emperor's valet, suspected of having poisoned his master and Leopold, he did, in his interrogations toires, the confession of these two crimes, and declared that he had received payment for of the Duke of Orléans (4),

(1) Van der Nootet van Espen étalent initiates et chefs de lodges. See the causes The Brabant revolution, by Le Sueur. (GG's note)

(2) In March 1788, the king had wanted to attach himself to Orléans by a double alliance.

He proposed marrying Philip's daughter to the eldest son of the Count of Artois, and the I from Chartres to a princess of Naples; but, faithful to his parricidal oath, Philip had refused. (Note do G. 6.)

(3) V, Darrow's Denkschriefften and Briefen zur CharaehterUtile der Welt und lüteratur (Berlin, 1840), l. IV, pp. 211-221.

(4) See the Jacobin journal from that period, article on correspondence. (Note) (from GG)

The story of the Revolution as told in 1794 81

For four years, Ireland has been restless and threatening to revolt: it has a Templar chapter. The leaders are in London (1), and Georges, already attacked four times, thought he would lose his life on October 13th and February 3rd of last year.

A newspaper from Pluviôse, Year IV, informs us that the Freemasons took the name Defenders in Ireland, and James Veldor, con condemned on December 22nd in Dublin as guilty of high treason, Question. I'm interested. – A. Me too. – D. With whom?

R. With the National Convention. – D. What is your goal? – he. The freedom. – D. Qrix, is that your project? – it. Its foundation is built on rock.
– D. What do you propose? – he. To subjugate all nations, to dethrone kings... – D. Where did the rooster crow, when the whole universe "Towards... I heard?" –He. "In France." –D. "What is the password?"
R. ÉLIPHI.SHATIS.

The first voters of Paris (Lavigne, Moreau de Saint-Méry, Dsleutre, Danton, Dejoly, Champion, Keralio, GuilloHn f5), etc., etc.), the
The first commune of this city, the first Jacobins were almost all Freemasons, and at the head of the lodges, although there were none in France than twenty-seven initiates. We will no longer be surprised if we soon see them fall under the sword the King of England, the King of Sweden, the Pope and the Emperor pereur.

Cadet Gassicourt then reveals a previously unknown detail of history.
of the Revolution, but which is explained when one knows the mass of honorable people involved in the lodges at that time:

Several lodges were opened in France, with the intention of bringing together the supporters of the monarchy, like the Freemasons in London, when They wanted to restore Charles II, designated in the Romance, to the throne.
Irish Masonic lodge, under the name of the widow's son. Twenty-four People attached to Louis XVI favored this project; but as

(1) When the first edition of this work appeared, one of my friends, an employee near the Directory, he gave a copy to a very powerful man at that time.

This man wanted to meet me; my friend refusing to name me, he said to him: If
The author has some specific notes on the current projects of the Initiates; hire him.
to entrust them to the government, which is informed that the Duke of Bedford, head of the is organizing a revolution in London at this moment and wants to play, in England, the role of the Duke of Orléans: the Directory was even approached to see if he would favour would be this insurrection. Gute confidence was made to me at the time when we pre-

The famous descent into Ireland appears. (CG's note)

(2) Guillotin, forever famous for his terrible mechanical invention, which we do not
He owed, however, to his principles of humanity, and was the venerable master of a lodge. that he fabricated the famous petition of six bodies, which led to his appointment to the raux. (Note do CG)

neither

it was clearly contrary to the spirit of true Freemasons" and that the True Freemasons could not be excluded from these lodges; this only served to irritate them and designate victims for them (1).

This attempt helps to explain several incidents in life if curious about the unfortunate Cazotte and especially the strange speech that addressed him, in condemning him to death, the president of the court revolutionary, Lavau, who like him had been part of a société d'illuminés:

You, weak plaything of old age, whose heart was not big enough to feel the price of a sacred freedom, but which has proven, by your security in the debates, which you knew to be sacrilegious even to your very existence for the Supporting your opinion, listen to the final words of your judges! Then do they feel ■pouring into every soul the precious balm of consolation. May they, by prompting you to pity the fate of those who come They are not about condemning you, but about inspiring this stoicism, which must preside at last moments and to fill you with the respect that the law imposes on us Us!... Your peers heard you, your peers condemned you, But at least their judgment was as pure as their conscience; at least No personal interest interfered with their decision. Go, resume. Gather your courage, summon your strength, face death without fear, think that he has no right to surprise you; it's not a moment that should frighten a man like you. But before you part from life, re-maintain the imposing attitude of France, within whose bosom you do not Don't be afraid to loudly call out to the enemy; look at your old homeland. oppose the attacks of his vile detractors with as much courage as you You suspected him of cowardice. If the law could have foreseen that she would have to... to denounce a culprit like you, out of consideration for your If you were old, she would not have imposed any other punishment on you; but rest assured, She is severe when she prosecutes, when she has pronounced the sword falls from her hands; she moans at the very door of those who worship her. They were tearing her apart. Look at her weeping tears over her white hair, that she felt she had to respect until the moment of your conviction; May this spectacle bring you repentance. May it compel you, you ill old man. happy, to revel in the moment that still separates you from death, for to erase even the slightest traces of your plots with righteous regret felt it. One more word; you were a man, a Christian, a philosopher, an initiator Hey, know how to die like a man, know how to die like a Christian, that's all. that your country can still expect from you (2).

(1) Go fait so trouve indicated in La clef des loges, appendice added by Cadet Gassicur, in the 2nd edition, year V.

(2) It appears by Gérard de Nerval: Les Illuminés, 1822, Paris, p. 218. See also Alfred Jouin, Masonic Laws, Cazotte trial, pp. 49 and 50.

This speech, with its mysterious allusions, struck people with astonishment. gathered together, recounted the stories of the time; it was indeed quite in contradiction with the usual procedures of the bygone court* tionary.

In many circumstances, one finds at this time that the trace of the lodges' actions or the influence of commitments who were taken there. For example, during the September Massacres of 1792 At the Abbey, some of the arrested suspects owed their salvation to Masonic symbols. "When Jourgniac Saint-Méard was Absolved by the tribunal of blood, he was made to put on his hat. on the head and they led him into the street. One of the guards cried out: Citizens, here is the PCMR for which your judges are asking for help and Help. That, as we know, is the distress call, the urgent call. Freemasons." (1).

§.4. – The lodges transformed into clubs according to a

PRANC-MACON WRITER.

•*

The Masonic Bulletin of the Scottish Symbolic Lodge has published in 1880 a series of highly remarkable studies on the francs* masons in 1789 and 1790, who reproduce almost word for word Father Deschamps's account. Like him, F.*. Schæfler attributes a predominant role in the lodges in the preparation of the mou- movement of 1789, in the elections to the Estates-General, and finally in the direction given to the Revolution. He passes successively actively reviewing the main lodges of Paris, which trans- formed into clubs. The very precise details he gives about the Circle The social group Friends of Truth deserve to be registered here, because they clearly illustrate how this transformation took place.

Under this system of general freedoms, which would be new today Even today, masons had only one course of action to follow; to open the The lodges opened their workshops and boldly published their work. properly speaking, they saw, in fact, a rapid decrease in the fever of a- activity that had animated them until the elections of 1789, The temples, in large numbers, had become clubs, where the political leaders they met publicly.

(1) This fact is related in the work entitled Danton; the reign of Justice and of laws in 1792 by Léon Pagès, 1880, p, 53.

But having changed form, would the Masonic spirit continue to evolve? disappear completely? Does Freemasonry reside entirely in the symbols and mysterious ceremonies, which are the character Exterior and apparent aspects of his work? We can judge that by a example.

The social circle of the Friends of Truth, opened on October 15, 1790, at Circus at the Palais-Royal, before an audience of eight to nine thousand people, was a former Masonic lodge. Its founding members The members were Goupil de Préfelin, deputy of the bailiwick of Alençon, Mailly de Ghatteau-Regnaud, Condorcet, the future member of the National Convention, especially Bo Neville and Fauchet, the editors of La Bouche de Fer. They had given in the club's journal the name of the famous lodge from which they had come. In two eloquent speeches, Fauchet, appointed Attorney General of the truth, expounded the doctrine of the circle and indicated the goal of the efforts communs. The followers wanted to "free men from slavery to hunger... and to give everyone liberty, equality, and property. To achieve this to achieve, they proposed to form, "with the Masonic organization "Nic, a federative pact of humankind."

"Gentlemen," said the new apostle, "a great thought has dawned on us." It seems. It is a matter of beginning the confederation of men, of rap to bring together useful truths, to link them into a universal system, to make them to enter the government of nations, and to work, in a a general concert of the human spirit, composing the happiness of the world.

"For us, simple brothers in the great alliance of nature, Let us approach these circles with open minds and united hearts. of men initiated in all parts of the world into freedom and equality, to unity. Let us raise one hundred million voices in unison with humanity. in the grand concert of fraternal harmony. Let us raise our hands, "All-powerful as soon as they act in agreement, the throne of public opinion." Then the speaker recalls the history of Masonic societies – societies ancient, which have been perpetuated to this day with the principles of frankness, equality, liberty, fraternity.—"These vestal societies have preserved the sacred fire of social nature... If he has been prudent until CO day to further unveil the mystery surrounding this precious deposit, the moment approaches when the sacred fire will be freed, and when the statue of the Humankind will be animated by the Prornethees, who have preserved the "Celestial flame."

It shows how powerful a central assembly would be, where all the friends of truth, liberty, and human happiness, divided into Specific companies would come together to form a common coalition. proposes a general organization of Masonic Lodges receiving the movement of a single consistory, sitting in Paris, – the capital of humanity.—"The social circle will serve our efforts," he said in closing, He will establish relations with other circles; he will support our correspondents* correspondences with external associations that will form in the example of ours among the nations... All that I have of strength, of patriotism, love for mankind, zeal and courage for the truth will be consecrated created to contribute to this supreme work. My pen and my voice will be "At your command; my mind will expand with your thoughts." (Excerpts from (La Bouche de fer newspaper).

Thus brilliantly inaugurated, amidst a huge crowd, the ceremony. The social group began its discussions by examining the first chapters. very much of the social contract, when an article was agreed upon, we sent it via the periodical, with developments, in all the headquarters of the club's correspondence, and great lights arrived from all sides to illuminate the principles of truth. » (/W-dem.) And what were these, by the way, if not the principles the same as the Masonic organization, with the suppression of the high grades and the autonomy of symbolic lodges? But what did they want? serving Freemasonry, the brothers who renounced the protection of ancient mysteries to be revealed to all and thus offer the object of Their work in the public square? They renounced symbols full of oriental poetry which until then had vaguely taken on their thoughts and their hopes. For the moment had come. One statue long shrouded in jealous veils, by the artist who formed it Mastered in secret, it must one day reveal itself in its true proportions. definitively settled. Thus, the mature and complete idea was about to confront discussion and submitting to the judgment of men.

It was indeed Masonic doctrine that was meant to distinguish between all the club organized by Claude Fauchet. The foundation of this association tion, it was truly the fraternal spirit, that is to say the essential basis of our institution, the principle of universal solidarity of men mys and things, united in the pantheism of Bonneville and Con-Dorcet. And it was the spirit of brotherhood that gave the orator the Friends of the truth a singular prescience of this modern socialism, "the "scandal of the 19th century, its horror and its glory." (L. Blanc.) From that day, in fact, when humanity formed nothing more than one vast family, as in a family, the common inheritance should be equal Shared ownership was meant to become accessible to all. "Sublime" "Rousseau," exclaimed Fauchet, in La Bouche de fer, no. XV, "you have heard of, one of the first, the eternal order of justice. Yes, every man has right to land and must have ownership of the domain of its existence tence. » This beautiful vision of Freemasonry undoubtedly also came from Freemasonry the future, where the apostle foresaw the whole of humanity involuntarily embodied within the framework of "Universal Harmony".

ê U

Illuminism, one might say, if you will. But already many times this word Hasn't it been synonymous with prophecy?

What still served to characterize the social circle was that the Women were allowed there to claim the rights of their sex. Deman* to the Revolution 4'to raise the condition of the mother, the wife, of
"To address her as a lover was certainly to make a request worthy of her."
(L. Blanc) (I).

This was the work of the lodges ((that Cambacérès presented to the Con-) convention in the form of a draft civil code: the lover, as Fauchet asked for it, seeing his condition improve, the children natives received inheritance rights equal to those of legitimate children.

Citizens, he said in his report, the Civil Code establishes order moral. But what sanction will we give to our laws? We do not wish We no longer pay oaths or worship at the altars of the gods. For us, more wise as all legislators, for us, free from all prejudices, our laws will be nothing more than the code of NATURE sanctioned by reason and guaranteed by liberty. Adherence to the laws, obedience to the laws; this is the guarantee of public happiness (2).

§. 5. – The reorganization of the lodges in 1794.

In 1791 and 1792, Masonic lodges closed everywhere in France. On February 22, 1793, Philippe-Égalité had to send his Resignation of the Grand Master. (Book II, Chapter VI. .Sc. 6.)

This closure of the lodges had two reasons: firstly, a large many were disorganized, because many of their Members were forced to emigrate or became suspects. We have not forgotten indeed the aristocratic character that they presented a good number of lodges. (Book III, Chapter 1, § 4.) That was enough for to arouse the distrust of the Jacobins in the street, (some services that they had previously submitted to their cause. That is how it is that in Le Mans, in 1792, a popular riot ransacked the hotel, where a lodge was meeting, composed largely of the nobility.
of the country.

(t) Bulletin linked to the Grand Lodge SymhoUqve, August 1880.

(?) Ci!nbaol(.Tü3, Bupporl on the draft Civil Code, .Uonileur of September 9th– 1791.

THE REORGANIZATION OF THE LODGES IN 1794 87

The second reason for the closure of the lodges was the persuasion where it was the Illuminati who had definitively triumphed, that the great work was accomplished. From now on, there was no longer any... they, like the Girondins, celebrated the cult of Reason and the Brissotins or that of the Supreme Being as understood by Robespierre (1).

But these are only the lower Masonic lodges. The Higher-ranking initiates always kept their ties secret, what that Providence had allowed them to divide and break away destroy each other. Cadet Gassicourt brings to this A crucial point: a testimony of the utmost precision. It dates from 1794, let's not forget.

Although Masonic lodges are closed in France, the chaos The clown created by Jacques Molay still exists, and the Templars never will. The Jacobins were no longer powerful. Calvinists, men of all the sects, prominent figures, former ministers, Members of the early assemblies are still conspiring; a club established in Morat is the center of the conspiracy

Immediately after the Thermidorian reaction, deceiving the will of the Jacobins who had organized this day, had come Having promised the work of the sect, the lodges were reconstituted everywhere.

(1) The three lodges, however, did not cease to meet absolutely everywhere. We find in the Chain (the Union, October 1832, back details on the logo the France French from Aquitaine, which give an idea of what happened then on more than one point of the territory:

"In November 1791, the ultra-revolutionaries, who were in power, forced The lodges changed their titles. Our R Atel took the name of French Lodge of VUnilé. The blue color of the cords was replaced by the national colors. It was decided that the republican oar would be joined to the Masonic cross, and that the would be purged in a republican manner. Los glaives .avait été tombés dos lodges , and a petition was addressed to the member of the MtaAnEAU convention, to the effect of obtaining the remission On January 19, 1794, the general lodge reported the interdict which paid the Jews and decided that all good citizens, whatever their religion, the color and profession would initiate them into Masonic mysteries. The day of Thermidor so produced it shortly after (July 27, 1794) and laid six months in Viron le travail dos lodges était suspendu ; mais même pendant ootlo tempête, the FF*, of our Atol, gave the lumioro to a professor, Paul Songones, the reception of which took place in a secret location. On November 6, 1800, the logo reclaims its former title of "Frenchwoman of Aquitaine," rejects foreign emblems to Freemasonry and held a new inauguration of the temple.

88 SECRET SOCIETIES AND THE FRENCH REVOLUTION

» U

The following year, J 795, the Grand Orient reorganized itself and placed at its head, under the title of Grand Venerable, Roettiers of Montaleau, one of the members of the Correspondence Chamber before 1789. Little by little, the lodges were reformed in all the provinces.— Freemasonry was back on its feet by the 18th of Brumaire.

At the same time, we find Ta \ti in Father Deschamps' work (Book II, Chapter VI, § 1), the military society of the Philadelphians; its aim was to resume the policy of the Leaf-lants (Book II, Chapter VI, § 5) and to halt the monarchical movement the chic that was emerging so strongly in the country, to take it, If he succeeded, safe havens for the Revolution. The general Ral Moreau was its director (1); this explains the households comments that Napoleon Bonaparte had for him, while Pichegru disappeared in such a summary fashion, and the strange role that the former general of the republican armies was preparing to fill, when, in 1813, he perished in the midst of the Allied camp while carrying weapons against France.

(1) Ernest Hamel, the two compilations of General Malet, in-8°, Paris, 1873, 2nd edition.

CHAPTER THREE

NAPOLÉON I^{er} BT LB MONOPOLI UNIVERSITY

ACCORDING TO A BONAPARTIST PUBLICIST

Napoleon saved the work of the sects, which had been compromised by the effect terrible material disorder in which the Convention and the Directorate France had been thrown into chaos and by the fierce reaction which, in 1798 and 1799, quickly brought the country back to religion and the monarchy Shit.

A writer whose name will certainly not make him suspect, Mr. Albert Duruy, in a recent work: PUELLI—that and the Revolution^ observed and described this state of public opinion more than anything, he is and remains a great supporter of the Revolution. highly praises Napoleon P* for having saved the essence of his work v in matters of public education and having stopped the movement a reactionary movement by resuming the monopoly plans developed by the first revolutionaries (1). We cannot too much Turn your attention to the following page, which summarizes his work:

(1) To the plans of La Chalotais, Turgot, Talleyrand and Condorcet cited Book II, Chapter IV, §§ 5 and 6, and Volume 11, Annex B, another must be added national education plan by Roland de la Platrière, one of the most advanced logos. MA Diiruy, we speak in these terms:

"It is above all Roland's plan that must be studied if one wishes to make progress." account of the movement of minds regarding public education in the last* The final days of the monarchy. With Roland, we are in the presence of a spirit Very clear and very positive, going straight to the practical solution and always indicati

90 NAPOLEON AND THE UNIVERSITY MONOPOLY

Bonaparte has often been criticized for having brought about this reform me of 1802, and especially in his great creation of 1806, a spirit of centralization and excessive regulation. A less super-ücieilc and especially more equitable would not have failed to notice the slight rest of this grievance; l)But even if she had studied the documents very little, she would It quickly became known that the only way to save public education from a irremediable decadence was precisely to confine it within a rule and to impose an inflexible discipline on him. That there was this aspect of it being somewhat exaggerated, an excessive abundance of precautions, a there may be an overly pronounced tendency to militarize schools; the matter is pos-possible; but apart from this slight defect, if it is one, what a marvelous The concept that this University of France, with its grand master, its council, its inspectors general, its ranks and its powerful hierarchy! What a stroke of genius to have understood that %Cü was just a large corporation secular, to compete with the younger generation for the remnants of the old corporate 7 'a hold on, teachers, and especially "their cspntl Before 18 BRUMAIRE ON COULD ALREADY FORECAST A MOMENT WHEN THE REACTION WOULD HAVE REGAINED IN THE DR L'EXSEIGNEMRNT ESTATE ALL THE LAND LOST SINCE 1789.

A grave danger, which aimed at nothing less than calling into question, in the very near future, the principles of tolerance and equality of which the conquest had been the goal of so many efforts, and which remained an excuse for so many excesses. By creating the University of France in his own image, by animating it the maintenance of his mind, that is to say, by giving him the mission of being, in at the same time "as a guarantee against pernicious and subversive theories guardians of social order, the guardian of laws and of established liberal ideas in the French constitutions(1) », Napoleon forever dismissed this dan ger. After having riveted the present to evolution by the civil God and the

There was above all an administrative system, click on Roland, and, naturally, a centraliz

University of Paris, the superior literary institution of the provincial universities. Above a fairly standard council called the Bureau of Education/Township and a senior director do Tédualion, placed under the immediate orders of the minister of justice, would have Summer cliarés do maintain runilé do inseignoineui. Add delegated visitors by the Faculty of Arts for inspection of the courses, the creation of a house an institution for teachers, a kind of normal eco-school; cnilu, the subordination of private institutions at colleges and at the authority of the university, and you will have lines of a system that certainly no longer lacked breadth, s (p. 4C,) – This Wasn't the correspondence room inspired by the Chamber of Correspondence created? at that time in (Morand-Orientales? See the curious pages of Ra-'ou on Tin-fluonco dos institutions ma^'onuiques dans les créations adiuinislralivcs do la Cons-tituanlo cited by Father Do-'Cbamps (book 11, chapter IV, g 4). But above all, we must not ter «the subordination of private buildings to the autonomy of the Klal >', (I have reslô since then the keystone of revolutionary legislation and Freemasonry seeks to establish in all countries where clic a do l'inllucnro,

(1) Note from Napoleon relating to the organization of the Imperial University.

according to a Bonapartist publicist 91

The Concordat secured his future through education. Historians of The liberal school has neglected this point of view too much; and truly, from their On the one hand, it is indeed ingratitude; for, of all the services that Napoleon returned to their cause believing, I grant you, that they could win his own, I I know of nothing more memorable than having wrested the teaching to the worst enemies of the new regime, to entrust it to a pro-regime body fundamentally imbued with modern ideas. The University, no doubt, has numerous personal titles in recognition of the de-democracy; she has been preparing for a long time, sometimes openly and sometimes quietly, generations have been pushing its worship to the super-level. tition. But however large a share we give it, that's not a reason to forget the one that belongs to its founder, and, so as not to put there to be at the forefront, to have cast in bronze what was still only of clay (1).

These pages are not only of historical interest. They show thirty what the Church and the cause of social order have to expect of a Bonapartist restoration. MA Duruy was personally honored ne! leraenten combating the republicans' plans against the teaching Christian movement; but he is at the same time a defender of Napoleonic emptiness, and this idea is nothing other than Revolutionary video. The statement is so precise that he makes it here must be attached to the published indications (volume II, book II, chapter 1). X, S 6): The Napoleonic idea or the internal policy of The Empire, and document F: The religious policy of the Empire.

(1) Public education and the Revolution, Paris, Hachette, 1882, one volume in*8*, pp. 357, 358.

CHAPTER FOUR

THE MASONIC CONSPIRACY FROM 1815 TO 1830

S 1. – Secret Societies and the Parliamentary System

To have a historical understanding of this period, one must always keep two considerations in mind: 1. QueIque However important the actions of secret societies may be, they have to take into account the ideas that are spreading among the peoples at the following certain situations. Their great skill lies in not to go against these currents of opinion, but on the contrary to mingle with them and to exploit them by introducing their destructive principles.

Thus, after the long oppression of the people by the Revolution French and by Napoleon, the restoration of the Bourbons was necessary. knows as an absolute necessity. The sects renounced to hinder him; we even saw Talleyrand have himself, in 1814 and 1815, the champion of the principle of legitimacy, except to begin The very next day, underground mining work began to overturn the Bourbons (1). People everywhere wanted to reclaim their independence. The feeling of nationality, after having been heinously raped for twenty-five years, resumed by a reaction

(1)V.daiiB the memoirs and various writings of M. de 3fenerntc/ipublished by his ôls(Parls Plon, 5 vols. in 8vo (1830-82) his assessment of Talley's revolutionary role rand, t. L, p. 70.

94 THE MASONIC CONSPIRACY FROM 1815 TO 1830

inevitable, an empire much larger than it had ever been eu. The domination, of Austria in Venetia, of Russia in Po- logne, from Holland to Belgium, constituted acts of violence incendiary, injustices, which the Secret Societies skillfully exploited enjoy.

2® Absolute doctrinal unity does not exist within sects; among them there are always diverse currents and rivalries of people. At times they unite to destroy; a

■ A secret instinct, in the absence of a central guiding force, brings them together to to fight the Church and the truly Christian dynasties; but

means to be employed. It should therefore come as no surprise that the so-secret societies, after having favored them during the early years of the century, the French conquests, turned violently against Napoleonic despotism from 1808 onwards and have adopted as its watchword the establishment of a constitutional government. Later they added the principle of the nationalities.

An anecdote, which would be grotesque if it weren't mixed with... These very serious events clearly demonstrate how the government constitutional had become their password at that time.

We saw above (Book III, Chapter III, § 3)^ at the beginning By 1789, the men of the sect were already using the word "constituent." to stir up minds, and to boast of carrying it all the way to Russia and as far as Constantinople. That was in 1825, the day after the death of Alexander I; a military revolt had broken out in cries of: Long live the constitution! The officers who took part They knew perfectly well the meaning of that cry. As for the soldiers, they had been led to believe that it was the name of the wife of the Grand Duke Constantine, whom the rebels claimed to represent the rights to the throne, despite his abdication in favor of his brother Nicolas!

We explained ourselves in the preliminary chapter,

§ 4, on the scope of these claims. By pursuing the state establishment throughout Europe of the form of government Glais, without taking into account any of the specific conditions each people, the secret societies had no concern for real and steady development of popular freedoms. They have proven by thwarting, throughout the Restoration, the projects for the decentralization and reconstitution of corporations professions. What they wanted was the aqâblissement of the rauroritc of the Legilian governments and especially the freedom of art attacking religion through impious literature and bad press. This is what must not be lost sight of in order to appreciate the struggles. your story, which will follow.

THE PHILADLPHIANS AND THE CONSTITUTIONAL PARTY. 95

§. 2. – The Philadelphus Society and the first

ORIGINS OF THE CONSTITUTIONAL PARTY.

We saw in Father Deschamps' work how in 1789

among the Martinists (book II, ch. VI S, 5)" had tried in vain to promote, from that time onwards, the theories of the government constitutional amendment.

This party, long silenced, naturally had to revive after the destruction of the Jacobins and in the midst of the imbecility of the Directory. It took shape in a secret society a particular society which called itself the Society of Philadelphus and had its main center of activity in Franche-Comté. It brought together high-value elements and had recruited mainly among the military. General Oudet, General Guillaume, Moreau and Malet were among its principal members. The history English Torian of Secret Societies, Mr. Thomas Frost, notes that they were all Freemasons (1).

Initially disconcerted by the coup d'état of 18 Brumaire, in which Bonaparte had had as his principal instruments Former Jacobins, the Philadelphs, soon resumed their activities with a tenacity that proved among their members a great conviction. If we are to believe Nodier (2) and Mr. Ernest Hamel, they were allegedly involved in the Arena conspiracies. The government The consular authorities at that time were fully aware of their actions and the Moreau played a major role in it.

According to the journal of the Earl of Malmesbury, which Mr. Thomas Frost, laborious 'negotiations for the restoration of the The Bourbons were pursuing each other between Pichegru and Cadoudal in a

(1) 7/(6 Secret Society» of Vie European Revolutions volume 1, chap. III.

(2) Nodier, History of Secret Societies in the Army

96 LA. CO.INSPIRATION MASONRY EU 1815 TO 1830

Part C Moreau on the other hand in the name of the Philadelphians. The nejja-cialioris focused specifically on the gura/ilies to be demanded of Louis XVIII and on the re-establishment of a constitutional regime, semblable to that of England. Meanwhile, the police of Bonaparte seized them. Moreau's friends, said Mr. Hamel had sworn to rescue him from his tormentors if he were to be condemned to death. Moreau, leaving for Texel, had to abandon to take over the management of the Society. It was taken over by the general Oudet, its first founder. Struck by exile in his turn, he transmitted the command of the Philadelphs to General Malet. That is It was in this capacity that Malet received proposals in 1808 for the destruction of the imperial government by a group of Jacobin terrorists, at the head of whom was Demaillet. This commander riale seized the traces and threw Malet in prison without trial (1).

Many other people, who appear to have been strangers to the secret societies, preparing, for their part, in the silence of the office and within the circle of private relationships, restoration of the parliamentary government under the Bourbon monarchy; because its restoration therefore appeared imminent to all men clairvoyant. Works like those of Montesquieu have on the direction of the human mind an influence that translates more Late in the events, Lally-Tollend is the representative the the most eminent of this group of men, (who in their preconceived notions, without taking into account the underground work of sects, have unconsciously but very powerfully favored the work of the Revolution.

It is certain (due to his long correspondence with Boyer-Coland and its relations with the 18th-century philosophers had prepared Louis XVIII for the accession of the government by commentary. However, the energy with which he rejected the charter developed by the old revolutionaries of the Imperial Senate, is an indication that he had persisted in that path and had returned to the true traditional government of the Romans, without the pressure exerted on him by Emperor Alexander, himself urged on by Talleyrand

(1) E. Hamel, History of the two conspiracies of General Malel, 2nd ed., Paris, 1873, in-80. According to this author, the Philadelphes would have been for nothing in the conspiracy of 1812: it sprang entirely from Malet's brain and was concocted born exclusively from him in his prison.

A DISGUSTING SIDE OF THE Hundred Days 97

and Dalberg by means of the influences which are known (book II, chapter 1). VII, §1).

This is the memory that Louis-Philippe invoked when, wanting to make amends for the July Revolution, he wrote to the Emperor Father Nicolas "that he would maintain the granted Constitution" BY THE ALLIES at the Peace (1). »

§ 3. – A neglected aspect of the Hundred Days

Few events are more poorly received today than the Return from the Island of Elba and the Hundred Days. The grandeur of the catastrophe, which concluded this brief episode, inaugurated by the march from the Gulf of Genoa to Paris, make it appear as a wonderful of a great general on his former soldiers.

The Hundred Days, however, were above all an attempt to revenge of the Revolution, and they were prepared in the societies secret* Mr. Nettement, in his History of the Restoration, has recounted that, as early as the end of 1814, two centers of conspiracy existed in France: a military conspiracy in which he was only involved than Napoleon; a civil conspiracy, including Fouché, Carnot, Barras held the principal sons, and who, by using Napoleon as indispensable for overthrowing the Bourbons, he thought either of to establish a regency, that is, to place the Duke of Orléans on the throne: "The Duke of Bassano, in particular, had remained the active intermediary of these relations. The emperor had few correspondences there; this means Dangerous, it compromises more than it helps. The information... plus i.Tiporlant3 arrived for him through devoted servants, accré-said to him by means of agreed passwords, and which were following his instructions (2).

(1) Colle Icclro, communicated by a member of the revolutionary government of Poland, which had it discovered in the archives of the Grand Duke Consanliu, was pu-forgotten by the newspaper La ReooluUon, then edited by James Fazy, later pre-resident of the governorate of Geneva. V. Ivan Golovine, Revolutionary Europe, Paris, in-lî, Gapelie, 1819, p. 2.

(2) Clearly, Hüt. of the Restoration, book, V, (or II. This preparation of the Gent-Jours is barely mentioned in the book (LYlle) that 11. Tbiers devoted to them created in the Middle Ages of the Consulate and the Empire.

ill

98 THE MASONIC CONSPIRACY FROM 1815 TO 1830

But this is only one aspect of the fabric of societies. Crete. In Italy too, they were returning to the former general beyond the Convention, towards a mocking of the Treaty of Tolenlino.

When Napoleon (pillaged the island of Elhac), he was already camped out of Romans and king of Ilia by the will of the people and the grace of God. He had accepted the project and received the council only... Delegates from Italian cities had drafted documents in Turin. We have conserved the reports of his principal emissary in Italy, dated Naples, October 1, 1811, on the means of creating an insurrection revolutionary tion in the States of the Church (1).

When the Duke of Wellington and Count Pozzodi Borgo, it was "5 the first days of February 1815, proposed confidential the Congress of Vienna to transport Napoleon in a certainly, and it was certainly not those who violated the just faith created by the Treaty of Paris.

5.4 – The role of secret societies in politics

EUROPEAN ACCORDING TO M. DE METTERNICH. – PRUISE AND FREEMASONRY.

The publication of the memoirs of the great Austrian chancellor is came to provide striking confirmation of the facts that signed then, with such great devotion, Cardinal Consalvi, Joseph de Maistre, M. d'Haugwitz.

Mellerich's testimony on the actions of sects is also It is all the more noteworthy that this statesman was, by his past and by the turn of his mind, far removed from the views which inspire would be the eminent men, whose... we have just mentioned names. Absolutely suppress freedom of the press, prevent any development of representative government, especially organs to establish a secret police force headquartered in Vienna, that's what only means (that he saw to oppose evil. He readily deals with in his intimate correspondence of the, of visionaries, the hom-

(1) Y. the Italian documents cited by Rattazi, 'Mazzini and his time, volume I' pp. 17-21, p. 25.

Russia and Masonic sects 99

those who believed that the real remedy lay in religious education joy of youth, in the freedom of the Church, in the rise given to works of zeal, true science, and propaganda of which she still maintains the home.

From 1817 onwards, almost or at the same time as Consalvi (book II, (Chapter VIII, Section 2), the chancellor realized that the work of the Res- The situation was very precarious and was undermined on all sides. through underground work.

In his view, the main causes were the disastrous path in which the French government had entered with the ministry Decazes, Emperor Alexander's enthusiasm for the "if/sU"-ques who exploited him and used this coat for cover to uncover their plans, and finally the persistent complicity of Prussia with Freemasonry, despite Mr.'s representations.

In a dispatch dated June 28, 1817, addressed to Count Lebzeltern, the Austrian ambassador to Plersburg, he called with great care the attention of the Russian court on "the progress of sects which are beginning to threaten the peace of "Several parts, especially central Europe." H describes the manner of the mystics in terms very similar to those that em then folded de Maistre (Book II, Chapter VIII, § 1^, then he shows the alliances that existed between the most diverse forms verses of error in the practical field:

It is undoubtedly worthy of the wisdom of the great powers of to take into consideration an evil that is possible and perhaps even Easy to shut down in principle, but which can only gain in intensity as it spreads. This is something to remember during the courses. that there exists in Europe a class of disturbers of the public peace, who was deceived in all her calculations by the strong and constant march and by the just and liberal principles of the great monarchs, who saved Europe. These men, desperate and forced into their last refuge chements, regard all questions of any kind of disorder, and it may be reserved for us to see the editorial staff authors of the Yellow Dwarf and the True Liberal preach against the vanities of this world, and to see Carnot and Darrère become the apostles of the New Jerusalem. This matter deserves the most serious attention; it is linked more that one does not believe in the peace of society and the tranquility of states, and the major courts should soon take into consideration the means of thwarting the plans of these perpetrators of a new kind of revolutions (i).

100 THE MASONIC CONSPIRACY FROM 1815 TO 1830

Two months later, Metternicli received a strange communication. (the emperor of Lüßio. Alexander P''' addresses the cabinet of Vienna, to complain about the obstacles put in place by the police Aulriclian to the pro)agande of the Bhliques Societies! Metternich, in his official response to Mr. do Nesselrode, gives some explanations in diplomatic style; but in a letter dated the 29th In his letter to Emperor Francis in August 1817, he expressed his full thoughts. and in very pi(iLiants) terms:

VM has probably long been convinced that the spirit of The prosecutor Alexander is unable to persevere in the same order of ideas. Since 1815, he has abandoned Jacobinism to throw himself into the mysticism. However, as its tendency is constantly revolution tionary, his religious sentiments are also; therefore the protector rat of biblical societies no j)Where could he escape from him.

I ask VM to consider my reply to the Count of Nesselrode

To specify that from this point of view. If I'm fixated on details of a certain kind What's particularly important is that I wanted to cut short, right from the start, Correspondence between the two offices concerning biblical matters questions and religious police, Emperor Alexander will certainly lose any desire, any wish to become more involved with Christians as well limited, as narrow-minded as VM and his minister are in my letter. I wanted to fully enlighten him on this point, regarding his ideas on the matter VM's ideas about religion are not those of VM, therefore VM might not be easy to convert. However, it is difficult to To predict how far this aberration might still lead. In all The ideas of Emperor Alexander include the desire to make proselytes. which holds first place in his calculations. It is in this spirit that he enlisted the Jacobins in Italy and the sects in Europe. Today the The rights of the bourgeoisie have given way to the readers of the Bible. We have not What will the next answer be, as curious and disinterested observers? to my last fishing trip to Lebzelttern regarding the dangers of the mysticism and the common agreement of the cabinets in view I fight against them unfortunate consequences.

The reader may wish to refer to what was written at that time that of Maistre on the form of Bible Societies that the

(1) itemoriesyl^{fi}il, p. 53 »

Russia and Masonic Sects 101

sect had taken root in Russia (Uv. II. chap. XV, §. 3.) further on in this volume you will also find proof of their action in the events in the East which broke out shortly afterwards. These dispatches from Melternich perfectly reveal this situation.

We should also note the role played by Russian agents in the center of Europe and in Italy, and we must not forget that it is among the diplomats that the Roman High Court recruited its members. (Book II, Chapter VIII, § 5.) Some good in However skilled Metternicli was, he could not always outwit his plots, and, in a cruel twist of irony, it was in his office the kid who was hiding one of Piccolo Tigre's accomplices and Nubius, a Lombard nobleman, named V, whose name Gaëtan was at war. We still have a letter from him dated... Vienna, late 1840, addressed to the Swiss avoy Neuhaus, in which he urges him to vigorously pursue the war against the convents and Catholic institutions that were to lead to events of 1847.11 urges him not to let himself be stopped by Austria's diplomatic notes, because, he said, there exists in the Austrian cabinet «unanl^{igoiii}isra) between the Prince of Mettcrricch and Count Kollovrath, who succeeded in paralyzing everything." It is necessary to

"to one and in silence all the roots of the great oak at-"Trickster. He will be satisfied with himself and then everything will be "finished (1),"

Metternich naturally raised the question of the Societies Cretans before the sovereigns in the conferences that took place place after Kotzebue's assassination. The sects had insisted on to show their hand in this audacious crime, because Sand was wearing On him at the time of the crime was a piece of paper on which was written these months:

Death sentence against Auguste de Kotzebue, executed on March 23 at five-thirty in the evening, according to the decision of rU 7 iiver< sitô de .

(1) V ilemorie documentate per la storia délia Riooluzioru ilaliana, raccoUo da
Paolo Meucacci, Uoina, IST0iia-S'i t. I.pp. 51, 52. Mr. Moucacci adds, quo beaa«
A number of Freemasons were found in the ranks of the army and the administration.
autricliieuaos and contributed to spreading in Italy the secret societies that their government complied. V also, on the Austrian cabinet at that time, Crétinoau-Joly, History of the Sonderbund, ch. VI (2 vols. ia-8 », Paris, 1850).

102 THE MASONIC CONSPIRACY FROM 1815 TO 1830

The fact is quite horrible in itself, wrote ftentz on April 1st 1819, but the first course of the crime and its probable connection, already almost obvious at this point. with the diseases and the dangers more formidable than those of the present era, make it far more horrible and even more appalling for someone who is used to seeing the Things from above. This is the result of these innocent efforts. and virtuous of German youth and its excellent teachers, of which we He talked so much, to silence us, when we had for the first reported the danger regarding the excesses of the AVartburg.

Metternich replied to him from Rome on April 9, 1819:

For my part, I have no doubt whatsoever that the murderer acted not not of his own volition, but at the instigation and on the orders of a secret society... The sad end of poor Kotzebue provides us with an a-gumentum ad hominem, that the Duke of Weimar with all his liberalism could not defend...

•.. 4 ...*

It seems absolutely certain that Kotzebue's murderer was not that the emissary of the Vehmic court of Jena, that is to say a true Ilaschischin. The university that was to carry out the coup was designated by member of the association who was supposed to strike the victim, by doing so in advance the sacrifice of his own life, and who, in fact, was the executor of the sentence tence.

We will soon see what the Russian leader will say about the the amiable manner in which these State Councillors are treated in Germany Magne.

But while in Germany Russian agents are being assassinated... obscurationem^ other Russian agents preside in Italy over the clubs of Carbonari. ,1c thinks that soon we will be done with these excesses.

Alexander of Russia, with the great integrity that characterizes him knows, had to return to its infatuations.

Even more dangerous was Prussia's collusion with the Soviets secret societies, which served his hidden plans for the unification of the Al-Lemagne under his scepter.

Among Prussia's allies in that party linked with the sects, there was the Duke of Saxe-Weimar, Charles Augustus, who was one of the most active members of the high Masonic ranks ques, one of Weishaupt's followers (1). Mr. d{; (lenlz addressed the Next dispatch to Meltrnich, April 25, 1819:

(1) See the article in his name in VAUgcmcincs Jlandbuck (1st FrciHi««rcrci, Leipzig, in-S\ 2'> cdil

LA. Prussia and the Masonic sects 103

I must return to the matter at hand regarding the declaration of the great-Duke of Weimar, as on one of the most important documents of our era. A primary focus on the evil from which Germany suffers* gne, one of those who helped the most to spread it, was able, eight days after a crime that sparked revenge against him and his advisors more than against any other, to be heard on the diet, by the organ from his representative, words like these: "It is necessary that "freedom of opinion and education must be respected in the "universities; for it is in the open struggle of opinions that one (the students- "Gods!" must find freedom here; it is against trust in "The authority of the teachers, from which the schoolboy must be protected, is to the a level of independence of judgment qtt'on l'apporter direct- "lying."

When I consider how far back I would have to go, how far back as what To achieve depth, one would have to plunge the scalpel into the raw flesh to operate. To believe in a radical cure, I find it almost madness to believe congress of the first sovereigns of Germany, it may be found enough unity, insight, courage and resolve to bring results.

The chancellor, strengthened by the revelations that the assassination of Kotzebue sparked, drawing primarily on the uprisings in Naples, from Piedmont, Spain, will now act personally to the sovereigns to reveal to them the danger with which they are playing unconsciously. Here is Metternich's letter to the emperor, dated July 30, 1819, in which he summarizes his interview with King Frederick William III, in Teplitz, and his conversation with this prince;

Before intervening, the emperor needs to see things clearly; he needs to know which governments are worthy of the name that are capable of designing and executing a plan. The question applies to Prussia itself. The country does indeed have its king; but we are looking there in vain for royal power to prevail. If the king gives free rein to evil which threatens his throne and even his person, as evidenced by the evidence against the conspirators, the emperor must turn in on himself and follow, in the interest of his own salvation, a very different approach from the one he had adopted until then.

...I can speak openly to Your Majesty, I added; for she has always been receptive to my sincerity. Therefore, I will freely say my thought, as in the past, since you expressly invite me to do so. All the

104 THE MASONIC CONSPIRACY FROM 1815 TO 1830

The advice given so far to Your Majesty was, in principle, bad or defective in the application. The discovered conjuration is only action always follows theory. This conspiracy has its origin and its seat in Prussia. The lower-ranking conspirators are known today; the leaders are not yet in charge, but they belong certainly in the highest spheres, and are found among your Majesty's advisers, the Prince of Hardenberg. He has rendered to Your Majesty the most distinguished services; but today he is old, he is a weak man in mind as well as body. He always wants what is best and does not argue that too often evil.

"You know," replied the king, "that I know the Prince of Hardenberg; what makes him unlucky is his entourage, in which there are some very unusual men.

Why does Your Majesty tolerate these people? Why have you given free rein to any notoriously bad institution? Vase and dangerous?

"You are absolutely right," replied the king; "but here is what

It happens when people get old. I wish that, while you
You will be here, we will establish principles which will then be rigorously applied.

On August 1, 1819, the Prince of Metternich reported to the emperor of a conference he had with the Prince of Hardenberg, Prince Wittgenstein and Count von Bernstorff:

My plan generally included the following points:

The shady, even unbelievable, conduct of the most part of the German governments (and in this respect the government (the Prussian leader) gave such impetus to the revolutionary spirit naire in Germany, that we have perhaps arrived at the last period in which evil can be successfully fought.

In the past, German revolutionaries were separated from one another.
others, like the states in the squalls they lived; the con.'?pirates do not They soon realized that, under such conditions, it was impossible. to strike a blow that would carry. The Prussian military party began to to consider enlarging Prussia by means of conquest; the civil party limited himself to turning his efforts towards the side of the Transformation of Prussia.

Soon some men (who – remarkably – belonged (almost all in teaching) went further: they followed the a true path, if one adopts a revolutionary point of view; they aim return to the reunion of Germans into one Germany!

The already advanced generation could not be used to help them achieve this

Prussia and the Masonic sects 105

But; so they cast their eyes on the generation to be raised. This was a plan which left a fairly wide field of inquiry, even for impassioned minds hold on; for the student groups succeed one another every four years in Four years at most. But more than one of those generations has already passed.
since we have been systematically working with youth towards this goal criminal; therefore, there is now a whole class of future employees of the State, of teachers of the people and of budding scholars, which is ripe for the Revolution.

If we now consider that, in the public administration of the Prussia, most of the jobs, and precisely the most important ones, are occupied by outspoken revolutionaries, and this in the center of the government lying as well as in the provinces (and this is particularly the
(as in the case of the Rhineland provinces), it should come as no surprise if one can

To complete the work, all that remains today is to introduce a democratic constitution in Prussia. If the measure is not in To make matters worse, this stems solely from the king's personal aversion to this innovation.

Could I have foreseen that the great conspiracy, which extended over Would all of Germany be unmasked right now? Gela was all the less possible since it was part of my plan not to reveal it. than in Garlsbad.

In all my interviews with the first statesmen of the Prussia, I have become convinced of the following truths which are self-evident by themselves.

The Prince of Ila''denbe»'g is, both morally and physically, prey to to a weak, almost childlike state. He wants what's best, he he even knows how to discern; but as a consequence of his great weakness, he is today even more than in the past. "Under the influence of two elements, which are always the most dangerous for a statesman who enjoys of great authority: one is an extraordinary need to pass for liberal; the other is an unfortunate tendency to seek a singular entourage. It has reached such a point that one can affirm, without being accused of exaggeration, that he does not have around him a man who does not profess the doctrines of pure democracy or who is not prepared to to play an active role in the conspiracy against the Prussian throne himself.

After the Naples Revolution (1820), Emperor Alexander ou- He saw absolutely everything. Metternich wrote, on August 8, 1820,

i06 IA MASONIC CONSPIRACY FROM 1815 TO 1830

Then (read 20 Novcmbro, for coustator ce chan cmenl. Later, (l.jdéceiuhrc, he addresses) to Alexander himself a memorandum on

It shows the paths the disease has taken and the remedy to be applied. how" the revolutionary spirit could, in Germany, in Italy and "Later in Spain, to cover herself with the sincere veil of love" "of the homeland", amidst the upheavals caused by the Napoleon's conquests:

Prussia committed a grave error in calling for help from weapons as dangerous as secret societies will always be Your fault; which cannot even be justified by the deplorable situation in which this power was then found. It was she who pre-Mière gave a strong impetus to the revolutionary spirit in his States, and this spirit made rapid progress, sustained as it was in the rest of Germany through development since 1800 It was seen as a step towards a system of foreign despotism. Several princes of the Rhineland confederation will (will go on to particularly the auxiliaries) liars and accomplices of this system, to which they sacrificed the institutions tions, which, in their country and from time immemorial, served as safeguard against arbitrariness and "democratio.

The alliance war, by putting limits on the preponderance of France was strongly supported in Germany by the men themselves. whose hatred controlled France was in reality nothing but hatred against the Napoleon Parte's military despotism and also against legitimate power of their own masters.

• • • • •

The return of the inventor to France and the completely erratic march government smoked. From 1815 to 18 accumulated a sum of new dangers and harmful calamities for civilization entire tion. It is to the first of these misfortunes that the state crilifjue, in which France and the entire social body are placed entire. Lionnparle annihilated, in one hundred days, the work "the fourteen years years during which he had held power. He unleashed the revolution tion that he had managed to enchaîner in France; he brought back the spirits not at the time of the 18th Brumaire, but to the principles that the Assembly constituent assembly had adopted them in its deplorable blindness.

We have not yet touched upon one of these points in this present memorandum. instruments at the same time. The most active and the dangerous problems of which serve revolutionaries of all countries, with a success that... jourd'liui is no longer debatable. Ce .totit les S'fcu 'rs xeo'Nes, puissance genuine and all the more dangerous because it acts "in the shadows, It undermines all parts of the social body and deposits the seeds everywhere.

MEMOIR OF MR. DE METTERNICH 107

of a moral gangrene, which will soon develop and carry its fruits. This scourge is one of the most real. friendly governments rest and their cuplej* can monitor and fight.

And he concluded by asking the princes to "Vélouffer les Socié~"

§. 5. – Memorandum from Mr. de Metternich to the Emperor

Alexander in 1822.

At the Congress of Verona, he addressed Emperor Alexander, on this subject, a special report which we reproduce in extenso. It contains a broad overview of the activities of cults in modern societies, as conceived by the prince of Metternich. However, general forms must be taken into account in which the purpose of this memoir required the skillful diplomat to envelop his thoughts. Alexander himself had been As we saw earlier, he was too easily seduced by the intrigues of sects. so that it would be possible to tell him how much he had fooled them at times.

Of all the ills that afflict society today, the one that what deserves to draw the particular attention of governments is the criminal game of sects.

One of the weaknesses of the human mind is the tendency who, at all times, led him into the vague realm of mysticism cynicism. There is a multitude of restless minds, that the need to create a occupation is turbulent and its activity is unable to focus on objects of limited utility, it pushes them towards sterile abstractions. Dupes of their disordered imagination, duped by anyone who wants to use their These men, obsessed with perverse projects, have constantly been for the secret societies as a breeding ground for followers.

Societies have always been influenced by the changing spirit of sects. If there are any among the clicks that have remained faithful to certain based on their primitive institution, the largest number is always ready to deviate from it and give in to the strong impulses of the moment. That's as well as in times of religious fervor, secret societies Your people armed themselves in support of these or such dogmas. Today that the spirit of the century is directed towards the reform of modes of governance nomoiit, c'esfsur 1 p champ <1(5 la politique que nous vois ces mêmes associations ilcplovor all their turbulent activity.

108 THE MASONIC CONSPIRACY FROM 1815 TO 1830

Where secret societies do not seek out factions, These groups, knowing all the advantages they can derive from the sects, do not delay they hardly need to go looking for them.

It is necessary to indicate three main periods from which the ex- dates time (1).

The French Revolution, at its beginning, had suspended work sects. The arena was open to all the aberrations of the mind.
human, as with all ambitions; what would the followers have gained?
to mysterious conventicles? They embarked on the career which, while flattering the dreams of their imagination, offered them the perspective of a brilliant fortune. Also the revolutionary administrations in Did France recruit its members from the ranks of sectarians and lodges?
Masonic lodges found themselves depleted; just as we have seen the revolutionary army in Naples to complete its cadre with the Mal content.

It was under the Empire and following the purges that Bonaparte had made in the administrations (2), which the secret societies have com-began to rebuild itself. Strengthened by his will, Bonaparte cellula qu'au instead of emulating useless resources to prevent their organization, it is up to him would be easier to contain them or the "iijeti" users by placing them under surveillance severe and even to make them serve iiUliMinMit to his descendants. From then on, While covering them with ridicule, he worked to secure a way of police active in associations which seemed to him likely to be guided; on the contrary, he displayed an inflexible severity against all the others.

The fall of Bonaparte relieved the world of an immense burden; but this weight having weighed on both the good and the bad, the right and the
They felt unwell, yet simultaneously free from the constraints that bound them.
were. Unfortunately, the ebunents of the biim were either distorted or paralyzed, while those of evil did not remain inactive, and we soon saw the revolutionary esjirit take up a new growth.

However, the factious ones themselves soon realized to see that the people, weary of so many violent scourges, were not more willing to actively and massively serve their purposes. He was reserved for the most remote country, in terms of civilization, and unfortunate-

(t) Our words are underlined in lo toxio.

(2) MoUornicli viso here the coii.sUtulion dos Philadolplics ol des Garbouari, which dato was close to the TKiiipiru communities.

MEMOIR OF MR. DE METERNIGH 109

the most stirred thing within him, to create a new way for to bring about upheaval.

A general unease reigned in Spain; no people, however,

Was the Revolution of 1820 the direct result of a conspiracy? hatched in the darkness, prepared and combined in the ways of a secret society. If there could be any doubt about the truth of this In fact, it would be lifted by indiscreet confessions, that one of the instruments more active and at the same time the most shameless of the military revolt in The island of León has made them public.

What the crime had spawned was a government in a state of... No amount of utter nothingness could destroy it. The success of Leon's plot marks the second period of momentum that secret societies have gained.

The revolutions in Italy in 1820 and especially in 1821, seem to us bent indicate the third one.

If one cannot see in the military revolt of Naples anything but imitation servile tion of that <le the island of Léon, it could not be the same of the Piedmontese revolution. This was obviously led by the sectarians of France, and if enlightened observers had long ago time was able to sense the existence of a vast revolutionary association in Paris, linked to those abroad, is the revolution that erupted in Turin who tore away for us the veil that until then had enveloped his action.

It seems to us to be of positive interest to strive to distinguish the different characteristic differences that exist between the two Italian revolutions One was more local than the other. The genius of the Neapolitan people Tain and Piedmontese, and even the geographical position of the two states, had to establish, and did indeed establish, a notable difference between the two revolutions. We do not believe we are going too far in considering portraying the Neapolitan revolution as the work of pure Carbonarism and simple, foreign, in its origin, to any means other than means nationals, although it may have been fomented and supported by the influence Spanish. On the contrary, the revolution in the Sardinian States was placed under the combined leadership of the Piedmontese revolutionaries and French sectarians. If an infinite number of notions didn't support this We would find proof of this thesis in the moral situation current state of the two kingdoms.

The situation in Naples seems to us much further removed from such an upheaval. similar to that of 1820, which is not and will not be again the Piémount.

The organization of secret societies in France, as they exist today (1), does not seem to go back further than 1820.

(1) These words are underlined for the second time in the text. Metternicli indicates

The work of the central commission in Mavoncc has provided more than one proof that the German revolutionaries did not yet maintain at that time at a time when only direct relations with the revolutionary center existed. Paris. It was only afterwards that the prisoners arrested in Carlsb ul curent forced the main leaders of secret societies in Germany to seek refuge in France, which several of them They returned to Paris, where they found little way to reach an agreement with French liberals. Hatred of Bonaparte had served as the first the impetus for German secret societies, the sectarians found This creates a difficulty in aligning with the French leaders. The no* the philanthropic sense of the Teutonic professors and students, who despised them on the other hand, by factions too convenient to stop at Nonsense. It was only in 1821 that direct relations were able to establish relations between the German and French revolutionaries (11, and Among the first group, there were German Bonapartists. the most significant places in Germany today, from the point of view of the combination of German and French revolutionary methods, are the kingdom of Württemberg, the city of Frankfurt and some cities of Switzerland. The men who play leading roles in these places, this are the Murhard brothers, and a few other men of letters in France* strong and the editors of the Neckar Gazelle. The enterprise of this paper is subject to the direct influence of the steering committee in Paris, and its re- chief actor, Lindner, served for several years as An active agent of Bonaparte in Germany. The second editor was police commissioner under Bonaparte.

Until that time, French radicals had followed in the footsteps of their own revolution.

Several attempts made in France to rouse the masses have had to prove to these men that such undertakings did not offer them not the chances of success of 1789. On the other hand, the one obtained by the The military revolt in Spain, however, was unable to capture their attention. on the new means that had prepared it, and this same means having since then, the government has also been overthrown in three days Although legitimate in Naples, the French revolutionaries had to adopt it. as the most efficient and quickest. By not bringing up the in- introduction of Carbonarism in France only in 1820 and perhaps child at the beginning of the following year, we believe all the more We are less likely to be mistaken, as we discover in the explosion of revolution-

by this that he knew the aclioa quo los soctos ont exorcé under another form to earlier periods

(1) See C0 which is recounted in Book 11, chapter VIII) § S» on the mission to Germany the family of Cousin and Folienius.

They were not in opposition to Raitre regarding the goal, but who proceeded in a slow manner. The revolt in Turin was manifest directed and prepaid by the concerted efforts of the revolutionaries Piedmontese and French, while that of Alexandria, of which all the cogs were run in the universal machine of pure Carbonarism, appeared to have its independent march from that of the capital.

The very secret of associations of this kind, those of which we are keeping them busy always makes them make rapid progress. That's why we see... that, in all the numerous attempts that have been made in the over the past ten months, with the aim of organizing in France military revolts, the instruments of French Carbonarism have played quite a role.

Having shown in this quick sketch the pernicious influence that the companies exerted on the major political upheavals of the last In recent years, we will not hesitate to establish as a thesis that these societies are a disease that eats away at the social body in its most fundamental parts wounds; that this evil has already taken deep and widespread root; finally, that, if governments do not take effective measures, no not only to halt its further progress, but to repress it within the limits beyond which it is no longer possible to reach T, Europe risks succumbing to repeated attacks. that these associations support him.

The factions today employ two methods; one of which is found in the form of secret societies, and of all sects that which is The most practical is Carbonarism, this institution, born among a a people not very civilized, but passionate, bearing the imprint of the character of this nation; quick to conceive, the Italian of the south executes with a equal ease. A goal clearly stated in the higher grades of Masonic association; simple means free from the clutter of Freemasonry; a true government reserved for chiefs; a number of ranks to classify individuals; the dagger to punish dishonor Confidence, indiscretion, or enemies: such is Carbonarism, which of all the sects seems to have come closest to perfection in the practical organization of political sects.

The factious groups found a second way in the merging of their factions. interests and in establishing a central point of direction, Nationality, political boundaries, everything has disappeared for the sect. It is, without a doubt, in Paris that the steering committee of the radicals from all over Europe, and each day will contribute more to dismantling to show the truth of this silence.

The faction harbors an equal degree of resentment toward all states; powerful monarchies States, constitutional monarchies, republics, everything is threatened by the Levelers^

II2 THE MASONIC CONSPIRACY FROM 1815 TO 1830

Melton concludes in relation to the sovereigns of subordination - ner riiili-rèt dhino onduaire to the common and fje interest ~ general conservation, and to create an information center in Vienna mations, which could constantly enlighten them on all the demarcations sects' houses.

Upon his return, Emperor Alexander ordered the closure of numerous lodges that he had allowed to be formed since the beginning ment of his reign. The Zirkel, of Vienna, gave, in 1880, on this measure, details which he claims to have drawn from tra-recently published articles in Russia on Freemasonry.

The first Grand Lodge of Russia was founded under the name of the order of Vladimir. From 1811 to 1815, the reopened lodges grouped together in the capital and in other cities. But the Schröder system, imported from Germany, which included high-ranking Swedish officials, brought with it discussions which led to the closure of the grand lodge and to the for-the formation of two groups in its place: the Astrea and the Provinciale. The system
The liberal theme of the first attracted all sympathies to him, so much so that that in 1822, it had twenty-four lodges under its auspices; while The other only had six. The most distinguished people of the empire were affiliated with Freemasonry.

But the elected grand master of "YAslrcû", General Kuschelc, appears
He had become frightened by the democratic organization of the institution. He was Quiet to see the popular element exercise rights. The result was that, Eighteen months after being elevated to the position of Grand Master, he... put the felony of addressing the Tsar a memorandum divided into three parts.
In the first, he explained his reasons for accepting the charge; in the second, he gave the history and the list of lodges of Russia, with the names and jobs of the presidents, the dates of their foundation, the number of members, the location, and the obedience. This The painting is very interesting, and we regret not having the space to reproduce it. It seems that in 1822 there were two thousand in Russia masons. In the third part, he outlined the dangers that could to result for the State from the existence of a society that proclaimed freedom of thought.

On August 1, 1822, the Minister of the Interior, Count Victor Pawlovich Kochubei received an ukase from the emperor, ordering the closure of all the lodges. The Minister of the Interior communicated the order to grand masters, who obtained permission for the workshops to meet nir in order to settle accounts and declare the association dissolved.

On August 11th, V Astrea ended; on the 12th, the weighty La Provinciale began.
whose respective grand masters were Count Vaslli Valentovich,

§. 6. – England and the European Revolution.

The memoirs of Prince McIternich do not indicate that the HauteVenle counted followers among English statesmen. But the various cabinets that succeeded one another in business during this period, they nonetheless provided a point of support to all revolutionary attempts directed against the governments of Italy, Spain and France.

The sympathies that were developing within the lodges between the émigrés and members of the English aristocracy, the prejudices Protestants whom they, especially at that time, were feeding against Catholic countries, the fetish of constitutionalism, made them very conservative characters at home and for themselves accomplices of the worst revolutionaries on the continent.

The support given by the English government to the revolution The Spanish law of 1820 is notorious. The link is the same as its efforts. to prevent the success of the French expedition, led by the Duke of Angoulême. From 1821 onwards, all movements The liberals who succeeded one another in this country were prepared by the Spanish concert lodges with the Gibraltar lodge and with those of London.

The Spanish emigration in London received large subsidies tions of the English government and she used them to conspire (1). In 1824, a French agent wrote in a report:

The English government supports, maintains and promotes in every way in a way the Spanish refugees, whose caress he simultaneously cherishes, all passions. The aristocratic party of the émigrés possesses all the assistance that he may desire, and is thus in a position to spend considerable resources for political purposes. This party uses its members of Mina, as a base of operations, and both are, in In reality, they are dependent on the English cabinet. They must have received explicit encouragement to maintain the hopes of the Revolution lution (2).

(1) Wallon, The revolutions of Spain from 1808 to the end of 1836, 2 vols., London 1837 t. 1, p. 355

(2) Go document is cited in full in the Historia de las Sociedades secretas M BspanaéaV. de la Puente (3 vols. in-8o, Lugo 1870), t. I, p. 477-485.

114 THE MASONIC CONSPIRACY FROM 1815 TO 1830

It is understandable why Anglote favored this party. She... said at that time to replace the Bourbons with Don Pedro of Portugal, who had become the constitutional king of the entire Peninsula and would have made Spain a vassal province of Tem- worse than Britain, as Portugal already was. A few years later, the substitution of Infanta Isabella with the regency of Marie-Cliristine to the legitimate king, Don Carlos, was to lead to a result almost similar (1).

§, 7. – The ROLE OF Freemasonry during the Restoration.

For many people, Freemasonry remains foreign. to secret societies involved in conspiracies: di.^tinkle, Yes, but not foreign. We specified, as much as possible, in our Introduction to Father Deschamps' work, the reports ports that exist between these two divisions of the great army of bad. The altitude of the lodges during the Restoration will lighten them Even better, if possible.

The lodges had multiplied prodigiously during the Empire worse. In 1812, there were 886 of them, plus 337 chapters of the upper towns. grades (2).

The historical publications that have been produced in recent years, The Chain of Union and the Masonic World clearly demonstrate the role that they fulfilled in Napoleonic politics. Among their members, at that time, we regularly see figuring to the prefect, the general commanding the division and all the troops officials based in the departmental or district capital dissement. A number of people belonging to the bourgeoisie are juxtaposed with this element (3).

Under these conditions, the lodges had undoubtedly become rela-

(1)y. Die geheimen Getellschaften in Spanien von ihrem Eindringen in da$ KonU greich iU zum Iodine Ferdinand'! VII, voo D* H. BrQck, (Maioz, io-So, 1881), pp. 291*295.

(2) Fiadei, GeseAicAle der Freimaurerei (tradacl. IraQ., vol. II, pp. 85), and Rebold.> Mut. of the three great lodges, p. 146.

(3) A certain number of ecclesi- are still found in the lodges of that period aiasliques, but they are much less numerous than before 1789.

Freemasonry during the Restoration 115

tively inodorous and quite similar to what the English lodges in this century. It is therefore not surprising that the great national current of 1814 and 1815 penetrated them and that in many cities their members have joined with popular demonstrations celebrating the return of the Bour- good. As it does with every revolution, the Grand Orient hastened to bring to the foot of the throne the expression of his loyalty and requested the honor of having a prince as his grand master. royal family – Louis XVIII, amidst certain errors of es had taken, and had always retained a sense of his duties as king very Christian; therefore he absolutely refused this order.

The Grand Orient retained the title of Grand Master for Joseph Bo- Napoleon. The deputy grand masters were successively the Marshal Beurnonville and Marshal Macdonald.

- Father Deschamps has repeatedly shown what reduces the influence of senior officers on effective management lodges. This time again, it was absolutely useless.

A truly remarkable event then occurred. Between 1814 and 1820, A considerable number of lodges are dissolving. At this point At the latest date, they fall below 300 (1). The governor ment was absolutely not responsible for this dissolution: the characters ostensibly placed at the head of the order, inspiring him would rightly trust them, and we have found many traces a kind of benevolence from the local administrative authorities with regard to them (2).

This collapse of the lodges can be explained by two causes;

Barruel's writings had a wide circulation at that time. sion and opened the eyes of a multitude of honest people to the action harmful tion of secret societies, on the radical opposition which existed between their doctrine and that of the Church.

But on the other hand, it is clear that the actual directors of Freemasonry lent itself to the closure of a large number of lodges so that they can be reconstructed later with elements safer ments (3).

(t) Rebold, Bûtoire des trois grandes loges, p. 146.

('?) V. Chain of Union, 1882, pp. 119–120. Cf. The General History of Freemasonry* nerie en Normandie, par le f,*. de Loucelle, p. 77 et passim.

(3) If we are to believe Kaufmann (i7i<tojre phüosuphique de la Franc maçonnerie),
At that time, attempts were made to form a royalist Freemasonry whose members...

116 THE MASONIC CONSPIRACY FROM 1815 TO 1830

This reconstruction is taking place quietly in most cities those of France from 1820 onwards. We see this in local histories lodges, some former members from the time of the Empire, take to take the initiative to resume work, to group men belonging almost exclusively to the bourgeoisie and the pro-Liberal associations (1). Alongside the Grand Orient, the Supreme Council of the Scottish Rite led by Brother Decazes soon came to give a a new impetus for Freemasonry.

Besides the regular boxes, there were also private boxes leading to special rites, the ceremonial of which was more expensive and who sought to group together somewhat superior social elements laughers. We saw in the work of Father Deschamps (book II, Chapter VII, Section 5) very precise details about the Order of the Temple under the Restoration (2).

On the same date, there existed in Troyes a lodge of the Knights of the cross of St. John of Jerusalem, which, although placed under the obedience of the Grand Orient, practiced high degrees and considered himself
It was considered far above ordinary lodges. One of its
The principal member was a f.*. from Widranges, who was already at the head of Freemasonry in this city in 1789 (3). The Marshal Beurnonville was an honorary venerable figure there.

The true spirit that animated Freemasonry is revealed in a dis-lecture delivered on August 26, 1821, in the name of the Order of the Sword, by the three highest degrees of the Grand Orient, at the funeral a celebration held in honor of this same marshal, who was great Commander at the Supreme Consistory of the Jites, the Orator, Exajte the republican campaigns of 1792, and your war waged for the Liberty versus aristocracy. He speaks of Bonaparte's rise to power.
and presents in striking features the metamorphosis by which it
He made his own soldiers into soldiers of liberty. He implies that the Freemasonry contributed to its downfall.

They were called the Francs-régiers. He added that the Grand Orient was the first
He petitioned, and obtained from the government, the dissolution of these lodges with tenc jacbbiies.

(1) 'V. entering details on the resumption of Freemasonry in Bordeaux,

(2) On the Order of the Temple under the Restoration, one must read Grégoire, History of the Religious sects, new edition, (1828, 2 vols. in-8*. He was one of the principal members, which would say enough, if need be, about the spirit of this sect.

(3) Socart, Freemasonry in Troyes, in volume XLI of the Memoirs of the Academic Society of the Department of Vauhe, 1877.

FREEMASONRY DURING THE REBIRTH 117

Men can change like nations; but philosophy Sophie, like the Divine, never changes. The man who was your master and that of Franco, had loved him when he was poor and honest clear; he abandoned him when he was strong and powerful; he dared to insult him,
To persecute her: look what has become of him.

We will also not forget that, besides Pépée of the fatherland, you carried

The sword of our order. This sword must also have its power. You

We waged war on the kings, our aggressors. The knights K*, H*, swore to do it to the most cruel enemies of mankind, fanaticism and superstition.

May this sword be effective and victorious in their hands; may it May it drive away the darkness, and may it push back hideous ignorance, this daughter of imposture, whose eternal vows only seek to gorge themselves Gold and blood of nations! You fought with iron; we come
We will fight with the weapon of science and philosophy. As a great Honorary commander, you had sworn an oath; this oath...
Let us renew it on the ashes, because we all know that, if the States perish through ambition, they also perish through ignorance and the fanaticism, and that their firmest support is justice, is science, That's the truth (1).

Beurnonville is constantly referred to throughout the discourse as his republican general's title.

It is difficult not to see in these words, when compared the song of the date on which they were pronounced, the expression of the hatred that Freemasonry bore towards the legitimate monarchy and to religion.

Many other facts attest to this: let us cite only, according to Re-bold, the role played by the lodges in the demonstrations to which this gave rise to Lafayette's journey in 1829 across the France. There, we will grasp the secret of this comedy of popularity, in a means by which the true opinion of the country was falsified.

A meeting took place in Lyon in September 1829, in the premises of the Children of Hiram lodge, members and deputies of Lodges of Sincere Friendship, the Square and Compasses, Union and Trust, The Children of Iliram, Candor, the Sage's Asylum, the North Star, to Gold, of Lyon; Frank Friendship, Gold*, of St-Etienne; Perfect Union, Gold*, of Villefranche; Friendship, Gold*, of Geneva; Fidelity,

(1) Printed following a volume entitled: Collection of pieces relating to the ancient mysteries and modern Freemasonry by Brother Ant. Bailleul, Paris, 1821, in.-8*.

118 THE MASONIC CONSPIRACY FROM 1815 TO 1830

Or., from Lille, to receive Father Lafayette, veteran of the Li Berté, a devoted representative of the principles of Freemasonry, who He had just arrived in this city, returning from the tour he had made in the south of France after the advent of the Polignac ministry, with the aim of preparing the nation for resistance and demands* cation of his rights. The march of this soldier of independence had not It had been a series of ovations, and the liberal party of Lyon had come, at its in turn, to give him a brilliant celebration, to which the entire population had enthusiastically joined. It was only right that the Freemasons of Lyon also offered the illustrious traveler the tribute of their gratitude Their admiration. General Lafayette and his son were received in this imposing assembly with the honors due to them. They were decorated with masters' insignia and jewels, on which their Names were engraved. – General Lafayette made a profession of mad passion, worthy of the great patriot and loyal Freemason. She was warmly applauded plea (1).

The following year, some prefects who had taken action against lodges measures that were obviously too well justified, the Grand Orient resorted to Marshal Macdonald, in his capacity as Grand Master-deputy, and received from him this reply "worthy of a hero" and from a wise man: "I saw the civil servant who misunderstood "the spirit of our meetings. I told him that the Masonic lodges-"Niques were not considered political societies; that" "I was pleased to be at the head of an association that was always so-"Enforcing the laws, useful to humanity; and that, if necessary, I would por-I would even go to the foot of the throne to make a well-founded claim against "Error and surprise (2)."

Poor grand masters of honor! This is what they're used for. their good faith and loyalty f

Lafayette, that most complete representative of Freemasonry's ideas nerie, was at that same time, as were several others members of Parisian lodges, in regular correspondence with

The bourgeois lodges and the liberal lodges find themselves competing, like the chorus in ancient dramas, through their applause, through their more or less conscious complicity, through their votes, to schemes hatched in the most secret councils of sects.

The veil that covers the war names of the members of the

(1) HUTùira d«$ troU grandes loges, p. 142 and H.'t.

Circular of the 2nd of the month, Mon. lyar. 5830 (May 17, 1830).

Freemasonry during the Restoration 119

High-Sale price increases are partially lifted today. Here are a few details: ones that Civiltà caUolica recently published in a study on the events of that time:

The number of letters Nubio wrote each day for the affaH res of the sect is prodigious. It corresponded particularly in France with Buonarotti, with Charles Teste, Voyer d'Argenson, Bujard, General Lafayette, Saint-Simon, Schonen, Mérilhou and others; in Germany with Tschärner, Hegmann, Jacobi, Ghodsko, Lieven, Pestel, Mourawief, Strauss, Pallavicçini, Bem, Bathyani, Oppenheim, Klaus and Garolus, all heads of sales and lodges. He also used it for secretarial purposes. to remain silent, especially when it came to corresponding with Jews and to handle financial matters, of a young Israelite, who had for Masonic name Piccolo Tigre (1).

One simple fact will show how the lodges echoed the Haute-Vente. On June 4, 1825, Rome was horrified by a assassination, committed in broad daylight on the steps of the church of St-André de la Valle. The victim was a former Carbonaro and Freemason Joseph Pontini, whom his brothers had wanted to punish his repentance. His murderers were apprehended by the police and defeated after a long trial. The two most guilty were Targhini and Mootanari were condemned and executed; they died in rejecting the aid of religion, Targhini cried out from the top. from the scaffold; "People, I die without reproach, I die as "I was a Freemason and a Carbonaro." The sect made marches of them tyrs.

In a letter addressed to one of his accomplices, whose name Rücher was wartime; Nubio recounts how he, a former vice-regent of Rome^ directs all this propaganda and seeks to to take advantage of this proclamation of its existence for the sect, made from the top of the scaffold.

Getting back to the flowers, we've already ordered from one of the Casimir Delavigne, a {Messenian) elegy on Targhini and Montanari.

This poet, whom I often see in the art world and in salons,
He is a brave man. He also promised me poetic tears in honoring the martyrs and imprecations against the executioner. The executioner
It will be the Pope and the priests. Thus we will have struck a decisive blow.

(1) CivÜta catMiea, 21 agosto 1875, p. 473.

120 THE MASONIC CONSPIRACY FROM 1815 TO 1830

ble. 'The corrosive agents of the English leaves, for their part, make their best. I know more than one among them who has already taken the plunge.
epic trumpet for the glorification of our purpose (1). »

Other testimonies, taken from the memoirs of General Pepe, of Those from Vannuci complement these indications on the central rent where all the sects branched out (2).

In 1821 a group formed formed in Paris. Its aim was to overthrow all governments legitimate figures of Europe. Among them were Lafayette, Benjamin Constant, General Lamarque, Mauguin, Dupont de l'Eure, Francesco Salvi, Masco, Galiano, Mina, Ciro Ménotti, Borso di Carnusiatì, Filippo Buouarotli, Claudio Linati, Pietro Mirri, Porro Lamberlenghi.

It was with this committee that the Roman Haute-Vente was in contact followed lations, as we have just seen.

In 1829 he was preparing revolutionary explosions in Spain France, Italy, and France. The French Revolution had to take place for the benefit of the Duke of Orléans; but it had to be preceded by a revolution in Spain and Italy; it is for this purpose that,
As early as 1829, Henry Misley was preparing a plan for an insurrection.
in which he had sought to involve the Duke of Modena. Already at
At that time, the two Bonapartes, Louis and Napoleon, sons of the king of Hollande, were in contact with the committee. The sums considered maple syrup, deposited with London bankers, which was at his disposal then the Bonaparte family were strongly seeking their support.

(1) Cetto lellro, where ôclalont les sônlimonls les pins san"uinairo8, is published inextenso dans lu CiviUà caltoUcn, série IX, vol. VII, p. 320 et dans PaclUler Der tlillé Krieg gegen TliroaunU Allar, 2* ed., pp. 202 et seq.

(2) .M* llal.'azi, after having finalized the composition of this revolutionary central co tionnaire provides the following indications on the new direction given to sects in 1821; "The choronari had at least a clear concept of the law collective than individual right. Their soulovomont of 1820 and 1821 had not, in what did the republicans, the Bonapartists, the nationalists accomplish from 1820 to 1830? was more logical. By bluffing the Habsburgs, by crushing Austria in Italy and by pushing the Hussars westward, they managed to reconquer the carnage of Europe based on nationalities and on the principle of sovereignty people. That's what they'll say... Liifayclie, who was in Paris, Icchuf of the committee ouropéon, inclined towards the republican forrao, without any concern for national distinctions... Pope was striving from London and Paris to instill in the Italian soul ideas, <iui, French, could not acclimatize there". Hallazi el son temps, ilocu^ unpublished mountains (Paris 1881) volume I, pp. 40, 71.

Masonic Oaths and the Military Oath 121

This committee was not in direct contact with the lodges and the countless societies detached from the Masonic trunk which, under the name of Adelphi, Latin Guelphs, Carbonari, brothers-sublime, perfect masters, Philanthropists, Philadelphus, Aegizins, Dormenti, Apofauumeni, then covered Italy; but its members were individually in communication with your hom* those who managed these companies locally, and that is how the impulse was transmitted to them (1).

S 8. – Masonic oaths and the oath

MILITARY

The fifteen-year comedy was drawing to a close. Its principal actors, as we have seen (Book II, Chapter VIII, § è), were all Freemasons.

Marshal Maison was also a Freemason who, at a decisive moment, when Charles X was surrounded by loyal troops in Rambouillet and only had to overturn the Parisian rabble to return to his capital in triumph, that is Marshal Maison, dissonous-nousj who, through the most odious betrayal of the military oath, consummated the work of the Revolution. Here we give the floor to Louis Blanc, whose account, at least, will not be suspect;

On August 3rd, an expedition was launched on Rambouillet; carriages, etc. buses, cabriolets, and cars had been requisitioned for transport to carry the bulk of the army. It consisted of 15,000 men approximately.

The men of the expedition arrived three-quarters of a league from Rambouillet, harassed, starving and in the most appalling disorder. The municipality of Neuville was supposed to raise 6,000 rations; they had not Defeat as inevitable in case of attack... Among the men of The expedition, many overwhelmed with fatigue, collapsed and slumped on the wheat fields that bordered the road and had fallen asleep there.

Such enemies were certainly not very formidable.

(I) V. the original documents and memoirs analyzed by 6, Silingardi in his ariicies, CiVo JUenoUi and the Rivoluzioite dell'anno 1881 in MoAerut, in the Rivista Europea, volumes XVIII and XIX, 187-J-1880.

122 THE MASONIC CONSPIRACY FROM 1815 TO 1830

The three envoys of the Duke of Orléans passed through this throng with their car,

Messrs. Maison, de Rclionen, and Odilon-Barrot arrived at 9 o'clock.

Soon afterwards they were received by the king.

Mr. Odilon-Barrot spoke with confidence. He spoke of the horrors of the civil war. And as Charles X insisted on the duke's rights of Bordeaux.v, formally reserved by the act of abdication, the orator he represented to him in a caressing voice that it was not in the blood that the throne of Henry V should be placed. – "And sixty thousand men "They threaten Rambouillet," added Marshal Maison. At these words the
The king, who was walking briskly, stopped and signaled to the marshal.
A house he particularly wants to maintain. After a few moments After some hesitation, the marshal consented. Then, looking at him intently:
"Sir," the king told him, "I believe in your loyalty, I am ready to..."
"trusting in your word: is it true that the Parisian army is advancing "Composed of 60,000 men? – Yes, sire." Charles X did not hesitate sita plus. (1).

When Charles X said to a man, "I believe in your "Loyalty," he no longer knew how to doubt. Alas! He didn't know to what extent obliteration of moral sense: the impious oaths of Freemasonry could lead a man, who had Ole brave on the field of battle, and how much the secret ties of sects destroy within their followers all are immils of honor and probity, on on which human society rests.

§9. – La Uaute-Ventk after 1830, according to M. de

MeT! EUNICH

After the 1830 revolution, Metternich again pointed out to several several times the guiding action that c.vcrce la Haute-Vente on all the movements of the time.

On October 21, 1830 he wrote to Estherazy:

The game of the revolutionary faction, which, for many years, has established in Baris a center of action exhibiting all the characteristics of a true government, no cease to neutralize the defense of the government's regular ments, proclaiming from the rooftops the dogma of their isolation-

(!) Ten-year story, 1st ed., volume I, pp. 422-431*

Haute-Vente after 1830 123

lying, while the High Sale of the Revolution takes no account of the political delimitation of states, of which she swore the Itoulcversement. By protesting against any intervention in the disturbances of a Neighboring state, the new French government, faithful to the system to which it owes its origin, has for its part declared itself in favor of the same dogma.

Still in October 1830:

The present evil offers in all places two dangers particularly formidable: one, which we consider the greatest, is located in the extreme weakness of most governments; the other, in the organization of a compact revolutionary government, whose traces and points of connection we are discovering everywhere,

On the same date, he attributes Italy's tranquility to the lack orders emanating from the high revolutionary power in Paris (!).

Metternich considered the High Sale as the continuation of the sect of Illumiu's, which had fled the Revolution. The 24th In June 1832, he wrote to Neumann in London:

Germany has long suffered from the affliction that covers Today, all of Europe. From several points of view, this evil is there even preceded the explosion that occurred in France in 1789. The sect The Illuminati, this first radical association, owed its existence, well before that time, to the weakness of the government Bavarians and the complicity of several men, who had made part of it from their very origin. It is this same sect which has never since, was destroyed. qu(tiq\ie !(> same government sought to compri- sea and even saw himself forced to take action against it, and which took success nominations of Tugendbund, <the Burschenschaft etc. (2).

Surely no one could have been better informed than him, and From now on, Paclion of the *^001 Secret Islands will have to be watched by all serious men as one of the main factors of the Revolution which, since 1789, has been unleashed on the continent European.

The harmful activity of Haiile-Venle continued to
To demonstrate, it is its members who revolutionize Switzerland.
destroyed the age-old liberties that flourished there and destroyed-

(1) Metternich, Memoirs, volume V, pp. 41, 58, 68.

(2) Memoirs, Volume V, p. 368.

124 THE MASONIC CONSPIIWTfON FROM 1815 TO 1830

sir, the sanctuaries that the Catholic faith could find there for its works. (Joly has recounted their meii'es in the History of the Sonderhnnd and a piihlié de nouibreuscs lettres de leurs agents.
They are all imbued with the same aristocratic cynicism and impious, which we have pointed out in connection with the revolutions in Italy (y.Introduction^ 7, and book II, chapter IX, §. 2). But there too this first layer of revolutionaries, after having, by the Clever treachery and skillful diplomatic intrigues destroyed the old Christian building, found itself, on the day of triumph, eliminated by the democrats and revolutionaries of the street. Neuhaus, their adept, whom they had brought to the pinnacle of power. a|after having des chained the temjjcte, se vil ahiudoi t ' eouiplèlCineMl: i! f he 'cui-placed in 1810, in the j)oput.iriit (joe les sect 'Ssive »i ruire. par Ochsenbein and James Euzy, las liaïuui.îs de M î/.ziai.

CHAPTER FIVE

THE BONAPARTES

AND THE REVOLUTIONARY SECTS ACCORDING TO M. DE METTERNIGH

MettPirnich, after the July Revolution, gave up doing reix'sor la [)politique européenne sur le principe de la légiti-iiiié: he died at Teiidroit, near King Charles X and the Duke of Bor-of iuix a dèua'je.meni ètjoïstc. His entire fault consisted in limiting

Louis-Philippe, considering his interest, in entering the path of repressive measures against sects.

June 21, 1852, the prince wrote to Count Appony, ambassador rich man in Paris;

Neither the Tuileries Palace nor anyone else can doubt the sum of dangers that threaten the social body as a result of the force extreme that has been acquired, in the shadow of tolerance and impunity, a an anti-social sect, which, under this aegis, has managed to establish a government* solid and compact. This steering committee, which for years We were accused of dreaming about existence, which has now come to light. after his works had already been evident for a long time. Without an intimate and strict union between all governments, of some whatever their origin may be, between governments of law and those who are in fact placed at the head of affairs, the power of the sect will have to prevail over them (1).

To influence Louis-Philippe, Metternich had an argument puisiiirit in the part taken by the Bonapartists in all the explo-

(t) Memoirs, loin# V, p, 355.

126 The Bonapartes and the revolutionary sects sioQS'rcvolulioiiiiuircs eii B.'îlgnjuc, in Polûy;iic and in Italy.

In a brief dated March 9, 1831, where he announces the next Entry of Austrian troops into Modena, Metternicli writes:

Meanwhile, the Bonapartes proclaimed the downfall of the power temporal session of the Sovereign Pontiff. Lc.s lils of Louis Bonaparte are at the head of the insurgents who want to conquer the capital; they are equipped with considerable sums of money.

Our future emperor was beginning to make a name for himself. More Later, Napoleon III would only too easily be drawn to these memories.

Louis-Philippe II favored these new things to a greater or lesser extent, and the Prince wrote again on March 0th:

The reports from Ferrara, Modena, Florence and all the others points are unanimous in re.\pre.«.«iun of the conviction that all the The Italian revolution is not the result of the work of the Parisian elite, supported on the claim of the Hon-intervention of the committee agents>director gave the signal from the uprisingjcnl.cn ensuring both that the principle particularly by Austria, and that, in the event that we were to falsify it, France would stop us in our operations.

In each insurgent village, one or more Frenchmen are found the head of the uprising. The diplomatic agents in 'Lurin and Rome They speak like the provocateurs of the clubs.

On February 15, 1831, Mellernich returned to the revolution of Modena:

The Modena revolution was not an isolated event. It was an episode of the vast conspiracy that encompasses all of Italy; this is the signal of a conflagration that its authors want to make widespread. One could provide a wealth of evidence, but the simultaneity of the revolts, which have just broken out in the Papal States, renders all super-proof flue.

In Bologna, the conspiracy exploded an hour after the news of the election of Gregory XVI.

The prince notes that* at the heart of all these movements one finds the relatives and allies of the Bonaparte family, the Murats, The Pepoli family, former Bonapartist officers. 11 concludes thus:

d'apbês m. de Metternich 127

This vast framework, long established in France, obviously carries The hallmark of Bonapartism. The plan, according to the data we what we possess is to deprive the Pope of his temporal domain, to form a Kingdom of Italy under the constitutional King of Rome. The new dynasty Nastie is all set, as evidenced by the proclamation that was widespread throughout northern and southern Italy.

The next day he added:

The revolution is entirely Bonapartist. I do not doubt that very soon we will see Lucien Bonaparte and Jérôme there to take on a role. The same will be true of Achille Murat who, two months ago, landed in England. I will send you some by the first mail. curious evidence of the work of the Bonapartes near us. Proof that the revolution in Italy started in this direction can be found in The tranquility that still reigns in the Duchy of Parma, it is evident that they do not want to disturb the mother of Napoleon II,

The following year, the Duke of Reichstadl died, and the Bonaparte* tisrae was going to pose a much more direct threat to Louis-Philippe to supplant him in the favor of the sect:

to make King Louis-Philippe attentive to the person who will succeed him Duke of Reichstadt, I use the word succeed, because in the hierarchy Bonapartist dog, there is a fully acknowledged and respected succession by the party. The young Louis Bonaparte is a man committed to the tra- my sects. He is not placed, like the Duke of Reichstadt, under the safeguarding of the emperor's principles. On the day of the duke's death he will see himself as called to the head of the French republic.

The conduct of Prince Louis Bonaparte certainly had to justify the Metternich's foresight. Two years later, he reports to the other A new Bonapartist plot unfolds at the edge of Europe:

Metternich to Appony; Vienna, September 17, 1834:

Among the objects worthy of the attention of all those who know To assess the scope of the events, it would be impossible for me not to to consider the possibility of the Duke of Leuchtenberg's marriage to Dona Maria. Don Pedro pursues the idea of this marriage with fervor and the An English firm is also favorable to him.

Europe has enough to deal with with revolutions. It doesn't have There's no need for this scourge to be further complicated by Bonapartism. In ex*

128 The Bonapartes and the revolutionary sects

Prevailing this feeling, it seems to me that I cannot offend those of King of the French, and I'd like to know what he thinks about this.

This adventurous spirit (Don Pedro) will certainly give them a run for their money. to twist the two powers, who put him where he is, and who in the doing so, they made the mistake of not breaking the instrument, after having felt compelled to use it. There is indeed much confusion in all of this. the method of proceeding, and it is impossible to understand what has This could have motivated the attitude taken by France and England. As for me, I frankly renounce the pretense of being able to guess it.

By transporting Bonapartism to Portugal and placing it under the With Don Pedro's protection, you will see this specter take on a new body. Bonapartism represents something in the universal disorder; It would be nothing if the social body were less agitated than it is. It has the advantage of power provided by kings and presidents, that the revolutionaries They offer their solutions on the markets. If they find few buyers, they It is, however, difficult to understand how such governments that those in England and France might be able to prepare the ground.

The Duke of Leuchttemberg, King of Portugal, will attract to himself a fraction of the sect; the young Louis Bonaparte tends to secure its protection of another faction, because Bonapartism offers a very large super people.

If I engage in this reasoning, how could they not To occupy the thoughts of King Louis-Philippe? France is geographically placed in such a way that the Bonapartist monarchy would only have to cross the Pyrenees and the Bonapartist republic would only have to cross the Alps to join hands in this kingdom.

By pointing out with such precision the role of Bonapartism in the conspiracies of sects and particularly in those directed
He was against the papacy, "Was Mr. Metternicli a prophet?"
Mr. Coquille asks, after citing some of these...
Peaches? No, he's talking about coins on corn. Since 1796, the Bona Parte have established themselves as masters of the ilalic; the leader of this race he had conquered her and he never let go of his prey, which prevented any serious attempt at peace in Europe until 1815.
In 1815, Murat launched himself onto the halic. A few years later,
Other uprisings broke out in the same spirit in 1821.
in 1822. The 1831 edition was a natural continuation, and this time, we had a Bonaparte, an Austrian prince, to put at the head of the company. The Kingdom of Italy under Bonaparte had re-according to Mr. de Metternich read with Bonaparte himself; in 1815, negotiations were initiated between the Italian conspirators and the island of Elba for the

129

The re-establishment of the Kingdom of Italy by the Bonapartes. The same
The idea took shape and developed in 1831. It culminated in 1859 with the Louis-Napoleon's will. Victor Emmanuel is taken for a titular, but he is forced to enter into a family alliance with Louis-Napoleon. He applied roughly the program in mentioned in Metternich's dispatch in 1831. The duration of The Empire in France would undoubtedly have extended our hegemony to Italy imperial ceremony. It was in the nature of things. Other events Force majeure events have ruled out this necessary consequence.
saree (1). »

Today more than ever, we must remember these words.
from Prince Metternich:

Bonapartism covers a very large area. It extends from military despotism to the society of Friends of the people.

[\\) U Monde of February 8, 1882.

CHAPTER SIX

SECRET SOCIETIES IN SPAIN FROM THE 15TH CENTURY UNTIL 1832

Two important works have recently been published on this subject; one, due to Mr. Vincente de La Fuente, the learned author of The Ecclesiastical History of Spain is entitled: Historia de las sociedades secretas antiquas y modernas en Espana, y especialmente de la Franc-masoneria (Lugo, 3 vols. in-8°, 1870); the autre, by Heinrich Bruck, professor at the Mainz seminary, is entitled: Die geheimen Gesellschaften in Spanien und ihre Stellung zu Kirche und Staat von ihrem Eindringen in das Konigreich bis zum Tode Ferdinand's VI (Mainz, in-8'', 1881).

We reproduce some extracts relating to the periods the most important in the history of Spain.

^ 1, - Introduction to Freemasonry. - The ex
Jesuit impulse. - A plan for schism

The first lodge was established in Gibraltar in 1726; another... was in Madrid in 1731. They multiplied quite a bit, mainly in the commercial towns, so that, on July 2, 1756, an edict Ferdinand VI proscribed them.

The accession of Charles III to the throne favored their diffusion. This prince was formerly king of Naples, and in that country the Ma-

132 SECRET SOCIETIES IN SPAIN

Sconnerio had, from the middle of the 16th century, many a-Members included courtiers and high-ranking officials. More Freemason gentlemen were among the courtiers who Among those who followed this prince to Madrid were the Marquis of Squillace.
The Madrid lodge immediately experienced significant growth and began to exert a serious influence on the course of government* government.

The Spanish lodges, like the Neapolitan lodges, were under the jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge of London. The cabinet The English were all the more interested in the spread of Freemasonry. In Spain and Portugal, that the lodges placed in this dependency usefully served politics and trade. The English ambassador to Spain, Keene, deployed a very great zeal for the establishment of Freemasonry in the country, and thanks to the complicity of the prime minister of Charles III, General Wall, he ensured the pre-weighting of English trade. Either by interest, or by other For very different reasons, Freemasonry spread throughout the world of the elite. officials. Among the most zealous brothers, one noticed... wealthy Spaniards from the American colonies, who had come to to be based in Madrid.

During the reign of Charles IV, Freemasonry further increased its forces. Many high-ranking figures, the king's minister, Urquijo and some clergymen entered the lodges. The Inquisition's office was invaded, and the secretary of the Holy Office, Llhorente became one of their most active members.

Following the closer relations established with France after the accession of Philip V, Gallicanism and Jansenism had entered Spain. The Grand Inquisitor, Raymond-Joseph de Arce, archbishop of Burgos, his secretary, Llhorente, the consultant S.-L. Villanueva, who had the upper hand in the tribunal of the Inquisition, were avowed Jansenists. The Espagne also had at that time an entire school of canonists and lawyers who are very hostile to the rights of the Church and the Holy See.

No doubt these men did not all hate Christ. Christianity; but, unconsciously, they were the instruments of the The war that the sect declared against him had the same outcome. objective and went through the same phases as in all the others states of Europe, namely: the de-Catholicization of the brand lower and upper, the spoliation of the Church and the separation ration of Spain from the center of Catholic unity.

ATTEMPTED SCHISM IN THE 18TH CENTURY 133

Charles III was originally well-disposed towards the Jesuits. Two Freemason ministers, General Wall and the Duke of Alba, urged on by the English ambassador, Keene, they employed the cause. He lost his most shameful secrets in his mind. He was led to believe that the Jesuits wanted to establish an independent state in Uruguay and Paraguay. Count Aranda, one of the principal agents of the secret societies, continued the plots thus started and succeeded, in 1766, in having them expelled from Spain and of all Spanish possessions (1).

No sooner had this Boulevard de l'Église fallen than the... legal measures to de-Catholicize Spain followed one another in an order absolutely similar to that followed in France (V. book II, Chapter IV, § 5: New schools that Freemasonry wants to replace killing in Catholic schools, and § 6: The origins of intelligence state government).

"Teaching," said Dr. Bruck, "experienced a great deal of..." cadence, and heretical doctrines were introduced into the ins-ecclesiastical institutions. The higher colleges were either reformed mis in the sense of the enemies of the Church or completely suppressed. In many episcopal seminaries, they taught Jansenist errors and even the atheist doctrines of the encyclopedias French clopedists. The rector of the Salamanca seminary, Estalla, a member of the lodges, taught the natural religion real and insinuated atheism to his listeners. It was a matter of even in the seminaries of Osma, Cordoba, and Murcia. The The government supported these attempts with all its might. King Charles III signed an edict on August 12, 1768, in which he proscribed the teaching of Jesuit doctrines (2), and subs* he titled for the teaching of religion a Jansenist work at Ripalda's excellent catechism. Jansenist doctrines and Masonic lodges had members in episcopal sees. in the chapters, in the universities. The chapter of Saint-Isi Dore, in Madrid, was distinguished by its illuminated members. There, Followers of Locke and Dalember were teaching the youth.

At the Royal Academy, Llorente and his clique held sway. The points

(1) MV de la Fuonle, Hislors. of society. segred., t. I, p. i04,121, establishes through numerous testimonies from Masonic writers that the expulsion of The Jesuits was a conspiracy prepared in the lodges and led by them.

(2) Mr. Bismarck was merely a copyist when he proscribed the Jesuits in 1871. and the orders affiliated with or similar to the Jesuits (Book II, Chapter XL, § 5).

134 SECRET SOCIETIES IN SPAIN

The meeting place of the frivolous and elegant world, in Madrid, was the main son of the Countess of Montijo and those of some wealthy Americans Southern Christians. Incredulity and immorality were spreading in the upper classes of large cities: but the vast majority The clergy and the people remained faithful to their beliefs and customs. of his fathers. The ecclesiastical authorities could not de to devote the necessary energy to combat the spread of evil,

The IL Bruck sets out in great detail the series of laws and administrative measures which, under the reigns of Charles III and of Charles IV, restricted ecclesiastical jurisdiction and over all of them almost completely eliminated the exercise of the law. tion of the Holy See. The weakness of Clement XIV contributed to this. tablement, in consenlanl, in 17CG, to the abolition of the tribunal of nuncio. The aim was obviously to establish a national church; Thus, for each of the religious orders, the king granted himself the right to appoint vicars general for the extent of its domain mination, vicars general who in fact became absolutely independent of the superior general residing in Rome. The Freemason ministers Campomanès and Jovellanos took measures to reduce the Church's assets. The bishops who Those who wanted to protest, like Cardinal Lovenzana, were exiled.

Upon the death of Pius VI, a series of edicts were issued to halt All relations with Rome were promulgated by Minister Urquijo. an advanced Freemason, who had filled the Grand Con- The sultans of Castile believed they had finally put an end to the papacy, and the same ministers were preparing a plan to establish Jews in Spain (1),

The accession of Pius VII put an end to these schismatic attempts. Thanks to energetic representations, he obtained from Charles IV the withdrawal of the measures most hostile to the Church, and Spain was fortunately for her, in communion with the Holy See, when the evils unleashed by the French invasion erupted.

(1) V. do la Fuonto, Hisloria cclesiastica de Espana, Madrid, 1873, t. IV, p. 144. Loa ff.*. Zorillaol Sagasta, we see, we do not follow the Masonic traditions ques (Cf. book 1, chap. V, g 5) on wanting to establish three Protestant colonies and Jewish women in a country which has so far been able to preserve the benefits of religious

The Cortes of Cadiz

135

§.2. – The Constituent Cortes of Cadiz.

The invasion doubly accelerated the progress of Freemasonry. nonsense.

French officers and officials established themselves in all ques to their domination, \qs Afrancesados. A grand lodge, under The name of Santa Julia was established in Madrid. Generals L. and Mr., the first in Andalusia, the second in the province of Soria, They distinguished themselves by their zeal for propaganda, said D'Bruck.

But alongside the French lodges, a number of lodges purely Spanish continued to depend on the Grand Orient of England. Indeed, if the French were the great propagandists of Freemasonry in Spain, we must not lose sight of the fact that she previously had many followers there.

The two types of lodges were separated only on the field of political, but this disunity in no way prevented the brothers from helping each other, especially when they were in danger. During the Peninsular Wars, many times a French general left at liberty his opponent, as soon as the latter had made the sign of distress, and on their side many French prisoners recovered their freedom in the same way. Regarding the questions of political actions, the two major lodges both pursued the objectives of Freemasonry; they worked to achieve them and fought the Church with the same enmity.

The Afrancesados lodges had an easy task; for Joseph, or rather Napoleon, brought the most oppressive laws against the Church, closed a large number of convents, confiscated their property, persecuted bishops and clergymen and promoted the propagation and denunciation of all impious doctrines by word and by press.

The situation of Spanish Freemasonry was more difficult. Clergy and monks were everywhere at the head of the national resistance. The constituent Cortes of Cadiz were going to provide him with the means to carry out his plans.

These Cortes met under conditions that deprived them of all predetermined values as representations of the people of Spain. First, disregarding existing titles, the nobility and the clergy were excluded, and only representatives of the Third Estate. Secondly, most of the provinces occupied by the French who were unable to send deputies, were chosen to represent them, under the name of substitutes of the Es-pagnols originating from these provinces, who were in this moment in Cadiz. In reality, they had absolutely no mandate, and their choice was dictated solely by considerations of coterie and sect formations.

136 THE SECRET SOCIETIES IN SPAIN

Secret societies played a leading role from the early was particularly favorable to them. As early as 1753, a strong lodge important because of the position and wealth of its members, was established in Cadiz and had 500 members there. This number in 1809 had been considerably increased by the Freemasons who were came from various parts of the Peninsula seeking shelter from the French and by many adventurers from America from the South. Most of the alternates belonged to the lodge. Its Thus, from the very first day, the followers found themselves forming the majority The Cortes' order. A liberal press, entirely in the hands of the sect exerted constant pressure on the deliberations of assembled, excluding from the command of the armies the the most capable leaders, such as the Catholic and royalist general Duran, to replace them with Freemasons, like Mina, at whose ferocity did not compensate for his lack of military talent.

The Cortes of Cadiz were in many respects a reproduction tion of the French Assembly of 1790: while the minority Catholic and royalist, he received from his opponents the epithet of Serviles^ these took the name of Liberals and soon that of Jacobinos.

In the afternoon of the day they had solemnly taken their vows lying in the church, the oath of allegiance to Ferdinand VII, the Cortés declared that sovereignty resided in the people and took for themselves the title of Majesty.

The Freemason majority in Cadiz marched in all respects on the traces of the Afrancesados^ and was not ashamed to copy the decrees that Joseph returned to Madrid. She abolished the Inquisition, oppressed The clergy persecuted religious orders and suppressed convents. He forbade the admission of novices. Like zeal for defense Religious unity was the lever that roused the people against The French, the Freemasons of the Cortes could not to fight openly. They therefore had to adapt to the circumstances constants; thus they proclaimed St. Teresa patron saint of the Es-pag^nc, but at the same time they were careful not to crack down on the irreligious press which, daily and before their very eyes, attacked quait the clergy and Christian dogmas. The bishops and the ecclesiastics, who wanted to defend the rights of the Church, were brought before the courts and convicted: the papal nuncio, Gravina, whose energetic protests were particularly disagreeable to the Freemasons, he received his passes on June 7, 1813. Minister Labrador's ports.

The Cortes of Cadiz

137

Obeying the watchword that had been circulating in the lodges since 1789 (See above, Chapter II, § 2), the Cortes set about elevating to draw up a constitution, while the enemy still occupied the two-thirds of the territory. They promulgated it on March 19, 1812. She begins by declaring that sovereignty resides essentially lies in the people and maintains the Monarchy only for the form. The reality of power belongs to the Cortes; the king is not more than a senior official, as in the constitution French Constitution of 1790. The Constitution stipulated, it is true, that The Catholic religion would be the only one permitted: this clause was so much controlled by the state of mind that she was found in the constitution that Napoleon had given to Spain and which he had had written by the Freemason Urquijo' already mentioned. But, in the laws they passed, the Cortes of Cadiz did not were not failing to remove any practical scope from this clause. The Constitution had to be explained in schools and the universities. The catechism itself was supposed to contain a a brief exposition of the citizen's obligations, something like me what later became the civic instruction of f.' Paul Bert.

No sooner had King Ferdinand VII returned than the feeling popular support, especially from the army, made it his duty to re- to promote this constitution which is contrary to both the national spirit and to the country's social conditions. He unfortunately abused this situation to exercise a highly unintelligible personal despotism a group, from which the Church and Spain suffered greatly.

138

THE SECRET SOGLÉTÉS SPAIN

3. Secret Societies under the reign of Ferdinand VII,

The historical criticism is that the members of secret societies Your policies sometimes relied on royal despotism, sometimes on revolution. lution, so as to be able to achieve their goals by one or by the other route. Many Freemasons who, until the return Ferdinand VII, who had been removed from the liberal ranks, threw themselves suddenly switched to the opposing party. The type of these men was the Count do Montijo, who had already taken part in the events of The Escorial in 1807. Upon the king's return, he was his most formidable opponent. ardent supporter of the Constitution, he betrayed all his former friends. That's him. however, the Spanish Freemasons then chose for their grand master. Secret societies were thus able to continue to loyalists, and many of them filled the highest offices of state actions during his reign. These included, among others, P. Ceballos, minister from November 1814 until October 1814. A relative of Godoy, he had already served as Minister of State under Charles IV and had advised this prince to travel to Bayonne. There, he betrayed his king and handed him over to the usurper, who forced him to draft the constitution of Bayonne in the company of Urquijo and do Llhorento. Soon he abandoned Cevallos and went to the Cortes of Cadiz, who appointed him a member of the Council of State, in 1814, Cevallos. He became an extreme royalist, and Ferdinand VII entrusted him with a ministry. After his overthrow in 1810, he once again joined the arm of the liberals. Macanaz, also a Freemason, named Minister of Grace and Justice on May 31, 1814, was, after what a few months, deposed because of his corruption, and imprisoned in the fortress of San-Anlonio at Corogno. His successor, Thomas Moyano, like him a Freemason, only once gave places. These thirty-two parents! General Ballesteros, who during his long held the position of Minister of War and was a Freemason. He declared an adherent of liberal ideas, to the propagation of which he played a large part in. The same was true of the minister Garcia Pizarro. Garray is also suspected of having apj)arlenu at the lodges. Another of their followers was Taveuturier Lozano Torres, an ignorant and shameless parasite, that in 1817 the Camarilla elevated to the post of Minister of Grace and Justice. In 1813, he... During the Cortes' stay in Cadiz, he had lent his house to the lodges' attire. Many other officials and ministers. were also involved in the secrets of the sects (1). The Count Bardaxi, Spanish ambassador to Turin from 1817 to 1821, fa- in this city all the plots of the Carbonari ('2).

THE REIGN OF FERDINAND VII 139

Ferdinand VII's wretched character, his lack of honor, the neur made it accessible to the base influences which were around him and which have remained tarnished under the name of Camarilla. This explains all too well the domination of such men.

Also, despite an edict of May 24, 1814, by which Freemasonry had been banned in Spain, and, except for a few lodges, Freemasonry had been banned in Spain, and, except for a few lodges, Despite insignificant consequences, the lodges remained open even in the past. of the reaction^ from 1814 to 1820, and were able to spread in the entire Peninsula. A large number of prisoners had made affiliated during their captivity in France; they returned to their country imbued with anti-Christian principles and brought to the Freemasonry of new elements of propaganda.

The testimonies of liberal writers are unanimous on the activity of the lodges during this period. According to the captain

A number of non-commissioned officers returned to their country with the attachment Masonic and gave a powerful boost to liberal projects plotted in secret. According to the Freemason Van Halen "a (the same oath united liberals and secret societies for "aveng betrayed patriotism and resist the threats of despotism. The lodges erected a temple to the lights and to the patriotism." The author of History of the Sea and the Reign of Ferdinand F// adds: "In the most flourishing cities, "Masonic lodges had formed, and in their shadow "Thick were preparing the overthrow of despotism." – "The "Spanish Freemasonry," said another liberal writer, a formed a political party which had inscribed on its flag the a- "annihilation of existing political and religious institutions" "Your aunts." Count Miraflores summarizes the history of this period

(1) V. de la FaoDte, HUi. of batch soc. dry. (. 1, p. 215, and U. Bruck Die geh. Gesells. in Spanien, pp. 39 and 42.

(2) Moacacci ilemorie documenlale pe' b storia délia passé therefore l. II. p. 7?,.

The Secret Societies in Spain

"by saying that Freemasonry gave the impetus to the resurrection" "of the constitutional system. Liberal and Freemason were sy- "Nameless at that time (1)."

A large lodge was established in Granada and, from there, radiated throughout the entire Peninsula. Its main focus was on the army and transformed the military quarters into lodges. At Al- among other things, a lodge was established in the engineering district and included almost all the officers of that corps. The large The Granada lodge and its grand master Montijo were engaged in the propaganda so openly, that they forced the government to to take care of it. Some of them were arrested, others They fled; the Count of Montijo was summoned to Madrid. This happened passed in June 1817, but as a liberal writer says, deeply involved in the events of that time, Louis Julian, their The only cause was carelessness (2). The measures taken were so frivolous, that the grand lodge immediately moved in Madrid itself. There, she could count on the protection of higher figures and she was even in the Inquisitor sition (3). The Montijo salons continued to serve as a center to all liberals.

The king was fully aware of the existence and spread of Cults: A follower, Van Halen, having been arrested, asked him he spoke, and revealed to him the full power of Freemasonry, he told him knowing that she was very devoted to the prince and wanted nothing to do with it.

a force by putting itself at its head (1).

We will not delve any further into the story of the events of reign of Ferdinand VII. The two works we are analyzing contain lengthy details about the preparations for the revolution of 1820, on the part played by Freemasonry, on the so-more active societies that formed within it, Comunerosy Carbonariy and who soon split under the influence of the riva personal issues, always so vivid in the world of evil.

(1) See all the testimonies reported by H. Bruck: Die geheimen GesellUhaften in Spanien, p. 40, 4i.

(2; Historical summary of the main political and military events that have brought the Spanish Revolution, by U. Louis Julian, in*8*, Paris, 1821, p. 36.

(3) V. do La Fuonto, IJist, de las soc. <ecr., 1.1, p. 267.

(4) Quoted by Bruck, Die geheim. Gesellseh. in Spanien', p. 43.46.

THE REIGN OF FERDINAND VII 1^4

The English historian Thomas Frost expressed himself thus, regarding This division within the revolutionary party:

Since all moderate constitutionalists were Freemasons and had used the Masonic organization to coordinate secretly the movement that led to the revolution, the ex-party The communists thought they could do no better than to adopt a similar organization.

This society was called the Confederation; it was divided in provinces called communes; each commune is composed of knows of an interminable number of local groups called towers.

The reception at the society, the passwords, the oaths were modeled on Freemasonry: absolute secrecy, obedience limitless bloodshed at the beck and call of the leaders, the vengeance to which In the event of infidelity to society, the alfiliés submitted to the system. They knew of a secret society quite similar to the Carbonari. Unlike the Freemasons and the Carbonari, there was no only one rank in society. All functions were elective, and the supreme power of the confederation resided in The Supreme Assembly.

The communalists were thus marking a significant step forward. They were able to follow the path that sects lead people down. abandoned early on by the bulk of the Freemasons, and the of the revolution in its most advanced parties. Currently,

In Spain, the federalists are the heirs of the comuneros.

Mr. Frost adds that among the leaders of the commune in 1822
The Duke of Pasquale, who was a member of the society, was present. of the European Patriots, founded by General Pepe (1). This society was itself only an early form of the revolutionary committee European revolutionary, at the head of which were in Paris the General Lafayette (V, Book III, Chapter V, § 7). We clearly saw the close ties that bound the comuneros to Haute-Vente Parisian, when the Duke of Angoulême entered Spain.
Combined maneuvers in both countries took place to provoke to encourage French troops to defect, and a group of refugees Giés presented himself to fight them with the tricolour flag (2).

(1) Thomas Frost TAE seefet Soeieties of the European revolution (London, 1876^
2 vol. in>8*) volume 1, chap. SEEN.

(2) V. Nettement, History of the Restoration, Volume VI,

142 SECRET SOCIETIES IN SPAIN

During their period of domination, the two parties rivaled each other to whoever would most brutally carry out the Masonic program.
The destructive laws of ecclesiastical discipline followed one another they with a feverish struggle, and there was an outpouring throughout the country Outrageously impious. The plundering of ecclesiastical property, the destruction of religious orders, the expulsion of bishops, destenatives of schism, even attempts at organizing instruction public in an anti-Christian tone (t), that's what it leads to from the start First day of the constitutional government. Popular freedoms
The irises were the least of the sectarians' worries. What they did with the Cortes elected under pressure from an insurgent army and under the
The top leadership of the lodges, they could just as easily have done it with the the despotism of Ferdinand VII, if this prince had already had it at that time wanted to make himself their instrument, as he was destined to become in the end of his life.

These details are full of interest: but they only confirm sea the account of Father Deschamps (book II, chapter VIII, § 3), and the documents that we published at the end of the second volume (Document G). If we reproduced them here, we would be in-dragged too far outside of general Philosophy. We stop Let us focus only on the decisive event in the history of Spain, on the change in the law of succession to the throne, which threw this unfortunate country in an endless series of civil strife.

AND THE Grand Orient of Spain

After the overthrow of the revolutionary government in 1823, said Dr. Bruck, the secret societies had to hand over to a distant time the accomplishment of their designs and prepare for it long ago. Like the vast majority of the Spanish people They were hostile to it, so they sought to interest the foreigner. The headquarters of the unrest was London: it was there that

(1) II. Rruclc, Die geh, geselUch. in Span,, p. 185.

THE CHANGE IN THE ORDER OF SUCCESSION TO THE THRONE 143

prepared the plans that a favorable opportunity should allow to be done later.

At the same time as he was filling the English newspapers, fran Spanish and other foreign sheets of recriminations against the cruelty of the Spanish cabinet, the dear Masonic liberal party chait to divide the members of the royal family and by the same the royalists, so that they could then more easily return to overthrow the monarchy. An instruction from the Grand Orient to the lodges dated April 1, 1824, and printed that same year in Cor- Doue expresses himself thus:

In the current crisis, we must make even more efforts than by the past to divide the families of despots among themselves. The lodges must wind throughout the Peninsula spreading the rumor that the royalists are The people have a plan to dethrone Ferdinand VII and proclaim king Don Carlos, that the king's brothers are complicit in this plot, and that the frequent visits of numerous royalists to the residences of the Infants have no other purpose (1).

The Freemasons worked in accordance with this instruction both domestically and internationally. The plan was treacherously devised. and it was carried out by the most despicable means. To accredit To stop these rumors, the lodges spread them throughout Spain in 1826. proclamations, which appeared to emanate from royalist societies and spoke of the need to elevate Don Carlos to the throne: These proclamations, in reality, were composed and printed at London (2). By these maneuvers, and by spreading falsehoods The rumor of a royalist plot spread through the lodges. came to arouse suspicions in the mind of Ferdinand VII against his brother. The people were thrown into doubt and turmoil. Don Carlos, a sincerely religious prince, of pure morals and of a noble character, enjoyed the love and esteem of Spaniards, whose eyes turned all the more towards him and to the throne. The proofs of independence that Don Carlos had given born in certain circumstances had already aroused the jealousy of

(1) The complete text of this instruction is found in the Historia de las sociedades secretas en España de V. de La Fuente, t. III, p. 662 et seq.

(2) The revolts of Spain from 1808 to the end of 1836 with hisographica sketches of the most distinguished personages and a narrative of the war in the Peninsula down to the present time from the most authentic sources by W. Walton, (London, 1837, 2 vols.,) t. I, p. 363.

144 SECRET SOCIETIES IN SPAIN

Ferdinand VII: the false rumors and writings we have just discussed parlo, domiercnl to this feeling a new food. Don Carlos He was so outraged that he demanded the convening of a commission of inquiry into this [rérendii com]lot. More than a thousand people were questioned, and not the slightest trace of truth in these allegations that undermine his loyalty.

The lodge members were not discouraged. They provoked in 1827 sought a movement in Catalonia and became the spies of the general sent by Ferdinand VII [to suppress him, so as to sow doubt and division among the royalists. But this maneuver failed, because it was discovered on the prisoners a plan devised by secret societies and prepared to London jiar Mina for the establishment, in case of success of a Liberal constitutional government. Almost all the prisons moreover, the niers belonged to the lodges (1).

After the July Days of 1830, Ferdinand VII had refused to recognize Louis-Philippe, which had earned him the hostility of this prince. With his complicity, Mina prepared a movement on French territory. Its success was counted on the competition of a large number of Spanish officers involved in secret societies (2), and on university students, among in which Freemasonry had become very widespread. On October 1, 1830, Mina crossed the Pyrenees: the English newspapers, which were In secret, they were already announcing that he was marching on Madrid; but, Meanwhile, the Catalan royalists, united with the troops His followers surrounded him and then drove him back across the border. From three insurrections fomented by the lodges of Cadiz and Malaga erupted in Andalusia in 1831: they failed equally element (3).

These attempts, to achieve his goals through hard struggle, did not However, they did not divert the sect from the underground plot, if skillfully combined, which was to lead her to her goal: a circum A new consistency came to favor her.

The pious Queen Amélie, third wife of Ferdinand VII, had died on May 18, 1829, said Dr. H. Bruck. As early as June 19

(1) V. de LaFuente, Hist. of Society. segred. in Espana, t. 1, p. 471-473.

(2) A secret military society, which had formed in the wars against the co-Hispanic-American lions, existed at this time under the bizarre name of 'AyacuehM. Esportero and Maroto, the traitor who would later betray Charles V, were doing so part. V. de La Fuente, Utsl. of society. secret.^ t. II, p. 107.

(3) For more details, see the works cited by Bruck and La Fuente.

THE CHANGE IN THE ORDER OF SUCCESSION TO THE THRONE 145

In the same year, the monarch, on the advice of his sister-in-law, Louise-Charlotte (1) asked for the hand of the sister of that- Here is Marie-Christine, Princess of Naples... On December 15th, the wedding took place. The lodges rejoiced at this event. Several members of the royal family of Naples were, in Indeed, suspected, with too much reason, of belonging to the companies secret (2), and the new queen was more or less imbued liberal ideas. Above all, she was completely dominated through his sister Charlotte, whose ties to Spanish lodges were no mystery to anyone. This intriguing woman has the primary responsibility for all the harm that has been done since in Spain. What Freemasonry had prepared, Charlotte realized it.

She persuaded the king to change the order of succession to the throne established by Philip V in 1713. She used for this the favori royal Grijalba, a man of low birth, who, after the Ugarte's fall, he had become the head of the Camarilla (3). His Intrigues supported by the queen and by Charlotte led to royal decree of March 29, 1830, which abolished the Salic law and established heredity through women, so as to substitute for the king's brother, his daughter, Infante Isabelle, then barely a year old. The publication of this decree aroused the most intense indignation in Spain. tion.

On his deathbed, this unfortunate prince, on the representatives statements by his minister Calomarde, he understood the injustice he was suffering from. was found guilty towards his brother, of the crime he had committed to his country. By a codicil of September 28, 1832, he re-invoked his decree of March 29, 1830. The codicil was to remain It was a secret, but the Infanta Charlotte found out: she gave birth rut at La Granja in the heart of Andalusia, treated in the manner even more unworthy is Minister Calomarde, and through sheer prayers and Despite threats, she forced the terrified dying man to retract his statement. codicil.

Immediately, all measures were taken to ensure the triumph of the lodges: the Duke of Acudia, head of the ministry, was replaced by Zea Bermudès, and Calomarde by Cafranga.

(1) Wife of the Infante Francis of Paola.

(2) V. de La Fñente, Hi$t. of society. tecred., 1.1, p. 510-599.

(3) See on this character, Wallon, The revolution of Spain, vol. II, p. 335.

III

10

i46 SECRET SOCIETIES IN SPAIN

October 7th, the universities, which had to be closed because of the pro-liberal pagan practices that took place there were reopened, and a decree The amnesty brought most of the revolutionaries back to Spain. émigrés. The regency was granted to Queen Mary Christine-, and all the positions entrusted to liberal Freemasons, supporters of the queen. On December 31, the king publicly dismissed he added his codicil and, soon afterwards, he summoned the infant Don Carlos to recognize in advance the young Isabella as heir to the throne.

This prince protested against this violation of national law. Spain, and sent his protest to all the EU cabinets Europeans; but, at the time Ferdinand VII died, the Franks-Freemasons and liberals were nonetheless in possession of all civil and military positions (1).

(1) The Masonic lodges did not cease to be hotbeds of conspiracy throughout the regency of Marie-Cristino and the reign of Isabella. Mingling with different political parties, they always favored those who made progress Furthermore, revolutionary ideas. We refer the reader here to the testimonies. that we published in the Soieilé$secrèlet, 1. II, Attached Document GM Amand Nent, in Franc-Juaçonnerie soumise au grand jour, vol. 1, p. 332, published also a very important extract from the Belgian Observer, organ of the lodges, etc. highlighting the role played by Spanish Freemasonry in the progressive movement of 1854. At the end of her reign, Queen Isabella had banned Masonic meetings. niques.

CHAPTER SEVEN

THE ITALIAN REVOLUTION (1830-1870)

1. National Aspirations and Societies

SECRETS

The history of Italy during these forty years shows more than any other, how the harmful action of the Freemasonry and sects that emerged from it distort the development of nature of public life among peoples where they succeed in to establish itself.

Certainly, in the major transformations that have taken place in the Italian peninsula during this period, a considerable attention must be paid to national aspirations, and these aspirations were legitimate in some respects.

Peoples cannot remain static; the course of history the story indicates to each of them a development that he can and must to seek to achieve, provided that he observes justice: 1° in respecting the rights acquired by sovereigns or other peoples; 2° by employing only means acknowledging morality.

Italy, that predestined center of civilization par excellence, was, by a consequence of this very destiny, the field of battle of other peoples. The rivalries of his own children and above all, the republican regime of its municipalities prevented it to form a nationality, at a time when other European races European monarchies were forming compact entities. The domination, foreign, to which some of its provinces were submitted, has become particularly difficult to bear in this century: on the one hand, the feeling of nationalities has developed everywhere as governments have become more centralized to the detriment of local autonomies, so that the foreigner is* even more foreign; on the other hand, the unjust annexation of the Veneto by the brigandage of Oampo-Formio, and the scandalous contempt for the law, which the Congress of Vienna demonstrated in its sanctioning ignoring this injustice, had seriously compromised the principle of legitimacy that Austria could invoke over Milan.

148 THE ITALIAN REVOLUTION (1830-1870)

The diplomatic correspondence of Joseph de Maistre contains repeatedly expressed the energetic sentiment of Italian patriotism link outraged.

will not deny it; the observance of duty has for nations as for individuals, austerities to which they cannot subtract without compromising their future. In fact, most of the Italian sovereigns were motivated by the best intentions. Duke Francis IV of Modena, the Grand Dukes of Tuscany, plus Later, Madame Louise of France, regent of Parma, took in their respective fields, limiting all economic progress. The kings of Naples ruled over much larger populations backwards of the Two Sicilies in the manner that their state entails social: the elTroyablcs soulTrances, which have overwhelmed them since the introduction of a different political and administrative regime, have Their policy was too well justified. (Book II, Chapter X, § 8.) The Popes were all ready to resume the great traditions of the regime Aegidian. But the goodwill of these princes was constantly paralyzed by the incessant revolts against their authority which exci* were the secret societies. Mazzini summarized the entire tactic of these companies in this passage of his instructions of November 1st bre 184C:

In Italy, the people are still being created; but they are ready to tear each other apart Fenveloppo, which holds him back. Speak often; much and everywhere of his miseries and needs. The people do not agree; but the part active members of society are filled with these feelings of compassion for the people, and sooner or later it acts. Scholarly discussions are neither necessary or opportune. 11 There are regenerative words that contain* They understand everything and it often needs to be repeated to the people. Freedom, right Man, progress, equality, fraternity, that's what the people understand. dra, especially when it is confronted with the words despotism, privileges, Tyranny, slavery, etc. The difficult thing is not to convince the people.

NATIONAL ASPIRATIONS AND SECRET SOCIETIES 149

It is about reuniting them. The day they are reunited will be the day of the new era. old.

The ladder of progress is long; it requires time and patience. to reach the summit. The way to go faster is to not fran to take it one step at a time. To want to take flight towards the last one is exposing the work to more than one danger.

It has been almost two thousand years since a great philosopher, named Christ, He preached the brotherhood that the world still seeks. So accept all the contests that will be offered to you without ever looking at them as of little importance. The Earth is made up of grains of sand; which Whoever wants to take a single step forward must be one of yours until... What he leaves you. A king gives a more liberal law, applaud! by asking which one should follow; the minister only shows in progressive intentions, hold him up as a model; a great lord af Instead of sulking over his privileges, place yourself under his direction; if he wants against you, and you will have a thousand ways to make those unpopular who will oppose your plans.

All personal grievances, all disappointments, all Thwarted ambitions can serve the cause of progress by giving them giving a good direction (1).

Secret societies from the very beginning of the movement Italians, from 1815 onwards, were pursuing a goal quite different from rindépendance of Italy. They wanted the restoration of the Republic that, democratic government and the destruction of power temporal power of the Pope and of the Catholic Church itself. That was there the goal of the Carbonari, like that of the Roman High Vendée and the Masonic lodges.

Italy became covered in sects, says a writer very familiar with their led; Freemasonry was strengthened by Carbonarism. The Ma- his stupidity was humanitarian; his universal brotherhood could be translated in what is nowadays called communism or socialism, and in language radical: federation of peoples. She was anti-Catholic. The Carbo Narism had become enamored with constitutional government. It gave birth to a a host of other companies with baroque names, but all having little near the same goal (2).

No doubt, among the young men who were training at the sec-

(1) Reproduced by Lubienski, Guerres et révolutions d'Italie, Paris, 1852, p. 46.

(2) lialtazi and his time, unpublished documents (by M Ratlazi), Paris, 1881, volume I, p. 20, p. 46. For the Carbonari, see also, in the work of U. Silengardi, Ciro Also, the chapter entitled I Carbonari e le associazioni segrete.

150 THE ITALIAN EVOLUTION (1830-1870)

Many were led astray by national passion and seduced. by the mirages of the libcralime. Such certainly removed the case of Silvio Pellico, from Massimo d'Azeglio, to name just two illustrious names.

But they were indeed guilty of linking the cause of the fatherland to that of these sectarians; they were all the more despised because they were despised. They are taking into account the repeated warnings given by the Holy See, including the condemnations bound the conscience of every Catholic (1).

Italia may well have won its independence, but at what cost? The price? She sacrificed the development of local political life and the wonderful resources of provincial autonomy, ap- based on the noblest traditions, to an artificial unity that of the north and the south, and which will disappear in the first great European war or only in its intestinal convulsions Italy has, moreover, seriously weakened the principle of sovereignty. truth, by establishing a revolutionary and usurping monarchy in disregard of the rights of several dynasties, which, in a conference a similar division to that of the new German empire, had brought valuable elements to the country; she created a divorce against nature between religion and public life through destruction of the Pope's temporal power. Finally, to support this work through violence against material interests, she usurped the property of the Church, and has entered the dead-end path of struggles against the religion. The result is that the constitutional monarchy is on the eve of being overthrown by the republic. Anarchist socialism Bakunin's chic and materialistic ideology is making steady progress. among the outcasts of all kinds, whom such a profound revolution has thrown like unhealthy scum onto the surface of society. The example the odious means that this revolution employed and their successes remain in the people's minds as a permanent cause of demoralization.

(1) Rappoloas here Io3 dates of the most recent papal bulls. Pius Vif, by the bull EcclcsioLM aJesu Ohfisto, dos ides do soplontibro 1821, condemns all secret societies and notaries Timont les Garbonari. Leo XII, on March 13, 1826, recalls ar confirms the bulls of Clement XII and Benedict XIV against Freemasons, he extends them to all secret societies, and in particular to societies formed in the universities. Pius IX reiterated all these condemnations in a con- address sistorial of September 25, 1865, where he particularly stigmatizes Freemasonry and denounces it as the source of attacks directed against the Church and the Panegyric pauté.

151

THE SCIENTIFIC CONGRESSES FROM 1839 TO 1875

The liberals who applauded the Italian reunification effort They are frightened by it today. One only has to read the letters so cu Mr. de Laveleye's jokes about Italy to find there some disastrous late admissions about the havoc wreaked in the lower classes Republican and socialist secret societies. What are they doing? during, if not continuing the work of Freemasonry?

Two peoples found themselves in such a national situation painful as the Italians after 1815: these are the Canadians French people delivered to English domination in 1763, and the Irish. But these peoples remained faithful to the voice of their pastors; they have endured the harshest application of the principle of legitimacy, that which results from conquest. In the long run, they obtained the redress of their grievances; the French Canadians arrived, at the same time as at the highest degree of material prosperity, without

They have lost none of their ancient customs and social peace.
Irishmen, with O'Connell's great voice, emerged from their sepulchers.
They have already won recognition of their civil rights and... gieux and are on the verge of forcing England to backtrack on territorial confiscations dating back three centuries. May they alone how to persevere in this path of legal struggles in the open and to turn a deaf ear to the seductions of the cosmopolitan revolution!
Revolutionary Italy is there to show them the danger of allowing sects to exploit national demands.

The notes we publish in the following paragraphs they do not form a continuous narrative: their sole purpose is to shed light on some points of the secret history of this period, to provide new evidence to support the masterful narrative of Father Deschamps.

§ 2. – The Scientific Congresses from 1839 to 1875

Nothing in itself is better than periodic meetings of scholars and friends of science, who meet every year in a different city in the country. In France and England they yielded the best results, from two points of view:
dissemination of science and the social relationships it creates between men who are ordinarily distant from each other by their daily activities. In Italy, another element was involved.
The first congress was convened in 1839 in Pisa by the prince

152 THE ITALIAN EVOLUTION (1830–1870)

Charles–Lucien Bonaparte, who, later, was to be one of the instigators of the Ouazzinian republic of 1848, and who, from at that time, was involved in all the secret societies (V.
(see above, Chapter V). In other years, the congress meets at Turin, Florence, Padua, Lucca, Milan, Naples. The
The meetings always began with a solemn mass, and nothing and appearance was no longer harmless. Only the government of Gregory XVI refused them hospilalito in the Papal States caux, and his intolerance was accused. In 1846 the congress held in Genoa, and there its members made a great demonic a ceremony in honor of Pius IX, the liberating pope "who not following the examples of other princes, he walked with the people and with time." In 1847, at the Congress of Venice, who was the ninth, Prince Charles Bonaparte said: "We We have finished the novena: next year we will celebrate the "Feast." He predicted all the better, since, with all the sects he was preparing for the fulfillment of his prophecies.

When, after the unification of Italy, the scientific congresses that they had given at their previous meetings. In 1873, at congress of Rome, the syndic Luigi Panciani, grand master of the Grand Orient of Italy and distinguished Garibaldian, said in his speech opening:

The resurrection of Italy is largely due to you. Black moon
The movement began with the scientific congress, which took place in Pisa in 1839,...
The Congress of Venice in 1847 was answered by the Milan Days of 1848, and this heroic movement that we can call the marvelous dawn of the Italian resurrection of 1848-1849.

And you, me , who have managed to overcome the obstacles the keys I was referring to earlier, when all the governments
They were suspicious of you, even though outwardly they welcomed you.
with honor – I remember well seeing myself followed by the police the scholars who were officially celebrated at the Venice congress, –
You see what an honorable way the government welcomes you.
Italian. He applauds the work you have accomplished and hopes to help you better govern the country.

Count Solar della Margherita speaks of these congresses in this way.
in his memorandum of 1852;

In 1839, the first congress of Italian scholars took place in Pisa, and

A noi caubonauro. – Charles-Albert io5

It was there that the web began to be woven, the threads of which had been... long prepared; Charles-Lucien Bonaparte was the first pro* engine. He worked for himself and didn't realize he wasn't that the instrument of sects. People spoke publicly of science and of art; but the leaders of the various liberal factions of the peninsula they met privately and discussed matters of a very different kind.

tance. They forged personal relationships with each other, formed bonds, formed friendships, established correspondence, and prepared themselves to work together for the great work of the Italian revival. They do not However, they did not hide so much that the Italian princes could be excused.

who, with the exception of Gregory XVI, all applauded these meetings nions. O ccBd reges, qui rem non cernitis istam, could one say to the lesson the form of a document that was printed in Lugano about the Congress of Pisa and which revealed the whole trend. When the congress had to meet in Tu-Rin, I could no longer keep from the king what was no longer a mystery. To him as to each prince, to Ferdinand of Naples, to the Grand Duke of Tuscany, one nification and the tolerance. I believe that in this circumstance his mind was He looked troubled under my gaze, but he didn't back down. He could take my functions, he did not do it; as for making me change, he did not do that either more and did not try it (1).

§ III. – A carbonaro king. – Charles-Albert

Charles Albert, Prince of Carignan, had allied himself with the Carbonaridans sa jeunesse et avait concivé à l'insurrection de 1821 (2).

As soon as things went wrong, he abandoned his accomplices and appeared having broken with them. Of dull mind and unpredictable character, he

(1) We borrow these extracts from the remarkable publication by M, the com Mandator Paolo Hencacci, Documentary document by the etoria delia rivoluxione ttaltana, Rome, in-8*, 1879, vol. 1, p. 10 et seq. – See also, on the conspiracy which mingled at the scientific congresses, Sattazi and your temple, vol. I, pp. 191, 295.

(2) M. Mencacci in volume II of his Memorie documentate, pp. 67 et seq., publishes some very curious extracts from a book entitled: Il conte Cibrario ed i lempissu Memorie "torfcAe (Firenze, Civelli, 1872), which was only printed in a limited number of c to please and which has almost completely disappeared. According to documents from Charles Albert, this prince, was not formally affiliated as a Carbonaro. but would only have joined forces with the Carbonari to carry out the military revolution silence of 1821, which in fact amounts to the same thing, Charles-Albert in these document the Duke of Alberg, am-, is identified as having been the instigators of this revolution French ambassador to Turin from 1816 to 1820, Count Bardaxy of the King of Spain from 1817 to 1821 and Count Scibilt Sdory, envoy from Bavaria From 1817 to 1824, they had made their palaces in Turin the meeting place for Freemasons. and the Carbonari. They themselves were affiliates of the Haute-Vente. 11 must be brought dear these names of the indications of Melternich that we have reported above. (Book III, Chapter IV, g 4).

ir>4 THE ITALIAN REVOLUTION (1830-1870)

He wanted to reconcile his ambition with his religious beliefs. In reality, he always maintained ties with the Societies Crete, even during his reign (1831 to 1847), when he appeared knows the most hostile to the Revolution.

A friend of Mr. de Cavour remarked that, during this During this period, he always took care to have, in his ministries, a man representing advanced ideas, like Count Pralor- Rao, Count Galliera, Marquis Alfieri, Cavour himself, that he called to the ministry in 1846, although he was not unaware of his biases Masonic (1).

Metternich recounted an incident in his memoirs, which will judge the ambiguous policies of this prince and his commitments which he kept:

In 1825, King Charles Felix was considering excluding from the Succession to the throne: the Prince of Carignan. The advice of Emperor Francis II dissuaded him from doing so, and, in the interview that The two sovereigns had, at that time, in Genoa, the prince he openly testified to his repentance, made the commitments more formal for the future.

Thirteen years later, in 1838, Charles Albert, now king, surrendered He went to Milan to serve Emperor Ferdinand. He then went to... Prince Metternich, this strange communication;

"There is a vast conspiracy in the world," he told the chancellor. seems solely directed against the thrones, but it is in fact directed against peace and the social fabric. I'm not talking to you. learn in this regard; what I want to prove to you is that I do not I am not, like so many others, the dupe of a faction; which on the other One thing is certain: the position of any king of Sardinia is the most difficult from all positions. The fact lies in the flaws of the pious mind. Montais, a meticulous mind, both daring and fearful, argumentative and cautious them; the position of the leader of a country, animated by such an evil spirit, is thereby rendered excessively difficult; it is never free and must therefore always be aroused suspicion by other cabinets nets. The Piedmontese spirit is above all anti-Paustian; it is the wind that It comes from France, which fuels this tendency within him. You know what that I think of the middle ground policy, and you know from that point on You can also count on me. But there may be

(1) The Count of Cavour, stories and memoirs, by W. do la Rivo, Paris, 1862, in-8° p. 144.

A CARBONARO KING. – CHARLES-ALBERT 155

There are instances where my conduct might not seem clear to you. In these Occasionally, contact me directly. Write to me and do not confide in me. Don't send your letters to the post office, but have them passed through a trusted hand at your envoy to Turin. He will be the one who, without telling anyone, will* I will give them to you; it will be by the same means that you will receive my explanations (1).

Mellernich naturally refused to go down that path. unworthy of sovereigns as well as their people, and which, in In reality, it concealed a trap.

Indeed, as early as the autumn of 1845, Mazzimo d'Azeglio, as he Italy, in the interest of secret societies, and with the aim of bringing the Mazzinians and the Republicans to unite with the monarchists and to Charles Albert to achieve Italian unity. For the end to pledge to trust the Piedmontese king, he told them in his own words: "Let's treat this coldly. You might say that if we want to obtain from Charles-Albert, something contrary to his interests, there is no basis can be found in the case of the traitor who, in 1821, abandoned the Carbonari. But now we want to obtain* something to take from him something that is good for him, but which is even better for us. We ask him to..." "Let it be bigger and more powerful. If you wanted to..." "to turn a thief into an honest man, and have him do it for you" "He promised ten times, but could you count on his promises? But to offer a thief the chance to steal and fear that he won't follow through" "His promise, that's not reasonable." This comparison of the king's reason with a thief, Mazzimo d'Azeglio had said most great success. For members of secret societies, it was an argument without reply (2).

Rattazzi places the beginning of the Italian propaganda by Charles-Albert and Mazzimo d'Azeglio.

Central Italy was flooded, she said, with its revolutionary missi dominici. tionaries, Casale, Borromeo, Martini, Zorelli, Dominis, d'Adda, Ficolmi and Lechi held successive conferences with the king in view of the Emancipation of Italy; all aristocratic conspirators and do Res on the edge, but also conspirators in the Italian soul. The Count

(1) Memoirs of Prince Metternich, (IV, p. 267.

(2) Riordi, 1867, chap. 34.

156 THE ITALIAN REVOLUTION (1830-1870)

de GasUgnctto served as intermediary; Parctti, Doria, Zicci, Sal>

vagnoli, Gollegno, Giovanelli, Solerero.c tutti quanti. The monar*

Charles Albert's constitutional order was grafted onto the republic stunted Mazzini (i).

Crétineau-Joly, in his Memoirs, recounts a di-right, made near him by this unfortunate prince, in November in 1846. He was then preparing a History of Secret Societies and had already collected many documents in Vienna, and especially in Milan elements that proved Charles-Albert's complicity in the tra-underground world of the sects, or rather they presented it as a toy in the hands of their leaders.

As every year, Charles-Albert spent part of his time in Genoa Autumn. I arrived there in November* Needing to coordinate my thoughts, my observations and my materials, I resolved to live in Thésuch, and to remain there silently and almost without movement.

But no sooner had I settled into my modest apartment than I was informed that Monsignor Antonucci, the Holy See's nuncio in Turin, was asking me see. He had followed the court, and, like me, had gone down to the hotel of the
In the town, he had just learned of my arrival. Antonucci, a man of the neck Rage and moderation, was the type of the Roman diplomat, in the better meaning of the word. He knew the purpose of my wanderings.
tions; he spoke to me about my plans; he asked me if he wasn't coming in in my intention to visit Count Solar de la Marguerite, Minister of Foreign Affairs.

"I know him and I love him," I replied to the nuncio; "but his position
The official situation is very difficult now, and I don't want to increase its embarrassment at my presence at the Durazzo palace.

– And the king, who is for the historian of the Vendée military and of the
The Society of Jesus holds you in such profound esteem, do you not request...
Won't you have the honor of greeting him?

"My God, no," I replied. "With the king, one would have to use a..."
"Unseemly frankness, or condemning me to hypocrisy."

The next day, the king sent me a Jesuit whom he still liked.
had understood my discretion. Knowing what I had gone to Vienna to do, what I was going to undertake in Rome, he had entrusted to Father Polydore, under the strictest secrecy, to request an interview at eight o'clock in the evening and in a secluded house.

My first impulse was to refuse. The Jesuit insisted; and as Italians always like to shroud themselves in mystery at the appointed time.

(1) Rattazi and his time, p. him.

t:n black CARBONARO. – Charles-Albert 157

a man draped in a vast cloak, his face almost entirely... hidden beneath a wide-brimmed hat, came, with a word of pass, pick me up at the hotel and act as my guide. We wandered for a long time time spent wandering through the dark, narrow streets of Genoa. My con
The conductor remained silent; I didn't utter a word during the entire time.
the journey. Finally, we arrived at the designated place. I was shown into a small, rather poorly lit living room; a few minutes later, I had...
Charles-Albert is in front of me.

He was very pale. His face, on which macerations and an en-mystical enthusiasm had carved deep, premature wrinkles, affected a calm that was betrayed by a nervous trembling with every movement want.

It was clear that, through his remorse, there was nothing decisive in him.
neither for good nor for evil, and that he would never be able to to find, in times of danger, those sudden inspirations that we speak of Tacitus, and which for some are crimes, for others experiments savior teeth.

He greeted me with a cold, restrained sadness. After the applause preliminary quotes on my previous works, congratulations that he had addressed them to me in writing more than once;

"To Mr. Crétineau-Joly," he added with visible effort, "I have I learned that you are now involved in such an important project.
aunt, but much more difficult. You will have to judge the events
These are little-known figures and men. Among the actors, some have made doing evil for the pleasure of doing it; others through training, through obsession or a vague desire to innovate. In these cases, there was More of an error than a crime; and I can assure you of that, myself who, in my youth, perhaps had the misfortune to succumb to seduction tion. »

I bowed without uttering a word. The king understood this silence; interpreting it according to his desires: Is it not so, Sir, that I tra-
Do you understand your thought correctly? – I wish I could affirm it to the king; but I am convinced of the opposite, and that the dupes, in Societies Cretans are the very small exception. It's a different story among the Franks-Freemasons. In the lodges of England, Germany, France and I-
In Italy, we recruit an endless number of honest fools who let themselves be imposed tribute for a banquet on a given day, or for the benefit of a philanthropist pie and a lying brotherhood. If, in the sales of Carbonarism, we regiment a few poor creatures tormented by the itch of a Better is impossible; it's about making it a brand and sometimes a safeguards; but attempts are always made to compromise them, and there happens very often.

– I've heard about some documents that an archduke...

158 THE ITALIAN REVOLUTION (1830-1870)

would have shown, added the king. It is whispered that this proud Prince Felix of Schwarzenberg, who caused me so much suffering through his in-Solences, during his embassy to Turin, had with you, in Naples and Elsewhere, frequent reports. I receive a letter from Vienna that he has provided information that it would be wise to keep hidden at all times

Your discretion is appreciated. These documents, which concern me, Do you actually have it?

—■ I might know some of them. Sire, I stammered, sworn who pronounces a guilty verdict.

The word fell upon the king's head like a condemnation. He had since I wasn't very intimidated, but also because I wouldn't try to do trophy of my discoveries.

"Now," he continued after a pause, "now that I know what to focus on the imperial government's intentions towards me, I hope, sir, that your pen will not lend itself to the scandal that it expects from you. God is my witness that I have never aspired to the popularity that is coming my way and that frightens me. We will obviously be in dragged into an Italian war against the House of Austria. It is in this prediction that she commissions a work into which I will be thrown to the dustbin of history.

In terms filled with almost obsequious deference, I tried to make to understand to the king that the History of Secret Societies had not taken born in Vienna, but in Home; that it was not the government imperial, which had inspired and solicited her, but Pope Gregory XVI, and I explained the phases and the plan to him.

He listened with a somber and distracted expression, as if in the grip of a hallucination. or to an inner turmoil that my words, however measured they may be were, they only served to increase. When I had finished:

"Finally," he resumed abruptly, as if breaking with himself a tiresome monologue, in short, it's a direct insult that you are preparing rez against me, and an undeserved outrage, based only on the impos-
"Ture!"

I had followed every move of that unfortunate prince. I had studied in his wild eyes, and on his brow, furrowed rather by remorse than by repentance, the anguish of his soul. I felt trapped for His pity was such that it would lead me to make concessions. His last Words put me back in the saddle. With a first leap I cried out:

"I am not, sire, in the habit of relying on imposture. My The work will have the fault, the sole fault, of being true. It may contain on Your Majesty a judgment that the honor of no victory, the
"No defeat will ever be forgiven for pity."

I greeted the unfortunate monarch in respectful silence, and, ac- Accompanied by the unknown young guide, I returned to the Town Hall.

The following Sunday, there was a celebration at the church of Saint-Ambroise. belonging to the Jesuits.

The king came there with his court. Chance led me to meet him on his way. I waved to me. During the religious ceremony, Count So-Marguerite's wife sent me Father Guibert, rector of the house Jesuits, to offer me an interview in the house itself.

The minister either didn't know or pretended to ignore my conversation about the I stayed up with the king. I felt I should confine myself to the same discretion. tion. But he was aware of my history project, and he was afraid to see the prince, whom he served and loved, exposed to cruel fates revelations. A man of ancient faith and loyalty, an innovative servant a hundred of a guilty king, for three hours, in Father's cell Gaillard, standing guard at the gate, tried to prove something to me. monarchical men such as we were expected to bury in certain truths deep within their hearts; and, without arguing with me He asked me for my more or less guilty side, and thanked me. for him.

I refused in the name of the rights of truth, which are inalienable in all respects. time, and especially in the present circumstances; and, in order to to assert my authority as quickly as possible, I embarked for Oivita-Vecchia (1),

S 4. – An episode from 1848. – The History of Societies
SECRETS BY CRÉTINEAU-JOLY

The preceding pages have indicated the scope of the work that Crétineau-Joly was preparing in 1846. Gregory XVI, in the last in the last year of his life, he had asked him, and had confided in him documents of the utmost importance. The Holy Father was intervened with Metternich and the King of Naples, Ferdinand, so that they could provide the historian with the documents they contained their archives. Both complied with this request, and Pius IX, upon his accession, confirmed his mission to Crétineau-Joly. But many people, Charles Albert and others too, had great interest in the serious revelations contained in These documents never saw the light of day. They succeeded. Here he We must let the historian speak for himself:

The thought had come to Charles-Albert after despair, and she

(1) Published by M. Maynard in the volume entitled: Jacquet CritineaU'Jolij, your religious and literary life^ according to his Memoirs (Paris tSiby ia-8^}, pp. 336 to 371.

This had led him to appeal to the Pope, in order to obtain, through his intervention... I had refused his explanations and the prayers of his minister.

On November 16th, I arrived in Rome.

From the very first audience granted to me by the Sovereign Pontiff, to his Christian claritic recommendations, to her clans of paternal love As for the repentant conspirators, I saw that I would find them in Rome, In the generous sentiments of Râpe, a more insurmountable obstacle than in Genoa, in the obsessions of a complicit and duped prince. All the more so more so than where Charles Albert had only prayer at his service. Pius IX could issue an order which I was quite resolved to obey. submit. That's what Charles-Albert and his colleagues had clearly understood. seillers; and that is why a dispatch had been sent to the Pope, for to point out to him the drawbacks of such a situation, and to ask him to prohibit me from composing it.

Pius IX inquired about my travels and their outcome; he assured me that the records of the Italian secret meetings had been compiled by his orders, and he told me to come to an understanding with Cardinal Gizzi, his secretary of State, and Bishop Corboli-Bussi, his trusted man.

Suddenly, stopping as if by a sudden inspiration:

"This is a serious matter," he added, "and it must be considered before God." Go to Naples; see the king and his ministers. However, I will pray at foot of the crucifix. Whatever resolution it inspires in me, promise me to comply with it."

Despite anticipating the sacrifice that such a commitment would require of me, I promised on my honor and on my faith... The conversation continued It was quite early in the night...

On November 27th, I was in Naples. I had letters to introduce myself. very that Father Manera, by order of the Holy Father, had given me for the king, for his ministers and for his confessor, Archbishop Cocle from Patras.

Father Manera, then rector of the Roman College, had long been Provincial of the Jesuits in the Kingdom of Naples. Still young, and of a nervous sensitivity that sometimes reached even into the conversation. To the greatest effects of eloquence, he possessed a rare to the degree all the gifts that constitute the charm and pride of the world. The king Ferdinand had developed an affection and trust for him, which He gave him testimonies every day. It was said that Gré Goire XVI had wanted to move him from his convent to the Sacred-College, and that Pius IX, whose Father was the comforter, was going to accomplish to fulfill one of the last wishes of the deceased pope.

I saw the Marquis Pietra-Castella, president of the council, and the Marquis 1820; but they were of the same breed as those men who pass through all the governments under the pretext of serving their country, and who expect to The master's order to unleash the servility of their obedience. sance. The king having spoken to them of my plan with approval, they: < They in turn approved it, and even promised to sV associate in the most active way.

On one condition, however; that is, through more or less reluctance Skilled and loyal, the historian would be misrepresenting the truth about them. and also on the account of the Marquis Fortuitato, of the Knight of San-Au-geio and most of the senior state officials, who, under Tini- the impulse of King Francis of Naples, father of King Ferdinand, had thrown headlong into the Revolution and the Secret Societies.

I still had to see Bishop Code, who was then highly regarded in the roj-aumo, and on whom, according to everyone, the success of the enterprise depended. I I therefore went to the Ligurian monastery, where the powerful confessor, [religious] The slime of this kind continued to remain. I couldn't manage without Delicacy and without fear. What Gregory XVI had confided to me several once regarding Bishop Code, had just been confirmed to me by the general Saluzzo, first aide-de-camp of the roj.

"He was a Carbonaro like the others," the general told me; he Test perhaps still; and, at least, he still holds dear everything that This touches on secret societies. Make every effort to Tamener "You, but I doubt you'll succeed."

Indeed, my interview with Bishop Code was difficult and stormy. No He only refused to help me, but he went so far as to deny the pro-masses that had been said for me during my previous journey. My Loyalty flew into a rage, and I left, threatening him with some kind of revelation. terrible.

After such a spectacular display, approaching the king was no longer easy. The avenues of the palace were under the immediate supervision of the confessor. whose first priority must have been to close the most degrading door to me personally and to my messages.

I was alone, lost in sad thoughts, awaiting advice from the geue* ral Saluzzo, when a thought as swift as lightning flashed through my mind. The confessor denied the king's commitment; I wrote to the king on December 5th. bre, the following letter:

••♦4 «.*.4 444 .) *... ,

In this letter, Crélineau-Joly reminded the King of Naples of the cel publication and asked if Bishop Code had interpreted the royal will, or had substituted his own...

103 THE ITALIAN REVOLUTION (1830-1870)

This fund, as one could have foreseen, resembled Mgr Code, the Carbonaro ancestor, more or less converted, who introduced him to of the king.

Crélineau left Naples: back to Rome, on December 31st
In 1817, the Holy Father declared to him (his father's dignity and his Princely duty opposed the publication of a history which,
In the present circumstances, it could offer more than one danger.

In 1811), while the Pope was in Gaeta, to Cardinal Pignatelli,
The nuncio in Paris urged him to resume his work.
Anonelli wrote a memo to Gaeta, a note to that effect.

But new vicissitudes awaited this book.

"Once more tick," said Mr. Maynard, "one last time, Crélineau was torn from his work by the intervention of Mgr Garibaldi. I/ainuislio had him suspended on 18th, the 10th IX no being able to promulgate that one attached to the pillory of the history of the people which he had pardoned and that he believed they were converted; the service that the government rendered him in 1800. Louis Lionaparte's comment about giving free rein to a book, where this prince, infant and pupil of the Secret Societies, would have played such a sad rôle and taken such an infamous place.

The book was almost finished and partly printed. Crélineau-Joly has always regretted that his hands were tied; "This should no longer be the case." "to surprise no one," he wrote to his daughter on November 21, 1800, "Today, all the masks fall. I wanted, in 1817, the..." "tear down all these ignoble faces; princes, generals, ambassadors-deers or prelates." (0

History of the Sonderbund and the Roman Catholic Church opposite the fiction contain some of the parts that were intended to be used of documents to this work But reasons of prudence litigious, households for high-ranking families, including some members had the misfortune of being trapped in the Ilaut-Vent, forced him to reveal the names of the authors of this correspondence. "Everything is known now," said Rubb's Maynard, "down to the cliff of revolutionary pseudonyms Nubins, Piccolo-Tigre, and the others, that there would still be some drawback to li-To open."

Victor Emmanuel and Cavour

103

5. – Victor Emmanuel and Cavour

The day after the Novara disaster, Victor-Emmanuel and his immediate circle have the will to resume the first opportunity the work of the Revolution.

We speak of the work of the Revolution and not that of independence. Italian dance, because, in 1850, this prince gave to the Freemasonry a positive sign of his intention to wage war on religion no less than to Austria and to make Tintérét révolutionnaire. He was a revolutionary before the Italian rilérôt. He did what the cosmopolitan sects above all; and the emancipation of the peninsula that in his hands would become a means of reaching the Church and the Christian social order.

The ministry of Azeglio, which after Novara had the mission to heal the country's wounds, to rebuild the army, took a very energetic authoritarian attitude and inspired the king to proclaim it tion of Moncalieri, in which, says M'® Ratlazi, one could see "an allusion to a coup d'état like the one Napoleon was supposed to stage" "A little later (1)." Cavour was the leader of this ministry; now, by the law of April 9, 1850, he broke the existing concordat with Rome: this law was passed with the support of Rattazi, in the year former revolutionary minister of Charles-Albert, the head of the opposition in the House. A close alliance was therefore contracted between these two men: the persecutory measures of the Church intensified rapidly. Archbishop Franzoni of Turin, having protested, was arrested, fined and sentenced to He was imprisoned by the courts, soon after sent into exile. as much happened to the Archbishop of Cagliari.

Rattazi had once been part of the Italian youth team: compromise with the militant revolutionaries much more so than Cavour, who until now seems to have remained in more hidden regions and more advanced secret societies, he brought to the latter the ap-then of the action party, whose leadership increasingly escaped Mazzini.

Cavour's break with the old Piedmontese royalist element The chain of transmission to which his birth bound him was soon complete. Rattazi was, thanks to him, elected president of the Chamber of Deputies.

(1) Rattazi and his time. Unpublished documents, correspondence, personal recollections, by Mme Rattazi, Paris, 1881, 1.1, p. 304.

164 THE ITALIAN REVOLUTION (1830-1870)

in 1852; he entered the ministry in 1851, and immediately proposed a law to confiscate the assets of religious corporations. A ministerial crisis ensued, and Victor Emmanuel used of his royal prerogative to maintain Rattazi in power and to overturn the law (May 28, 1855) by the Gliambre, which was threatened with abolition. solution.

"Mazzini," said Mr. Rattazi, "was thrown from his seat by the blow and became furious (1). » But the majority of revolutionary olcmenls res grouped around Cavour and Rattazi and entrusted them with the leadership of the movement. One of the largest memberships was that of Maniu, the former doge of Venice in 1818. He brought his influence and that of the French and Italian lodges, of which he was one of the leaders, serving the unified ideal under the monarchy Piedmontese dog, and fought against the Razzinian policy, which had the objective is a federal republic.

Rattazi suggested the idea of opposing this centrifugal propaganda outside From Piedmont, a centripetal pressure on Turin. From this idea, put into practice... cut by Cavour, came the Socielù nazionale^ which was the reverse of the medal of Parlilo of Apène. The triumvirate Manin, Farina, Pallavi-Cini se forma .son.® la direction de Cavour avec le programme ; Unifica-zionc d'Ilalia^ independence sotlo la dinaslia di Savoia, as long as this The dynasty would remain loyal to the Italian cause, using the action popular and with the useful support of the Piedmontese government. This so Society worked on the Italian spirit and transformed it. "Agitatore edngitato," he said. Manin. This agitation made it impossible, by unmasking them, for the Eu-Menides of Italy at that time, that is to say Mazzini, Murat, the Re-public, the Pope. The patriots were grouped together, the forces were concentrated. Cavour was the head and the focus of this immense polyp, which launched its tentacles on all points of the peninsula and concentrated the Italian soul lienne in Victor Emmanuel's study. The triumvirate had com took into account the situation, the spirit of the times, the national instinct, and found men who were to spread the great idea (pp. 337-338).

However important that concentration of elements might be Italian revolutionaries under the leadership of Cavour, she would not have not enough to protect Victor Emmanuel from a second Novara, if had not found cooperators like Palmston and Napoleon III.

These are the people we are going to see in action.

(1) Colto dcleclion explains the deep hatred that Mazzini harbored towards Rattazi and tegrete italiana, Turin, Roux et Favalo, 1880.

Palmerston and the European Revolution 165

All matters from this period were handled by secret communications between the main actors of the events. Almost constantly the diplomatic documents, the Ministerial notes express the opposite of what Victor-Emmanuel, Napoleon III, Palmerston. Their way of acting is that of men involved in secret societies, and who have to take into account elements entirely different from those listed on the external political stage.

The Crimean War has never been properly explained in its origins. It remains a mystery in many respects. Well! It is very striking to see that, as early as March 12, 1849, this idea was highlighted by a newspaper of the sect, published in Rome, who advocated an alliance between Turkey, England and France versus Russia (1)! Government intervention. The Piedmontese role in this war is even stranger.

In 1853, it was Victor Emmanuel who, personally and despite his ministers, he committed Piedmont to this war where he had absolutely no interest, but which bound the revolutionary party with Napoleon III. Cavour was from that at that moment his instrument, and followed in concert with the king a policy completely opposed to that of the ministry, of which he was part. As early as June 1853, Victor Emmanuel was making to the Duke of Guiche, the French minister in Turin, made very specific overtures, which culminated six months later in the treaty of June 8, 1854, when we would have had time to work on public opinion in this direction (2).

S 6. — Palmerston and his roles in the Revolution

EUROPEAN

Father Deschamps attributed a pre-weighing heavily in the revolutions of this century... Misy had him reported as early as 1850, as exercising a kind of dictatorship over secret societies and this hidden diplomatic world which in reality leads European policy, and for which the debates

(1) V. CO fait si curieux rapport dans les Mémoires de Al. Moncacci, t. 1, p, 80.

(2) V. Guiseppe Masari, La vita e il regno di Vittorio Emanuele II, 1 vol. in-18, Milan, 1878; Godkin, Victor-Emmanuel King of Italy, London, in-18; Alacmilla, D, ot unarliclo de Al. Bouillior, Correspondant du 10 décembre 1881, où collo conver-

ICC THE "ITALIAN EVOLUTION (1830-1870)" parliamentarians are not often (|only parades played on trestles for grooving jnililic.

This part of Father Deschamps' work has raised some doubts among sincere minds, who rather believe that Vold Palm personified selfish politics in his long career from England.

Since then, various writings have contributed to the views of the author of Secret Societies at least partially confirms which we must relate here.

From his first ministry in 1832, Lord Palmerston intervened in German affairs, he complains that Austria does not want not to enter into concessions and to focus solely to repression. Metlcrnich strongly rejected this interference.
in the internal corridors of Germany(1).

In 1810, Lord Palmerston fled to Ochsenbein, the chief of the free corps, may he, like Mazzini, have his sympathies by the English minister to Borne, Mr. Peel. After the invasion-In the Catholic cantons, he worked to stop the ambitions intervention by the French cabinet against radicals (2).

In the correction of Lord Palmerston which was published by Sir Bulwcr Lyllon and M. hlvelyn Ashley, we find a letter strange that he addressed it in 18'iG to Sir Bulwer, who was then on a mission in Italy :

Brondlands, lo 16 seplombrc 1816 .

My dear Buhvor, I completely agree with everything you have said.
Done, and I repeat what Lord Anglosoa said (Irish: cr Shake!
"Wave! Shake!" However, be careful, as this will not involve you in any way.
Einaut's project; but, avoiding any complicity in such actions, you can support in their hostile dispositions those that you would see willing to believe in the support of the English nation, and consequently to make some attempt of this nature (3).

In 1817, at a time when Italy was beginning to ferment, he sent Lord Minlo on a mission to activate the movement (Cf.
Book II, five). IX, 3).

(1) Dc|iùcîio 3 of 31 pclohro ItlJv' {Mémoires, lomo V).

(2) V. (a-plineau-JoIy, Uist. du Smidcrbnnd, lomo I, p. 2i0-25f, i05 et seq.

(:») The Life of Jh-J, Temple viacouul Palmerston^ wiUi sclrclinns from his spee^ speeds and corrcsj.ondcntCjhy i:\c Hulwcr Lyllon, and Kvelyn Ashley, Loudon, lierU loy, 2 vo'.iu- 20 , 1871.

PALMERSTON BT THE EUROPEAN REVOLUTION 167

The birth of Lord Minto in Naples in 1817, said the Commander Mencncci, under the pretext of obtaining from King Ferdinand concessions in favor of English subjects; but, in reality, his The goal was to incite the subjects of this prince to rebellion. results expressly from one of his dispatches to Palmerston, in Dated January 18, 1848. Sicily, meanwhile, had risen up. But then, on February 12th, Lord Minto sent a dispatch che to MG Godwin, English consul in Palermo, so that he might to know to the revolutionary committee of this city that he, Lord Minto was available to act as a mediator between the rebels and their sovereign. The committee, naturally, accepted the offer and, by a dispatch dated the 11th of the same month, invited Lord Minto went to Palermo in person. But the revolution from Paris arrived, and Lord Minto remained in Naples to press the King Ferdinand to grant prompt reforms (1).

In the volume she compiled on notes and memoirs Mrs. Llatlazi emphasizes her husband's role as boss and the initiator of the Italian revolution, played by Palmerston. Overwhelmed by personal resentments, she diminishes too much the actions of Napoleon III, but we believe they are in the truth when she shows Palmerston constantly goading her, pushing especially Cavour, with whom he was in close contact Mite. His testimony on this point has undeniable value. because it's Rattazi's own child.

She depicts Palmerston detesting the Pope and the princes these do the house of Bourbon (p. 99, 200).

The oaths of the knight Kadosh, the old motto: Lilia pecUbus deslruef appear constantly in scs dispatches diplomatic letters and his personal correspondence. In 1817, in his dispatches to Lord Minto, he urges Charles Albert to inaugurate the Revolutionary War (pp. 115, 132).

By the end of 1852, Cavour, who had become prime minister following of an evolution made towards the left with the support of the king (V. (above, § 5), enters into diplomatic struggle with Aulrichcct the Vatican. "Palmerston's loyal support was assured to him."

"Austria had to suppress a Mazzinic insurrection at

"Diplomatic measures against the repressions that had been part of it"

(I) Memorie storiche di Giuseppe Mazzini per la storia della rivoluzione italiana, t. I, p. 217.

168

THE ITALIAN REVOLUTION (1830-1870)

"consigliere. Lord Palmerston supported these protests with "firmness, Xapôlôiii III with softness." (pp. 311, 312) From From that moment, the diplomatic relations of Piedmont and Aulrichc étaient incompromises.

At the Congress of Paris in 1856, when, on the orders of Napoleon Leo III, the Italian question was raised, it was Count Claren don, English ambassador, (lui, non sculemcnl supported the most Cavour eagerly attacked, but <pii still attacked with the last violence the king of Nails.

As the congress was ending, Napoleon had advised Cavour to go and find Palmerston as the sovereign in tre (1).

"Lord Palmerston, said M^{re} liatlazi, had been converted since
"for a long time. However, he advised Javour not to alarm
"Napoleon, not to be bound by his promises, not to specify anything"
"To be a fool. Time is our best ally," he said. (p. 323)

J.I. de Cavour having accused Austria of committing atrocities cited in Lombardy, Mr. de Buol addressed a circular to all the diplomatic agents of Austria abroad. Lord Palmers ton intervenes to support Cavour (p. 320).

In 1857, two difficulties arose in the East; Russia seemed so closer to Aulrichc who is worried about the work of the sects, directed by the Piedmontese government. Cavour is alarmed, and that's with Palmerston (that Villamarina receives assurances fa-vorables, encouragement, but also advice of caution. Just declare, he told him, that you do not pro-
You will not mention the reversal of the state of affairs established by the treaties of 1815 by violent means. By this means, the concert established between France, England and Piedmont will not be broken, and Austria will remain isolated (2).

Two years later, in 1858, the Pisacane expedition took place in the kingdom of Naples, "a somewhat republican expedition, a "Not very monarchist," said Mr. Rallazi. The invaders were "also from the Caqliari, an English ship, which had transported Pisa-(!) Los Mémoires do lladax.i rcproiluisoat ici les faits et les documents quo le P. Dttscliampsa puljliés (liv II, cliaj). X,g 4).

(•>)V. the curious letter of April 27, 1857 from the Marquis Villamarina to Cavour in the ifonorie Xocnmenlide i\o Mciicacci, t. II, p. 57 cl suiv.

Palmehton and the European Revolution 169

"cane, which led to a diplomatic conflict between Cavour, sou-
"held by Lord Paloierston, and King Ferdinand." (p. 335)

Lord Palmer's ministry had stumbled upon these intermediaries. tes (1858), and the Tories held power precisely during the period of the Ilian War.

This change of ministry did not benefit the cause of the re-
The Italian revolution and the consequences one might expect. The poforeign policy has in England such a slability that the mi-nistères succeeded one another without noticeably altering it; then, the Tories English people, in their capacity as Protestants, are full of prejudices against the papacy and the Catholic monarchies; the house of Bourbon is for them a traditional rival of British supremacy tannic. Almost all are Freemasons, and, although the Mason English nerie ailc/tc3c//6'des allures fort dilTérentcs de celle du con-
However, all the lodges fraternize; moreover, the English
In Italy, affiliates have hardly any relations other than with men.
my members belong to the progressive party. For all these reasons, the course events in Italy were not stopped; Cavour was only less supported (1), and Napoleon III was freer to conduct the campaign as he saw fit.

Palmerston, however, although out of the ministry, did not cease to push for war. At the end of November 1858, he pressed the emperor.

Palmerston arrived at Gompiegne, says Mme Rattazzi, with a suite of horses and dogs and an arsenal of rifles. 11 came there to hunt on an invitation from the emperor; and indeed, old Cupid, like the ap-Lady Sebthorpe was a keen hunter, and hunted admirably during the day.
stunning everyone with his vigorous old age, his skill, his wit, of his shamelessness with the women of this tasteless Trianon.
During the evening, while the throng of guests chattered and danced, he acted in comedies in official salons, he strolled around with the emperor a philosopher; he scrutinized him and drew him into an exchange of ideas, of which Each of the parties involved benefited reciprocally from their own interests.
personal matters. Lord Palmerston wanted to push the emperor towards a policy that daredevil, while pretending to hold him back or at least gique (p. 375).

By July 1859, Palmerston had returned to power

(1) Rattazi and his time, p. 35i.

170 THE ITALIAN REVOLUTION (1830-1870)

and during all the intrigues that followed the armistice of Villa-Franca, we see him constantly supporting Cavour and Rattazi in their maneuvers for the annexation of central Italy and Naples, weighing on Napoleon III to make him accomplish the great work, the runaway of Italy and especially the destruction of the temporal power of the pope (pp. 420, 425, 449). In January 1860, in anticipation of a Austria's offensive return due to the failure to execute the preliminaries In Villafranca, he promised Italy the support of the fleet English (p. 451). Garibaldi's expedition to Sicily is being plotted between him and Cavour (p. 457); we will see the details later, § 8. On November 9th, Rattazi, addressing a memorandum to the king on the situation resulting from the invasion of Naples and on the attitude to adopt vis-à-vis Napoleon, who, at that moment, was showing some ill will towards Victor Emmanuel, he wrote this: "He does not <c must not adopt too humble an attitude in their eyes, "in order to leave him always in uncertainty about our good re- "Let's take action against the other powers, especially against England." "lelTC." (p. 538)

If Napoleon is the arm that carries out the Masonic work, in lavishing the blood and treasures of France, that is Palmerston who controls everything. Every time ([that emperor wants to follow a particular design, when he dreams of an Italian confederation where he would have supremacy, or wants to establish Prince Napoleon at Florence, Murat in Naples, Palmerston intervenes; he threatens the emperor father, or else he has personal interviews with him (pp. 374, 450, 451) and the work, momentarily stopped, resumes its progress.

Palmerston, however, only committed England's arms (pjand there is a material English interest to be asserted, as in disguise in 1854. In all other circumstances he limited to diplomatic pressure on European cabinets, with vague promises of maritime cooperation.

What, then, was the reason for this prodigious ascendancy that he exercised? There is an inexplicable problem here for those who neglect will manage the very curious revelations of Misloy and Mr. Urquhart (Book II, Chapter X, 2 and 3), that is to say, the existence of a plan that the Secret Societies and their leaders want to impose.

the destruction of the Pope's temporal power. 8 Their plan included again the reworking of the map of Germany (V. book II, chap. IX, 118. – The Palmerstonian plan).

THE SECRET POLICY OF NAPOLEON III 171

Mazzini, who was in London, was in constant communication with him, in one of his confidential letters to Diamilla Muller, dated June 20, 1861, that Palmerston wanted, to Regarding the question of the Schleswig-Holstein duchies, to engage the war in Central Europe, extending a hand to Poland and to Hungary.

The conference turns into a war. The British cabinet believes it inevitable. 11 has already proposed to Louis-Napoleon that he begin immediately. The hostilities have resumed. This one has closed* Here is the secret: Louis-Napoleon has an agreement with the Tory party; an attempt will be made to overthrow the ministry before the end of the session. If successful, the new ministry will be... will be represented by a new formal alliance with France. Louis-Napoleon prefers a Tory cabinet to this one. He hasn't liked it since the Congress's refusal. He also knows that the cabinet distrusts him and the overwatch (1).

Did Palmerston really want to throw England into this? war, or was he only speaking this way to bring Napoleon III into the war? to make France bear the entire burden of this? that is the question (2^).

§. 7. The Secret Policy of Napoleon III

Throughout his reign, Napoleon III remained faithful to the ideas, perverse, to the commitments made in the sales of the Carbonari where his youth had been spent. His political methods remained always the same ones, and throughout his reign he is seen surrounded by obscure foreigners to whom he entrusts the most delicate missions. It is with agents of that sort, recruited in the personnel of the high secret societies, which he deals with all the great International affairs. Their foreign ministers, except Thouvenel, write notes, exchange dispatches made

(1) Politica segreta italiana, p. 101. It was at the time when Garibaldi was going to put to the test of a revolutionary expedition or iloumanio, and lend a hand to the insurgent movements prepared in Hungary and Gallicia. Liossutli, Klapka and Turr were very keen on the preparation, which had as its basis the aris and London, V. Raltasi el son temps, pp. 601 et seq., ut les docatnonis cités plus far, % 10.

(2) y. a similar assessment in a letter from Mérimée (Letters to Pannizi^ for the direct execution of scs designs.

172 THE ITALIAN REVOLUTION (1830-1870)

je n'aurais trompé l'opinion publique. Quite a different action, aiming for plans quite distinct from French interests, part of the Emperor's influential cabinet (1).

We will only report here a few extracts from the memoirs and writings from my exile, by Kossuth (2), which relate to the time of the Italian war and complete the father's story. Despatches (book 11, chap. X, 1).

This is an important fact, and one that the historian of our time must always keep in mind that the policy of Emperor Napoleon differed will often do, quite frankly, something entirely different from that of his ministers. These men were not even initiated into the master's policies, nor did they hold any position to implement it. Thus, the Hungarian refugees were in common interaction only with the emperor, with Prince Napoleon (who on important occasions was used as a mediator and enforcement agent. tion) and with certain characters without an official status, who were

(t) On dit 303 intermédiaires with Palmerston was Pannizzi, an Italian carbonaro fixed at London, and became curator or head of the British Museum. Pannizzi, born in 1797 in the ducal Modène, had taken part in the conspiracies of 1820 and 1821. His role there was quite active, so much so that the representatives of Austria, France and Sardinia demanded his expulsion from Swiss territory. Fugitive or Anglo-Roman, his Masonic connections quickly created a brilliant career for him in London. In 1828 Lord Brougham appointed him professor at the University of... London, and shortly afterwards curator at the Italian Museum. He had a confluent connection in the Times editorial staff. We would not be surprised if Pannizzi would have been in London one of those men of whom Mislay and Israel speak. We find quotations in his indications, mais très abrévées, sur ses relations avec Napoléon III dans the letters that Merimee sent him (Paris, Calmann-Lévy, 2 vols. 11-80 1881). Alérini, the devoted friend of the Emperor, no doubt had no part in CCS communications, for which he served as a material intermediary.

Our assumption is consistent to the point made by the biography that he dedicated to him by Fagan, The life of sir Anthony Pannizzi, 2 vols. in 8*, London, 1880. It shows the close ties between Pannizzi and Thiers, Afazzini, Garibaldi, Cavour, Gladstone, and especially Palmerston. The negotiations are discussed, including those that the latter entrusted to him with Napoleon III. Good morning, Pannizzi had separated from Mazzini. He seems to have secured the rescue with Palmerston of the entire Italian revolutionary party. It was he who encouraged Gladstone to write his letters as violent as they were unjust against the Neapolitan government in 1857. Thanks to him, the Italian ships and the English ships then favored the escape of Pannizzi, a revolutionary nationalist. Finally, what is even more significant, in 1855, Pannizzi actively worked to raise public opinion. that English against the papacy and the Austrians on the occasion of the concordat concluded Gladstone (Book II, p. 120). Among Pannizi's first friends and proles, one sees Mr. Sliugby-l)uncoml)e, the negotiator of the treaty of 1815, between the prince Louis-Napoleon and the Duke of Brunswick, for the Unification of Germany (See book 11, ciia. XI, jt 2).

(2) One theft. in-8", Paris, Plon, 1880.

THE SECRET POLICY OF NAPOLEON III 173

However, the instruments of the emperor's trust. But we had not I have nothing to do with the ministers. For my part, I have no connection whatsoever. with them. They were not initiated into our relations, at least not in 1859. More Later, when Thouvenel was Minister of Foreign Affairs, there were This has changed somewhat, not because the system was modified, but simply because my friend, Colonel Nicolas de Kis, was close- was linked to Thouvenel and their families were related. The emperor, who was aware of this close relationship, did not disapprove of it. This dualism existed from the beginning in Napoleon's relationship with the god. Piedmontese clothing. It doesn't seem that a single French minister has I was aware of what happened at the Plombières meeting, no more than the defensive and offensive alliance treaty concluded in December 1858.

The entire ministry, with the sole exception of Prince Napoleon, who He was part of it at the time, and didn't even know the alliance existed. It's true that there was no solidarity between the prince and the other ministers; On the contrary, they were in marked opposition, and Prince Napoleon did not sign the secret treaty in his capacity as minister.

Among the men who served as intermediaries between the Emperor and among the revolutionaries, one of the most important was Pietri, a senator and the police prefect, and Doctor Conneau.

In June 1858, Mr. Conneau, the Emperor's personal physician, came in Turin to inform Cavour that the Emperor wished to meet him at Plombières. It was the Emperor's custom not to resort to Professional diplomats for secret missions. And also, what else? Although I did not know him personally, Conneau was indicated as I acted as an intermediary in case Pietri was busy elsewhere.

Kossuth recounts how, a few months earlier, Pietri had made every effort to save Orsini's life; he had obtained the Emperor's promise. The latter not having Pietri could not keep this commitment, because of public opinion (1), "was so offended that he resigned from his position as head of "The police." It was from Pietri himself that Kossuth got this information. details.

"Orsini had this mistaken idea," said Pietri, "that the Emperor Na

Wrong. The Emperor had always been a true friend of this freedom. He explained to Orsini, in his cell, that if the assassination attempt had succeeded, he, Orsini, of all the sovereigns of Europe, is said to have killed the only one that the Italians could expect help and relief. This explanation was not without consequence for Orsini. On February 21st, he addressed a letter from his prison of Mazas, a letter to the Empress.

(1) Compare the curious account in Florence's Journal which has been reproduced in book II Chapter XII, § 4.

174 THE ITALIAN REVOLUTION (1830-1870)

"Do not reject, Sire," he wrote to him, "the words of a patriot who is at the threshold of the grave. Deliver Italy, and the blessing of twenty-Five million Italians will follow your name into posterity.

The newspapers were allowed to publish this letter. Orsini understood that his voice, rising from the threshold of the grave, had reached the heart of the Emperor and on March 11, this time from the Roquette prison, he wrote a second letter, in which he openly condemned the political assassination and urged Italian youth to prepare to fight for the freedom of Italy through the practice of the virtues mentioned above (1).

Kossuth gives curious details about the revolutionary character-tionary that the republicans of Paris attached to the war from Italy.

My friend Colonel Nicolas de Kis de Nemesther told me that he had seen, when the Emperor left for Italy, the workers – said rather than workers – surround his car and cheer him on; Good luck! Go on! Don't be afraid! We are the ones who make revolutions. But also, it's us who are preventing them! Go on!

Kossuth, at that time, rendered two kinds of services to the revolutionary politics. He took an active part in England in electoral campaign of May 1859, which resulted in the fall of the ministry, by organizing numerous meetings in the-which he advocated for England's neutrality in the conflict
A dispute arose between France and Austria. It was on this issue that the question arose. that Lord Derby's cabinet fell and that Palmerston took over power.

Kossuth then returned to Italy in full swing to organize the Hungarian legion, which is to prepare an insurrection on the last rear of the Austrian army. At the same time he is in charge from a mission from Palmerston. Barely arrived at headquarters On July 3rd, he had an interview with the emperor, which he recounts

11 detained me for more than an hour, so that the king of Sardinia-

(i)p. 41-42.

THE SECRET POLICY OF NAPOLEON 111 175

Gno was forced to wait about half an hour. Pielri was pri-
He was present at the interview, and when we left, he said to me, "It's astonishing-
"Nant, he received you with extraordinary respect and treated you
"With high regard."

I began by reporting to him the results of my efforts.
in England. I was afraid of seeming vanquished, but Pietri inter came

"The strangest thing," he said, "is that Mr. Kossuth has, in his pocket, "Letters from English ministers, in which they boast of maintaining the An-
"We must remain neutral, remember if we go to Hungary."

"Really!" asked the Emperor. "May I see them?"

I gave him the letters. Biles seemed to interest him greatly. He read them one by one, smiling in between and shaking their heads in a look of surprise socket.

"- Your Majesty can see from this," I told him, "that not only
"I have duly fulfilled the mission I undertook, but what "has been more successful than I had hoped (I).

As we can see, Kossulh served as an intermediary between Napoleon III and Palmerston. What could have given him such an autonomous role?
mocked, if not for the oaths sworn long ago in the same Fridays your ?

Pietri and Kossulh, like all those who were committed to deeply involved in the revolutionary movement, they were profoundly disappointed.
pointed out by the Villafranca preliminaries.

Senator Pietri came to see me and told me he knew nothing about more than the newspapers had reported. He doesn't understand the thing; he believes it impossible, so unexpected and horrible is it. He has He telegraphed the Emperor and sent him a letter by post. This is "Impossible, impossible!" he exclaimed. A few days later, Mr. Pietri came At home, everyone was in turmoil, crying out: "Woe, woe to us! It's over!"
"All is lost / Read..." It was an autograph letter from the Emperor, addressed to Pietri. I was crying like a child. I could barely...

"We have pondered the situation with the prince and the king, and, well
"that it would cost us a great deal, we agreed that we
"We had to make peace. This time we cannot do more."

"The war is over. Tell Mr. Kossuth that I deeply regret..."
"that this law, the delivery of his psvs ccive, should leave it at that. I do not

(i:

i76 The Italian Revolution (1830-1870)

"Then there's no other way. It's impossible. But I beg him not to
"To lose heart, and to have faith in me and in your future."

It has often been said that the abrupt end of the war to Villafranca had been imposed on Napoleon III by the circumstances*
CCS: it would seem that this project had been planned for a long time in His program. Kossulli will show it to us with precision.
of remarkable dates;

Already, a year before the outbreak of war, while diplomacy
He didn't even dream of it; some members of the émigré community were honored.
gross, residing on the continent, revelations about pro-secrets storm symptoms, so that they might give me information about them.
Then again, I was told it was second-hand and third-hand.
in the first half of December 1858, that war was inevitable table, and I could have hoped for help in the form of weapons and money... But, what was more important than these tentative steps, incapable of serving as The basis for serious decisions was the report of General Klap* ka with Count Cavour and Prince Napoleon who entered with him in formal negotiations.

Among these initial openings, there is one so strange that it can to provide historians with food for thought.

On December 7, 1858, Daniel Irangy, my friend and companion in exile, today, a member of the Hungarian parliament, told me that Miero^ Lawskl, the exiled Polish general, had come to his house with a mission from Prince Napoleon to place at his disposal a Hungarian, who would in Italy to inquire about the strength and disposition of the honorary regiments Gros, because war against Austria was inevitable. The plan, he said, it was this: Piedmont would cede Savoy and Nice to France and would receive in exchange Milan up to the Mincio. If Austria^ after the the Milanese takeover, consenting to be dispossessed, then the conclusion would be made Peace with her, without pushing things any further.

In truth, he said, there is no question of the fragmentation of the empire Austrian, nor in particular of the Hungarian Revolution, but If we could bring about the desertion of the Hungarian regiments, we would force would unite a Hungarian legion, under the command of Klapka; he It would therefore depend solely on us to give a different twist to the war.

The passage in italics reproduces word for word the conditions under which Seven months later, in July 1859, the war ended at Villa franca.

Isn't that strange? Either Mieroslawski was a prophet, or this

THE SECRET POLICY OF NAPOLEON III H?

The question arises before the historian: the Villafranca arrangement was it really a product of the necessity of the moment, in particular from the prospect of armed intervention by Prussia, or was it a plan coldly and silently devised, which neither knew nor Cavour, nor Victor Emmanuel, nor anyone else?

Historian Zini, for his part, cites documents that prove that Napoleon was not alarmed by the threatening intimations of the Prussia and the German Confederation, even less so the attitude of Russia, to which was attributed the hidden design of to incite Hungary, to invade the Danubian principalities and to to deliver to Bonaparte one of the states on the left bank of the Rhine (1).

The truth is that Napoleon III, while wanting to accomplish the great work of the revolution and to satisfy his hatred against the papauté, odere quem læsistij poursuivait un but d'ambition personnelle. His brain was haunted by the dream of resuming the work "V of Napoleon I", or at least the plans of 1815. (V, Book III, Chapter V). He hoped to make Italy all-Tranchie of Austria, a vassal power of his empire. Prince Napoleon, who was a nuisance to him in Paris, was said to have been established in central Italy in Tuscany and Romagna; Murat would have reigned in Naples. This explains his contradictory behavior. In appearance. Upon entering Italy, he promises to return it free as far as the Adriatic; it stops abruptly at Villafranca, and puts forward a project for an Italian confederation led against Piedmont's ambition. From 1856 to 1859, he undermined everything the possible means by which the Bourbon government in Naples; it spread proclamations throughout the Neapolitan army, stirring up uprising against the Bourbons and recalling memories of King Joachim; a Muratist committee, established in Paris, is actively functioning (2); then, when Garibaldi is arrested before Gaeta, he sees giving some support to Francis II to thwart acquired by the Revolution to make him acquiesce definitively to Italian unity under the Piedmontese monarchy.

Napoleon III was dealing with a man of greater skill than him in Cavour.

No sooner had the Paris congress ended than Cavour com-

(1) Cited in the outrage RaiUuixi et «on leinps, t. I, pp. 247-248.

(2) Uencacci, Memorie doeumentate, t. J, p. 329 and scholars.

III

12

t78 THE ITALIAN REVOLUTION (1830-1870)

threatened, through secret societies, to prepare, in Italy tral, uprisings that would coincide with the entry into campa-French troops.

Mr. Mencacci published in his interesting Memorie documen- tate of numerous letters from Piedmontese agents written in May, June, July 1850, and which allow us to follow their day by day conducted in the duchies and Liomanes. "In Tuscany, the Ira-- Vail is doing well, and in Romagna very well," wrote Lafarina, then in Turin, July 19, 1850, to one of these agents, Vincenzo Cianciolo.
In July 1850, Garibaldi, who had been so hostile to Charles Al Bert, under the pretext of offering hydrotherapy, has come to settle in Votagio in Piedmont, he speaks in his manifestos of the pro^ Liberation Channel of Vllalie, and indicates that it is via Piedmont that it will take place and that the revolutionary elements will march all with Victor Emmanuel (1).

At the same time, Cavour's emissaries were preparing an in uprising in the Two Sicilies. Malta was their base of operations.
ration, as evidenced by a letter from Ruggero Settimo of May 21, 1850 (2), and the English government allowed them to do so.
to maintain the cadre of an Anglo-Italian legion, which had featured in the Crimean War, and was later to serve in one of the center in Sicily (3). But Cavour and his accomplices were very

(t) Mencacci, Jtfemorie documenlate, t. 1, p. 154, I60 et seq.

(2) Mencacci, jemorie documenlale, t. I, p. 155.

Confidential letter to Count Bernstorff, Prussian minister in London, established* knows from irrefutable facts the complicity of the soft-hearted English and English government French involvement in the attacks against this kingdom:

Assuredly, if he were in the king's states, two individuals who conspired sent against the king and the queen of Sardinia or the emperor of the French, not sent. We would not allow it, but we would inform the governments immediately. of these two sovereigns. It is well known that the horrible event of December 8th (l'attentat de Milano) had been publicly prepared in London; and in some French printed materials, memo before the attack was committed, it read: The late king from Naples!

<If one believes one can excuse the inappropriate press in England, by the bad reason> While it is free there, it is unforgivable in France, where we know what she enjoys freedom there, and yet where it is the most blatant provocation, God it is known for what purpose, but the proven result is to push Italy into revolt. and especially this kingdom.

It is also a well-known fact that the protection afforded by buildings which are in our harbor to all those who want to flee, and the sale they make of weapons and of munitions; every time a new building arrives, the exaltation of the so-called Liberalism is immediate.

"Although it has been said that English ships have come here from time to time"

MAZZINI'S POLICY 179

preoccupied by the thought that Napoleon III was pushing for overthrow of the Bourbon government to establish Murat. At the beginning In September 1856, La Farina wrote to him about this and told him request a passport for France, in order to go and consult with his friends in Paris, to thwart this project. "We mustn't, he told him, may our work be thwarted by those in whose favor "We are conspiring." Immediately, Cavour arranges a meeting with him. your secret(1).

Napoleon III was completely outmaneuvered, and it is not surprising that he had shown his bad mood, that he had sought to take pledges against Cavour and Victor Emmanuel. That's where the true explanation of Villafranca, as later of Mentana (2).

§ 8. – Mazzini's policy

Cavour and Napoleon III also had to contend with a third party a power that often thwarted their plans. On August 3, 1856, La Farina wrote from Turin to Vincenzo Cianciolo, who, from Genoa, directed the work of secret societies in central Italy:

For the protection of their citizens, the frigate Malacca has been here for a months without scruples about selling powder to anyone, and where it is occupied trying to encourage parties against the government and by spreading new information from the arrival of other buildings,

The agents of both powers in several points in the provinces, instead to inspire feelings of calm, provoke the greatest exaltation.

In Sicily, by Bentivegna and his associates, it was constantly shouted, to incite to the rebellion;

"That the English had landed;

c That the English were protecting them;

That the English would have defended them.

(The royal government is well aware of the large sums of money that arrive here) from abroad.

"A large part of the people from both countries are openly conspiring here, in treason..." thus misunderstanding the hospitality offered to them, because they believe themselves to as they actually are, by their governments; the man named Vincenzo Sproviero, a Calabrian, was sentenced in absentia to twenty-five years in irons for crying my politicians, embarked on the English steamship the Wanclerer, protected by the officers, and he was transported to Malta, from where on the French postal steamship, the Can, with a Piedmontese passport, he returned to the port of Naples and is went to Genoa.

(1) Mencacci, Memorie doeumentate, 1.1, p. 280-281,

(2) This assessment is also that of Mr. Gallenga, in his work, The Pope and the King (London, 1879, 2 vols. in-8°). Gallenga was, throughout this period, The Times correspondent in Italy. His testimony is of great value.

180 THE ITALIAN EVOLUTION (1830-1870)

The news I am receiving from Naples agrees with that You give me. They give me high hopes for a part of Varmce. A Massa and Carrara, Mazzini, as usual, unable to do it himself* kid, tried to undo our work (1*.

Mazzini, as we saw from the very important revelations of Misley had not agreed to the conventions of the secret societies. Held in Paris, in January 1852 (Book II, Chapter V, § 2). Aware plans agreed upon between Palmerston, Cavour and Napoleon III, He wants to thwart them and unleash outdated movements. Republican and local officials. He uses his weapon Iiabi- The assassination. Duke Charles III of Parma falls under from Milan which he orders; the same year, as we have just seen see, he seeks to provoke an uprising in the duchies which aborted. Attacking the Piémontais government, a band of Mazzinians attempted to seize Genoa on June 29, 1857. Everywhere Mazzini fails: new forces hold him back its former power. He understands well that the obstacle is Napoleon III, and he seeks to overthrow him through conspiracies which were expected to be preceded by assassination. Numerous attempts succeeded one another without interruption since July 1852. than to Orsini's bombs (January 1858) which brought this phase to a close of Mazzini's actions. The imperial government sought as much as possible to hide from the public these attempts which revealed the fragility of its establishment (2).

Here are the forces that Mazzini had at his disposal. In London, there were two action committees; one, the Central Committee European policy, directed immediately by him; the other, called the A revolutionary commune, led by Félix Pyat. another committee existed in Jersey, a fourth in Brussels, a fifth in Geneva, where Eugène Sue had taken refuge. These committees. These groups remained in contact with various secret societies, which had continued to exist in France, the most important state the Lifjue of the South-East, which Alphonse Gent had organized in 1849, and which, from Marseille to Chalon, branched out throughout the valley of the

(1) Moncacci, Memorie documentale, (t. I, p. 156,

(?) The list, which is quite long, can be seen in L'Histoire intime du second Empire*,] by the Viscount of Coumont-Vassy (t. 12, Paris, Sartorius, 1874), and in Borne and the Second Empire, studies and recollections, by Clément Coste, in 8vo, Paris, Dentu, 1879,

L4 MAZZINI'S POLICY 181

Saône and Rhône (1). In April 1857, regarding a plot that the imperial police had leaked, the Parisian correspondent of Daily-News gave him this information about the organization of the Secret societies of France:

It seems that the High Sale, to speak the language of the Garbonari, is led by some of the principal exiles who took refuge in England land. Between them and the directors of these companies inside, there is There were some disagreements. They were willing to accept the cooperation. of the first order, but do not want to submit to their law at all costs. In France, Secret societies are now reduced almost exclusively to... lower-class people, who are impatient and jealous of the kind of suzerainty The privilege to which exiles lay claim as a result of their education and their social position, "We know what we can expect from the me- "Nurses in frock coats," they say, "we want to see them at work and we..."

have been introduced into the organization of these companies. They are no longer divided into decuries and centuries. Each member can no longer have now only having relations with three others. In imitation of the so-secret societies of the Restoration, each occupying the peaks of a triangular an imaginary triangle, whose sides are in contact with another triangle, and This is how they spread gradually throughout the departments.

The political and commercial language adopted to transmit orders from one place to another by post and telegraph, was completely change. The words goods, traveling salesmen, shares, which signiûaient; arms, emissaries, subscriptions, were perfectly known from the police. They were replaced by other expressions. Today the communications are conducted as much as possible through affiliates, who belong to the company known as the Tour de France office. It is known that Many workers make the journey from the departments to each year. the goal of perfecting their craft. Those who are affiliated and who enjoy great confidence and are employed to deliver the Instructions to the committees. When orders are urgent, emissaries They are sent by rail and their expenses are paid. From this In this way, it is much more difficult for the police to discover them.

(1) In 1850, a large meeting of the leaders of the Southeastern League had taken place in Meknes, at a fair. Note that these same revolutionary elements have reappearing in 1870 under the name of the Virli League, and in 1882, they still formed the main core of anarchists. Note also at all these times the important role wearing by Félix Pyat.

(2) The split already indicated between the bourgeois Jacobin elements and the party The worker has been gaining ground ever since. The election of Bellevillo in 1869 was the development of the situation which began to emerge in 1837.

182 THE ITALIAN REVOLUTION (1830-1870)

new company, which was recently acquired, is probably clearly a branch of the larger association.

Mazzini never stopped trying to have Napoleon III assassinated. that after Orsini's failure. He tacitly accepted the commitments exchanged between the purged carbonaro and the son of the one who had formerly received in the Sales. (See Book II, Chapter X, § 4.)

In that same year, 1858, he was preparing from London, where he had formed a universal revolutionary committee, which included Garibaldi, Herzen, Bakunin, Kossuth, Türr and Klapka, a a general insurrection that would have broken out simultaneously in Hungary and Poland logne, in the Danubian provinces, and which would have resulted in the Universal democratic republic. On May 23, 1858, it was to issue a proclamation to that effect to the Poles by the committee of the Revolutionary Alliance founded in London in 1832, and which the infamy that Napoleon III attributed to himself. When the Italian War It erupted, and Mazzini thought he was seeing his plans come to fruition. In May 1859 he wrote to the Poles:

If the Polish uprising is general, national, and begins in a striking way, it will have fruitful consequences. The insurrection will inevitably erupt in Hungary. That insurrection and that of Italy will draw in Turkey and other countries. Poland must be assured of this: no one will intervene. If, therefore, Poland does not doesn't yet feel strong enough to get up, relying on the success, of supporting the insurrection for at least a month against the troops Russian women, she must wait and remain quiet until the The movement from Italy has spread to Hungary. Then it will be the This is the moment for Poland, and it will have to break out at all costs. wants to locate the war in Italy, and make it a battle between the princes these; but it will become a revolutionary war. We will expand the field of war, and the peoples will appear on stage in brotherhood* If Poland were to rise up prematurely and with significant means— If sufficient, it would undoubtedly arouse strong sympathies, but it could easily be crushed, because we are too far away to see him assured of powerful aid. Until the crisis you must ha—

(1) This document is published in, as are those we cite in lo$, in a work written based on the papers of General Ilorg, commander-in-chief Russian troops in Poland, and which contains several secret documents seized from the insurgents. It is entitled Die polnischen Aufstoende $eu i830 in ihrem Zusammenhang mit den lernationalen Umsturzbestrebungen von major Knorr (Berün, 1880, in-S*).

MaZZINI'S POLICY 183

They will work diligently to strengthen and unite national forces. Galicio is an important point on which we must primarily work to work. The conditions for success are: national movement, — adjournment until the day we are strong enough to be self-sufficient. border issues that could raise sensitivities Germany — reciprocal concessions internally and organization of the people, so that the movement does not divide itself — demonstrations public expressions of sympathy for other peoples. Moreover, the Po— The people of SC have to face all the promises and all the temptations. coming from Napoleon's side. They would inevitably be betrayed by him.

At the same time, Mazzini sent his emissaries to Poland and in Hungary. Orsini bombs were sent to various locations. Napoleon III was perfectly aware of his schemes and of has relations of Polish emigration with the party of the European revolution. Not daring to break completely with her, and yet wanting to get rid of her, he imagined doing and to intern them in departments under the supervision of prefects. The Count of Morny was pushing him towards this measure, which was fought by Prince Napoleon (1).

We have seen (S 7) how Mazzini flattered himself wrongly or to reason, four years later, to see Palmerston inaugurate the revolutionary war in Central Europe. Seeing him re-
When Napoleon III came to the ministry in 1859, did he fear that Mazzini did not take the lead of the movement and that an insurrection general in Hungary and Poland did not have a scope exceeding Was Kossuth's diversion much what he hoped for? We can see that assume.

What is certain is that Mazzini and the revolutionaries Italians continued to prepare an insurrection in Hungary and in Poland, even after the Peace of Villafranca. In October 1860, Garibaldi appointed Mieroslawski, an old conspirator from 1848, senior commander of a Polish foreign legion, and Genoa, in the early months of 1861, became the center of preparations for this expedition (2).

We will see in one of the next ones how Mazzini was about to carry out this project with the support of Victor-Em-

(1) Die pöthchen künftigen von Knorr, pp. 94*95.

(2) Ibid., pp. 109*110.

184 THE ITALIAN REVOLUTION (1830-1870)

manual. But let's return to the events that occurred in the Italian Peninsula.

S 9. – The annexation of central Italy and the Two* Sigiles.

Cavour was not discouraged by the preliminaries of Villafranca. Palmerston supports him with his advice and his courage. He can stand up to Napoleon III.

Let's listen again to Kossuth's stories:

The preliminary agreements for Villafranca were signed. Officially, he It was necessary to submit to it. Minister Cavour ordered Mr. Farini to leave Modena. But Cavour, the revolutionary patriot, summoned to his home, in his own palace, at daybreak, the republican Louis Frappoli(1), and approached him with these words: – Do you want to help save Italy? lie? – Yes, was the reply. – Well then! Meet me at once at there. But if he had by chance obeyed the order that we were forced to give to give it to him, and if he had left Modena, take it upon yourself to For defense, make a weapon out of every piece of concrete, throw these Ita- into the Po unworthy ties that are ruining their homeland.

A few hours later, Mr. Malmusi, president of the assembly of Modena was knocking at his door. He was asking for weapons. Cavour kissed him On several occasions: – "Good people, whom you take away," he said, "I am not "No longer Minister of War; but we're going to try something." He he drew a few lines on a sheet of paper and said to Malmusi:

– "Take this to the armory; if they give you weapons with this, "Take them quickly to Modena." They gave him the weapons and he took them.

Farini received a dismissal order; he responded to it by telegram. phique: "The royal commissioner obeys; but the citizen becomes sur- "Soldier field with the people." (Dispatch from Farini of Modena, July 16) (Letter 1859.)

Moreover, without soldiers, a day's walk from the enemy, in Surrounded by a discouraged crowd, he appeared on the balcony of the princely palace. and presented himself as a dictator to the inhabitants of Modena, saying to them:

– "Forward with the Star of Italy. Italy did not sign the peace of Villafranca!

Cavour wrote to him on July 17: "The minister is dead; the good "My friend applauds your firm decision."

The dictator Farini appointed Frappoli as Minister of War. This is

(1) This is CO Louis Frappoli, who later became Grand Master of Freemasonry çonnorio italionno et dont la dostiuéo fut si étrange (liv. II, chap. X, % 7).

ANNEXATION OF CENTRAL ITALY AND THE TWO SICILIES 185

and thus the army of Modena was formed, in which our Hungarians took up service (1).

Cavour's departure from the ministry had been nothing but a false start. tie. A few months later he had odiously resumed the management affairs he had never truly left behind. Napoleon III, For his part, shortly after the Villafranca preliminaries, received the presumptive heir to Tuscany, the archduke, very poorly Ferdinand, and approved the methods employed by the government Victor Emmanuel's plan for the annexation of the duchies and the Tuscany (2). Lord Palmerston, said M[^]'Rattazi, assured Victor- "Emmanuel of England's friendship and urged him not to "to be concerned about the official protests from French diplomacy"

So we could dare more, and that's when the expedition
The Sicilian mystery was resolved. Every day documents are published which attest to the complicity of Cavour and Victor Emmanuel in this shameless banditry.

Here is, among other things, what we read in the correspondence from Rome, from the Journal des Débats of March 23, 1882, under the si-nature of Mr. de Montferrier:

La Gazette d'Halia tells about the death of Mr. Bombrini a rather curious historical detail. In 1860, Mr. de Cavour protected and organized Garibaldi's expedition to Sicily, while appearing to be there to oppose for diplomatic reasons. He was only embarrassed because the money, which could not be secretly taken from any chapter of the budget. He addressed it to Mr. Bombrini, Governor of the Bank, and this one* provided the funds against a bond signed by Mr. de Cavour, undertaking not only as head of government, but as a person private.

The story is very true, and I've known about it for a long time. I I hadn't thought it necessary to recount it, but the Gazette having taken the initiative tive, I no longer see any reason not to talk about it as well. Only I think the Gazette is mistaken about the figure; it mentions 500,000 francs.
Half a million. The sum was much higher.

The transaction must have been rectified since then, but I don't know how.
It was.

(1) Memories and writings of my exile, p. 338.

(2) Hattazi and his time, pp. 434, 435.

(3) Ibid, p. 435.

186

THE ITALIAN REVOLUTION (1830-1870)

Other documents, published by Fanfulla in 1881, show the personal part taken by Victor-Emmanuel in the experiment.

It is a letter dated April 16th of this year and signed:
William de Rohan, American commodore. The said commodore recalls that in June 1860, he was driving in Sicily, on three steamers, the second expedition of 3,400 volunteers. Dj return to Genoa, unable to embark on the third expedition, was stopped by an observation by the revolutionary doctor Bertani, who represented your ship, on which the troops were to embark. On what?

The American commodore, vested with full powers, left by train express train to Turin, where he saw the king and explained the situation to him. Vic Tor-Emmanuel said he needed to see Mr. de Cavour, but that he would soon return the favor. Indeed, an hour later, An aide-de-camp brought the letter to the American commodore.
"Textual" as follows:

Commander, I am returning to you herewith the two letters from Medici, which you will put in other envelopes and deliver to Cavour. I have Already given three million to Bertani. Return immediately to Pa*
a term to tell Garibaldi that I will send him Vaïerio in place of La Farina; and that he should advance immediately on Messina, Francesco (the king of Naples) being on the verge of giving a constitution to the Napo-litains.

Your friend,
June 27, 1800.

VicToa- Emmanuel (1).

Any further comment would be superfluous. But it is necessary to point out specifically this feature of the "Make it quick," the watchword given to Garibaldi by Victor Emmanuel, at the time when he supposed that Francis II, granting a Constitution could thwart the maneuvers revolutionaries with whom he had long been surrounded.

Lord Palmerston was privy to the details of Gari's expedition.
Baldi and he gave him decisive support on two occasions.

On May 1st, said Mr. Rattazi, Garibaldi learned that from the small port of Two Neapolitan frigates had departed from Marsala the previous day, And since two English ships had just arrived there, Garibaldi hastened the jmarshc from Piedmont and entered that same day in that port. The Lombardo

(1) Reproduced by VUnipers on April 22, 1881.

ANNEXATION OF CENTRAL ITALY AND THE TWO SICILIES 187

had remained behind; the frigates arrived and began to cannon-nei the little Lombardo. Bixio read him to force the pass, where he failed and blocked the harbor entrance. The Stromboli wanted to seize it. The Argus, a ship English, ordered the Neapolitans to cease fire as long as the

They complied with the injunction. The Thousand asked to be disembarked. Two hours afterwards, they were all on Sicilian soil. Only then did the An-
The Glas withdrew. The Capri and the Stromboli advanced, firing on the volunteers; they captured the already empty Piedmont, and moved away rent (1).

A few months later, the King of Naples valiantly defended lies to Gaeta about the true nationality of his people. Engaged by of old promises, Emperor Napoleon left the French fleet
It would protect the city from the sea.

Victor Emmanuel complained to the emperor about the almost aggressive of Admiral Lebarbier de Tinan. Napoleon retracted his statements instructions and gave new ones, perhaps after the observations of the English cabinet. To justify his conduct, he later claimed that he had tacitly established himself as a mediator between the two kings, in order to... force them to reach an agreement and deal directly. The truth is that Pal-Merston, having suspected the emperor of intending to create difficulties difficulties between France and Italy led him to understand that the English squadron might well leave Malta to go and anchor off Gaeta, next of the Italian squadron (2).

Also, when Garibalùì was received in England in 1864, he could-
He will publicly utter these words, which history must record.
ter: "In 1860, without England's help, it would have been impossible "to accomplish what we did in the Two Sicilies, and "Naples would still be under Bourbon rule without the help of "Palmerston, and, without Admiral Mondy, I would never have been able to pass
"The Strait of Messina (3)!"

There can be no doubt about the loyal sympathy that the emperor Ale.\andre II testified to Francis II, but one is astonished in

(1) Rattazi and your tempt, p. 473.

(2) Ibid., p. 533.

(3) Reply to the address of the Mayor of Southampton on April 4, 1864 and speech to Crystal Palace on the 16th of the month, cited in the Meinorie documented by the ttoria délia rivoluzione ilaliana (t. 1, p. 131), and Merimée, Leltret à Pannxfi, 1.1|,
p. 23.

188 THE ITALIAN REVOLUTION (1830-1870)

reading the diplomatic keys of his representatives. Slackelbcrg, the Russian ambassador to Turin, wrote to Prince Gorts-chakofT, May 13, 1800: "The king spoke to me frankly: it's^ he who prevented any revolutionary movement from breaking out in Sicily; it was he who gave the order to Cialdini* who commanded of the Marches, unless the king of Naples intervenes. That is Victor Emmanuel, who advised the King of Naples to reach an agreement with him; but his advice has not been heeded, and that's why What, the Grand Duke of Tuscany lost his states and the Pope? Kornages; and that he hardly cares about his excommunication. Gortschakoff, for his part, said to Ugo, the king's minister, "Naples In St. Petersburg: "The King of Sardinia spoke to me like a man loyal, and I believe your king would do well to come to an agreement with him (1). »

It's fair to say: who were they deceiving, the King of Naples or Emperor Alexander?

We inevitably remember the role played by the Russian diplomats in 1821, in the Italian Hautes-Ventes and stigmatized by Mr. de Metternich (see above book III, chap. IV, § 1), and we have recalled close to the bitter words spoken by the unfortunate Alexander II to his chancellor after the government refused to extradite Hartmann French government (book II, chapter XIV, 7).

The legend of the Thousand is over. Instead, sell off what you have left. said an Italian who published interesting works under the name Flaminio studies on the foundation of the Italian unit in the Deutsche Rundschau à"" October 1882:

Italy has nothing to gain from this legend. It shouldn't that people abroad believe that Italian unity needed to... to achieve an intellectual nullity like Garibaldi. Those in the know understand. although the entire Sicilian revolution was carried out by Garibaldi, whose Military emissaries, dressed as peddlers, roamed the island and bought The most influential people were paid exorbitant prices. The general, who counted He who commanded the fleet and the army before Palermo was corrupted. He who The order placed in Naples received two million for its part. The shipment of Garibaldi with those famous Mille, whose poor equipment was not incapable of serious commitment, he was nothing more than a grotesque comedy that was performed before Europe to relieve the res-

(1) Quoted in Rallazzi and his time (p. 438).

Victor-Emmanuel and Mazzini (1863-1870) 189

the responsibility of the Piedmontese government. Garibaldi himself had lost all courage at the Volturne bay and was found by Nino Bixio is hidden in a tomb. Today, he tells him, it is necessary To conquer or die. The arrival of the Piedmontese Bersaglieri saved him and... gna the battle.

Freemasonry played a role at least equal to that of gold in these shameful betrayals. Liborio Romano, this rare_ leaders of Neapolitan Freemasonry, and he died in 1808 presiding over the death of the Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Naples. The organ of the Freemasons, the Italian people, in announcing his death, said: "His actions, his popularity, the persecutions he suffered prove how much he was loved." "He was estimable both as a mason and as a citizen (1)." That is as well as Freemasonry understands honor and probity.

S 10. – The relations of Victor Emmanuel and Mazzini. – 1863–1870.

We are dealing here with a first-rate publication in the order. Mr. Diamilla Muller, who has been for many years the designated intermediary between Mazzini and Victor Emmanuel and by times also between these characters and Napoleon III, published in 1880, in Turin, an account of their relationship, based on their letters very original, under this title: Politica segreta italiana (2). Its revelations received widespread publicity and did not receive a single denial; they therefore now take their place in history. and will show even the most skeptical how important the action of Secret societies have played a role in contemporary events.

The figure of Diamilla Muller is particularly interesting. health. He is a distinguished engineer and scholar whose studies they establish close ties with Father Secchi; he is a man of the world and a businessman. He holds no official position, No one seems more detached from politics, and yet he is at hand during the biggest events. At all hours the cabinets of the offices of ministers and sovereigns are open to him; at one point Given the circumstances, the day after September 20, 1870, he led a negotiation to establish a modus vivendi between the papacy and the Italian government and prevent the departure of the S-Father. A great

(1) CU6 by Le Monde maçonnique of September 1867.

(2) In-Si*, Torino, Roux e Favale, 1880.

100 THE ITALIAN REVOLUTION (1830–1870)

In his case, education and lofty views were combined with passions. of the sectarian.

He is reminiscent of Henri Misley, who, in 1829, appeared in Paris to deal solely with the sale of nitrates and wheat from the country of Modena, who later worked on the construction of the roads of iron in Italy and Spain, and which, completely unknown to the public, contributed to bringing out the most hidden mechanisms of politics European. These are the men who represent the power of the secret societies.

physiognomy in his novel (['Enilijmmi;

The most powerful men are not in public life;
It is private life that governs the world.

But surely King Luitprand, who is called the Wise par excellence Is this a powerful monarch? And Emperor Harold, who succeeded in Everything? And as for the ministers, who will be great and strong if not Wen-Ceslas? – King Luitprand is governed by his physician, who would be capable of governing Europe, but lacking ambition. The emperor Father Harold is under the influence of his mistress, the wife of a certain age and great sagacity, but who nevertheless believes in magic.
As for Prince Wenceslas, he is inspired by an equally obscure individual.
that we and who, as far as I know, can be busy, like us at the moment, drinking a cup of coffee in a private room(1).

It was 1863. The Italian revolution was unhappy.
of Napoleon III, who, despite his promises, had left the Fifth netie under Austrian rule and which continued to occupy Rome, as much to maintain a guarantee against the Italians as to to obey the pressure of Catholic opinion in France. After the death of Cavour, Ricasoli, Rattazzi, Farini, Minghetti, had succeeded to the ministry without being able to control the situation. Gari-Baldi, intoxicated by his popularity, no longer accepted the leadership of the government as in 1859. By the publicity it gave to his armaments, he had forced him to dissolve his first time bands to Sarnico, then to strike him himself in the scaffolding d'Aspromonte. Irritated by this action, all the violent elements
The revolution was fermenting dangerously. In these circumstances Victor Emmanuel judged that they should be diverted onto Austria: a direct expedition against Venetia had little

(1) Endtjmion^ (omol, cliap. XXXVIII, London, 1880.

Victor-Emmanuel and Mazzini (1863–1870) 191

chances of success and would have forced the Italian government to to immediately enter the scene; but Poland was in arms, the Servia and Romania were in turmoil; Austria could be created complications in the East, rising up in Hungary. These insurrections-
They would have the tacit approval of Prussia, that much was known.
No doubt; they were preparing a movement in Veneto.
To carry out this plan, the king took a bold initiative, that of... to dress directly for Mazzini. Mazzini had once offered his competition at Charles-Albert. Later, he had turned violently lies against him. Until 1859, he had not believed that the dynasty Piedmontese pi)t to achieve Italian unity. But after Villafranca his the point of view had changed. Moreover, the abrupt stop of the manual; also, talks had been exchanged from that time.

Shortly after the Peace of Villafranca, says Kossuth, some prominent members of the Republican party addressed figures very influential members of the monarchist party to encourage them to concentrate all their efforts aimed at achieving a unified revolution in Sicily.

At that time, these talks, while not abandoned, remained in Suspense. They were resumed in March 1860. Then Mazzini, approving the negotiations, wrote the following on March 2nd: a It is not a question "It is not currently known whether Italy will be a republic or a monarchy-" "That, but whether it will or will not happen. If Italy wants to become a monarchy "Under the Savoy dynasty, let it be done! If, after the emancipation-" "The nation wants to call the king or Cavour the liberator." "Or whatever, let her do it. What we all want" "Now, it's about Italy doing its thing (1)."

At that time, Mazzini still had quite a few plot points at his disposal. considerable. From London, where he usually resided, he directed he had assembled a general staff of cosmopolitan revolutionaries that he could throw ourselves at some point in Europe and that we will soon to appear in this story. "He had," said Mr. DiamilJa Mul- "First, a wonderful talent for drawing contributions in ar- "gen of the enthusiasm and faith of its elders and its "New followers, mainly from the early days."

Mazzini had founded the first companies in Italy in 1848.

(1) Biancibi, Storta doeumenlala della diplomazia europea in llalia da iSii a é86i, tome VIII, p. 285, cited by Kossuth, Souvenirs et écrits de mon exti^ pp. 55-57.

192 THE ITALIAN REVOLUTION (1830-1870)

vrilhrs. In 1803, 153 were completed, with a clTeclif of 111,008 members and their number was growing day by day (1).

These societies were especially widespread in the South and in the Lombardy; they did not consist solely of workers, as their name might suggest; they also received the students, the marginalized of all kinds. In each group there are had a core of loyal followers; all displayed absolute obedience session at the higher committee, and that committee was Maazini. One will soon see the new influences that prevailed in this movement (S 12.)

Mazzini possessed a political acumen far superior to Garibaldi's, and he understood, like Victor Emmanuel, from a revolutionary point of view the definitive expulsion of Austria from Italian territory was to to happen before the invasion of Rome. The intermediaries of these but above all Mr. Diamilla Muller, a friend of fifteen years for Mazzini, in whom he had complete confidence and who was in London in February 1863, to buy rifles for the governor of the Italian nement. He simultaneously purchased weapons for Mazzini, and the two expeditions were undertaken together.

To follow these negotiations more closely, Mazzini, in the month of April, moved to Lugano; Diamilla Muller, in Turin, communicated with Victor Emmanuel through the lawyer Pastore, who was not an official figure, but had the king's complete trust, handling his private affairs, the most intimate affairs; then by that of the Count of Savoiron, aide-de-camp to the king.

These negotiations continued for eighteen months; Mr. Diamilla Muller's book recounts all the events and... produced a large number of letters from Mazzini, Pastore, etc. questions from the king himself.

However, they were unsuccessful because neither party had not complete trust in each other. Victor-Emmanuel wanted Mazzini to create a diversion using only his own resources by Romania, Serbia, and Hungary; but what about the moment? There was no uprising in Venetia. Mazzini suspected...

the king's desire to remove the merciful revolutionaries from Italy the most active; he feared that Venetia would be sacrificed

(1) Lavolloy Contemporary socialism, Paris, 1880, p. 345 et seq.

Victor-Emmanuel and Mazzini (1863-1870) 193

and that the general war not be indefinitely postponed. 11 demanded therefore, that at the same time as the war was waged on the Danube and in Hungary, an insurrection was provoked in the upper Veneto and that the Italian government stood ready to support it by force of arms.

Prussia and Austria were then engaged in the question of the duchies. The general conflagration, the revolutionary war of the European [revolution] that the great agitator wanted would thus have erupted in 1859. Mazzini, on the other hand, made a commitment to Victor-Emmanuel, to temporarily renounce all republican propaganda for the time being.

Here is a letter written from Lugano in April 1863, in which he specified its position with great clarity (1):

Dear Muller, thank you for the information... To obtain the au-very, it is advisable to remain on good terms with little Talleyrand (2).

During your conversations, you must tell him that if the king, instead to conspire in Serbia with Prince Michael, conspired with the leaders of the Serbian National Party, he would be assured of their immediate support; that, Moreover, the king of a people of twenty-two million souls cannot... to require that the initiative originate from a country of two million and half of the inhabitants; that Italy must begin, attack first, at condition of being followed immediately; that undoubtedly the king cannot to take the initiative, and let no one claim that he is doing so, but that,
If he were sincere, he would let us act, keeping himself ready to follow.
vre and then authorized to do so by the initiative taken in Veneto and by the fermentation that would occur throughout Italy. It should be added that, Made incredulous by long experience, I do not wish to stipulate agreed with the crown, but that the agreement would result from the very fact that we would be given complete freedom to act and that no one would take measures against us. Regarding the political question, per Sonne cannot believe me stupid enough to want to proclaim the republic at the foot of the Alps. If I were to formulate a slogan, I who I am determined not to make any commitments for the future; I will not give any. other than that of: "Long live the unity of Italy!" But the king knows very well although for the moment, because of the army's needs, all

(1) We are examining that tradantion, as well as that of some other pieces, A
The work of A. Auguste Bouillier, which appeared in the Correspondance of the 10th and 25th October 1881: that's the only thing we owed to that study, which can't be said consider using Diamilla Muller's work.

(i) This is the name given among them to the lawyer Paslore.

III

13

194 THE ITALIAN EVOLUTION (1830-1870)

The municipalities would necessarily add: "Long live Victor Emmanuel!"
It would have been enough for me not to do it.

P.S. - When you talk to little Talleyrand, let him believe that, naturally, the measures taken by the government have made me to renounce any attempt on Venetia, but that it is a bad tactics for him. Because all the activity I would deploy outside against Austria, I will inevitably bring it back inside and spend it agitated against him.

conditions of its action; after having renewed its assurances of "Not to raise the republican flag," he added:

There are two essential points I haven't mentioned, because... Anyone who knows us can guess them. The first is that we We oppose, in any case, we declare frankly, any intervention France's role in our war, as well as in any intervention The first was Italy's intervention on the Rhine. The second was Garibaldi's action. Garibaldi is the soul of any volunteer expedition. No one may doubt his adherence to the statement I made at the beginning of this letter. But I am convinced that, both because of what has happened in the past, that to avoid divisions among the volunteers, he The general's actions would have to be completely independent and free.

A note was attached to this letter, which was intended to be circulated. confidential document in which we read the following:

I need to remain free for the future. We may have a day together. to enter into conflict over Rome, and a formal agreement concluded beforehand It would bother me. If you have my letters read to the king,

Observe the impression they will produce, especially my statement relating to France's intervention in Italy, and Italy's intervention in the Rhine.

In another confidential note dated January 25, 1864, Mazzini he adds. 'You must make this dilemma clear: or Venice, or Republican Propaganda," and he bore witness to his contempt for Pastore "who, he said, didn't have the slightest bit of "Moral energy and depended on a promise from Louis-Napoleon."

At a certain point, Mazzini's sensitivities having increased Having been informed, the king summoned Diamilla-Muller to him, and him delivered the following letter, signed and dated Turin, February 28 1864:

Pastore conveyed my words in a completely inaccurate way.

Victor Emmanuel and Mazzini (1863-1870) 195

I never said that I had caused or made an agreement with the per sonne (Mazzini), nor that this person had reached an agreement with me. I have he only said that I had been kind to her in various circumstances constants that she herself may not be aware of, and that I had left her quite peaceful in Naples, while on the contrary, in his writings, so much In both public and private matters, she has been ungrateful to me. I said that it was unacceptable for the action party to take the initiative in the events that are bound to happen, and that if he tried it, he would be re-

I am now saying that if he formally renounces doing so,
I am willing to agree to the terms requested, but with full responsibility. for myself alone and my government, as soon as there is a shadow of possibility, the glorious mandate to undertake, with all the forces long live the nation, the completion of our homeland.

I have the same drive, the same desire to act as the person I have spoken; I judge things by myself, with the most manly energy and not with the timid impressions of others.

But the person must convince themselves that the circumstances are serious.
that they must be weighed with a calm mind as well as with a fair heart tooth; that if I want, that if we all want to carry out, the plqs
As soon as possible, the great work of unification, woe to us all, in the event that we prove inadequate to the task, and where, giving in to an impetuous and untimely frenzy, we would only lead to plunging our country back into its former situation.

The time is not yet right. Soon, I hope. God is coming.
dra in aid to our country.

VE

Things had reached this point when Garibaldi left... blow for England. Victor Emmanuel feared, said Diamilla-Muller, that Mazzini and Condottiere did not combine, with the secret complicity of the English government, an action which precipitated events against his will. He resorted to Diamilla-Mulier and he asked to go to London. There, the Negotiations continued, with Diamilla-Muller corresponding with Count Verani de Castiglione, head of the king's cabinet (1).
On May 2, 1864, the king sent this handwritten note to Mazzini:

(1) Mr. Diamilla-Mulier provides curious details about Garibaldi's journey England. Lord Palmerston, like Victor Emmanuel and Napoleon III, did not see
The competition among revolutionaries surrounding the Condottiere was not viewed favorably and feared expeditions that could have thwarted his plans. (At the law link) prohibiting access to the territory, which would have provoked the anger of the English people

196

THE ITALIAN REVOLUTION (1830-1870)

The statement that the party was manipulated cannot be accepted.
action, whereas on the contrary, he has always been made to understand a in a clear and precise way that we would vigorously oppose and by all means a takeover aimed at initiating an attack against the Venetian provinces.

Any attempt of this kind, under such conditions, would therefore be senseless, it would lead to nothing and would have unfortunate consequences which the promoters could only deplore.

Poland, in the various phases of its uprisings, lacked of expansionary force, and this is the main cause of its ruin. Could it, like the phoenix, rise from its ashes, if the uprising spread to Galicia, the principalities, and Hungary. where the land would be easy to cultivate, provided that men could be found my energetic and audacious ones who would serve as hyphens.

If the Galician movement were to spread to the aforementioned countries and pre- This gives rise to the proportions of a spontaneous popular uprising, capable of to create great embarrassment for Austria, then it would be necessary, before everything, from supporting this insurrection with a small troop of Italians decided to entice the hero, to surround him with a brilliant world, to accost him bler de fêtes of official. The members of the aristocracy lent themselves marvelously to this conspiracy; the Duke of Sutherland would have accepted his hospitality; Then, when popular enthusiasm was somewhat satisfied, the duke made declared by Doctor Fergusson that the hero's health required his immediate departure diat. The day before, at a banquet, he had fraternized with Mazzini and Herzen. What A few days later, he was sent back to Italy amidst enthusiastic ovations. after receiving a visit from the Prince of Wales, but without being able to see his friend the revolutionaries. Questioned in the House of Commons about these maneuvers, whose secret had leaked, Lord Palmerston declared that the French government had not intervened in any way in this hasty departure. But Mr. Diamilla Muller leaves perfectly understand that Victor Emmanuel greatly feared for him the personal relationships that developed between Garibaldi and the leaders of the revolution European, and feared that they might take an initiative on the Venetian side which he would have been obliged to oppose. The Duke of Sutherland, against whom he had ac Palmerston, fortunately came to his aid. There was even more: Gari Baldi had expressed the intention of going to Paris and returning to Italy via the North.

He was the victim of another hoax, proof of which can be found in the tele- the following gram addressed on April 19 by Count Albert Maifei, secretary of the legislat tion, in London, to Count Verani de Gastiglioue In Turin:

Regarding Garibaldi's departure, he informed the king that the Duke of Sutherland, at < place to bring him back to Caprora, will keep him on board his ship for the entire "The time he will be traveling in the East. He will remain on the journey for two months. On this journey, he will probably stop at some port in southern Italy. There, the duke This will prevent Garibaldi from going down or undertaking any operations. Telegraph me if "Suitable for the king."

But Mazzini immediately learned of the telegram and informed Garibaldi at Gi- Braltar was aware of the plots being hatched against his freedom. He then had himself take he went to Caprora, from where shortly afterwards he went to Naples and Ischia.

Victor Emmanuel and Mazzini (1863–1870) 197

determined, and, having thus grouped the various elements hostile to the enemy, we could achieve the realization of our common desire.

VE

Mr. Diamilla Muller, by forwarding to Mazzini the copy of this
The king's note added:

Regarding Galicia, the king is ready to support the movement ly, provided you approve his proposals. The opposition that meeting your projects related to Veneto would cease as a result of your membership, provided that your preparations aim not an initiative to be taken, but simply cooperation on projects royals. On this point, we defer to you and your word. But The attitude of some of your friends inspires distrust... If you
If you succeeded in organizing the insurrection in Galicia, you could count on –
You are free to verify this yourself – on a body of maintained volunteers at the king's expense.

The leaders of the European Revolution were then gathered News in London: the persistence of the Polish uprising gave hope. General Klapka, in concert with the General Turr submitted to Garibaldi a plan for an uprising in Hungary. But Mazzini preferred to employ someone named Frygezi, who had, it seemed, supplanted Klapka and Turr in the confidence of the Hungarian refugees. Meanwhile, a certain General Bulewski was preparing an insurrection in Galicia. Mazzini having been unable to obtain the action in Veneto, finding itself abandoned on this point, even by her agent Diamilla Muller, perhaps discouraged by others influences, seemed momentarily to adhere to the king's plan and read|
Bulewski was sent to Turin.

There, King Victor Emmanuel had the note delivered to the latter
The following is written in French:

Mr. Bulewski will have to report to the Minister within two days
Peruzzi, who will help him within certain limits when his men leave.
8a Her Majesty approves Mr. Bulewski's departure. A movement in the Tyrol and Venetia will be repressed; but there is a promise that nothing will will begin without a directive. Mr. Bu's project initiative Lewski belongs to Her Majesty, who has been looking after it for two years, while that Mazzini recently issued.

We can see how much Victor Emmanuel was keen to claim for him and therefore the direction of this diversion revolutionary. This was, in essence, the plan outlined by Bu-Lewski in several notes:

Protesting against the Austrian alliance that the national government* Polish national adopted and viewed the Galician uprising as the only way to salvation for Poland,...< the revolutionary center The Polish people made direct contact with Italy and Hungary,... its natural allies, against Austria^ In Italy, the Polo Gentleman nais addressed both opposing parties, regarding their means of action, but which he considers both as requiring us to to him. He proposed to General Garibaldi that he accept the mandate of moral leader of the insurrection in Venetia, Poland and Hungary; And, knowing the prestige of his name, he asked him for his son, the Colonel Menotti, to command an Italian legion in Galicia. The general accepted the mandate and promised his son. On the other hand, having Colonel Horyslawski learned that influential people consented were seriously supporting the insurrectionary movement in Galicia, the Polish Center had organized in Italy, by the said colonel) some Italian, Hungarian and Polish executives.

In Hungary, the Polish Centre had made contact with the party action in this country, under the direction of Colonel Frygezi, but at the condition that we will have nothing to do with Kossuth and the Klapka generals and Turr (1).

Finally, in Serbia, we made direct contact with the National publication: through the intervention of Colonel Zega, we are masters of a corps of three thousand men. The officers, all ready to leave and to which we have been paying wages for a month and a half, consist of of three hundred and sixty men, who are to disembark, as workers railways, to Sulina, to Galatz, to Ibraila, where we have already four of our civil and military commissioners to receive the colonnes^

In Moldova, under the command of Colonel Frygesi, we We have a Hungarian column ready to go into action. In Serbia, There is a corps of three thousand fully armed men; Colonel Zega is the head of this corps, composed of Serbs and Montenegrins. Our agents in Galicia prepared the elements of an uprising in the small towns general knowledge, and they are all ready to join our men in the mountains to organize militarily. But to be able to com To begin these movements, we need weapons and funds.

(1) Klapka et Turr étaient absolument dans la main du prince Napoléon et de Napoléon III. il en était à peu près de même de Kossuth. Il faut noter, au passage, toutes les traces^ de cette division des deux couches des Sociétés secrètes.

much more considerable than those we have at our disposal. We

We therefore address ourselves to the king and propose: 1 to send all our officers in Moldova by detachments of thirty men, at a rate of two convoys per week.

2® Ten days after the arrival of the last convoy entering the campaign both in Galicia and Hungary, as soon as our columns appear In the mountains, Galicia and Hungary will rise up in accordance* according to the plan we had organized in advance.

The program of Bulewski, plenipotentiary delegate of the Cen^
The Polish revolutionary character was:

It was, as he himself* said, the Revolution. Everything For the people, everything by the people. No alliance with ideas nor with the men of the past; solidarity with men and princes examples of the future, war drawing its means of action and its forces vital among the masses; Social order reorganized in such a way as to to redress the age-old injustices to which peoples have been and are subjected core condemned.

Garibaldi, in turn, wrote on June 30, 1864:

To the members of the Polish Revolutionary Centre:

The agreement I signed with your government's agents national dedicates the same goal, the same path to follow for the salvation of Poland, which you were the first to proclaim. What you recognize were born as the flag of the principle of nationality, substituted for all A purely local flag, the solidarity of peoples, the simultaneous struggle against any common enemy, is now recognized by your government government.

Therefore work together in complete agreement, and let no division be dis appear before the active and ceaseless work of all.

Your friend, G. Garibaldi.

The Polish national government was unfortunately at this moment fell under the direction of the revolutionary committee European, led by Mazzini. (See Chapter X, Poland and the Soviets) secret societies.) Garibaldi also addressed a letter around the same time.
letter to the youth of Pesth, to encourage them to insurrection (1).

This is the case here, and it's worth noting: this revolutionary war plan
The naire was the same one that Prince Napoleon supported in 1854, and Ribaldi's contribution to the Polish uprising, in the volume entitled: Pdnische Aufstände, i.e. 1830, von Knorr (Berlin, 1880).

200 THE ITALIAN FUTURE (1830-1870)

which Napoleon III had opposed. (See Book II, Chapter X, § 3.) Victor Emmanuel adopted it for his own purposes and, for several months, he directed all the execution details, providing weapons and money. General Turr, a friend of Prince Napoleon Léon, as we have just seen, was also one of his inspiring figures.

On June 9, 1861, Diamilla-Muller wrote to Mazzini:

The king's agent is Sacchi. Other funds have been given. We have been written to the Italian consul in Galatz to pay 1,000 pounds to Fryges. Bulewski leaves for Caprera. We promised that if Ménotti starts on the road, he will be provided with the necessary agent. The first column will depart Tuesday of Genoa, Livorno and Ancona (1).

The expedition to the Danubian provinces would have struck at the Austria and Turkey were both involved. Prince Couza was counted on. obscure creature of secret societies, who owed his elevation that at their will and which was to disappear from the scene as soon as he them would have displeased them. Kossuth had approached him to make it happen. to supply, at the beginning of 1863, 23,000 rifles to the insurgents Polish; but, based on observations from France and Russia, he had intercepted them (2)*

Garibaldi was in Ischia, making preparations for his departure for the 0- They laughed. A Wallachian bishop had come to see him, and had spent two days in colloquium with him (3). The king, for his part, was actively pressing the Galician expedition was underway when an unexpected incident occurred disrupt all these projects.

The leaders of the left-wing party in Italy had not been put on the spot. during the negotiations of Victor Emmanuel, Mazzini and Garibaldi; they suspected, in the announced departure of the latter deny, a plot hatched by the monarchy against themselves for the deprive them of their leader and their means of influencing the masses. Desperate to keep him in Italy, they published in the Diritto of July 10th, that protest:

Knowing for certain that some of the members The most important members of the action party are called upon to take part in ex-military and revolutionary expeditions outside Italian territory, and convinced that Italy is in a serious political situation; that a

(2) Knorr, Polnische Aufstoende seit 18.30, p. 148.

(3) PoUtica segreta Italiana^ p. 172.

Victor-Emmanuel and Mazzini (1863-1870) 201

a revolution intended to serve the interests of liberty, cannot find more favorable terrain and a better-disposed population than in Italy; that companies that are too distant and too uncertain, such as those those we are talking about, organized by princes, must necessarily be rather in their own interest than in that of the people; the undersigned they believe it is their duty, to ease their conscience, to declare that the distancing of Italian patriots at this moment can only be futile neste to the interests of the nation.

This publication completely derailed the expedition project. in Galicia: Victor Emmanuel, whose secret plots were thus denounced throughout Europe, had to refuse any further assistance to Bulewski and Frygesi. He took the opportunity to reconcile. with Garibaldi. He sent his aide-de-camp, the general, to Ischia. General Porcelli promised him compensation of all kinds and a An important command in the coming war. Garibaldi, dissatisfied with the men on the left who had thwarted his projects, accepted the advances of royalty and remained loyal to it until than at the end of his life.

In vain Mazzini protested that he was a stranger to the publication unfortunate error in the Diritto note. It was obvious that His long absence from Italy had caused him to lose considerable the erosion of its power and that other influences were directing the advanced men. Victor Emmanuel now felt handsome a freer stroke in relation to him, although in 1867 and 1870, Mazzini could still have exercised a fairly significant share of action (Book II, Chapter X, § 7).

The Galician expedition was therefore completely abandoned. As for the Romanian one, it was too late to stop it. Fry-Gezi and Borzylawski had established their headquarters in Constantinople. military training and traversing the Danubian provinces, when Prince Couza, on whom we had counted (1), but who was the a creature of Napoleon III, probably on the advice of the latter Denial had Frygezi arrested and completely disarmed the insurrection.

The unfortunate Frygezi, released after two months of detention attention, thanks to a letter from Garibaldi to Couza, addressed, the September 6, 1864, to the Polish Central Committee, a request for

(1) Mazzini, who was aware of his relationship with Napoleon III, wrote as early as the 25

(llaliana, p. 109.) On August 12, a revolutionary agent, Kraus Carlo, wrote from Constantinople: "As far as our paedia is concerned, Prince Couza must attend c dre permission from Paris. > {Ibid.j p. 114.)

202 THE ITALIAN REVOLUTION (1830-1870)

rescue, which reveals both the high-level complicity that had committed to this adventure, and the profound contempt with which the leaders of secret societies, whether they call themselves Victor-Emma Nuel or Mazzini, treat their instruments:

"I absolutely did not deserve the treatment I received," he said. Received here from Klapka's agents... I regret that the Consul General at Bucharest, Stumbio, did not want to protect me. By God, I am Italian citizen..... So far, I have not received a passport. Ambassador Greppi is causing difficulties. I am pleased to learn to discuss your relationships and understanding with certain illustrious figures, includir

We can expect money. If they continue at this pace.

The king will be able to count on us more than on his army (I mean by this (which concerns the initiative). As for me, it's the first time I've seen a king conspiring generously with the republicans.

God willing, the prepared combinations will soon come to fruition. Mazzini with the king, Garibaldi with the government, we at the forefront Keep in mind, it's impossible for this agreement not to succeed.

You will allow me a fraternal observation. It would be a very It's useful not to tell everyone who comes here what you do at Turin. The most sacred secrets are known only to men who are privy to them. unworthy (1).

§ 11. – A little more light on the causes of the SECOND ROMAN EXPEDITION, 1866-1868.

In 1866, when Austria was victorious at Custozza and Lissa, personally ceded Venetia to Napoleon III, the one who- this showed signs of wanting to revive the idea of a confederation Italian, and some of its agents were traveling through Veneto, seeking to provoke demonstrations in favor of autonomy mie under the protectorate of France. Grandguillot, from Consti- Honnel, I was preparing a brochure to that effect, which would have had as its Title: France, Italy, and the Venetians. Baron Ricasoli, then president of the council of ministers, took the side of depê- send a secret envoy to Paris to handle the matter confidentially to do, and he chose Mr. Diamilla-Muller. The representative habitu- Mazzini's relationship with Victor-Emmanuel also had

On July 14th he was in Paris and was going to see Grand

(*i) Poitica tegrela üaliana, p. 118.

A LITTLE MORE LIGHT 203

Guillot, who greeted them with these words: You arrive on time. Conferences were immediately established between the envoy of Victor-Emmanuel, General Fleury, Mr. Conti, head of cabinet of the emperor, and Grandguillot.

Two days later, things had completely changed in appearance. Prince Napoleon was then in Le Havre. The emperor Father summons him by telegram. He has barely arrived In Paris, the emperor and the prince had a long conversation. As he left, he said to the emperor in front of Conti: I am ready to make known to the king, my father, such a policy that and Your Majesty's benevolent intentions. Immediate* The prince was leaving for Italy, without even going through the Patent Royal lands, and the cession of Venetia to Italy, without conditions none^ became a new fait accompli. At the same time, Grandguillot had orders to suspend his pamphlet, and some days later, the Constitutionnel published a damning note. observing the change in imperial policy, notes that Mr. Dia-Milla-Muller had previously obtained approval from Baron Rica-soli. In a secret note presented as summarizing his thoughts In response, the emperor requested the Italian ministry to postpone any attack against Rome. "The emperor," it said, "whatever ((be it his power and his secret will to help you when it is "The case cannot follow you on this point. It cannot expose itself to "to see the Pope take refuge in the Austrian states." He invoked also the state of public opinion in France, which remained very sym-pathetic to the maintenance of temporal power. "The masses, what-" "that are not very religious and not very Catholic, as you say, "They are even more so than one might think. Le Siècle and VOpinion" "national^ who have lunch with a vicar and dinner with xm cwré^ "have not yet been able to create here, as in Belgium, "A sect of solidarity. From this, you can judge the influence of the clergy." and the account that the emperor must keep of it (1). »

This note, which had been drafted in the office of the emperor, clearly indicates the underlying gross impiety that motivated him master. But on the grounds he invoked with regard to Italy, for con Serving Rome to the Pope, at least provisionally, was joined by one

(1) Politeia segreta Italiana, p. 280. The idea of inviting Mr. Lucasoli to come came to the dear director with the emperor was then put forward and very well received by the latter. Mr. Grandguillot was sent to Florence for this purpose, but Ricasoli refused, to consort a greater freedom vis-à-vis France.

204 la Belfiore di L'ITALIENNE (1830-1870)

other than Mazzini, who never missed an opportunity to point out. The September 7, 1868, in a note addressed to Mr. de Bismarck, the The old and skilled leader of secret societies said:

Germany cannot expect anything else from the Italian government an attitude of neutrality or hostility. If it believes it can ally itself with against France, she is blind; she knows neither the king, nor the ministers, nor the official element. For fear of public opinion, the The Italian government may initially remain neutral. But the The day France wants to obtain her support, she will tell her: "I Gives you Rome," and on that day the seduced country will let the government do as it pleases government, whatever it wants.

The real secret of Rome's second expedition was precisely the need to obtain a pledge of alliance for the planned war (1).

Not all the veils have been lifted on the expedition that Garibaldi led a case against Rome in 1867, and who, as a result of a conspiracy an absolutely providential course of circumstances, culminating in the sending of a second French expedition and the victory at Mentana.

According to the information contained in Father Deschamps' work (book II, chapter X, § 7), we can now add the book by Mr. Diamilla-Muller. According to him, Rattazzi wanted to repeat the game of Cavour; in 1860, he allegedly secretly encouraged the expedition, reserving the right to take over the direction at a later date.

A certain major, Ghirelli, one of the principal instruments of This expedition, dated October 28, 1868, formulated a position conceived in the following terms:

It has been more than twenty days since Rattazzi completely abdicated
Grispi was in charge of directing the Roman movement;

2* Rattazzi handed over two million pounds to the committee, and took the pledge the agency to provide him with weapons and ammunition. On the scene, weapons and ammunition ran out;

3* Major Ghirelli left with the mission of training the Roman legion
Maine. Baron Franco Mistrali, correspondent for the Gazzetta di Milano and of the Patria, was attached to him by order of Commander Mon-

4® Ghirelli left with the formal promise that the Italian troops their followers would follow him at a five-day march;

5® At Terni, he telegraphed Rattazi in cipher, asking him for the

(1) PoUtica segreta Italiana, p. 354.

THE RISE AND FALL OF MAZZINI 205

the precise day of the arrival of the Italian troops in front of Viterbo. It was answered: Sunday;

6* Rattazi, when giving his mission to Ghirelli, told him that he knew to make a U-turn (1).

Victor Emmanuel, who, despite the fictions of parliamentarism, personally directed Italian policy and particularly all revolutionary movements had obviously given his approval of Rattazi's conduct.

As for the relationship between Rattazi and Napoleon III, all of this What we do know is that at that time Rattazi was particularly pleasing to the emperor, and that his accession to the ministry in rem-Ricasoli's placement had been very well received at the Tuileries. represented in Victor Emmanuel's councils the alliance French, as opposed to the Prussian party towards which he inclined Ricasoli.

What talks had been exchanged, what commitments had been made? taken, for this march on Rome,—* it is a point on which one still waiting for a little more light.

§ 12. — The rise and fall of Mazzini

Mazzini was a powerful figure in European politics, one has just seen it through the persistent efforts of Victor-Em manual next to him "Despite all the police, I was "still as well-informed, and even better than the diplomats" "The most skillful," said Mr. Diamila Muller (2). That is how He had been aware of the negotiations for several months in advance. for the convention of September 15, 1864, as well as a draft of border rectification on the Alpine side in favor of France this, which was originally joined, but to which Napoleon III He resigned out of condescension towards Italy.

(1) PolUiea tegreia ItaUana. p. 3?4.

This wonderful information, which has no other explanation than the presence of its AfBliés in all European cabinets. Thus, on July 27, 1865, he wrote from London To Oiamilla Muller: € From Paris I am assured that negotiations with Rome (for "The withdrawal of French troops) are arrested and kept secret solely for f not to give the opposition a pretext during the elections (for the councils (general)).

We will see later (Chapter VIII) how Mr. Bismarck addressed A Mazzini to obtain written proof of the secret treaty existing between Napoleon III and Victor Emmanuel.

206

THE ITALIAN REVOLUTION (1830-1870)

From that moment on, he sought to provoke an experiment on his own. edition in Veneto by exploiting the strong discontent that a- had caused the convention among men on the left, and the abandonment of Turin as capital in favor of Florence among the Piedmontese. One can read in the work of Mr. Diamilla Muller the A long account of his relations with the men of the Piedmontese party, to support the insurrectionary campaign in Veneto, the pre-military comparisons that he directs. This prodigious expenditure of assets this approach resulted in complete failure, and the war of 1866 ensued. to control the events without Mazzini having any part in them.

Two sentences from this voluminous correspondence characterize sensed the situation. One day, one of his correspondents, Parenzo, the editor of the newspaper Avant-Guarda wrote to him: "The moderates do not € will never unite with us if we do not have the government on our side no one, or at least the king. And without the moderates we cannot "Just throwing a few bombs in the cities. Them, but them..." "Only they could make a revolution." Later, in 1867, Mazzini will sadly exclaim that with one hundred and fifty thousand francs he would have revolutionized Italy, and he had not found this misery blue sum (1)!

This is because, little by little, the driving forces of secret societies... were worn elsewhere. Palmerslon, Victor Emmanuel, Napoleon Leo III, although often divided among themselves, got along perfectly to counter Mazzini's action. The most active, like Manin, Rattazi, Lafarina, Klapka, Turr, Kossuth, the abandon: the bulk of Italian Freemasonry had rallied to Cavour on the day he attacked the Church in 1850, and when he had posed the Italian question at the Congress of Paris (2). We have seen this by the manifesto published by Diritto, the men of the left themselves- They themselves did not accept orders from abroad without oversight. ger. Mazzini finally understood the weakness of his operational base to reclaim Freemasonry, which he had perhaps too much disdained.

The workers' societies he had founded began, at

(1) Letter of April 1867, Politica segreta italiana, p. 261.

(2) The work of Mr. Rattazi, written from notes and correspondence from the minister of Victor Emmanuel, the emulator of Cavour, contains many traces of the antagonism that had arisen between these gentle representatives of the old The politics of the Carbonari and the old conspirator. It shows how, little by little the first ones had attracted around Victor Emmanuel all the vital forces of the revolution, (See especially p. 330.)

The Rise and Fall of Mazzini 207

From 1865 onwards, to be influenced by Bakunin who, as we have seen (Book II, Chapter XIV, § 6), was in complete opposition to Mazzini, not only on the religious question, – but Mazzini held much to his deism, – but also on the practical question. Mazzini constantly preached political and republican action; Bakunin, on the contrary, recommended abstention in politics and the concentration of all efforts on purely socialist ground. Mazzini having broken with the International, which did not want to su In its direction, it increasingly lost its means of action on the revolutionary elements, and recently the newspaper La Plebe from Milan, bluntly described the Mazzinians as reactionaries (1).

That is why Mr. Bismarck, better informed than anyone else whether it be actions by the International and in particular Bakunin's comment (Book II, Chapter XIV, § 6) did not do much funds based on the competition offers that Mazzini made to him in 1867.

S 13. – Mazzini and Freemasonry

After the breakdown of the projects on Veneto, combined with Victor Emmanuel Mazzini declared he no longer wanted to work except for the Republic. He was in Lugano in October 1867, at the beginning of the way in which the Garibaldians marched on Rome, ready to take the direction of the movement and to reclaim the dictatorship, as in 1848 (2). The crushing defeat at Mentana seemed to him a favorable opportunity* suitable for undermining the Piedmontese dynasty. Mr. Diaraila–Muller shows him trying to organize an Italian branch link of the Universal Republican Alliance^ therefore^ from {3}j

He had laid the foundations in America. Father Deschamps in published the program (book II, chapter XIV, § 2).

(1) Bm. de Laveleye, Le SonalUme contemporain, p. 347. He adds: c After the After Mazzini's death, the Mazzinians and Garibaidians united to found a vast association.
"Society, which aims to bring together all the democrats of the peninsula. They took the "J's name was Franchise Caponi. Their newspaper was Le Sparlactu. This grand project did r
"C put Bo realize this, and the Caponis almost all drifted towards socialism." V* also Tullio Martello, Storia della Internazionale (Padova, 1863, ia-8*), pp. 418 and follows. V. on the current trends of the old Mazzinian party further on (book III|
Chapter XXX, Part 1, Section 4.

(2) PolUica segrela italiana, p. 323.

(3) Ibid. p. 254.

208 THE ITALIAN VOLUNTEER (1830–1870)

his agents, Moriundo, Villa, Diamilla–Muller, to turn back Freemasonry and to make it its base of operations.

As Moriundo complained about the lack of political activity in the Turin Freemasonry, Mazzini replied to him on June 9th 1868;

The method of admission into Freemasonry is a scourge that... condemns to power. By not requiring conditions of faith Politics will always be a mixture of heterogeneous elements. There is However, for some time now there has been a tendency within it – especially in the South—which should not be scorned. We must try, if it would not be It's not possible to transform it.

To realize this idea, Moriundo affiliated himself with the lodge.
Dante Alighieri of Turin: "I believe," he wrote to him, "that this
The lodge will acquire much strength, because we are bringing it in (Every day there are young and good elements.) Some time ago beyond that, Moriundo provoked, on July 19, 1868, in Asti, a meeting union of the lodges of Turin and the surrounding area to train them in the movement and he asked Mazzini to send him a letter that he could read there.

Mazzini hastened to send the next plate:

Freemasonry was in the past a noble and powerful institution.
His first thought was one of liberation, of freedom, of equality between all men, who are all brothers under the law of God.
It was a profoundly political thought, and that is why it had the honor of enduring great and prolonged persecution at the hands of those who wanted to dominate the people by virtue of their birth, of the conquest and arbitrary rule. Freemasonry bravely confronted the to advance human progress, the last one she laid her hands on was the great French Revolution of 1789.

Since then, Freemasonry has fallen into decline. As a result of the general upheaval produced first by imperial despotism, then through the constitutional monarchies that followed it, it abandoned its primitive thought, became a society without social purpose, accepted in within her own circle of men of contradictory doctrines; she made her chief princes or satellites of princes; she contented herself with empty forms, devoid of true life, of symbols that no longer represented an idea. Its His works included banquets and acts of charity towards his own brothers, and nothing more, and Freemasonry fell in the minds of men my, as the papacy and the monarchy have fallen, as all have fallen-all the institutions that have ceased to produce, to direct actions, to to lead men towards brotherhood and the achievements of human progress hands.

Mazzini and Freemasonry 209

The papacy and the monarchy will never flourish again because they rely based on privilege and on doctrines denied by the conscience of the best theirs. Freemasonry, based on a tradition of equality, can be revived by appropriating all the progress. But for that, it must re- turns to the thought she had abandoned. Institutions, like Machiavelli said, must from time to time go back to their prin cipe.

By doing so, Freemasonry can still have a powerful life in humanity, and Italian Freemasonry in particular can, if She wants it, to be the initiator of a new life, to provide a starting point lever support.

A major reform must take place within the Order. This reform must gradually reduce the worship of symbols and empty forms to substitute for it faith in the principle, which was the soul of the ancient Freemason Nonsense. An elimination will have to take place sooner or later within the ranks of lodges: a more rigorous initiation will have to recruit men who are not alone capable of speaking about the temple, but who can build it.....

The political viewpoint is inseparable from Freemasonry, from the Italian masonry in particular. It is not possible that it uninterested in the great and sacred questions of the country where Rome is located, - independence from foreign powers, the dignity of the nation, the advent the people's path to equality.

These thoughts should attract the attention of the Freemasons of the North. Italy; they are already almost dominant in Southern Freemasonry.

thoughts. Let there be no question of the divergence of rites. The rites They are nothing when they do not represent an idea. That is the unity of This idea needs to be established. Once established, the rites will not will represent the diversity that must reign within it, a guarantee For the freedom of individuals, the vital question lies in a pro a gram encompassing all aspects of Italian life and the harmonies health to the advantage of Humanity. It is this comprehensive program which does not exist today at the head of Freemasonry. Hence the dissimi comments.

Unite in the name of God and your tradition to develop it and
To adopt it. Therein lies the future of Freemasonry.

Brother Motiundo reported to Mazzini a few days later, of the meeting of the lodges in Asti, and of the success his letter had there.
He had laid, with the f.*. Villa, he said, the foundations of a cū\ifédé-

I

III

210 THE ITALIAN REVOLUTION (1830-1870)

Masonic ration between the various lodges on the established bases by the master. "If this attempt fails," he added, "I have the plan to form a shooting society similar to that of Milan.
It's useful and even essential. Milan and Turin are the only ones provinces that can keep the idea alive and resist.

Alongside this action on Freemasonry, Mazzini organized nism the Universal Republican Alliance and drew closer to Garibaldi and men of the left. Crispi was making him large advances and charged Diamilla-Muller with managing her re-reconciliation with him. In the practical instructions he gives
In anticipation of a movement, we note this passage:

It is necessary that you know a secure means of correspondence and transportation. You will become involved with certain individuals from steamships on Lake Maggiore and the Upper-Italy (1).

We ask the reader to note this detail in passing.

1871, during the Commune, and in 1873, during the great conspiracy Gambettist (see further on, Book III, Chapter XXI), one was astonished by the promptness with which the men of the advanced party received
They were always kept informed about news that might interest them.
several hours before the authorities. This is the revelation of the me-secrets.

Here is how Mazzini summarized his instructions:

Form a three-person committee from the Piedmontese section of the Universal Republican Alliance;

Form several groups, choosing a group leader from among the workers, among the students;

Establish a section leader in each city;

Spread the idea of the strength of the Republican Alliance;

Let's talk about the two cases in which we will rise up;

If you have a newspaper that influences the people, which you can dispose, attack the monarchy and the king by seeking to destroy them to credit as much as possible;

To tend to divide the lodges and affiliate them with the Grand Orient of Pa-tear.

(t) Volilicu segrela Ualiana, p. 392. On page 127 of the same book or will find the agreements made for the transport of Garibaldi's troops to Constantinople in 1864, with an agent from Messageries niarilimcs.

MaZZINI and FrANO'MAGONNERIE 211

Mazzini returns to this last recommendation several times. mandate; he wants to attach all the lodges of Piedmont, which do not recognize the Grand Orient of Florence, whose leadership belonged entirely to the revolutionaries Monarchist revolutionaries. The Grand Orient of Palermo at the con-milking, as we have seen, had retained all its independence (Book II, Chapter X, S h)*

According to Mazzini's letters from 1867 and 1868, we see that he still had in Romagna, Southern Italy and Sicily, a considerable action. In vain the Italian government, whose po The list was recruited from Freemasonry, and was always very well informed of his actions, and did he obtain, from the government of Ticino, in May 1869, his expulsion from Lugano; two months later, Mazzini was in Como itself to direct preparations for an uprising in Sicily, for the moment, which he foresaw was very near,* when war broke out would be between France and Prussia.

We saw in Father Deschamps' work (book II, chapter X, base of operations at Mazzini by carrying out the invasion himself sacrilegious oath of Rome.

Italian Freemasonry nonetheless boasts of having counted among its leaders.

When Mazzini died in Pisa on March 11, 1872, the great The Grand Orient of Italy ordered that all Italian lodges Liennes celebrated mourning ceremonies and asked that Freemasons of all nationalities who could sit there they settle at his funeral.

CHAPTER EIGHT

THE SECRET REIIA.TIONS OF NAPOLEON LUE

WITH PRUSSIA

^ l". – Napoleon III and the unification of Germany

No sooner had Louis-Napoleon come to power than he conceived the idea of realizing to serve, for the benefit of Prussia, the plan for the unification of Germany that in the dreams of his exile he had sketched out with Slingby-Duncombe and the Duke of Brunswick, a plan which, moreover, was long since stopped by secret societies (see book II, chap. XI, § 1. – Book. III, chap. IV, § 4).

The first time, said the Duke of Broglie, that Napoleon III betrayed the strange preoccupation which made him view the reconstruction favorably the tuition of the German Empire in favor of Prussia, this was before his rise to power and during his presidency, following the disturbances that had shaken the German Confederation in 1848. he confided his secret feelings to the minister he was sending to Berlin, M. de Persigny, chosen, as we see, from his private life personal. As soon as the effect of these ignored instructions began to be to demonstrate, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, then entrusted to the general Labitte, and where M. de Viel-Gastél directed the political work, took the alarm and stopped this madness with a severe rebuke: the prince, embarrassed in core in the exercise of his power, did not defend his agent (1).

(1) The Correspondent of November 10, 1882.

Napoleon III gave in easily in appearance, but he came back always clinging to his ideas as if under the sway of an obsession that He did not allow him his freedom. Throughout his entire reign, He used the same methods in his relations with Prussia. conspirator, whom he used with Victor Emmanuel. Over the heads of his foreign ministers and ambassadors for them, he sent confidential emissaries whom he took care to choose from among foreigners, from among the members of societies upper ridges. We still possess them – and this is quite natural, As long as M lives, Bismarck and his work – that very few documents on this period of contemporary history. In Here are a few, however, some of which relate to 1858, The others are from 1801 and 1860. Napoleon III is still there. dominated by his cousin Prince Jérôme Napoléon, working actively to redraw the map of Europe according to the Pal- plan Merston and continue its realization, without any concern for the in- French interests, nor even, it seems, his dynastic interests the most obvious ones.

§ 2. – The mission of Marquis Pepoli to Berlin in 1858

In December 1880, an English magazine founded in Rome, La Minerva^ published an account of an initial negotiation which allegedly took place between Napoleon III and Prussia in December 1858, in the following conditions: (1)

On October 9, 1858, Prince William of Prussia (the emperor (current king of Germany) became regent of his brother's kingdom Frederick William IV. His first concern was to send back the mi- ministry presided over by the]aron of Mantcuffel. The president of the no- The cabinet of curiosities was headed by Prince Charles-Antoine of Ilohenzollern. brother-in-law of Marquis Napoleon Pepoli. The latter was in charge by the Count of Cavour to sound out his brother-in-law's intentions, in the event of a war between Austria and Piedmont. The Marquis Pepoli, before going to Berlin, passed through Paris, and had a Interview with Napoleon III. From Minerva to Napoleon III handed the Italian envoy a note intended to be placed under (n Ges (locuinonls have been puliliésilans/c French of January 23, 1881.

MISSION OF MARQUIS PePOLI TO BERLIN 215

the eyes of the Prussian chieftain and the prince regent, and whose aim was to separate Prussia from Austria.

Here is the gist of it:

Paris, December 1858.

There are two great German powers: Prussia and Austria. Prussia represents the future, Austria the past. France since ten years has always shown a marked preference for Prussia; this Will he fart at her? That remains to be seen.

Let us examine where Prussia's interests lie, of course. This country, like everything that grows, cannot remain stationary, and, this Meanwhile, if he forms a close alliance with Austria, he is obliged to remain stationary and even downshifting.

The best thing that can happen to him is to counterbalance by Germany, the Austrian Empire. But is that the only glory that befits a new reign and with high instincts and chivalry Prussian risk?

I don't believe it, and yet, if Prussia follows the advice of the interior Given the pressures it receives from various quarters, its role in Europe must be limited to balancing its rival. But in this policy there is a Danger: if, driven by disastrous influences, Prussia, making a common cause with Austria, guaranteed the Italian provinces of the House of Habsburg, then the European balance would be broken, The treaties of 1815 would be abolished, and France would be forced, by doing an appeal to Russia to throw down the gauntlet to Germany. I hope that this The end will not come. If, on the contrary, Prussia, by breaking away Without Austria making a fuss, she shows herself to be benevolent towards Franco, do Great destinies await her, without danger or upheaval. For, if, as a result of a struggle between France and Austria, the latter As power lost its influence in Germany, it was Prussia that... would inherit.

Therefore, if Prussia allies itself with Austria, all progress is at its expense. impossible, and it risks uniting Russia and France against the A-Lemagne. If, on the contrary, it allies itself with France, any reduction Austria's influence benefits her, and, supported by France, she can pursue in Germany the high destiny that awaits him and that the German people expect from her.

Napoleon.

Following this note, Minerva published a long letter in which the Marquis Pepolirend reports to Napoleon III on The result of his mission, and here are the main points:

Prince Clarios, (he told me he was going to send him straight to Prince Regent. This note, according to him, had great merit—that of our Clear and frank. I then had to ask him how far the spirit A public favorable to Austria would commit Prussia, and if it were true that The Prince Regent was going to guarantee his Italian possessions to Austria. He answered me clearly: "No." So I reminded him that in the At the time he had written to me that an agreement had been signed with the Autri-King J, he immediately replied that he had believed him, but that he believed he had made a mistake and that he would have had precise information there. Then he asked me if people in France believed in the war: I replied that I believed it, but that Your Majesty had not authorized me to add to add a word to the terms of the note and that my mission was entirely personal; that, however, Italy's position was very serious and that I was entirely in agreement with the opinion he had previously expressed to me, that we would never succeed in establishing true peace in Europe than with a]>onno war.

He replied that it was still his opinion, but this opinion, It was also personal for him. I took this opportunity to express to him in the name of Count do Gavour, whom I had seen in Genoa, all the sympathy* the feeling that was present in Italy towards the new Prussian government, and that it was hoped he would be favorable to Italian ideas. I told him observed that Piedmont was Prussia's true ally, then that their future depends on the downfall of Austria, and that the Italians links ask for nothing more than to love the Germans.

Quehlucs days later, the Prince of Ilohcnzollern handed over to martiuis Pcpoll one of the Prince Regent's titles in response to the note of Napoleon III. The text is not given; but the Marquis written by transmitting it:

I took the liberty of adding that I did not believe it was unified. Your Majesty, a very categorical endorsement of the note C, since ultimately She left the question unresolved, and did not allow judgment on whether Prussia would move further away from or closer to Franco on the major issues of the day. I therefore felt entitled to ask the prince if the new The new minister would be more favorable to Austria than the previous one. He told me replied that, in Germany's internal affairs, he was certain certainly more inclined towards conciliation than the previous cabinet, but that, in foreign affairs, he did not believe him; that one could agree in matters of the heart but not in matters of public opinion external; that we knew very well at Üerlin that we wanted to persuade the France, that the Prince Regent and the new ministry were not him favorable, but tpic was completely wrong.

MISSION OF MARQUIS PePOLI TO BERLIN 217

He added that there were only two possible policies in Prussia, those which Your Majesty had so well outlined in his note; that he, he to take advantage of every event to expand Prussia, but that he

The Prince of Prussia had to take into account the uncertainty of his position.
and pressure from public opinion and most governments comments in favor of Austria. As I desired the conversations that I had with the prince were entirely accurate, I believed him to see this report, so that he can verify its accuracy himself.
study.

He fully approved it, and I even left him a copy;
but since it contains the prince's personal ideas, and since he spoke With the utmost candor, he confides in the high expertise of the em-father, asking him to always send him his communications in a manner confidential and reserved information.

December 26, 1858.

Pbpoli.

If we are to believe the anonymous author of the revelations of the Mi-
After Solferino, Prussia decided to join the army.
Franco-Italian alliance; a courier left Berlin for the Italian headquarters with a letter for the Marquis Pepoli where the Prussian cabinet was making its intentions clear. But it was too late: news of the peace of Villafranca reached Berlin before that the dispatch did not reach Marquis Pepolb and the courier was recalled summoned by telegram before he had completed his journey. The Gazette nationaleA q Berlin, in its issue of December 30, 1881, translated the letter attributed to Napoleon III without raising any doubt regarding its authenticity; she limits herself to this single observation:
"The story of the letter sent, then recalled after Solferino, is old, but it is not at all believable [keineswgs beglaubi (g tes). »

The information found in Father Deschamps' work (Book II, Chapter X, § 4), the revelations of Kossuth that we were able to read in this very volume (book III, chapter VII, §7), indeed give It was as if, after Solferino, Prussia remained at least neutral and that, if powerful influences were to solicit the prince regent to agree to cable Austria, others worked alongside him in the direction opposite.

218 SECRET RELATIONS OF NAPOLEON III WITH PRUSCEAN

§3. – The Italian-Prussian alliance of 1866 AND Napoleon III

Five years after Villafranca, the conquest of Venetia was complete.

the only way for him to resist the pressure from Mazzini and Garibaldi.

In October 1865, he had sent a secret emissary to Vienna, Count Malaguzzi, of Modena, to propose to Austria a cession of Venetia in exchange for monetary compensation. The Vienna cabinet initially refused; but, in February 1866, it returned to this proposal and offered the cession of Venetia to Napoleon III. He refused it: he preferred Italy allied itself with Prussia, and that Austria be crushed once. Furthermore, let us note these dates: in November 1865, there had the famous Biarritz meeting between Mr. de Bismarck and Napoleon III.

La Marmora, then president of the council of ministers in Flo-Regency, had sent General Govone to Berlin with the mission of negotiate a treaty of offensive and defensive alliance. The government The Italian was hesitant to commit. All the general's interviews with Mr. de Bismarck were faithfully reported to Napoleon III. La Marmora had dispatched one of his confidants, the Count Aresc, because he believed Mr. Nigra was too influenced by the emperor. On March 30, Mr. Arese telegraphed the short words to Florence and concise from the Oracle of the Seine, "Addressing Mr. Arese not as sovereign, but as a friend, he had said: I believe the A useful treatise.

The famous treaty was signed in Berlin on April 8th. Napoleon III in received the news that night, memo by telegram: after having Having read it, he SC fell back asleep with a light heart and great satisfaction. tion.

In May 1866, Napoleon III, with the hesitations which characterized his policy at that time, wanted to return to Austrian proposals, but this time it was too late;

REVISIONS OF AN AGENT OF M. DE BISMARCK 219

the Italo-Prussian alliance that he himself had forged, removed the challenge. nitive (1).

§4. – The revelations of an agent of Mr. de Bismarck

A former Hungarian refugee, Count Scherr-Thosz, who, from 1862 to 1867, was, in various circumstances, to what he said the confidential agent of Mr. de Bismarck, published, in 1881, in a German magazine, Souvenirs of his memories moires (2).

He recounts that he came into contact with Mr. Bismarck at the moment when he had just been summoned by the king to the presidency of the council of ministers, that is to say in October 1862. Mr. Bismarck, who was then Prussian ambassador to Paris for about six months, returned there after conferring with the king in Berlin, to present his letters of recall to the emperor. It appears from the Memoirs of Mr. de Scherr-Thosz that, from this At the time, Mr. Bismarck harbored plans for war against Austria; he made no secret of it in his conversations with the French ministers and politicians; but what he said was absolutely mulating then (and yet it was also an armed project (a dream he cherished), it was that he was already thinking about a war with France, and that he had above all else sought to understand the true strengths of our country during its stay in Paris, to find out when he would be able to reach us and what would be the most opportune moment to surprise us to get and to fight.

(1) These details, so important for clarifying responsibilities, are taken from the work of General La Marmora; Cn po pin tU lucc sugli eventi polilici e mili^tari del anno 1806 (Florence, 1873). "It appears positive," says the Gazette de France of It was on September 18, 1873, that Victor Emmanuel formally authorized the general, "whose close relationship with his sovereign is well known, to publish all the documents contained in his book. He had others removed, the general clearly states. "It's hard to hear, and one especially notices the care the author has taken with no noth "Publishing something very compromising for Bonapartist diplomacy. Cola explains—" "The fact that we are also guaranteed, namely that three months ago, the The general came to Paris and read his manuscript in the drawing room of a large house. (C of the imperial era, we presence of Uouher, Benedetti, Grammont, Drouyn t do Lhuys and other servants of the empire. >

(2) We borrow these extracts from Le Français of July 7, 188t.

220 SECRET RELATIONS OF NAPOLEON III WITH PRUSCEAN

Mr. (the Scherr-Thosz having written to Mr. Bismarck to to put at his service against Austria, the future Chancellor of Germany Magne summoned him and said to him;

You guessed it. I have set out to avenge the shame. d'Olmütz, to defeat this Austria which has treated us so unjustly* I want to give Prussia its rightful place in Germany. I I recognize the value that Hungary's aid can have for us. I know that the Hungarians are not revolutionaries in the traditional sense. dinner of the word. Besides, the great Frederick negotiated well for a alliance with the disaffected Hungarian magnates. If we are vain In the end, Hungary will be free; count on it.

surely the one that reveals to us that from this moment (October) 1862) Mr. Bismarck had obtained Napoleon's assent. Leo III had his views on the unification of Germany and withdrew his explanation very freely with him on the impossibility where he would always be to give France compensation on the left bank of the Rhine.

"I have no concerns on the French side," he reportedly said. The same circumstance, Mr. Bismarck. I spoke last night, during two hours with the emperor, and obtained from him the promise of a new absolute reality. He spoke to me at length about what he called a small correction. border crossing; he wanted the Saarbrücken coal basin. I told him I stated quite plainly that we would not give up a single village, because that, even if I wanted it, the king would never consent. There— On top of that, the emperor gave me his assent. He believes us to be weak. Or perhaps he is exaggerating the strength of the Austrians. He told me several times— They were asked to take good care. Finally, seeing that I was holding firm, despite His warnings. He told me; "Well, do what you cannot avoid doing this.

Count Scherr-Thosz proves once again in his Memories the nefarious and pernicious suffering that the prince Jerome had a view on the politics of the Second Empire. He recounts a conversation he had with the host of the Palais-Royal on July 5, 1806. Count Scherr-Thosz was crossing Paris to go to the theatre of the war and take part in the operations of the Hungarian legion, (which had been formed under the orders General Klapka. Paris was decked out and illuminated that day. had just learned of the emperor's request for mediation of Austria and the cession of Venetia to France. Is it known what was then the main concern of the secret cabinet of the Tuileries? — There were fears that peace might be made too soon and that the Prussia did not take enough advantage of its victory!!!

REVELATIONS OF AN AGENT OF MR. DE BISHABKG 221

Prince Jerome, when I saw him, had just come from the emperor's palace; he was very excited. — You did well to come, he shouted to me; you You'll be doing us a favor. — He asked me to go directly to the district Prussian general, to warn Mr. Bismarck not to grant a neither a premature peace nor an armistice. Austria, flexible in the darkness, but vindictive and cruel in its success, if it is not complete Devastated, she will make them pay dearly for her setbacks on the first comeback. fortune.

For over an hour, the prince tried to convince me that he spoke less in his own name than according to the intimate and secret desires of the emperor, who would be obliged, in his capacity as mediator, to advise

I had to remind Mr. Bismarck that Prince Napoleon had already played this confidential political role twice in Italy.

The attitude adopted by Prince Napoleon towards the agent Mr. Bismarck's secret is entirely consistent with policy revolutionary and anti-French views that he outlined in his speech from Ajaccio shortly afterwards (Book II, Chapter X, § 7). (1)

Napoleon III, driven by necessity, changed his mind, but too late, again, and without abandoning his conspiratorial methods.

(1) The Duke of Broglie published, in the Correspondant of November 10, 1882, an article entitled: The Ministry of Foreign Affairs before and after the Revolution, in which he recounts that in 1866, after the Battle of Sadova, Mr. Ürouyn of Lhuys had convinced the emperor to intervene in Germany to save Austria and that the mobilization orders were already ready, when, during the preceding night, the publication in the Official Journal of a decree convening the legislative body, Prince Napoleon's influence prevailed and ended the war. Prince Napoleon, in a letter addressed to Le Figaro on November 23, 1882, claimed that he had not followed the emperor's advice, the influence attributed to him, but he develops in the same letter all your reasons — or rather some of the reasons — for which he opposed intervention in favor of Austria. The account of Count Scherr-Thosz shows what maneuvers Prince Napoleon resorted to to sense his policy prevailing, and if that were the case, as he claims in his letter to Figaro, guided exclusively by the interests of France. In reality, the agent's story Mr. Bismarck's secret and Mr. de Broglie's secret complement each other. We have also reproduced, in chapter VII, | 11, the very precise testimony of U. Diamiila-MuUer, recounting the role played in 1866 by Prince Napoleon to prevent the France to support Austria and its journey to Turin. V. Politica segreta italiana, p. 271. We can therefore judge the value of the prince's denial.

222 SECRET RELATIONS OF NAPOLEON III WITH PRUSSIA

4. — A SECRET AGENT OF NAPOLEON III IN 1866

In 1864, while Prussia was crushing Denmark, the party Danish national had sent a representative to Paris, Julius Hansen. The Danish National Party pursues the unity of the three Scandinavian kingdoms; Mr. Julius Hansen defended this idea in the press and in brochures. This was a recommendation to him, a perfectly natural mandate to the crowned Carbonaro, who in He soon read one of his conPidonts. Julius Hansen had his connections at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and was the diplomatic editor France's tic. The emperor had sent him to Prague in 1866 on a confidential mission to Prince Bismarck, for to obtain in the treaty with Austria the insertion of an article por the annexation already carried out to Prussia. Mr. Bismarck agreed to clemency to this childish request, which became art. V of the treaty of Prague, and which, as we know, was never executed. Napoleon III imagined he had thereby created a cause of future embarrassment for the Prussia!

In March 1807, he learned very unexpectedly of the conclusion of the treaty of alliance of Prussia with the states of Germany of south, which in fact achieved Germanic unity. Emerging then from its torpor, driven by public opinion, to which the debates of the The legislative body had caused a great deal of excitement, Napoleon Leo III and his ministers wanted to forge an alliance with Italy with a view to a struggle with Prussia. To this end, he sent to of Baron Liicasoli, then head of the ministry in Florence, the prince Cariatì, a Neapolitan, and all this negotiation went through Julius Hansen, who served as an intermediary between Napoleon's secret envoy Leo III and MM. Drouyn de Lhuys, from Moustiers, Rouher. At this Political negotiation was mixed up with a financial affair concerning the ecclesiastical properties in Italy that had been concluded with Rothschild, Bamberger and Crédit Foncier.

Entrusted to such agents, these negotiations were easily penetrated. Mr. Diamilla-Muller, from whom we borrow this account, publishes the text of a dispatch from a secret agent of the Prince of Bis-

A SECRET AGENT OF NAPOLEON III 223

marck, the man named B., placing, on March 30, 1867, the count

Usedom was fully aware of the mission accomplished by the Prince Cariatì (1).

Mazzini was no less well-informed, as we have seen from his notes from November 1867 to Prince Bismarck, which we have published in volume II. (Book II, chapter X, section 7.)

fi) Politeia tegreta italiana of chapter VIII, Varticolo V del trattato di Praga.

Chapter Ninth

THE MASONIC ALIAS OF PRUSSIA

AND FROM ITALY

§ 1. – The memoirs of General La Marmora

The ideas and hatreds that are common to Freemasonry have had, concurrently with gallophobia (1), their share of influence in the rapprochement which, from 1866 onwards, took place between Prussia and Italy, and upon which rested and still rests Mr. Bismarck's policy.

General La Marmora, in his curious revelations, recounts that in 1861, having been sent to the King of Prussia in the west Following his coronation, he made contact with the head of the Liberal party, the deputy de Vincke, and "he carried away the hope that, "Through him, he would appear in public opinion" "In Prussia, a reversal in favor of Italy"; but he omits to state what arguments he put forward to Mr. de Vincke and what means did the latter employ to bring public opinion back? that lost.

(1) See the feelings that the Italians harbored towards the France, the day after the Italian War, the curious work of M. Auguste Brachet: The Italy we see and the Italy we don't see. Paris, Hachette, 1881.

15

iii

226 Masonic Alliance of Prussia and Italy

In March 1866, Victor Emmanuel had sent the government to Berlin General Govone to forge an offensive and defensive alliance between Italy and Prussia, as we saw in the previous chapter. In In a telegram addressed to La Marmora, the general summarized a con-Mr. Bismarck's statement on the difficulties he was experiencing to engage Prussia in a war with Austria and on the motives that dictated his own conduct:

Mr. Bismarck had always been of the opinion that Austria should be regarded as the natural enemy of Prussia, and that is why he had, I have always viewed with pleasure the conduct and successes of the house of Savoy, but he was alone in Prussia in his opinion.

In the past, war against the Austro-Hungarian Empire was considered a crime there. cheating and the alliance with France; and public opinion had re-felt Italy as personified in Mazzini and Garibaldi. He had he had managed to change this way of seeing things, and, just recently, he had proposed to the King of Prussia to conduct a trial, to involve Austria this Austro-Prussian one. This attempt had completely failed, or rather completely successful, according to his predictions: the natural rivalry of Austria and its sensitivity had become more pronounced than ever, and this the trial had cured the king and many other people of the Austrian alliance; King William had abandoned his exaggerated legitimist scruples. res, and he could now guide it (sic) according to his designs.

§ 2. – A Prussian Memorandum addressed to Mazzini

IN 1867

The same ideas are expressed in a memorandum intended Tule: The Pi'usse, natural ally of Italy, but sent this time directly from the Prussian chancery to Mazzini, in response to the overtures that he had made to Mr. Bismarck and that one was able to read book II, chapter X, 7.

Here is the full reproduction, because this document relates to a large number of points of contemporary politics and is the counterpart to Napoleon III's secret relations with the Prussia.

Affinities of language and race, analogies of temperament Morality and customs matter little in the actual formation of alliances. Alliances do not

A PRUSSIAN MEMORANDUM ADDRESSED TO MAZZINI 227

are based solely on the incrot and are determined only by the advantages that they provide. When two states have a geographical situation such that they can develop their own system of action and increase* to indefinitely increase their power through industry, commerce and the war, without the power of one ever being able in any way to obstruct that of the other, that, on the contrary, the strength of one ac grows that of the other, these two States are and must be allies turels. On the contrary, when two states have a geographical situation such that one cannot extend its sphere of action without harming the other; when one person's business can only prosper at the expense of another on the other hand; when, in short, the goal to be reached in order to arrive at full their power development is the same for both of them, in a way that, if one of them achieves it, the other will never achieve it, and will therefore be sequent in dependence on the first, not only is there no of natural alliance between these two states, but there is between them a ri necessary value which, at any moment, can and must turn them into enemies mis.

Based on these principles, the only ones consistent with reason, it is natural value.

Germany is a natural ally of Italy.

Italy's natural rival is France.

Let us suppose Italy, entirely in control of itself, strong in its political unit, which has become the warehouse for its own diverse products and of all those in the South; let us suppose Germany is also strong because of its unity politics, which has become a warehouse for its own products and those of the North; Italy mistress of the Mediterranean, Germany mistress of the Baltic; these two powers, whatever one may say, the most intelligent the most civilized, who divide Europe in two and who strengthen the center, these two powers with such precise borders and so clearly defined, so different in language and temperament, exercising their influence in such diverse ways that Italy never will be able to aspire to dominate in the Baltic, nor will Germany even consider dominating in the Mediterranean, and let's ask ourselves if they can do other than helping each other and loving each other cordially.

Italy and Germany are surrounded by peoples who aspire to to grow at their expense. In the north, England exerts pressure on Germany. And one day the East will manage to exert its influence on Italy. Only in the south, only The star of the future shines for both of them; to the south, where rAlle<* Magne relies on Italy, where Italy has the Mediterranean Sea in front of it. can become an Italian lake again.

The people who made 4844, 4848 and 4866 are the true ally of that which produced 4848, 4849 and 4860.

228 Masonic Alliance of Prussia and Italy

By the end of the year, Germany will have to form a single powerful state. extending from the Baltic to the Alps, from the Rhine to the Vistula and the Brave; Italy must no longer have provinces in foreign hands; or else Neither Tune nor Vautre will have understood their respective situations.

As for Tltaiie and France, the configuration of the globe Since they cannot be changed, they will always be rivals and often in enemies. Nature has thrown between them an apple of discord that they do not will cease to be discussed; the Mediterranean, an admirable port in the center of Europe, Asia and Africa, a canal between the Atlantic and the Pacific fique, basin surrounded by the most favored lands of heaven.

Wouldn't it be madness to think that France might not be ja- Italy's border, which extends so far into the Mediterranean, which possesses sede the most beautiful, most populated and richest coasts, of Italy, which is the most direct route between Europe, the East and India

Everyone knows the joy the French felt at the news of the Lissa disaster. France saw a great advantage in it. Although she showed some sympathy towards Italy in 1809, it was not whether by fashion or national pride, if child, at that date, one Carefully study the true French opinion, and you will see that everything limited itself to the praise of three or four Parisian newspapers paid for the insert. And when we talk about France, we mean France as shaped by its geographical situation, the French nation.

On the other hand, it is impossible for Italy to tolerate France ws- at any moment to seize Tunis as it did recently: from Tunis, which would only be a stepping stone for her to reach Sardinia, It is essential for Italy to constitute itself in such a way that it does not have no need to tremble for its coasts, for its trade, for its provinces at every frown of the French Jupiter.

France, mistress of your Mediterranean? France with the borders of Rhine? No: Italy and Germany must not allow it at any price. For them, it's a matter of life or death.

And let's not even talk about Italy's gratitude towards France. Italy owes nothing to France.

Here is a summary of both. It clearly shows which is the creditor.

France lost on the Italian battlefields, in the interest from Italy, twenty thousand soldiers.

And that's all.

For the benefit it derived from the French intervention, Italy has given Nice, Savoie and 60 million.

And that's enough.

But let's look back and remember the years

REMINDER FROM MR. USEDOM 229

elapsed between 1797 and 1815; let us remember the blood of a million Italian soldiers paid for the benefit and glory of France who, for Before making Italy free and great, he made it a slave; let us remember the millions paid by the thousands to France or spent on its behalf, and the incomparable artistic treasures stolen by France from Italy and which they still adorn the Louvre today!

France, in the war of 1859, was merely paying Italy a price.

Italy and France cannot join forces to exploit in common the Mediterranean. This sea is not an inheritance to be shared between parents.

The Mediterranean empire undoubtedly belongs to Italy, which possesses coasts on this sea twelve times more extensive than those of France. Marseille and Toulon cannot be compared with Genoa, Livorno, Naples, Palermo, Ancona, Venice and Trieste.

The empire of the Mediterranean must be Italy's constant thought, the goal to be continued by the Italian ministers, the basis of Italian policy.

A Prussian statesman, convinced of these truths, had the idea of to unify Germany by relying on an alliance with Italy. Prussia and Italy could have dictated peace to Vienna by rejecting in the Slavic countries, the Habsburg dynasty, which thus became a danger. What was a war for Russia ceased to be one for Germany and Italy. Prussia could then have completed the unification of Germany. (In a...) at a time when Italy and Germany were together forming their unity, They gained dominance in Europe. And, although England and Russia does not like to see Germany forming its unity, they would have resigned themselves to it, if this unity had resulted in making to disappear from the world stage another preponderance.

The missed opportunity will come again.

Italy and Prussia, being closely allied, could bring it about at their willingly.

Consequence:

The need for an alliance between Italy and Prussia through diplomatic means.

Or:

Prussia's strategic alliance with the Italian national party.

§ 3. – The recall of Mr. d'Usedom, Prussian minister, has

Florence in 1868

We published in volume II (book II, chapter X, S "0 the key documents relating to Mazzini's communications and details are found in the work of Mr. Diamilla-Muller, and there we find the explanation for a diplomatic incident, which had remained obscure so far.

Mazzini, in his first note of November 17, 1866, signed milk to Mr. Bismarck the existence of a secret treaty of alliance between the emperor and King Victor Emmanuel. A few days later, Mr. Bismarck had the following note delivered to Mazzini:

The Berlin government fears that there may be an agreement between the king Victor Emmanuel and Emperor Napoleon III, an agreement which would be... to understand what the King of Prussia should expect from Victor Emmanuel... But he doesn't have proof of it, and that's the proof he would like to have. If he had it, he would immediately agree to deal with the man who Only today can thwart the policies of the Tuileries.

The author of the note is therefore interested in obtaining the desired proof. and to provide all necessary clarifications regarding the officer Prussian, so that we could then speak directly with him—even.

To make things easier for the author of the note, he is informed that the Generals Cialdini and Durando said they had read the exchanged telegrams. between His Majesty Victor Emmanuel and Emperor Napoleon III, in dispatches which the king pledged not to go to Rome, which were the preliminary stage of an Italo-French agreement against Prussia.

This written proof-Mazzini could not or would not provide it (See his reply, vol. II, p. 391). The Prussian government in obtained the proof through another means.

The Count of Usedora, having had, at the beginning of 1868, the o- As he was crossing Rome, he saw Cardinal Antonelli, who... gave very precise indications of the existing agreement between the Cabinet of the Uileries and Rattazi, for joint action in certain circumstances, and provides him with the means to obtain them authentic evidence.

Upon his return to Florence, the Count of Usedom had nothing to do with Mr. Dia was more in a hurry than to inform Mazzini's representatives. Milla-Muller in particular, from the conversation he had had with Antonelli.

A few days later, at the request of the Italian government^ He was suddenly recalled by Mr. Bismarck. The game had linked between Prussia and Italy. Victor Emmanuel had understood the scope of the threat which concluded the memorandum on Germany

Italy's natural ally: "Birth of the Prussian alliance and Italy through diplomatic channels or strategic alliances of Prussia with the national party." The chancellery

Prussian officials had the skill to have some extracts published in the Vienna Neue-Presse as a threat to the of Victor Emmanuel.

Mr. d'Usedom was compromised by the relationships that Mr. de Bis-Marck had imposed them on him with Mazzini's agents; the last The communication he had just given them was imprudent. whose renewal the two new allies wanted to avoid.

Mr. Diamilla-Muller concludes his story thus;

New commitments were made: the solution to these negotiations-tions was entrusted to new individuals. What had been written to Florence fell into a kind of oblivion. London today possesses documents, which are not unknown to us, on this second phase of the diplomatic intrigues, which were to cause a sea of bloodshed and to raise a new one in place of an old hegemony, before which the whole of Europe would be forced to bow down (1).

Through a reciprocal exchange of good deeds, in 1871, the grand master from the York Rite lodge of Berlin, Brother Von Schakenburg, of ordered and obtained the dismissal of Frappoli, Grand Master of the Italian Freemasonry, then his confinement in a mistress his insane (book I, chap. III, § 4 and book II, chap. X, § 7), because that he had been too sympathetic to France during the war.

§ 4. – Emperor William and Freemasonry

Italian

During Emperor William's visit to Victor-Emperor In Milan in 1875, the Italian lodges sent a manual to... deputation to their crowned brother. Deputies Mussi and Tamajo represented the Grand Orient and numerous delegates from the lo-The ges had joined them. The newspaper Il Secolo thus recounts their receipt in its n° of October 23, 1875 (2):

(1) Politica segreta italiana, p. 355.

(2) Reproduced by the Civüta caltoUc0t no of December 18, 1875.

Yesterday at five o'clock in the afternoon, the German Emperor received in private audience and with the most exquisite cordiality a delegation of Italian Freemasonry. The delegation presented him with an address so* assembly of members of the Grand Orient and all delegates from the lodges Italian women gathered in Milan.

After expressing his heartfelt thanks, the emperor wore the conversation on a completely intimate level and clearly demonstrated scs deeply Masonic sentiments. Speaking of the obstacles that the Freemasonry encounters, in its spread and with malevolence, the which some people seek to diminish in public opinion Recognizing its importance and value, he encouraged the brothers to remain steadfast. in the struggle without being disturbed, and always counting on the adherent Zion and the support of all affiliates. The words that came out of the mouth of such a character, to refute one of the objections constantly by our adversaries, deserve to be reported verbatim: "I "Also," he said, "I encountered obstacles at the beginning of my life as a Freemason- "nice, but to those who, to dissuade me, asked me what é- Regarding Freemasonry and what it could be used for, I always replied- "Go in and see for yourselves."

The emperor then kindly asked for information detailed information on the domestic system and family development Italian Freemasonry. 11 inquired with interest about the illustrious Grand Master. After a half-hour hearing marked by a touching and fraternal affability, the delegation withdrew, deeply moved by the ac a truly Masonic catch of the illustrious and powerful brother (1).

(1) The newspaper La Capitale, dated October 27, 1875, published the text of the address from the Grand Orient of Italy to Emperor William.

CHAPTER TEN

POLAND AND FREEMASONRY

9

Father Deschamps showed in his work how the Freemasonry, which has so skillfully exploited the idea of nationalities, in reality tends to destroy all nationalities, for to carry out his plans to destroy the Church and Christianity, and to erect in their place the temple of Humanity.

Unfortunate Poland learned this the hard way. Its cause has served as a pretext for a large number of meetings and demonstrations. revolutionary operations. On several occasions the leaders of the The movement sought to make him create diversions useful to their subsequent projects: ultimately, they always abandoned it.

this hidden thought of the sects towards him.

Napoleon I" in 1809 and 1812 had his fate in his own hands.

It was up to him to restore the kingdom of Poland, and there would have been found solid support for his military operations; but he stubbornly refused, despite the advice given to him by all men with political sense. A deep-seated hatred. Rani He opposed this Catholic nation and he let slip the secret in a conversation with M. de Narbonne. "I don't want € from Poland as a disciplined force to furnish "a battlefield," he said, and he added, for colo- to condemn this odious selfishness, these recriminations against the elderly liberal institutions of this people, against its mystical fanaticism or demagogic (1).

234 Poland and Freemasonry

Napoleon III did not pursue a different policy. Nor did he...

1803 that in 1854 he refused to extend a hand to PoK)gne, mal- despite the obvious military interest that would have existed. The steps The diplomatic relations of 1863 were intended only to deceive the French public sentiment (2). The same was true of England and Palmerston.

Since 1832, the leadership of the insurrections has, in reality, been almost always in the hands of the Polish emigration faction naise who had embraced revolutionary ideas (see volume II, (See attached document K, paragraphs 4 and 5). The lamentable insurrection of 1862 was instigated by the committee of the united revolution verselle sitting in London, under the direction of Mazini, of Saflî, de Turr, de Kossutfi. The reader has been able to see in this volume (chapter VII, §§ 8 and 10) how this insurrection was, in their projects, part of a universal revolutionary movement intended to counteract the actions of Napoleon III. We will find documents attesting to these facts in a publication made based on the notes of General Berg, commander-in-chief of the Russian forces its in Poland, and which contains a large number of secret pieces your seizures on the insurgents. It is entitled Die Polnischen Aufstoende seit 1830 in ihrem Zazammenhange mit den in- ternationalen Umsturzhestrehungen^ von major Knorr (Berlin, in-8", 1880, Siegfried Mittler) (3).

However, while the Polish people rose up with a co rage and patriotism worthy of admiration, despite some

(1) Contemporary Sowenin$, by M. Villomain, volume I, Jf. de Narbonne, Chapter XIV.

(2) Mérimée's correspondence with PannizzL (2 vols. in-8°, Paris, 1880) shows how hostile Napoleon III's inner circle was to the Pologe.

(3) This book should be consulted with great caution. The author has not worked that on documents and police reports; he is animated by prejudices German and Protestant Jews against Poland. He systematically blames the Catholic clergy to justify the barbarities of Berg and Murawif. It is equally-ignorant and unfair, presenting them as socialists and communists Polish patriots who were concerned with emancipating the peasants and resolving the agrarian problems specific to Slavic countries, which at the same time Emperor Alexander He was striving to make a decisive break in Russia through his memorable act of liberation of 186t. But the documents emanating from the revolutionary committee of London that he The published material is of indisputable authenticity.

Poland and Freemasonry 235

crimes unfortunately mixed in with the men of the revolution cosmopolitan tion, Hungary, Romania, Serbia, Italy I remained deaf to the voices of Mazzini and Garibaldi. That's that in Poland there was a truly national and religious movement gieux. In the work we have just cited, we find the Undeniable evidence. Mierowlaski, the revolutionaries' agent from London, could have been a socialist atheist, like Lelewel had He was a liberal Freemason; the Polish insurgents were rising up before everything to defend their faith, and the image of the Virgin was on their Banners. Prince Wladislas Czartoriski in Paris, the Count Zamoyski in London could agree to represent at foreign powers are instigating the Polish uprising. It is absolutely It is certain that, if she had succeeded, the superior elements of the country would have ultimately prevailed and Poland would have been reconstituted as a Catholic nation. Also the men Those who possessed the secret of Freemasonry, did they not care? Not at all. One of the leading figures of the sect in Italy, Brother Petrucelli délia Gatina, correspondent for the French newspaper le SU^ Cloy expressed this very clearly in 1864, in the Chamber of Deputies deputies from Turin, on the occasion of a motion of sympathy in favor Petrucelli strongly opposed the Polish uprising. motion and ultimately argued the decisive reason in the eyes of the Boxes:

The Polish Catholics. Their first act, if they emancipate themselves The pent will be to kneel at the Pope's feet and say to him: We Here is our sword, our blood, our fortunes are at the service of the Holy One Seat (1).

The chamber adjourned the matter!

Herzen and Bakunin were part of, at least since 1858, the 1862 (2), and one may doubt that they sincerely wished for it. success. The reconstitution of Poland would indeed have been the biggest obstacle to their plans for a Pan-Slavist republic, atheist and socialist (cf. book II, chapter XV, § 4).

(1) Rattazzi and his times (in-S", Paris, 1880), t. II, p. 652,

(2) Die polniseken Aufstände seit 1830, pp. 91 and 153.

CHAPTER ELEVEN

FRENCH MASONRY IN AUSTRIA (1)

S 1. – Prussian origin of Austrian lodges

During the course of the 18th century, some lodges had founded in the countries of Austrian domination, thanks to the protection of Emperor Francis I, husband of Marie-Thé Resis (cf. Book II, Chapter III, § 2). Joseph II, associated with the empire through his mother, continued this patronage. In January 1776, a bequeathed by the Grand Lodge of Germany established in Berlin, the f. *. Franz von Sudthausen came to Vienna with the aim of reuniting all these lodges at the center established in the Prussian capital. In an audience which he obtained from Joseph II through the intermediary of famously von Zinnendorf, his favorite, he presented this prince with a letter a letter addressed to him by the Grand Lodge of Germany, full of the most fine protests, and he asked him to grant Austria to the Freemasonry, a protection similar to that which it already received of the King of Prussia. The Emperor, seduced by a vain love of the popularity responded favorably. Freemasonry thus acquired

(1) In this chapter, we have borrowed extensively from an instructive brochure: Der Hammer der Freimaurerei am KaUerthrone der Bahtburger^'ton Annuaire Offeg, 2nd edition, in*80, Amberg and Leipzig 1880. We thus complete {g 2 and 5 of the Chapter XI of Book II, entitled: German Unity and Masonic Work in Austria,

238 LA Fbanc-maconnerie en Autriche

a kind of official recognition in hereditary states silences.

Most of the Austrian and Hungarian lodges was affiliated with the Grand Lodge of Berlin. Between 1771 and 1794 approximately 45 lodges of the different rites (1) existed in the countries of the Austrian monarchy.

The emperor was not rewarded for his condescension. war with Turkey, which troubled the last years of his reign, was the work of sects; it was instigated by diplomacy Prussian mate Herzberg, a Freemason, in concert with Pilt. The head of the Hungarian Freemasons, Count Nicolas Forgatzch, he personally went to Berlin to prepare, with Herzberg, an uprising in Hungary. The Illuminati, led by Mar-Tinovicz, the provost of Oedenburg, gave it their full support. (2) This is a tactic that the Prussian court has since adopted. frequently used in its struggles with Austria.

We have said elsewhere (Book II, Chapter V, § 4) what part The members of the lodges had, in the attacks against Joseph II, to the discipline of the Church. Their treacherous flattery drove them to This prince is increasingly heading down a disastrous path, which is wicked the education he received from his father had predisposed him to embrace all the errors of modern sophists. He wanted, at the end of his reign, to suppress sects and claimed, in 1789, to subject to surveillance the police launches the meetings of the Freemasons; but he does not was able to repair the harm he had allowed to happen. Francis II, in In 1794, he took more energetic measures. He absolutely prohibited Freemasonry and demanded that every official lend the oath that he did not belong to any secret society. The pro The spread of evil was thus largely halted, and it was at long standstill opposed to the invasion of Freemasonry which we must attribute to preserve the Catholic faith among the Austrian people lique, patriotic sentiment and sound social principles. The sects only became more determined to destroy of this noble monarchy. The delenda .iMxtna is, with lelftfa

(t) V. der Zirkél^ organ dUr Wienct-Loge lîumanüat, 1 Juli 1874. In 1749, the first lodge of the Strict obtervance of the Uuod system was foodéo at Prague.

(1) Cf. in Michaud's Universal Biography, art. Marlinovicz, and in this volume-ci the indications given book III, chapter I*', § 9.

Freemasonry in Cisleithania 239

pedibus destruey has since become one of the dominant directions Tests of the politics of secret societies.

During the reigns of Francis II and Ferdinand, the Freemason

a certain number of followers in the upper social circles, among the students, professors, merchants who traveled abroad outside, and were affiliated with foreign lodges, with those from Prussia and Saxony mainly. That is how "there exists There are more Freemasons in Austria than is generally believed; they are attached to a foreign center," as Freimau says. rerZeitung of July 11, 1874.

In 1848, in the aftermath of the revolution, which broke out in the In the streets of Vienna, a lodge was formed under the title of St. Joseph. She had as her venerable Dr. Ludwig Lewis, professor at the academy of engineers. On July 22nd, this lodge received its consecration. Institution of the Grand German Lodge of Berlin. The restoration the monarchy soon forced the brothers to interrupt their work ostensible values, and the ancient edicts that forbade Freemasonry nothing was reinstated.

2. – Freemasonry in Cisleithania since 1860

After 1859, Freemasonry began to raise its head again. Under the ministries of Schmerhng and Belcredi, steps were taken They were done to achieve official recognition. They were unsuccessful. thanks in part to the publication of one of the most remarkable writings Quables of Eckert: Die Frage der siaatlichen Annerkennung des Freimawrerordens in Oesterreich vor der Richtersthul der offentlichen Meinung gebracht und beantwortet (Vienna, 1862), The events of 1866 completely changed the situation. News of the Sadowa disaster was met with the Viennese Freemasons with demonstrations of joy not ambiguities. They were able to start immediately afterwards against the Church a legislative struggle, the development of which has been halted only by the will of the sovereign (see book II, chapter XI, § 4), and at the same time they worked towards the unification of Al-^ Lemagne under the rule of Prussia. Masters of the press,

240 Freemasonry in Austria

of which all the Viennese organs belong to them, to the only with the exception of the Fatherland; masters of the stock exchange by the Jews, their allies, they wield an influence out of all proportion with their numbers. The electoral law made by their affiliates gives the chambers the means to impose their policy to the vast majority of the nation, who are repelled by it as much by social reasons rather than religious motives. Not satisfied. In order to exert real influence, the sect wants to assert itself. From the 19th January 1868, under the ministry of Count de Beust, a rescript im- Périal removed the clause from the oath of civil servants by the

Despite the theoretical maintenance of laws that defend Freemasonry, a society of Freemasons – we don't say a lodge – was formed in Prague under the title of di'Amiciay and was recognized by the government. In Vienna, the Freemasons formed a non-political society^ according to the statutes, under the title of Hu^ Manitas. Its president is F.. Franz Julius Schneeberger (1). It quickly grew to over 200 members, all high well-placed and wealthy, and founded affiliated societies in the provinces related. The members of the Humanitas society meet at Neudorf, on Hungarian territory, to carry out work regular Masonic lodges. The Hungarian government recognized officially. It was solemnly opened on February 25th. 1872, and the deputy, Grand Master of the Grand Orient of Hungary, the f.. Liditeinstein, stated on this occasion that the Hu- company Manitas formed the crystallization nucleus of the future great Austrian lodge. Lef. *. Lewis, Venerable Master of 1848, He wrote, for his part, that "the Vienna Freemasons' Society,

"as well as the Neudorf lodge demonstrate an activity "which is not surpassed by any lodge, and which many lodges an-"Cians should agree that they have to take their model from "their younger sister (2)." She has been publishing a journal since 1869.
special masonic under this title: Der Zirkel (the compass).

Following personal rivalries, another group, calling itself The International Circle of Freemasons was formed in Vienna and created several other similar circles in the provinces.

(1) Brother Schneeberger, a telegraph engineer, wrote many novels under the pseudonym Arthur Storch.

(2) Dr. Lewis, Geschichte der Freimaurerei in Oesterreich und in Ungarn, Leipzig, 1872.

Freemasonry in Oisleithania 241

11 also publishes a newspaper, VAllgemeine Oesterreisehe Freimaurer Zeitung. These two wealthy and numerous centers work together. to spread Masonic ideas throughout all classes of the population (1). If they persistently demand recognition official birth of the government, – it has always been to them refused – it's less about having more freedom of action (they don't may wish for more), than to assert their power in the eyes of the people. The liberal newspapers of Vienna have publicly acknowledged the dependence where they are lodges by the The vigor with which they supported this request. The reason that One of them points out the curious point: "The Austrian lodges are subjected to foreign influences. The day a grand lodge
"If it were established in Vienna, these influences would disappear! (2)"

In any case, the German Masonic powers, no particularly the Grand Lodge of Bayreuth, in 1873, testified publicly expressed the interest they attached to this recognition session.

In 1874, there were ten Masonic societies in Oisleithania. Since then, several new lodges have been founded.

Ever since the German writer we are analyzing wrote these pages, the Austrian government appears to have woken up from its tor-
-fear. Lef.*. Henri Palak, a member of the Zukunfly lodge, had re-produced in the journal of this lodge, Allgemeine Oestereische Freimaurer Zeitung^ a translation of a speech delivered at the lodges the Justice of Paris, entitled: Progress through the ages when Christianity was odiously attacked. The par-
The Vienna prosecutor sued the newspaper's publisher and editor. which suspended its publication (3). The lodges have not obviously with the current ministry the favor they found at near Messrs. Herbstet and Giskra. However, the repression did not might not have been very energetic. For, in 1881, the Zirkel^ l'or-gane of the other Masonic group VHumanitas^ signaled with confidence in the activity of the lodges of Oisleithania (4).

(1) Correspondence from Vienna in the Freimaurer Zeitung of August 20 (874.

(2) Cited in the brochure Der Hammer der Freimaureret, p. 34.

(3) BuUetiu of the Grand Symbolic Scottish Lodge, May 1880.

(4) Reproduced by the Chatne d'Union, 1881. p. 437.

III

16

242

Freemasonry in Austria

U

3. – Hungarian Freemasonry

As in Vienna, some lodges had been founded in Hon-Grie in 1848. One of them, in Pesth, had taken the title of Kossuth

The point was that Freemasonry embraced the revolutionary program of Kossuth.

After 1861, some Freemasons, Dr. Lewis, the former venerable Viennese of 1818, Edouard Caroly, Stephan Estherasy, Julien Tcleky, Baron Béla Bay, Georges Comaromy, the Two counts, Theodore and Coloman Czaky, tried to constitute to kill a lodge; but it was still necessary to wait for new Misfortunes befell the monarchy. We see from the names that We have just described how sect propaganda is carried out in certain upper regions of society, independently ment of the regular functioning of the lodges (1).

The Hungarian Freemasons were no less active in this regard. during the fateful year of 1866.

La Marmora's work, Un po più di luce, teaches us that Mr. Bismarck had sent to one of his agents in Italy, Mr. von Bernhardi, the order to enforce a camp plan a plan developed by Italian revolutionaries and Hungarian émigrés gross, and based on an insurrection in Hungary. The IT. •. Klapka and Kossuth were to be at the head of the movement. We saw (Book II, (Chapter XI, § 4, note) that, as early as 1863, Hungarian émigrés had formed among them a Grand Orient, of which the ge-General Turr, and whose honorary grand master was Kossuth. The Hungarian Freemasons residing in the country followed his impulse. We read in a note from Mr. d'Usedom to the general La Marmora, June 12, 1806 (2), these words relating to one of the Counts Czaki named above

(1) From that conslalaliou of a fact that must never be lost sight of when one It deals with a general policy issue; we should not conclude that in our This thought suggests there is no interest for a conservative government in prohibiting it Freemasonry is legally prohibited. This prohibition considerably hinders its access tion and completely prevents its spread in the middle classes and lower segments of the population.

(2) This dispatch was published by the Opinione on January 29, 1874, and by the Germania of February 3 and 4, 1874, without raising any contradiction on its autben-

Hungarian Freemasonry 243

Regarding the Hungarian Affair, Count Gzaki, whom you have addressed at the time and which I, in turn, had recommended to the count Bismarck recently visited Berlin, where he found a very Good welcome.

The Leipzig Bauhutte, dated March 17, 1866, announced, from its On the other hand, secret lodges were being organized in all the counties peel the formation. They were to support the action of the organized legion nised by Klapka on Prussian territory (1).

The rapid pace of military events rendered this work unnecessary. underground. More peaceful days awaited the Hungarian brothers. After the establishment of dualism, it was accepted that the edicts Imperial decrees prohibiting Freemasonry had no legal value. in the kingdom of St. Stephen. The lodges were thus formed. since then ostensibly, and a Liberal ministry approved expressly, on October 6, 1858, the founding statutes of the Lodge V Unity of the Fatherland in Pest. A Grand Lodge for the lo- The Johannites were formed in 1870 and numbered approximately 20 lodges in its dependency from 1874.

Shortly after the government's recognition of the lodge of Pesth, in June 1869, a certain number of émigrés honored They constituted a Grand Orient for the high Scottish degrees. Among them was General Turr, Georges Joannovics, who more toi'd became Minister of Religious Affairs of Hungary (cf. book II, chapter 1). XI, § 4), Baron Albert Nyary, August Von Rubiny, Count Theodore Gzaki. This new Masonic power was not nothing other than the public and official constitution of the Grand- The Hungarian East was established in Italy in 1863. General Turr has ceded the grand mastership to Brother Joannovics, Minister of Religious Affairs of the kingdom, to save appearances. In 1873, it counted 18 affiliated lodges and 1,004 brothers. This last figure may appear... It may be insignificant, but we will appreciate it differently when we know that among these brothers are 22 members of Parliament (2),

(1) The account above should be compared to that of a similar project prepared by Mazzini, Victor-Emmanuel and Garibaidi in 1891 and 1862 (see in this volume, Book III, Chapter VII, page 10 and Chapter VIII, page 3). It should be noted that General excluded by the group of Hungarian émigrés linked to Mazzini; Mr. Bismarck, on the contrar resorts to him and other Hungarian Freemasons, whose names indicate the origin an aristocratic woman.

(2) Among these we also find a Count Julien Gzaky, who in 1872/ was the venerable master of the Hungaria lodge in Pest.

244 Freemasonry in Austria

"#

144 public officials, 155 merchants, 87 lawyers, 74 doctors cins, 46 landowners, 34 professors, 17 architects, 15 actors (1), 13 innkeepers, 8 writers, 8 newspaper editors, 3 Protestant pastors.

Freemasonry thus has an official position in the kingdom addressed himself publicly to the Grand Orient of Pest, for him to request support for hospitals and certain charitable institutions. The Zirkelf of Vienna, naturally greeted as a fact This recognition by the Hungarian government is considerable. of Freemasonry as a social institution.

What is the political role of Hungarian Freemasonry?

Led primarily by former emigrants, it cannot than being hostile to the Habsburg dynasty, against which She conspired for so long with the help of Prussia and Italy lie. A Hungarian correspondent for the Union Chain (March) (1874, p. 187) wrote to him this: "Thanks to the action of those of our "brothers who hold important public and social positions" Your aunts, we hope to break the influence of Rullramontanism "which until now has dominated almost without obstacles in the "the ruling house of the Habsburgs, and through this we will come to "€ to also bring light to Austria."

In 1881, the lodge of the A^xciens friends of Pesth published to the triennial report of its work. It has created several several humanitarian institutions are keen to consolidate its influence local. Among other subjects that have been the topic of dissertations or conferences within the lodge, the report cites the following which indicate the political scope of its activity: 1® La Franc- Can Freemasonry exert an effective influence against corruption? reigning tion? And in what way? – 2® What is the superstition and how to combat or restrict it domain (2)?

It is well known that Freemasonry means corruption everywhere legitimate authority, and, through superstition, Christianity. The Ma Hungarian nonsense is just reusing the old masks under which French Freemasonry fought against in the 18th century.

(1) Before 1789, in France, actors also appeared in very large numbers in the boxes.

(2) Cited by the Chain of Union, 1881, p. 437.

245

4. – The completion of the unification of Germany

The Austrian lodges are closely linked to the Prussian lodges. their own. It is on these that they have relied since 1848 tally. 11 We must not delude ourselves into thinking that they are a preparation tion to the dismemberment of Austria, to the absorption of its pro-

On this point, Mazzini agreed with Palmerston's plan (Book II, Chapter IX, § 8). In the instructions he gave in 1851 to the revolutionary action committees, he expressed himself thus:

For Austria, one word says it all; Delenda est Austria. But over there the subversive principles of authority, on which one could rely, are not widespread. Therefore, the usual methods cannot be used elsewhere. But fortunately, alternative routes are available to us: we are exploiting the rivalry between different nationalities. You know—what, from this point of view, we can do for our goal in Italy, in Hungary and in the Slavic countries. In all these countries we will have to go through many periods of transition. But once

If unity has been broken, we will have already gained a great deal.

To create difficulties for Austria, we cannot be too active in London, Paris, and even, when possible, Berlin. I have since without reason to believe that the efforts of those who serve our interests secretly achieve some success in this regard in Berlin. Delenda est Austria is the first and last word of the action against this empire. We must seize Prussia by appealing to its pride.

military and its susceptibility. Austria must be seized in excise by pitting the various peoples of which it is composed against one another (1).

A few years pass. In 1859, the national PCTRTI LU German politician halts his program, composed of..., in Gotha five following articles:

1. Formation of a large, united national party, with the same position vis-à-vis Prussia, which the Constitutionals had previously taken vis-à-vis Piedmont.

(1) The Journal des Débats of May 16, 1851 published in extenso the instructions.

246 LA Freemasonry ex Altriche

2. This party is completely turning away from Austria. Consequently he awaits the moment when this empire will be dissolved by a new national movement in its provinces. Then the German provinces from Austria will unite of themselves with Germany.

3. Current activity is limited to moral agitation, which excludes all violence, to bring the entire people to the conviction that, only,

Prussia,

4. The moment of action is that in which France, through agitations internal processes, which will soon follow, will force her to allow them to be fulfilled. the constitution of Germany. Presumably, this will be the moment where Piedmont will come to the aid of an insurrection in Veneto and where Austria will be occupied elsewhere. This situation would ensure success. On the other hand, a premature attempt would fail due to the opposition of Franco, Austria and Bavaria.

5. Prussia's role should now be to prepare for the union
Finally, by adopting a progressive popular policy at home and by encouraging popular uprisings against governments (1)

In 1859, wouldn't Prussia have begun to play the great of part without a confluence of circumstances^ on which the The truth is far from being revealed? Still.*? The fact remains that in 1866, M de Bismarck had adopted both the program of the Gotha party and that of Mazzini. He made the latter give the latter assurance in this memorandum of 1867, which we have reproduced (book III, Chapter IX, § 2) and where we read this sentence: "The people who have "The events of 1814, 1818 and 1866 are the true ally of the one who has "Done in 1848, 1819 and 1860. At the end of the year, Germany "will have to form a single powerful state, extending from the Balti^ "only the Alps, from the Rhine to the ViHule and the Dvina; Italy does not "will no longer have provinces in the hands of foreigners; or "Neither Vune nor Vautre would have understood their situation re- "Reciprocal."

As for the part that the German lodges played in the realization testimonials abound regarding the success of this program. Here are, among others: others, the words spoken by the f.*. Roennefahrt to a Solstice festival, March 22, 1869, in Stendal:

The King of Prussia is not only our king, but also a member Brother of our Order and protector of Freemasonry. My brothers, we

(1) This program was published in the I>re$dener~Journal of August 21, 1859.

COMPLETION OF THE UNIFICATION OF GERMANY 247

We have all lived through the events of 1866, which led, for all the questions of the present, such an unexpected and decisive solution. Yes, the The great Architect of the universe, who created everything and who ensures that the stars do not deviate from their orbit, also contributed to the advent the formation of a united Germany to this new constitution to which we worked with the utmost zeal for the happiness of the nation German. Just as Jehovah once said to David and Solomon: Ba- Weave me a dwelling in which I may live with my little

Santa said to our king: Unite all the German tribes into one
A great empire that is their homeland, so that in the end I may find satisfaction in this people whom I love despite their discord, despite their tendencies centrifuges and his mercantile spirit. King William undertook to acc-to complete this work. But who could serve this work more effectively than We ?...

This great work still has many enemies and adversaries.
So let us pledge to conduct ourselves like champions unwavering steadfastness of our king in his battles against these dark powers hateful and odious, who deny the Eternal.

Let us now compare these words with another speech held in an Austrian box, at the time of the World's Fair:

Of the princes attracted by the exhibition, none excites more our sympathy than the Emperor of Germany, HM Wilhelm, our crowned brother. Has not our heart breathed more joyfully?
When did we learn the final news of his arrival? Don't you Shouldn't we be proud when we look upon these princes, who belong to our Order and preside over it with all their soul? His re
The response to His Infallible Holiness, Pope Pius IX, was published at point, shortly before his arrival. By this, this prince removed all the symbols the paths of the Viennese and almost made them forget the injuries he caused to Austria. You already know that the ultramontane leaves, do not permit not having the opportunity to present William and Bismarck as being closely linked with Freemasonry. I will not learn, either nothing new to the brothers, telling them that King William is a champion of light and truth, all the more unshakeable and acting, that he is a Freemason in the fullest sense of the word.
This talent and service should be attributed to the honor of art.
royal (1).

(1) Reproduced by Zirkely issue of August 15, 1874.

248 Freemasonry in Austria

Zirkely, organ of the Masonic society Humanitas, ex-premium thus in its issue of May 15, 1874:

We live in wonderful times. In ten years, things are accomplished Events that once took centuries to unfold. Wars formidable battles took place: all were wars of liberation, that whether it be for the liberation from servitude of millions of men who, in the southern states, they were treated like merchandise; that this either for the breaking of the chains and barriers that had been erected against freedom, powers and dynasties, which had no opposition to these rights eternal as the principles of legitimacy, principles aged and become innocuous such as are applicable to modern times – that is to say, the wars of 1889 and of 1866. – These powers fell by virtue of a fundamental law by virtue of which the tree dies, when the sap is dried up, and the man I cease to live when the soul has flown away.

One could not more clearly incite insurrection and treason his against the Austrian dynasty and homeland.

CHAPTER TWELFTH

Masonic work from 1852 to 1870

§ 1. – Freemasonry at the time of the coup d'état

In 1848| in some localities, particularly in the South, The conservatives had believed they could make lodges of their own quality of the branches on rue de Poitiers. They did not collect any no real political gain, but only unpleasant memories pleasant, sometimes awkward. The vast majority of lodges had, on the contrary, strongly involved in what was then called the social movement. Also, immediately after the coup, The government demanded the suspension of lodge meetings. fearing that they might be used as rallying points to the socialist insurgents. But this ban was lifted as soon as the mid-January 1852.

Louis-Napoleon, who at that very moment was gathering in Paris a convent of the leaders of secret societies and who dealt with them (Book II, Chapter X, § 2), could not show hostility towards the Ma-Nonsense.

Far from it, he wanted to take advantage of the new legislation on the mutual aid societies (decree-law of March 26, 1852) for to recognize Freemasonry as an institution of utility public. The Grand Orient was perfectly suited to this; but the project

250 Masonic Work from 1852 to 1870

the prince-president encountered such fierce resistance in the con-upper echelon of mutual aid societies where, alongside high officials, there were several independent men, no especially Viscount Armand de Melun, that this proposal was abandoned. Louis-Napoleon reserved the right to return to it later.

Meanwhile, as the administration was mainly relying on, at that time, to the Catholic and conservative forces, the Ma stupidity, though secretly protected, invaded elsewhere on certain points by the technical elements, had to observe a large She exercised caution and avoided getting involved in day-to-day politics. She... withdrew into itself, but only worked more actively at to attack the church thoroughly, that is to say, to undermine Christian beliefs yourselves, to destroy faith in souls, to seize control of education youth organization.

S 2. – A prophetic revelation by Bishop Pie in 1858

The official overseers who had been given to the lodges did not- They may not have been complicit in these plans. The Freemasons they themselves declared that Prince Murat was "not very expo- "Mento still clings to the occult dogmas of this institution of "Charity and relief." Marshal Magnan, after receiving, one morning, the thirty-three degrees of the Scottish Rite, he said laughing that he didn't know the first thing about Masonic matters ques (1).

But the official authorities are of little importance in France. masonry and the currents that propel it forward become established, Whether these authorities like it or not. There is everything days in the middle of it a few avant-garde boxes which were ahead a hundred and lead the others.

It was at this time, in 1855, that a lodge in Liège adopted this program of f.*. Gofiïn, which became, a few years later, pelui of all Freemasonry (v. book II, chap. XII, S 6).

(1) The Freemasonⁿ of February-March 1852, p. 117, cl Liéponce du f.-. Viennet , to the circular of Marshal Magnan, Grand Master of the Grand Orient of France (1862), p. 22.

A PROPHETIC WARNING FROM Mgr Pius 251

The f." Edgard Quinet, professor at the Collège de France under the reign of Louis-Philippe, and then a refugee in Belgium, wrote at roughly the same time as this page:

The fight is serious and all-out. It is not only a matter of re- to eradicate papism* but to extirpate it; not only to dishonor it, but, as required by the ancient Germanic law against adultery, of

For me, I believe it's not too late to crown this end of the century by some great and memorable change of which the Posterity would preserve the memory. If the 16th century tore away half of Europe in chains of the papacy, is that too much to ask of the 19th century? that he complete the half-finished work... What then must be done? Religious despotism cannot be eradicated without the exit of the Legality: blind, it calls upon blind force against itself... Get out of the Old Church, you, your wives, your children. Leave by all means. open; go out, and if, through events I do not know, Providence He's reaching out to you again, take his hand. Don't give in to the world the spectacle of men who, unable to become accustomed to defeat, yet they never want to take advantage of the victory (1).

Father Renan wrote at the same time:

The physical temples of the real Jesus will crumble; the tabernacles where One thinks one can hold his flesh and blood, and they will be shattered; already the roof day, and the water from heaven comes to wet the face of the kneeling believer.

And some time later, announcing an edition of the (Bu-Voltaire's words:

The new edition that is being prepared of the works of this great man will satisfy the need that the present moment seems to feel to make a A response to the encroachments of theology; a bad response in itself. but adapted to what is to be fought (2).

The illustrious Bishop of Poitiers followed with his keen insight. the intellectual and moral movement of the time. In its magnificent In his synodal instructions of 1857 and 1858, he affirmed that the anti-Christian philosophical systems of Cousin and his disciples, would not always remain in the spheres where they pre-

(1) Introduction by Mr. Quinet to the Table of Disputes, the drafting, by Van Mamix do Bt0'Âldegonde (Brussels, 1857, 4 vols. iu-8*).

(2) Studies in religious history, Revue des Deux-Mondes, September and October 1857.

252 Masonry Work from 1852 to 1870

0

tended to hold them; that they would soon come down, that they would remove already down, on the practical field.

"The organization of rationalism," he added, "is the fact that

"EUROPEAN has formed, a universal ASSOCIATION"
"was established with the avowed aim of forming an army corps"
"who can gloriously resist the doctrines that Con wants
"To impose on the human mind through revelation."

The great bishop pointed out the international character of Celtic association and indicated Holland as one of its main homes (1).

S 3. – A center of free thought in Holland in 1857

Since the time of Spinoza (Book II, Chapter II, § 3; the Hol-Lande has always been one of the centers of the anti-Christian base, and if it did not provoke the same political upheavals there and social issues than in neighboring countries, perhaps because it has wanted to secure a safe place for himself among this small people from where it could spread its ravages far and wide with impunity (2).

In 1855, a few Dutch freethinkers and positivists,
The brothers* d'Ablaing, Günst, Junghün founded next to and under the patronage of the famous Post Nubila Lux lodge, of which we di-we will discuss history elsewhere (Book III, Chapter XIV), a review called the Dageraad or the Point of Day:

The first issue of this magazine tells the story of the Masonic world (3), appeared in August 1855. Our common idea, said Mr. d'Ablaing, there was sketched out through various small trials, all openly attacking the fanaticism of the so-called Christian Church, all tending to propagate the a-to die for the truth and to break the yoke of blind faith. Despite the obstacles countless incitements by the clergy, the influence of the journal com-begins to make itself felt at the end of the first year, and the circle of The free thinkers movement gradually expanded. At that time, the critics

(1) Synodical introduction of 1858, Selected Works, vol. I, p. 265 (Oudin, ed., in-8*).

(2) We saw in the Secret Societies and the Society (liv, II, cüap. XIII, g 1) that the
The first stirrings of the League of Education were born in Hollaado in 1784.

(3) N* of January 1864.

t)N HOME OF FREE THOUGHT IN THE HOLLAND 253

àxiL dageraaà announced in the newspapers that, on October 8, 1856, they would gather in one of Amsterdam's largest public halls Damn, all those who, sympathetic to their work, would like to co-opt it to manage personally. Only fifty people dared to reply found the Dageraad association.

The Dageraad association grew rapidly. Almost all the Readers of the Review asked to participate. The meetings were numerous and frequent. The discussions never ceased, fraternally, that when some theologian, misled in this sanctuary of free thought, attempted, by known methods, to defend the Bible and Christian dogma had nothing to do with this assembly. wheat.

A year later, on October 4, 1857, the Dageraad convened a universal congress of freethinkers, in which sixty- took part five people from both Holland and neighboring countries, and who In addition, it received numerous memberships.

The secretary's report noted that the association corresponded with the Revue philosophique, of Paris, with the Jahrbuch of Hamburg, with the weekly reviews of London: The Reasoner, The London investigator, The Humanistic journal; with the English Humanists and Secularists; with Ragione, from Turin; with the quarterly review, the National, the Congress liberal, from Brussels. During the Congress, the association of Dageraad recommended that freethinkers frequent the University of Brussels (1).

The f.*. of Albaing had some passing difficulties with the lodge Post nubila lux, but it was this one that yielded and which, one of the first, eliminated the formula of the great architect of the universe. He became venerable a few years later.

He also maintained relations with Ronge, the famous founder of Rongism or the party of the Free Communes of Germany Magne.

"There is something more to this than just passions or individual errors, he said in 1858, when recounting these events, a man of great perspicacity. There is a whole organization European sation; and if, to this picture, we add what has happened denying us any bias against the revelation in the work of (!) speeUnSeur, December 23, 1857.

254 MASONIC WORK

Mr. Maury, whom an entire society of scholars and professors, of rUniversitô, has chosen as an introduction to a new story universal; if we take into account the role played by rationalism the Franco Institute, in the person of so many scholars and literary figures, whose writings are constantly and systematically directed against revelation; of the reception that theatre and literature erasure, in general, that poetry more or less sensual or im-pie, and even street songs, magazines, novels, Newspapers and even some almanacs make daily contributions to doctrines thus professed in high places, it will be recognized that there are would be more dangerous than prudent to show in a society thus worked and circumvented a satisfactory spectacle for the faith and reassurance for the future; in the enemies who besiege him Everywhere, simple and innocent sheep unintentionally taken from the home. 11 There is a European league, vast, active, powerful, having his head in the highest echelons of the scholarly world, like his means action within a portion of the teaching staff and the press, extending its affiliations throughout all parts of the social body, and whose avowed aim is the annihilation in Europe of all belief based on revelation. (1)

It should be added that the magazine Dageraad was thriving. had 1864 (2). As for the Post nubila Itir logo, its influence has not never ceased to be very large, and today it attracts to itself the major part of Dutch Freemasonry (see book III, ch. XIV).

S 4. – The Universal Religious Alliance

French Freemasonry followed this trend. In 1854, at within the lodges is founded the universal religious association external tion that sought to confuse the members of all the cults on the terrain of rationalism with these three bases: in-Violability of conscience, absolute religious freedom, right to

(1) MH d'Ànsolme, in the Revue dit monde païen, January 1858 issue, article entitled: the Rationalüme organite.

(9)V. Arnaud Ueut, La Franc-maçonnerie eoumiieau grand Jour^ (om. I, page 185.

ORIGIN OF THE LAWS OF BROTHERS PERRY AND PAUL BRIEF 255

free inquiry. The logic of the French spirit has vindicated this. hypocrisy, which consisted of giving the label of nun to a association directed essentially against all kinds of religion. But the lodges did not cease to be patrons for several years, as a means of external grouping of all the ele-

Does she know how to translate the innermost doctrine of the lodges? We have before their eyes, a Masonic instruction for the degree of apprentice taken, published at that time, and whose author declares that he has, for to write it, consulted the works of J. Simon, of Abbé Lame-nais, of Abbé Châtel, of Pierre Leroux, of Platon Blanchard, of Gentil de Cabagnet, as well as a large part of the rituals made by Conic (2). The god Apis and Jehovah are placed on the same footing, treated as pious follies, good for the people as if instrument of social discipline: "Freemasonry does not 'Don't be fooled,' it says; 'she seeks to destroy the error, and sur-' 'All religious errors can be corrected through true and reasoned instruction' of which she has so many resources at her disposal." The authors Those to whom this instruction refers were all masons; this indicates sufficiently the role they played in the great anti-Christian propaganda of the sect. Father Deschamps was therefore very right. In his book I of his work to constantly bring closer their writings on lodge rituals to establish the doctrine of the Masonry.

§5. – The Laws of Brothers Ferry and Paul Bert prepared

IN 1859

Bishop Pie pointed out in the synodal instruction that we recall* lions higher up. Importance of certain ideas put forward by Eugène Sue. This writer was very involved in the lodges, and the bishop This has shown that his ideas were not solely his own. but these were the plans of the entire sect. Here, in particular, is the plan which he outlined in 1859, in letters to the National, to substitute

(1) On VAlliancee religieuse universelle, see the interesting details given by Alex, from Saint-Albin, The Freethinkers and the League of Education, Paris, 1868, chap. XXV.

(2) In-12(1863) parle f.*. A. Fiseb. See particularly pp.25 et seq.

256 Masonic Work from 1852 to 1870

from atheist schools to Christian schools (1). They contain the entire framework of the laws to which, twenty years later, the ff.-. Ferry and Paul Bert have attached their name.

Here is the defense plan that could be used against the aggression of the en-Nemi:

In order to present my ideas more clearly and concisely, I I will proceed by asking questions and by answering them.

– What would be the first means to employ to combat reaction?
clerical union?

– To remove the generation from his influence and teaching nascent.

– How can this result be achieved?

– By using all the resources made available by the press, by the sorting bure, through oral or printed propaganda, through the legal agitation of the country, in order to penetrate public opinion with this undeniable truth that the MORAL INSTRUCTION of children could be and should be completely outside and distinct from religious instruction.

– What do you mean by moral instruction?

– I understand the teaching of the principles of morality, of justice eternity, – the development of civic virtues, – the filial cult of the homeland, – the love of liberty, – the horror of despotism, – the respect for the laws, – a basic knowledge of duties and rights that the child will one day be called upon to fulfill and exercise as a citizen, teaching that can be formulated in a clear, precise, and appropriate manner scope of the intelligence of the first young person, and summarized in what I will call it the Civic Catechism.

– What arguments would you put forward in favor of education?
is this a summary of the civic catechism?

– This moral education would obviously be superior to that which gives the Catholic Catechism. This one, except for the recommendation of to respect one's parents, – to love one's neighbor, – not to steal, – contains only a fabric of idolatry and lies, a chaos of imposture something incomprehensible to everyone, and even more so to the minds of children, which are thus disturbed, distorted, or perverted forever.

But. – This simple and sole maxim: Know how to die for your homeland and aimed at countering the morale of the youth the most beneficial, the most fruitful action for the future of a little people.

– Let us admit that this opinion, relating to the moral instruction of

(1) The newspaper La Patrie, in its issue of November 2, 1882, reproduced these letters, which Mr. Amand Neut had already included in his large collection.

ouïGÎNE d::s laws of the ff.--. Fehry and Paul Bert 257 children, if it were to become widespread, if it were to become popular, what would be the in order to make it prevail?

– In free countries where the government owns a share of the stock the direct influence it must have on public education, it would be necessary to address to the legislative power of petitions signed by their members and exhibits sant, I suppose, the following:

"Considering that the educational institutions placed under the supervision of..."

"The state's tutelary body, or the colleges it subsidizes, have not

"The mission is to raise young people in the Catholic faith," has Protestants, Jehovah's Witnesses, or Muslims, but to develop among the children entrusted to them the virtues which should constitute

"to one day kill the good man and the good citizen;

Considering that moral education, which alone can produce

"These happy results are completely distinct from the teaching of re-

"religious and is often radically opposed to him;

a. To these causes, – and especially given the boldly

"admitted by the Church in the latest circumstances, – the petitions–

"The unions invite the legislative branch to consult with the government–

"ly, so that, in all educational institutions or colleges pla–

"Created under state supervision, a Mokal education should be given by lay professors appointed to this function, teaching com–

"completely separate from religious instruction that parents will be able to

They should also make sure to give it particularly to their children, if they do not

"They do not find moral teaching sufficient."

– This method seems, in fact, practical and legal, and if it is not Initially successful, it must have a beneficial effect on the es– took to public view. But there is one fact noted in these letters, namely that, – thanks to the considerable and mysterious resources of which it disposes, – the clerical faction raises disastrous rivalries and untenable for secular institutions, – Now, a decreed law so much 'moral teaching separated from religious teaching would have certain training as an immediate result of redoubling the efforts of the clergy against secular educational institutions; and moreover, in several States, they are less numerous than those ruled by priests.

How can this danger be remedied?

– By withdrawing the clergy's authorization to open establishments of public education.

– However, the constitutive principles of modern societies

They are familiar with freedom of worship and freedom of conscience.

– Freedom of worship and freedom of conscience are complete different from academic freedom,

– The State, – especially in the grave circumstances in which we find ourselves,

And unless one wishes to commit suicide, the State must have the right and the

Masonic Work from 1852 to 1870

to have the power to give new generations a rigorous education in accordance with the essential principles of the constitution that governs it, – Therefore, it is the State's duty, in the interest of social welfare, to refuse [this].
 Repentantly, he, his confessed enemies, gave him permission to raise the youth in aversion and in contempt of the fundamental laws of the country.

– Assuming that this is the case, we must not forget that,
 In several nations, freedom of education is recognized and guaranteed.
 protected by law.

– A law can undo what another law has done.

– What steps would need to be taken to obtain a law that would exclude
 The clergy of public intelligence?

– To take advantage of the legitimate indignation currently being provoked among the most moderate minds by the latest episcopal mandates; to further agitate public opinion on this subject through the press, through brochures through discussions and ultimately addressed to the legislative power* Latif, a petition drafted in roughly these terms:

"Considering the maneuvers and the highly declared goal of the "clerical faction, a goal very clearly stated in recent circulars" a laires of the episcopate: to these causes, the petitioners submit to "Legislative authority proposes the following:"

"That no citizen be authorized by the State to open a may-
 "His education if he doesn't belong to the Secular University."

Here we find not only the initial rotation of article 7 of the project presented by Mr. Ferry in 1879, but also the foundation of all the speeches delivered at the Irihune by the ministers and the Republican deputies to repeal the laws destructive to liberty berté (information).

Moreover, the principles laid down by Brother Eugène Sue were not not different from those whom Freemasonry has always supported eonry (v. book I, chap. IV, 3).

G. – The PROTECIIOX of a FRATERN power

AND TOLERANT

The Masonic World wrote in July 1867:

To mouvement idéologique, beaucoup plus accenté et bolder dans French lodges, as well as those in workshops in America and England and memo from Germany, naturally placed the masons of our countries at the forefront of volunteers for the independence of morality and

PROTECTION of a FRATERN AND TOLERANT POWER 259

of thought; but this movement is not exclusively French, as they try to make people believe; it spreads and extends over the Entire masonry.

".

After 1860, instead of receiving impetus from abroad, the French Freemasonry transmits it to neighboring countries.

The Italian War, the role played by the imperial government to the attacks against the Holy See, the official recognition of Freemasonry under the ministry of Mr. de Persigny, don give to the internal movement of the lodges a surge that nothing can will now be able to stop.

In 1863, Brother Hayman, at the Grand Orient's order celebration from France, celebrated the prosperity of Freemasonry in the world whole. He proudly showed "Italian Freemasonry is consummated?" opening up, asserting freedom of thought where "The Holy Office once reigned." Then, addressing the brothers French, he told them: "Protected by a liberating power "And tolerant, your tombs are sacred sanctuaries." Then, their speaking of the role incumbent upon them:

French Freemasons, I will say again, where have you placed your ideal? And However, don't you feel that the old world is dying, that it
We need a new formula, one that humanity, which is awakening, needs.
dogmas appropriate to its aspirations, which the young society that Inonte has A thirst for more harmonious beliefs? And the revealers don't descend no more mountains!

It is up to you, my Brothers, to search for them and discuss them, in the si-the liberation of our temples, these articles of faith of the future.

What were these articles of faith of Vavenir?

In June 1863, the assembly of the Grand Orient declared, to a large majority, that the profession of atheism is not an obstacle to entry into the lodges. The article of the statutes, which states that the Freemasonry is based on belief in God and immortality.

The state of the soul may soon disappear (1). Some lodges, in Hollande, Belgium, and France are taking action from this moment onward. initiator of this suppression. The Grand Orients from which they depend* winds hardly protest and only for the sake of appearances (2).

(1) See this discussion reproduced in the work of Arnaud Nout, La Franc-Maçonnerie submitted to the great light of publicity t. 1, p. 195.

(2) Ilid, t. I, pp. 192, 204, 236, volume II, p. 280.

260 Masonic Work from 1852 to 1870

As in all grave circumstances, the Sovereign Pontific came to hear his voice. In a statement delivered on the 25th September 1852, Pius IX denounced Freemasonry as one of the main agents of the universal war directed against the Church. It signaled its growing development, the impunity which she was assured everywhere, the audacity with which she raised the head.

The Papacy could now only point out the dangers that society. In 1865, most of the governments of Europe were more or less under the influence of Freemasonry. Also could she continue her forward march in complete freedom.

7. – The public courses of the Grand Orient on the street

Cadet, 1804-1865

An eminent man, Dupuy, was memorized to know and judge the events of that era, kindly agreed to write for this the following pages of the work (which show how the protection of fraternal and tolerant power:

In 1801, when Mr. Dupuy wanted to print, by lectures This, a shock to public opinion, he first resorted to professors from the University and then to a few people from outside, (whom he judged worthy of the governor's special favor) ment. To achieve his goal more surely, he changed the jurisdiction caution regarding authorizations for public courses. These authorizations Until then, stations were granted after consultation with the imperial council of public revelation: Mr. Dupuy attributed to himself in this regard a arbitrary power or, more precisely, he eliminated intervention

The entirely moral question of the objects of study and pedagogical aptitude
The political guarantee became entirely secondary; the political guarantee was practically the only one required of applicants. The Bull administrative Latin of the Ministry of Public Instruction has published, in 1864 and 1865, the names of the authorized speakers with indication of the subjects they were to address; therefore, one can see ipi'ello was being conferred.

The public entrances of Grand'Orieijt at 261 Cadet Street

As it was in Paris that the conferences multiplied
The faster the speed, the easier it will be to follow.
the general management and appreciate the spirit in which they were ac corded the government's favors.

We can disregard some lectures given by speakers isolated, because the movement quickly concentrated in four groups receiving nine-tenths of the authorizations: 1®, group of Rue de la Paix; 2nd and 3rd, groups of the Pliilolech- associations nique and Polytechnique; 4®, group do ta rue Cadet and du Grand-
The East. We will not discuss the Sorbonne lectures,
A sort of evening rehearsal, given by state-run teachers, nor the courses of the Practical School of Medicine, which were self-
The Philotechnical and Polytechnique, for its part, innovated little; it did not that they broaden their scope by extending their former [activities] to the general public adult classes. The only two truly new groups that formed in 1864 were the one on Rue de la Paix and the one of the Grand Orient.

The conferences on Rue de la Paix had as their main Mr. Deschanel, the speaker, who was in a way the niece of the house. Some special men, like Messrs. Corlambort, Barrai, Toussenel, Samson had access to it, but the color po
The dispute was marked there by Mr. Deschanel and by the editors of the SièclSy M. Jourdan, from Auriac, etc. M. Vapereau was doing some literary interviews.

It was at the conferences of the Grand Orient that, from the outset, the following were g
The first day saw the most permits issued. Here's what they were.
were the names of the main speakers and the topics they were authorized to trade in December 1804:

MM. Asseline, Anecdotal History of the Formation of Our language.

Borie (Victor), Elements of Agriculture.

Castagnary, Contemporary Art and Main Artists.

Chauvin (Victor), Studies on Lucretius, Virgil, Horace.

Glaretie (Jules), Lafontaine.

Delord (Taxile), Biographical Portraits of Some Women of the Reformation. Voltaire.

Fouquier (Henri), Du théâtre au France.

Hébrard, Elementary questions of common finance.

262 Masonic Work from 1852 to 1870

Messrs. Lcneveu, Doraeslic Economy.

Lissagaray, History of the American War of Independence caine.

Martin (Henri), Some episodes from the beginning of the history of France.

Meunier (Victor), monthly review of the main discoveries scientific and industrial greens.

Pcrdiguicr(Agricol), Ilistuirc du compagnonnage, etc.

Pessard, On Morality in Contemporary Theatre.

Quentin, Travelogues in South America.

Reclus (Flysée), Travelogues in Central America.

Sauvcslre (Charles) (1).

The Giant-Oriental did not only grant its halls to the con farmers; he assured them, in a way, a sympathetic audience ethics.

11 There is no example ([uc the authorizations granted to its speakers have never been removed, which shows the perfect agreement from the administration with the management of the house. From another On the other hand, when we compare the lists of authorized courses in 1864 and In 1805, it was soon noticed that several of the speakers from The voices of those on Rue de la Paix were also heard in the Grand Orient, this which shows that the mind was pretty much the same, and one can re- to know thus, amidst the sometimes bizarre diversities of

ble indicate the strange variety of projects, a true unity of direction, going from rue de Grenelle to rue Cadet. He removed It was natural, moreover, that radjnistrion, who had recognized the Franc-Freemasonry, which spread dictionaries in schools where the Freemasonry was defined as: Charitable association^ dear She found her support among those she herself supported. with so much energy.

From 1865 onwards, the official iïidlctin no longer publicized the Names of speakers. All those (pii) were aware of the facts. and administrative procedures of that sad era, when one saw a governors to commit suicide in rage, have not forgotten that just that after Mr. Duruy's fall, the direction remained the same. The Authorizations remained the privilege of a few; and, as

(I) Administrative Bulletin of the Ministry of Public InslnriicUon, 18C4, (. II, p. 6H

PUBLIC COURSES OF THE GREAT EAST AT RUE CaDET 263

Few people, apart from civil servants, are forced to endure everything. or associates of the Grand Orient, were requesting authorizations, this was within the select circle of the four groups indicated above that so-called free eloquence had to contain its flight.

What happened to a group of talented and convinced writers t ions was not designed to encourage honest people, who would might have taken seriously Mr. Duruy's appeal to the men my goodwill.

Messrs. de Broglie, Guizot, and Cochi had obtained with a few friends, permission to hold conferences on Bona Street parte. Everything was ready: the speakers, the venue, the audience, the authorities The instructions were given, when an order from above stopped all at the very moment classes were about to begin. During this At the time, the most eccentric were allowed on Rue de la Paix and to the Grand Orient. Young's son was seen walking along Rue de la Paix, the founder of Mormonism, with Mr. Fréd. Passy, Mr. Lullicr, Mr. de Tonnon, King of Araucanin, and MJ-.1. Weiss. Sometimes the government wished to obtain pro-grams quite precisely. Thus, Clément Laurier had been somewhat flattered. not being able to give lectures on lawyers, as he proposed to do so. These vague, overly general titles left too much latitude given to the speakers, they gave them a freedom which They could abuse it.

The Grand Orient, however, had undertaken to follow all the Literary movement day by day. H wanted to do a review Spoken bibliography. The goal was quite delicate; we were going to on all the ideas as they were put forward in the spotlight. What discretion in his speech, what certainty In principle, shouldn't we have desired in the one who would entrusted with such a mission! The course was, however, authorized at Grand Orient; the particular trust of the Grand Orient and of the imperial administration was going to seek, for this bibliographic review graphic, Mr. Jules Vallès, the future member of the Commune! (1)

(!) The courses of the Grand Orient continued the IMasonic and nllacitc an grando inii>or'aaco.Lo F.. Saint-Jean, prcsUicnldu Consoi! dj r 0;'dr 3, was at the convent of seploinbro 1882 a ciialcuroux appeal to all the fri'iros to the soulcnir cl the roui" liplicr. The provincial lodges faith-icut in this least of the Férics do oonforencos dan® their cities on this model. At l*.iris la Marotmenc installs adult centers of the same kind in the town halls of the arrondissements.-; , V. la Chainc d'i'niony de dé- December 1882, p. 505.

26 i

Masonic work from 1852 to 1870

§ 8. – The Explosion of Anti-Christianism

Freemasonry, with feverish activity, the conditions such favorable conditions were meted out to him. From 1801 to 1870 his pro Pagande has an intensity and a fervor that witnesses of this Time cannot be forgotten.

In the solstice festival celebrated on February 2, 1881 by the \o^,Qi\di Rose du 2^ar fait silcncG de Paris, «le f.*. Daily a rap~ Pelé believed that independent morality had emerged from the discussions which took place seven years ago in the two narrow lodges united, the Renaissance and the Rose of perfect silence, of which The venerable ones were the ff.-, Caubet and Massol (1).

It is during this period that all the works are formed. works of anti-Christian propaganda, the consequences of which we have seen development after 1877, the Societies of Freethought, the Li- information service, the Elementary Education Society, which are like the two wings, right and left, of the army whose The lodges form the center. Then a multitude of newspapers that spread these ideas among school children and in the workshops: VEcologic, Free Consciousness, VHorizon, the Resistant, Solidarity, journal of principles, Cooperation tion, ephemeral leaves, but which succeed one another and maintain fermentation in all the impure elements of the Nationally, the Masonic world highly recommends them. thus attesting to the link that unites him to the lodges. From 1864 onwards, the lodges from Paris and the provinces are carrying out adoption ceremonies and baptisms raaçonnii(ues (2).

We can only mention this movement here: it has been described and followed in detail in the admirable brochures of Bishop Dupanloup; in the documents collected with such care gacité by Mr. Amand Neut; enliiii, in the work of Mr. de Saint-Albin, entitled: Freethinkers and the League of Ven-

(t) V. The Masonic Mummy of tn.irs 1881. Cf. Introduction, g iv.

(2) V, The Masonic World, March 1807. V. Sl-Albin, The Lihret pen$eu$es and the League of Education, p. 31-13.

the explosion of anti-Christianity 263

teaching published in 1808. Upon rereading this latter work, in seeing the activism deployed by the lodges during these years, we recognizes that this was the initial driving force of the entire movement which followed. One is particularly struck by the efforts made from this period onwards than the lodges to seize control of education.

We wanted, said one of their members, *. Félix Rocquain, in 1868, that all teaching be excluded from the domain of public education religious and dogmatic organization, along with any interference personal of the clergy. And it would be wrong to believe that, in our thinking In this case, this proscription only affected Catholicism. It is in our wish that no minister of any religion whatsoever, Catholic that, Protestant, Israelite, no one interferes in any capacity whatsoever in the teaching questions (1).

We saw in the work of Father Deschamps {Uv. II, chap. XII, § 6) the initiative taken by the Grand Orient, regarding the famous formula: - Free, secular and compulsory education.

But what is absolutely striking, what indicates the plan secret, planned and pursued through all obstacles with té- The nascent thing is to see the secondary education of young girls demanded by the lodges, twelve and fifteen years before Brother Paul Bert took over Mr. Duruy's work.

The 1st, the Amiens Renovation, proposed as a subject of con- courses for its solstice festival of 1867:

The education and instruction of women - what they have been in the past, - what they are today, - what they could be and

National Opinion said at the same time, in its number of November 20, 1867:

Let's start first with the education of women. That's the question vital for the country.

School added, number of December 1867:

Secondary education for girls is not established in France. It does not. It will only be on a broad and democratic basis that we do not find point here, and, then kid, it will only have substance if freedom and

(1) The newspaper l'Echo, number of December 1, 1868.

2GC Masonic Work from 1852 to 1870

With good sounds succeeding laws of privilege and prejudice, the professions become accessible to women (1).

And here we are faced with a universal program of Freemasonry. On the same date, "the League of Education for Belgium is pursuing its goal by seeking to develop the end—they would teach girls (2)."

In Italy, we hear the same echo:

The adoption lodge "Etendard de charité", whose sisters take care of with so much care and charity from the asylum and workshop of Naples, a voted an address to F. Vesuviano Salvatore Morelli, O.S.A., of Florence this, Member of Parliament, to thank him for the bill on the rehabilitation of the woman he presented at the last session (3).

At that time, in April 1870, Mr. Jules Ferry held a conference under the chairmanship of Mr. Jules Simon at name of the Society for Elementary Education. It ends born from this declaration:

He who holds the woman, he holds everything, first of all because he holds the child, then because he holds the husband, not perhaps the husband young, swept away by the storm of passions, but the husband is tired or disappointed through life. That is why the Church wants to restrain women, and that is That is also why democracy must choose, under penalty of dead.

A choice must be made; it must belong to science or it must be... partienne to the Church (i).

In 1808, the Paris mutual school received as franca young doctor of medicine, Mr. Grenier, whose thesis brutally malignant, it had been reported by Bishop Dupanloup. in his pamphlet, The Signs of the Times. Mr. Grenier had write this:

Patriotism, the principal virtue of antiquity, is nothing other than this.
that the altruistic instinct is limited to the homeland. Therefore, this feeling goes into

(1) V. SuAlbin, Les libres penseuses et la L>oue de l'enseignement, chap. XXIX ol XXX

(2) Letter from Mr. Jean-Marie to U. Bador in the 15th issue of the League, decombru 1800,

(3) Lo Masonic World, scplenil)ro 1807.

(4) ItuUelin of the society for elementary education, year 1870, p. 156.

the explosion of anti-Christianity 267

decreasing, and while it was progress at the beginning of history, of The time will come, perhaps they have already come, when this way of our...
will be that of the reaction, of the cessation of development, a vice (1).

This was the doctrine that Freemasonry acclaimed and adopted.

At that time, the UEcole mutuelle grouped together many of the men who, under the Third Republic, would become the masters of France. Among them were the fT.*. Pelletan, Hendlé, Goulon, Constans, Hérissou, Tirard, André Rousselle, Delattre, Dréo, Murat.

A few days later, Mr. Jules Simon had spoken from the podium from the Legislative Body the clearest expression of impious doctrines in the discussion of the press law:

I demand, for religions, the right to be insulted... Rest assured that Anyone who has lived by the power of reason is with us in this.
demand; rest assured that we are being followed, not only in France, but in Europe, through all universities, through all the pro-teachers, by all those who honor themselves with the name of philosopher, by all those for whom the title of freethinkers is regarded as an honor and like a glory. Well! thanks God, the battalion is large (2).

The men of September 4th were ready, as we can see, on all fronts.
the line, and their program was completely shut down. But for some the consecration that only Masonic affiliation gives was going to be received as a Freemason in the lodge "Le Réveil maçonnique" of Boulogne-sur-Seine. Attending this ceremony were the most of the deputies from the Seine, says the report (3).

At the same time, the question of freedom of education The superior question was posed and discussed in the press and in a com- extra-parliamentary mission. Two distinguished Freemasons, the f.*. Dolfus and Mr. Michelet were discussing the best a way to destroy the clerical worm, the year arguing that for this It was better to give freedom of education, the other than he It was safer to refuse her. That was the only thing that divided them.

(1) See Le Monde maçonnique, May 1868. J. do Mousme, La Ligue de l'enseignement, p. 49. The Universal Yearbook of Freemasonry of all rites, by the f.*, Pion, 3rd ed., 1867, in-3°. Paris.

(2) Official Journal of August 7, 1870.

(3) Le Monde maçonnique of July 1870.

268 MAHONIC WORK FROM 1852 TO 1870

*4

A manifesto published in Paris, at the headquarters of the Grand Orient, Sunday In the face of science, we reread and Frank's stupidity, by Edouard Lioullier, M.*, thus posed the crucial question:

Two or three thousand roliprions are vying for the world. If, therefore, the pro-sandstone of civilization depends on the truth of one's claims of them, there is immense interest; to know and adopt the most Done, the most excellent.

The time to address this high and important question is when we do not It may be favorable.

Indeed, Catholicism, that bitter enemy of Freemasonry rie, whose doctrines are entirely opposed to it, holds, in this moment, its major sessions under the name of ecumenical council. It is necessary, due to these circumstances, that our order affirms new, and more than ever, its ideas, its trends, and the goal to which he aspires (1).

Everything was ready, or so it seems, for an all-out war against FE- To complete the project, only a government was needed. a new kind of thing, which was free from the commitments that were only at its beginning The empire had to take it with your conservatives.

Looking at the path taken, it's understandable that the sect at the civil funeral of a certain F.-. Périlleu.v, founder of the

The lodge of Charleville, is a cry of triumph: (2)

It was in the 19th century that the struggle was undertaken by free thought.
against religions po.'itivos seemed much less a practical necessity than the social situation that the rutopio of a few isolated minds, in dragged along by philosophical speculation in the world of ideas pure; the works of freethinkers during our century offered certainly a rather good ground on which to pursue the triumph of reason on faith.

Free thought heralded the claim to bring, into the field, social facts, the struggle, until then confined to books and to the pulpits, and to banish religion from institutions and customs, com
She already was, according to science. What probability would such a plan

(1) Lilé «lans lo Mriariire nur les prngris island Vespril anlireligious-v in the instruct Public lion, published for the General Society of Education and Teaching, Paris, 187?.

(2) This discourse is reproduced with full approval by the Chain of Union do 1880, pp. 283, 281. Go journal mcnlionno la prosonco do M. Féray, Sénateur, à these obsequies and speeches.

the explosion of anti-Christianity 269

How long could it have succeeded? The most audacious did not foresee the triumph.
the principle of free thought that in the distant future or at the cost of the most terrible upheavals, all the more impossible because they de-were supposed to be universal. Indeed, religious restoration in Europe it seemed such an inconstructive and powerful fact that to shake it only Simply put, it would have been necessary to stir up the entire society. Let us remember ou Internal questions, the daily bread of politics: the priest in the school, defended as a social necessity; the religious oath maintained; purely civil marriage repudiated by almost everyone of; civil funerals disrupted by riots instigated by the priests; and the isolated freethinkers as if a breath of plague had passed over them. The Church was triumphant. Gentlemen, in all the governments, as in all classes of society. When the pope convened this council which was to give, by deifying him himself, of new laws to modern society, it seemed that these laws had need only be decreed from the Vatican for everyone bowed his humiliated head. And when, indeed, at the same time as the in fallibility which made the pope the supreme universal magistrate, the council had the legitimacy of the Syllabus been proclaimed, a bishop dared to exclaim: "Mainholding the world can rest easy, the papacy has just restored it peace. "

its downfall. Never did human majesty crumble so swiftly as did the papacy after this sort of seizure of power universal.

No sooner had these monstrous claims been formulated from the top from the Vatican, that the Vatican appeared isolated in a united storm universal. Civil funerals, purely civil marriages, the absence of baptism for children is an everyday occurrence; if Even today there are popular movements, it's no longer against the free thought that they produce; the people have identified with the liberal thought. Never has a deeper transformation been experienced in such a short time.

We have reproduced these delirious words. Some penitents— However painful they may be to hear, it is necessary to listen to them; They specify dates, and it is those who, having then the whole power in their hands, have allowed, have encouraged, have favored ridiculed even by their administrative measures, this propaganda, to whom does the responsibility for the evil fall before the law? s'cot unleashed since (book 11, cliap X, S 6, and vol. 11, Document attached F.)

CHAPTER THIRTEEN

A PRELUDE TO PERSECUTION UNIVERSAL IN PORTUGAL

§ 10 – Particular Characteristics of Freemasonry

PORTUGUESE

Portugal has long been one of the countries where the French Freemasonry exerts the greatest influence (see the Societies of the Cretes and the Society of the t. II, Annexed Document G, III); but its action there takes on particular characteristics, which stem both from its origin and the character of the nation. It is the power which, by twice, under Pombal's ministry, and later in 1832, under the reign of Don Pedro, the lodges were established.

This dual origin is thus explained by a French priest of Father Delvaux, who resided in this country, received great distinction. a particularly critical period, from 1829 to 1834 (1):

No one doubts that the rebels of Porto originated from Masonic lodges. A consistent tradition attributes to the Marquis of delée on those he had seen in England, where he had been ambassador sadeur. He, as well as all the other diplomats that Portugal corrup-

(i) Unpublished letters of Father Joseph Delvaux on the restoration of the Jesuits in Portugal (1829-1834), published by P. Carayon, 1866, Paris, 1866.

272 PRELUDE TO UNIVERSAL PERSECUTION IN PORTUGAL

were then living abroad, belonged to the school of publicists that one called them disillusioned; they showed themselves to be very opposed to the Roman court and to the pious belief of the people who looked to the clergy and religious such as the support of the State, etc., etc. The Marquis reformed the university In that sense. If he personally was a Freemason, it's difficult to to verify; but that he and those of the sect he put into action prepared rent the events whose consequences we see today, That's beyond doubt.

In some colleges incorporated into the university, it began to... recruitment for Freemasonry took place at a certain time. It is certain that in
By 1790, the problem was already long-standing at the University of Coimbra; the entire
The youth who frequented it at that time were entirely distinguished by his taste and skill for maneuvers and discussions constituted tutionals. It is a constant that among the men called by Pomball to form the University of Coimbra in 1772, there were men of the sect (I will provide you with their names). It is therefore permitted to say that not the small, but the very large number of supporters of the philosophy of Voltaire and Rousseau which are found in Portugal
They graduated from the University of Coimbra; this is a general phenomenon. recognized. Lise/Aes Ecclesiastical News of 1880 b. 1790, and you will see the doctrines that were professed there, doctrines that were confessed here; for this periodical is very widespread, very highly regarded, and Jansenism that he preaches has invaded almost all classes"

The Marquis of Pombal gave command of the regiment of ar-tillerie called de Porlo, belonging to Jean Victoria Miron de Sabarjone a native of Switzerland, and established in his favor and under his authority a military school mathematics in Valença, where this regiment was quartered. Now from this school, as well as all the lessons of the aforementioned commander, emerged perhaps the first impious people of any name in Portugal, and never,
Since then, this fatal poison could not be eradicated from this place of war.

One will notice in this story the Jansenist character that had took the sect to Portugal. It has maintained this there to this day.
mask. It was in the name of religion that, in 1833, the party constituted The tutional order, led by men from the lodges, expelled the Jesuits. which had been restored in 1829 by the legitimate king, Don Miguel. It was at in the name of the principle of episcopal authority and under the pretext of strength asserting his rights, ([that the same party, in 1862, odiously expelled

The unique nature of this situation is perfectly highlighted.
by a witty liberal writer^ M. de Laveleye;

CHARACTERS OF PORTUGUESE MASONRY 273

Portugal's situation is unique in Europe. Not only or no
He doesn't see a monk, neither black nor white, but not even any priests, it seems.
Is it because they don't wear cassocks? Country priests are They are very poor. They live meagerly, often off the table of a maid.
tender soul. No spirit of propaganda or domination animates them.
Me. They are indifferent to religion, just like their flock.
They are even liberal on occasion. When I visited Portugal, the
The Liberal party was in power and the president of the council was a prelate; the Bishop of Viseu. I can still see him in the Chamber of Deputies, he replied during an arrest, in a frock coat, hand in his pocket, looking mocking, with bright eyes, a warm complexion, and overflowing with life. When he had gone to the council to vote for the Immaculate Conception, he had accompanied by two young and pretty nieces. It was probably because to delve deeper into the issue by drawing on their insights.
found in Rome that it was taking too much care and being too scrupulous;
But he did not give in. Why give in to the wicked?
languages? (1).

Portugal remains, on the surface, a deeply religious country gieux. Catholicism is the state religion: the processions are done publicly; the chambers, the ministers, the family
The royal family attends. The people, fervently believing, impose on the public authorities respect his faith; and however great that Be that as the moral miseries of the upper classes may be, there still reigns
A social peace prevails in the country, contrasting sharply with the unrest.
nations that are more materially prosperous, but where religion
The true [institution] ceased to be the first national institution.

Freemasonry nonetheless accomplishes its work under other forms.

First, she established the constitutional regime in that country.
Nely, whose main practical result is to allow the most complete overflow of the impious press (see book III, chapter preliminary, § 4).

Then she found a way to infiltrate a crowd of Catholic institutions, confraternities, foundations, and so on that the barriers between good and evil are sometimes strangely lowered. Thus, in 1860, in Porto, the president of the Third Order of Saint Francis, and most of the administrators of this the brotherhood, which had considerable foundations, were free-

(t) De Laveleye, LeUrettVItaly, 1 vol. in-12, 1880, p. 278.

III

18

•-^7i PHKLL DK A LA PKiL'-liCL'TlOX tM\ KitSKLLK KN rOM'n iial

Freemasons took an active part in the persecution directed against the Sisters of Charity.

The maxims of the most extreme Gallicanism, such as it has never
It has been practically implemented in France, and reigns in that country.
The consequence is that any spirit of zeal and propaganda there is paralyzed, if not extinguished, as Mr. de Laveleye says.
The laws of 1833 and 1834 completely destroyed the religious orders.
religious orders, and as for confraternities, we have just said what about them happened.

The lodges' tactic was primarily to isolate the national clergy (read unit center. From 1838 to 1852, all relations were iuleiTompucs praliquemeiil entre Rome et l'épiscopat. Même After the 1852 rearrangement, the Portuguese bishops generally refrained from attending the various summonses (Peace Pius IX addressed to the bishops of the Catholic world.

The gravity of this situation compelled Pius IX to address the July 8, 1862 to the Patriarch of Lisbon and the Bishops of Porto Tugal, a brief document that contained serious warnings:

In the midst of the numerous and excessive amci tûmes which we oppressive, said the Holy Father, we feel the sweetness more keenly their cause is the deplorable state in which they find themselves in this kingdom from Portugal matters relating to the Catholic religion and the Church.
Got state is known to us with certainty and no testimony
The public has not come to prove that you have contributed to the accomplishment* the vigilance and energy required by your episcopal office all tcmp.s, but especially today, in the midst of the singular ini-
The quits of the present times are urgently demanded by the obligation even your ministry.

The papal brief then lists the ills from which more suffer particularly Religion, the weakening of religious discipline clesiastical, the decadence of monastic life, the neglect of priests to fulfill the duties of their ministry, the teaching im-the youth's machinations, the machinations of sects, the enterprises of civil power over the rights of the Church

Do not let yourself be frightened by any consideration that may prevent from bravely entering all battles for the glory of God, for the defense of the Church and the salvation of souls... We cannot we will conceal how great our pain was at not having been able to see only one of you at the celebrations of the solemn canonization that we collaborated on the 8th of June, where, for the sovereign consolation for our soul, a great number have prided themselves on intervening bishops from all over the Catholic world, who came from even the most remote regions further away.

CAilACTKllKÿ UK LA MALONNKRIK PORTUfîAISK *27.-)

Difficulties may have prevented you from going to of us; but it is no less evident that nothing could have affected you sin by sending us letters to give us testimony, which was in your power, thanks to your loyalty, your love, and your respect towards our person and towards this seat of Saint Peter, center of the Catholic unity, following the example of what they have done for the infinite glory of their name and, for our supreme consolation, a great number of bishops of both Italy and other churches, to whom it had not been permitted set about undertaking the journey to Rome (1).

(I) V. this serious document reproduced in the Universal History of the Catholic Church Iholiquede llochbachert continued by Cliailrol, sixth edition. Annales ccclésiasli-Ques de \8âG à 1866, p. 492. A few pages further on you will find the account of difficulties raised at the Holy See at the same time by the Portuguese government gays, on the occasion of the appointment of the patriarch of Goa.

The situation of the Portuguese church remains very difficult.

The wisdom of Leo XIII in 1879 spared the Church a great misfortune. do Portugal, by refusing to accept Abbot Ayres do Gouveia as bishop. A recent booklet under this title: Documentos e reflexoes, do l'abbé Amado, gives the following information about this candidate for the episcopate; "Abbot Ayres do Gouveia is affiliated with the Masonic lodge Liberia^ established in Coimbro in 1869. There is grade of the Uose-Croix and there bears the name of L*. Eurico. The lodge has given itself permission to combat the reaction (s»cj in whatever form it may take. Fidedo è This instruction, Father Gouveia did not miss an opportunity to distinguish himself in that struggle, either as a professor at rt.'uivcrsilé, or as a Minister of State. The newspapers^ Ordem and the Bem publico reported how Ayres de Gouveia, in his chair of Portuguese ecclesiastical law in Coimbra, publicly insulted saint Elizabeth, Queen of Portugal. It took the theologian Rodriguez do Âzovedo, delivering a panegyric to the saint, he refuted her calumnies. That is the person swimming which the Lisbon government wanted to make a bishopric 1 » P. Mencacci, Memorie documentate per la storia delia Bivoluzione Rome, 1879, t. II, pp. 117, 118.

These facts explain the new difficulties that arose in 1832 between the Roman equivalent of the newspaper Le Français of November 28, 1882:

"A very acute conflict has just arisen in Lisbon between the nuncio, Archbishop Massella and the government. The Portuguese ministry, in agreement with the Holy See, had e-"A new district was created between the dioceses. As there were five bishops..."
"new to appoint the government of Lisbon made the presentations to the Saint-"Siege, but unfortunately they were deemed unacceptable. The court of "Rome rejects the five candididsals that were submitted to it. The liberal press of Lis-
"Good attack violently on the nuncio and the Roman Curia; she advises the government-
"The need to break off relations with the Vatican, at the same time, the candidates
"Those rejected are intrigued at court and are trying to persuade people that the nuncio
"deafening leads from the parishes of Don Miguel Lü"

'276 PRELUDE TO UNIVERSAL PERSEOUTION IN PORTUGAL

Failures within the clergy alone made it possible
The same thing happened. Here is a quote that paints the situation well and which we borrow from a highly authoritative writer. It was in 1861, after the death of Mr. de Cavour; the lodges and the liberal party had decided to have a funeral service held in a church so?i honor J following the strange formula used in such cases:

The Italians residing in Lisbon joined forces with the Freemasons to to stage a new scandal.

The opportunity was opportune, and the time fruitful. Already regarding the con-Cordat on the Padroado of the Indies, unjust hatreds had been stirred up and ridiculous attacks against the Roman court, without sparing the Pope; then they had attacked to His Excellency the Nuncio.

The death of Count Cavour was another occasion, which he [importunities] was trying to take advantage of this, and Mr. Délia Minerva, chargé d'affaires of Italy, aida did her best for the brothers and friends.

His Eminence the Patriarch, having been consulted, declared that he wished to leave to th with regard to the complete freedom of decision granted to its priests, the government of Loulé, urged on by his friends, took the matter under his wing, and it was there that All we want to point out is that this anti-Catholic conduct was worthy of the persecutors of the Sisters of Charity. It was decided that one would seek out bad priests, the good ones refusing to make demands Italian and Portuguese patriots and refugees from various nations.
Once these unfortunate priests had been found, the search began for a church.

The municipality of Lisbon, which possessed, by virtue of ancient privileges village, that of Saint Anthony of Padua, born in Lisbon, put it with pleasure at their disposal, and the service took place; that is to say, under pre-
The text to have a mass said for Count Cavour, a a grand Masonic demonstration. The ministry was represented there, as well to say that His Majesty Don Pedro V did not send any of his high-ranking officers there: He was ashamed of this impious scene. Not all Catholics were Less distressed and frightened by such audacity, people then understood better. Why were the Sisters of Charity so hated by their persecutors? authors.

And we do not hesitate to exaggerate the impiety of this ceremony, since a writer, a great admirer of Freemasonry, declares, in lamenting that Mr. de Cavour's funeral service would never have taken place in Lisbon, if the Municipal Chamber had not considered speculating on This mass was to secure his re-election!

With the scandal complete, the ministry, which had played a major role in it,

THE WAR ON THE SISTERS OF CHARITY 277

did not stop there; and all the wicked priests who had practiced This rebellion against the laws of the Church resulted in them receiving positions of power government. One of them, raising his views to the episcopate, said: "If I ever become a bishop, it will be by the grace of the king, never by that of the Holy See. (1)

§ 2. – The war against the Sisters of Charity

However, Portugal was not unaffected by this awakening of the Christian spirit that occurred throughout parallel Europe [This refers to] the attacks of the Revolution.

Not only the supporters of the legitimate and tra- government Traditionally, the Miguelists conceive of the relationship between the Church and of the State on a basis consistent with the teachings of the Holy Seat, but also, memo in the Liberal Party, many es prisoners have gradually returned to more accurate feelings about the conditions of freedom necessary for the Church to fulfill its mission sion. Eyes were opened primarily by the inferiority where this The country has fallen into everything that is suspicious of charitable works. and popular education.

A branch of the admirable Institute of the Daughters of Charity, which had been founded in 1819, had, in 1836, severed its ties with the head office in Paris, under the influence of these sentiments parastatists that we have reported. He had gradually become lifeless, like a branch that dries up once separated from the trunk. In 1857, a few pious ladies, at the head of whom was the Empress Mother, widow of Don Pedro I*', with the approval and the support of the Patriarch of Lisbon, Don Guilherme, of ordered the Daughters of Charity of Paris to send some-to take care of the education of poor girls in a few shelters. About fifteen of these pious girls, accompanied by two Gentlemen of the Congregation of St. Lazarus, in their capacity as directors established themselves in Lisbon and Porto, where the former The Portuguese sisters happily joined them.

(I) Question of the sjeurs of charity in ^orti^al, ia-8*, Lisbon, 1863

278 PuÉLrrDE at the national PKIisÉcfrrroN in Portugal

Yellow fever was rampant at the time (they perished as soon as the [])rcmicrs days in themselves,^nant the sick.

The honor that these heroic acts of devotion brought forth on religion, the resurgence of zeal (naturally of Such examples were bound to produce in the clergy of the country: that's it this (|uc at first glance the Masonic lodges perceived. From the beginning of 1858, they began, by way of from the press, through public meetings, and as we Let's see for ourselves, with the complicity of government members, an uproar over what they dared to call the question of Sisters of Charity. After four years, in 1862, a large Victory was won: the French Sisters of Charity and the Two Lazarists were expelled from the country using adversarial methods. ministerial measures absolutely identical to those implemented in Italy in 1860, and in France, in 1880!

We borrow the main features of this singular story meaningfully linked to an authentic relationship of these events ments, which appeared in 1863 in Lisbon under the title: Question Sisters of Charity in Portugal^ (1857-1862), according to the press and official documents {\).

There is a political party in Portugal which, without wanting to admit it frankly, in the face of the nation, still very attached to the religion of his fathers, relies on this twofold propaganda, – revolutionary cosmopolitan and Anglo-Protestant, – effectively protects it, communicates with secret societies outside, and is rather Anglophile and revolutionary tionary than patriot, if by that word we mean devotion boundless to the homeland.

The audacity of this already long-established party has grown in recent years, and the triumphs of friends from outside so excited his own ambi' tion and exalted his hopes, that he claim the right to dominate the country and to seize power alone, against all the rules of the system constitutional. As for its union with external societies, the Evidence abounds, and, to cite just one example in passing, the smurs do Charity had barely left Portugal when a circular from advanced faction of the historical party which still counts in its among true liberals, men of order and government, called Today, reactionaries, the men of this party, of which we are

(I) A volume ip-8*, Lisboaio, 1863, imprint of the Typographic Society French-Portuguese.

GUEenBE AUX SOKUnS DE CLIABltÉ 270

let's occupy ourselves, they call themselves progressives, historical figures, rasgados or could more clearly be called the party of revolutionary liberalism born in Portugal.

Their current leader is the Marquis de Loulé, who, during the war... to the sisters, will find himself both president of the Council and grand master of Freemasonry.

0

At the head of this fabricated agitation directed against the sisters of charity, was found in the Patriotic Association, a political association public activism, recruited and directed by the lodges to act ostentatiously possibly on the political field, like the former Society of Emun-' lation in Liège (book III, chapter II, S 8), as today 1*^5-liberal society in Belgium (Book II, Chapter XIII, § ?), and which,
as well as the latter, organizes riots in the area if necessary.
street. Its organs in the press were the newspapers 0 Portuguez and 0 Asmoden.

As early as June 6, 1858, the first of these newspapers declared that the
The Portuguese nation was furious (furibunda) against the sisters of French charities and their directors, and, on the 29th of this month, she was informing the Marquis de Loulé that his continued presence in the ministry depended on his willingness to obey the demands made by the newspaper. The most odious calumnies occurred in these sheets against the sisters: they were always confused by the official investigations. The lodges then resorted to one of these methods they have traditionally used. They secretly ordered a complete outfit for a nun to wear a woman of ill repute; but this horrible plot was uncovered green in time, and it was necessary to abandon the premeditated scandal.

Insults against the aristocracy mingled in the columns from the Portuguese to the attacks against the sisters.

The alarm bell is ringing in the ranks of liberalism, he said in scs Issues of August 18 and 19, 1858. The seasoned soldiers of liberty... are gathered. The struggle has taken on serious, frightening proportions. He a breakdown in relations between her and the people. We need to import men such as Louis Blanc and Victor Hugo.

Interrogations soon took place in the chambers. The attitude of the Marquis de Loulé, President of the Council, was singular. embarrassed.

280 PRELUDE TO UNIVERSAL PERSECUTION IN PORTUGAL

As we have already said, the Marquis was both President of the Council, Minister of the Interior and Grand Master of the Masonic Confederation than Portuguese. Now, if it is difficult for a common member of the secret societies to break the heavy chains he voluntarily forged for himself The burden of shaking off the yoke of the lodges was even greater. great for the Marquis de Loulé, elevated to the dignity of Grand Master. Wanting to be a minister and the head of a political party, he needed to remain mason; and when members of his family devoted to the Sisters of the Charity, they expressed their astonishment at such a hateful persecution, or he of They demanded that it be stopped, but his father's heart filled them with hope. which the grand master of the lodges knew to be impossible.

The mere fact of having allowed the Sisters of Charity to enter, being President of the Council, he was accused of a crime of lèse-Mason-nonsense; and it was much worse when, instead of expelling them brutally, As he had received the secret order, he seemed to grope and equivocate. His dual function, both secret and official, could not be officially replaced fold, because it was serving both order and disorder, royalty and the revolution: but one can only truly serve one master. On the one hand, the cries Lodges and despotic liberals were pushing him forward; on the other hand, He was being held back by the jilainles, sensible people and true friends of freedom, progress, competition, education of the people and of civilization.

King Don Pedro V himself belonged wholeheartedly to this latter party. and he was deeply loath to give in to so much unjust clamor.

In vain the Marquis de Loulé, to gain time and to give the right to spare the sisters, declared loudly that he was a Freemason at the session of the Chamber of Peers on the 21st January 1850 (I). The sect was pushing him ever more vigorously. Portw/uez made no attempt to conceal where his blows landed:

A society with the Pope at the top would not be suitable for the people Liberal... We need a society that is acceptable to liberalism, daughter of liberty and reform, founded on the mine of superstitions of all the rules (n'' of November 10, 1858).

Lion of the Orders of Charity. Meanwhile, a minor clerk, Manuel Rodrigue/. Machado, who was collecting signatures in favour of the sisters without being embarrassed by the threats that had been made against him. He died several times, assassinated in the Serra do Murúo.

(1) Los anriones law? do Jean Vf, (jci proliibcnl la Franc-raaçonnoirie, are ros-
.(They are registered in the Portuguese Penal Code and are still nominally in force.

WAR ON THE SISTERS OF CHARITY 281

In February, the Patriotic Association met again. It was called to advise, and this time she holds a demonstration against the Marquis de Loulé, while at the same time making advances to Marshal de Saldanha, who was also heavily involved in the Freemasonry (vt II, Document G, § 3.) In the elections made. In the elections of that year, the Marquis de Loulé was not re-elected. Grand Master and the gavel passed into the hands of Mr. José Estevao, who kept it until his death, which occurred in November 1862, then in 1863, to Mr. Labo d'Avila, Minister of Finance. The Marshal Saldanha allowed the leaders to use his name and talk about a military riot that would overthrow the ministry. This, in turn, was pushed then, in his entrenchment, had the king issue a decree on June 22, 1861, dissolving the corporation of the Sisters of Charity in as long as it is a legal entity.

This decree was illegal, and in both chambers many Speakers argued that a law would have been necessary to dissolve thus a recognized corporation. Great misfortunes struck the country; death successively took King Don Pedro and two infants, leaving the crown on the head of a teenager, Don Luiz. In the midst of the truce that these calamities imposed on the parties, the sisters continued to serve the poor and the sick in hospitals run by private associations, where they had been peeled. The sect resumed its offensive, and in a manner that characterized This situation in this country is well understood.

In January 1802, the directors of the Third Order of St. Francis in Porto, pt'ireut V initiative to expel the sisters from V hospital in this city, where they had summoned them. They recognized, from the remains in the very letter by which they notified their departure to the sisters, (no unfavorable motive had influenced the sisters in this determination, but these tertiary singulars were Freemasons, and they were doing their work:

These are not, said a Porto newspaper, O Directo, on January 30th, the true brothers of St. Francis, but the enemies of the Church and of the Catholic, Apostolic, and Roman religion, which, through their intrigues, caused their lies and infamies succeeded in expelling the sisters; these are the ones even those who, during the night, led with pomp to the church of the

The secular office. The people who are not initiated into the dark mysteries of Freemasonry, or who is not deceived by these sectarians, loves and respects sisters.

282 PRELUDE TO UNIVERSAL PERSECUTION IN PORTUGAL

One more step remained: it was a matter of expelling the sisters. The Marquis de Loulé, now free from his shackles that King Don Pedro imposed on him, had brought into his midnislère the head of the most advanced Masonic party, Mr. Mendôs-Léal (volume II, Document G, § 3), and had it presented, on the 1st of 1862, by the Minister of the Interior, Mr. Braamcamp, a draft law absolutely prohibiting any religious association and "prohibiting the functions of Teaching^ as well in private and charitable establishments than in the public schools-Sj to any national or foreign member eVune "unauthorized religious association." This was, as we can see, the app Implementation of Eugène Sue's plan, article VII of the F.*. Ferry. Of Valiant defenders were not lacking in either chamber. to the cause of justice.

A former liberal, Mr. Casai Ribeiro, very aptly characterized the the country's situation, she was a target of sects (as stated in her speech on May 1st). 1862.

There are people who believe that all of this stems from a certain propaganda. Great Protestant. I laugh at Protestant propaganda, as well as at Those who are afraid of it. There can be no Protestant propaganda here. serious. There is no Protestant trend in Portugal. and it does not exist in any Catholic country.

Protestantism is not advancing: it is retreating every day on the land* rain that he formerly usurped from the unity of the Church, and here, the propa- A great Protestant can only be tempted by a madman. But what exists is far more dangerous than Protestantism. It is a pro- a certain school's pronouncement of a false philosophy that denies revelation and its necessity, and to the doctrine called rationalism, which is, in matters of religion, the most irrational system I know. It is in core the tendency towards a kind of obscure deism or pantheism and confused regarding atheism, as atheism itself [touches on the negation of virtue, probity, and honor... to the dissolution of social connections are key.

Mr. José Estevao; There is no atheism; you are writing the history of schools in Germany.

Mr. Pascal Ribeiro: I could do it, and very appropriately; ■but I will not do it to the illustrious deputy who knows history and who has read Mr. Rendu's book. I am very pleased to be exempt from it; but

For example, he knows that the doctrine of atheism is not a fable and that its consequences are far from being a climate. I know very well that there is no

WAR ON THE SISTERS OF CHARITY 283

There is no atheism among us; nobody wants it, and few even... Those who would like it admit it; but that is where it leads directly repugnance for any religious idea. Now, if we call reacting to the opposition that arises in response to such a trend, I move on frankly, openly and bravely, in the religious reaction, against the anti-religious reaction.

Brother Mendès-Léal, in his reply, declaimed against the reaction, against religious orders, against the relations of Catholics he had agreements with Rome; he cited the example of the measures directed against the Church which had been taken in Germany, in Italy and elsewhere. He extolled the Italian Revolution and authorized himself to take measures that the imperial government had just taken in France against the conferences of Saint Vincent de Paul.

Thus, the expulsion of some of the Daughters of Charity was demanded by the principles of the Universal Revolution!

The ministerial bill was stolen from the Chamber of Deputies, badly* despite strong opposition, he would have encountered even more effective probably in the House of Peers, when the day before the vote of the Chamber, on May 27, a French frigate, the Orénoque had entered the Tagus, coming from Brest.

It was soon known in Lisbon, according to the account from which we borrow* all these stories, which the ministers had had the Empress write down in French, by the young King D. Luiz, a letter in which His Majesty said that he was urgent for the peace of the country and the crown, to recall the Sisters of Charity from Portugal, all the Sisters of Charity.

In the face of such a demand coming from such a high place and based on Given such serious reasons, it was necessary to believe, at the Tuileries, that a critical decision for Portugal, and, consequently, the dispatch received was immediately communicated to the parent company, with advice to give in to the king's wishes. Father Etienne, despite the unprecedented persecution that he had endured the daughters of charity, would not have dared to take, before God, the responsibility to recall them from a country where they were doing the good; but when he saw the sovereigns assume this responsibility upon themselves, he gave in, and, no doubt he did not want it to be said that the sons of the charitable organizations, accustomed to peaceful missions, were shaking a throne! He therefore recalled all the sisters, except for those who had ministered at the Saint-Louis des Français hospital. – The sisters of this hospital were to remain for the sick and for the poor of the colony. The hospital was to remain for the sick and for the poor of the colony. French, and the emperor's government had made a reservation

28i prelude to the pp: universal sequestration in Portugal

3. – The celebration of the Centenary of Počibal

Freemasonry, which remained peacefully in control of Portugal, wanted to accuse its domination through the solemn celebration of the centenary of Pombal; it was the counterpart to the centenary celebration of Voltaire. Numerous protests arose in the country, but the government, completely in the hands of the sects, ignored.

On May 8, 1882, the festivities began in Lisbon with a civic procession organized by students.

Leroi, the royal family, and the great bodies of the State have attended the inauguration of the monument erected in honor of the one whom Freemason orators called "the great man" of the Portuguese state," but which his contemporaries ranked among monsters.

In the evening, the city of Lisbon was illuminated; all the newspapers Liberals in Portugal, beholden to Freemasonry, celebrate the administration of the Marquis of Pombal, and among the acts of his ministry, mainly highlight with praise the expulsion of the jesuites.

The few Catholic newspapers that bravely fight to restore true Catholic civilization in this country of Having arrived from a grand lodge, they protested vigorously against these men Magi paid tribute to the memory of a man whom history, impartial as it may seem, has over has rightly been branded (Book II, Chapter IV, Section 2).

Does the monarchical idea gain much from the fact that the monarchy Does she thus become the servant of the Revolution?

This curious extract from the Masonic Republic will demonstrate this. November 1882;

"Recently at the VAsile du progrès lodge in Bordeaux, we ap-
"excessively pleaded a member of the Grand Orient of Portugal," U, who urged French republicans to remain united, because they < do not have the right to sacrifice the French Republic to their qu-
.a personal lies, and thus annihilate the efforts of the republicans

"foreigners, who can no longer persuade their compatriots of the good* all facts about this regime by showing them France. %

In Portugal, as elsewhere, Freemasonry therefore has for ideal, more or less close, the Republic.

CHAPTER FOURTEEN

THE AVANT-GARDE LOES

Freemasonry is constantly in motion. Carried away by the logically, based on the principle of negation from which it emerged, it moves forward always towards this state of nature, this anarchy, which is the bottom of his doctrine since Saint-Martin and Weishaupt, if not before (see book III, chapter II, S 2), and which has as its expression the Republic socialist. But along this path, the stages are multiplied. From time to time, the masons who had achieved wealth, at high official positions, or simply matured by experience of life, seek to stop it, to fix it at a certain point which It is called, depending on the time and the country: Freemasonry
Christian, Human State, Liberalism, Constitutional Regime Liberal republic, Authoritarian republic, Pro-aggressive.

The Grand Orients, what are called the Masonic powers
"These trends are generally swayed by these station trends."
naires; but their plans are constantly thwarted by groups of new men, who form the youth lodges and who, by delving deeper into Masonic data, they promptly position themselves lying to a much more advanced point than their predecessors aged. These are the vanguard lodges. When the Powers Masonic groups want to wage war against them, the Powers always end up being defeated, and after a while,
They are forced to return to those they had excommunicated.

The avant-garde lodges

^88

Elsewhere, this movement is happening without struggles, but just as effectively.
So, if we want to know where Freemasonry works and What will his doctrines and actions be in a few years?
political, its social influence, we need to keep a closer eye on its

the solemn ceremonies of the old lodges, as well as the discussions of these young lodges, with their somewhat eccentric airs, that the old people call irregulars with disdain, or disguise themselves. They suffer from a feeling of powerlessness.

Follow, for example, Thisloire of Freemasonry in France of then the Restoration.

In 1855, the majority of lodge members were certain spiritualist* The most advanced lodge was that of the Trino-sophists, where the dominant note was represented in philosophy by Cousin, in politics through the Dupin family.

Fifteen years pass. We have the reports before us. addresses to the Grand Orient at that time, by its orator the f.. Henri Wentz. He points out with concern the democratic tendencies ticks, from several provincial lodges: these are precisely the more active, more zealous, those composed of young elements, while those that remain just within the official rating age. They are felt and go out. These new lodges, a little turbulent, are cupent of social issues.

a The commission, he said, on May 4, 1847, which will be appointed for Pin-s- The protection of the lodge La Tolérance will, I believe, have to insist with her on that its principal members, animated, moreover, by very philosophical sentiments lanthropic, sometimes even, if I may say so, too philanthropic pikes, are well imbued with the wisdom with which our legislators defended in 1, all political and religious discussions.

The "Friendship" lodge is a constant source of concern for the Grand Orient. which is responsible for handling complaints from the police headquarters.

On another occasion, it was a lodge in Paris that initiated the discussion. this question: Is belief in God indispensable, in Moral order, to social institution? As it precisely does Note the f.*. Henri Wentz, "for people who know Reading between the lines, can't we already see in large print... "The answer is 'No'."

1848 is approaching, and the Parisian lodges were expected to take part. a fairly active part (Book II, Chapter IX 5). The Grand Orient ce-famous, we know with what lyricism, revival of the Republic. As for the honest man, Henri W'oiitz, he had requested letters fees in 1847 and left the management to less ar-riérés (1).

THE OUTGUARD LODGES 289

first part of the Second Empire, some lodges of Belgium that, from Switzerland and England, are grouping refugee demagogues, And that's where the projects for organizing societies are born. of free thinkers, of those in solidarity with Universal Freemasonry was to propagate ostentatiously after 1860. Edgar Quinet, Eugène Sue, were in exile at the head of this movement.

The same events are happening today. Seven lodges have, in 1880, separated from the obedience of the Supreme Council of the Scottish Rite I know, in order to be able to obey more freely the tendencies of the material political and authoritarian Jacobinism, which were hindered by the presence of Mr. Jules Simon in this Council and the method of recruitment exclusive of the Celtic authority (see Introduction, Part III). They have formed the Confederation, headed by the Grand Lodge of Scottish symbolism. Little by little, the new obedience attracts to her the lodges dependent on the Supreme Council; above all it is the new workshops are now operating under its aegis. The titles and choices are very significant. One of the most recent and most important asset category is called Social, and we will see in the following chapters following how he addresses all current political issues.

Here, moreover, is the program that the Grand Symbolic Lodge has taken shape;

Born from the struggle against the despotism of the Supreme Council of the Scottish rite by the most lively and active portion of the workshops symbolic of this obedience, the new Confederation began to immediately at work, and she focused especially on inaugurating in her within the ideal of freedom always proclaimed, but never realized, even in Freemasonry. On the front of the new temple, she began by inscribing this formula which summarizes his entire doctrine;

Freemasonry in the free lodge...

She organized freedom of the press for the workshops and the masons, now masters of publishing, without prior authorization and under their own responsibility, everything that their conscience dictates, without having

(1) Masonic pamphlets by Brother William Woatz, former orator of the Grand Orient de France, Paris, in-8", 1864, pp. 117, 163, etc.

III

LKS]>0(a:s avant-garde

U fear official censure, deregistration or suspension.
She ensured freedom of expression, the jihis ab.<o!ue in the temples, by ii\imposing no restrictions on the independence of ideas and their complete munil estation. She allowed the workshops the right to meet and even to join forces with each other, to give more vigor to the initiatives verses that they would believe they should pay in the face of such and such a cause prolitable au jtrogrès géna! (1).

The Grand Lodge, which prospers all Powers
The Italians of the world have known her well, and that she has received testimonies; punctual from syiupalhie do most of the French lodges. She Inditjue ensiilo the questions she puts to the study: the fusion of the guilds and Freemasonry, the ad-women's initiation into riiiiliiation, all questions that must to enjoy Freemasonry in a progressive way.

But within the very heart of that vanguard of Freemasonry French rie, there are scouts, two children jierdus. Among the of the lodges that founded it, one of the most active being the Lodge of the Free thinkers of the PCQ. Trauclicaul themselves one of the questions put expressly under study by the Free Symbolic Lodge
The thinkers of the PCQ admitted a woman to initiation, the ci-Maria Deraismes, a well-known figure in Parisian clubs, instead of receiving her only as iidoplion's sister.C(yi act Hardi greatly moved certain provincial lodges. The Great
The Symbolic Lodge protested; the Freethinkers of Le Pecq... declared independent, they continued their work no less.
Bieniol, it was they who, on this question of the initiation of women my names, in the same liter as the others, will ensnare the entire Masonic order.
rieon. Here in fact are the conditions under which, despite their excoin-Official municipal government, they celebrated their festival on January 12, 1882 solstice:

A large number of brethren belonging to all obediences have arrived in St-Germain, despite the bad weather, to give more to shine at this initiation, as well as to bear witness to the woman of heart and of high intelligence, Ms. Maria Deraismes, and to the lodge that receives her went into his temple, conferring upon him the first Masonic degree, of their sympathy and the community of ideas and sympathies on this crucial question.

(t) The acts of the symbolic lodge in the Masonic order of the grand lodge, niuuiTo do mars 1881 .

Following the initiation ceremony, a fraternal banquet brought together... around 400 guests, including many laypeople accompanied by their wives and children.

On the proposal of Brother Constans, Ord., of the lodge of Pecq, who has highlights the anticlerical and profoundly democratic character of At the meeting, our secretary, Ms. Maria Deraismes, was acclaimed president. of honor at the banquet (1).

The insertion of these lines in the official organ of the Great Lodge indicated enough that soon the example of the lodge of Pecq will be followed. Indeed, shortly afterwards, that lodge returned to the Confederation; E finita la commedia! (2).

In Belgium, the f.'. Goffm, although excommunicated during for many years by the Grand Orient, has in reality exercised a considerable influence on the lodges in his country. The the program he outlined in Liège in 1855 became that of the Masonry of almost all of Latin Europe (liv. II, chap. XII, § 6). Its periodical publication, the Journal of Freemasonry Belgian (3), is one of those that must be read if one wants to know the tendencies of men who represent the future of Freemasonry.

In Italy, it is the Orient of Palermo that groups the lodges more advanced and which exerts the most influence (see book III, chapter 1). VII, S 13).

The link is the same in all countries.

The Constance lodge of Louvain had a conflict in 1866. with the Grand Orient of Belgium, for having taken the initiation tends to reject spiritualist formulas, including Freemasonry was still covered at that time. One must read in the work of Mr. Amand Neut the relevant documents of these debates. On He sees how the most advanced brothers invoke the the founding principles of Freemasonry and recall the march progressive, which she has always followed. Then, as always in pa In this case, it is the Masonic authority that bows down, closes the

(1) Masonic Bulletin of the Grand Symbolic Lodge, February 1882, p. 844.

(2) Masonic Bulletin of the Grand Symbolic Scottish Lodge, October 1832.

(3) This newspaper was published from December 1879 until February 1, 1881. If the f.*. Goffm has recouru tant du conlrndicieux, ce n'est pas à cause de ses idées atheists and socialists, but because of the violence of its poems, and especially because that he was attacking secrecy and wanted to transform the lodges into clubs before the tor public (v. liv, III, chap. XXVII, § 4).

eyes; a few loved ones pass and it is she (|who is then renewed by the novateiu-s (l).

There is also a cosmopolitan lodge in London, composed mainly refugees, the grand chajiital lodge of the Phila-Delphi of the reformed rite of Mempliis (book II, cliap XIV, 't and G), which is not recognized by English Freemasonry, but which exerts a marked influence on lodges across the continent. This lodge, following the publication of the famous Masonic program of Liège, conferred the rank of Rose-Croix upon Brother Guffin, for his fine conduite (2). This influence is exerted by means of the visiting brothers who exchange ideas; these are topics presented as themes discussions that spark curiosity and shake up old habits The received doctrines; these are, finally, the secret communications. which are established between brothers, and which the system always facilitates high-ranking officials, as one might believe from a document ment iusôréfurther liv. III, clip. XXI, S 3.

In Amsterdam, a group of Freemasons founded, in 1851, the lodge Posi nubila luxy and to be freer in its movements, she placed herself outside the obedience of the Graud-Orient des Pays-Down.

Here are the main articles of his couslilution:

Article – The Pnü nubila lux lodge is a Masonic corporation independent.

Article 2. – It recognizes love as the sole principle of the 0. *. of the cerîlâ and of justice. Its aim is the moral and intellectual tuel of man and society.

Article 3. – The work of the brothers,*, for the advancement of this goal, constitutes temporarily focused on the study of the science of the individual and society with their reciprocal interests and duties.

Assemblies will be convened to provide the [unclear] with the opportunity to exchange ideas on topics in this category, and courses will have been given, to equip them, by means of Freemasonry and do science, knowledge required to confer such ma-third parties in a manner befitting her.

The brothers are instructed to attend these assemblies regularly. and these courses. (.3)

.luiv., png, aSi ol sev., p. 400 et seq.

f'2) Journal of Belgian Freemasonry, 0'* of 1 the ai., 188(1.

(J). V. Aniaod Nout, Freemasonry Unveiled, 1.1, p. 185,

THE LODGETS ü'aVANĬ-GAH0E

One of the first in the world, the PoH nubUa Im lodge removed the formulas relating to the existence of God and to the immortality of rAmc. To act more effectively, she founded Alongside it is the public society of freethinkers, Darjeraad, whose activity we have already mentioned (book III, chapter XII, 3). (This, moreover, is the classic method of the sect, one might say.) say.

This lodge, thus constituted outside the national Grand Oriental, established relations with a large number of workshops in Europe and the United States, on which the very boldness of its principles give her a great advantage. She is memo arri raised, after thirty years, to draw into its orbit the major part of Dutch Freemasonry. Here is what it reads in elit in a letter from Amsterdam, published in Le Monde Masonic &Q December 1881;

For some time now, a movement in favor of the independent lodge Dante Posl Nuhila Lux is accentuated in various workshops of the Grand Orient From the Netherlands, currently, many regular maoons are seen forced not to visit this supposedly irregular workshop; but from a On the other hand, several brothers believe they can still go. He is It is necessary that after so many years of existence, this lodge, which works of in such a way as to leave nothing to be desired, to be recognized by the Grand Orient of The Netherlands. As I just told you, the brothers belonging to the Regular workshops go there as visitors, but the Arnhoirn lodge comes even to receive as visitors two members of the Post nubila lux lodge. However, most of the venerable figures in this city recommend to novices should not have any Masonic relations with this lodge. Therefore, these brothers, bound by their oath, cannot go there. to put an end to this state of affairs, it is a question of proposing one of the lodges of the city to seriously examine the work of the Posl lodge nubila lux, and, if they are found to be regular, to bring the matter before all the workshops and before the Grand Orient from its first meeting* We have no doubt that this method will lead to recognition of that valiant lodge, which has been working honorably for over thirty years, and which was the object of a fierce war on the part of the Grand Orient.

Let us add that the elections for the Grand Orient of the r*ay.s-Das, which took place in 1882, gave the majority to the candidates common (1).

(1) V. Chnine d'inion, July 1882, p. '21;}.

294

THE AVANT-GARDE BOXES

Let us reiterate in conclusion that the very principle of Freemasonry it pushes her towards this forward march down the path of destruction. It was formulated very recently in a speech given at the the lodge La Française O.'Aquitaine, in Bordeaux, by Brother Baril:

What would become of this lack of workers, who were unable to draw from the A beneficial source of instruction? Ah! My brothers, that is where our role begins; we receive among us all these disinherited, and we give them Let us learn that there is a whole future of work and dedication, that Man is capable of improvement and it is in every season to improve himself. tion.

Finally, we teach them that one must constantly work to achieve Clear the road of brambles.

Freemasonry has neither beliefs nor official systems, that is what which is its strength. At its podium, ideas clash instantly. the most diverse and the most contradictory, but the true principle of the Freemasonry, it was that which believed in the inexhaustible fertility of the brain human, and respects the growing development of social ideas (1).

By virtue of this inexhaustible fecundity of the human brain, which is essentially his only dogma (see book I, chapter I, § 1), the Ma-French stupidity is currently marching squarely along the path of socialism.

(1) See the Chaîne d'L'nion of December 1882.

CHAPTER FIFTEEN

WHERE DOES THE DOGMA STAND?
AND MASONIC MORALITY

1«*'. •— Freemasonry considers itself superior to all

RELIGIONS

Ily abiea des aniites, les suprcnies conseils du rilo écossais du
The whole world gathered their delegates and drafted the treaty solemn of union, alliance and confederation of April 23, 1834.

The declaration, placed in the outer box of this document, contains the two following articles:

1® Freemasonry is a unicersi cult, whose object
God and virtue, which is divided into different recognized and ap- rites proven.

Adoration of the gr.-. arcli. *. of Tuniv.',, moral philosophy, well-Vigilance towards men, that is what a true mason must study constantly.

This religion is essentially tolerant, and each Freemason is free in the choice of the rite he wishes to profess.

All true Freemasons form an Order, which has its dogmas, and which is governed by general laws and fundamental statutes.

2® The purpose of establishing lodges is to work towards the goal of the Order. That of a dogmatic (Masonic) power is of their ento teach the doctrine and to guide their actions by the purity of dogma and by observing the fundamental institutes and statutes of the Order.

596 Masonic Dogma and Morality

We cite this already old document because it represents this that we call ostensible Freemasonry, that which we shows the public, that of the bulk of the followers.

Well done! This Freemasonry, thus reduced to a minimum, is already destructive of all positive religions, because it poses like the superior religion of riliimaniié, it claims em-to stir all the men in her bosom, and it presents itself, as the only one capable of leading them down the path of virtue, of lead to happiness.

The tolerance, which she displayed, towards religious opinions of its members, is the greatest insult to religions ()0silives; because it denies them possession of the truth, to which each claims, and reduces them indiscriminately to nothing more than external rites laughter and legends [jproblémalitjucs.

Freemasonry, says the Masonic World of July 1867, remains like the matrix in which human freedoms are developed, like the universal temple open to the faithful and to infidels, unbelievers and believers, orthodox and he-atheists, atheists as well as anitheists, deists, Catholics and Protestants of all denominations.

And the f. . Ferdinand lîourc, to the 1.. Friend of the ISaiifragés ùq Buenos Aires, June 1889:

There is only one required cult, that of the veitii, and who could say that such worship is not that of the true God?

In the world, there are ancient beliefs and modern beliefs. dernes; there are Jews, pagans, Inahometaus, Greeks, Protestants and anti-Protestants, and a thousand other sects, including the pre* tensions frighten thought, and which, all enemies of one another, slaughtered each other for centuries in the name and for the interests of sky.

In Freemasonry*, Mecca and Geneva, Itoinc and Jerusalem, are confused. There are neither Jews, nor Luahomctans, nor Papists, nor Protestants tants; there are only men, there are only lf.'. who have sworn to always remain ff.*. (1).

This claim by Freemasonry to replace the Islamic Club

(1) chain of union^ 188U, p. Tii.

Freemasonry is superior to all religions 297 is still expressed in terms worth recalling by a Italian Freemason, who wrote in 18G3:

The allegorical goal of Masonic brotherhood is the ancient project to rebuild the Temple of Zion; but the true and real object of these attempts ves is the reconstitution of religious unity, based on dual adherence or alliance of reason and faith and the reorganization of the hierarchical system that according to the data of virtue and science... The religion of the Or The Church is essentially unitary. It has only one dogma. The Mother Stupidity recognizes only one God, immense, immutable, creator and conservative of worlds, excluding any heterodox idea of a Freemasonry believes in lineage or a co-eternal and infinite procession. to the suffering beyond the grave and to a future life... The basis of his cult is the practice of austere virtues and an ardent and intimate love for humanity nity (1).

Mazzini. Today the uu cl the aulrc are good d('pas:<t'S, but it is necessary to note that always cl pUrloul la Maroniicric has posed itself as a religion like the adversary of Christianity. Here is nolan- In Spain, how was the definition of the Universe^ annals of the Freemasonry of Madrid^ June 1875 issue;

Free from any compromise with a particular church, the Freemason France is, in matters of religion, supremely free. It seeks what are the relations of human consciousness with the supreme principle? me of reality and life, in order to find there, if indeed it is there shows, the positive basis of all holy worship and of all knowledge pious zeal; for it is only in this way that one is a holy atheist, or virtuously deistic, without concerns, without dogmas, without idols. sorting, nor superstitions of any kind.

As for the morn/c', Freemasonry's mission, as an association organized, to signal to humanity the profound dominion of eternal laws implanted deep within its nature, with a view to forming a runic rule of his conduct and our sole and pure motive for his actions remarkable, full of clarity and justice.

Legally, Freemasonry is an organized center, defender of the weak, tiggable of law, of liberty, of Injustice liumaino, inevitable guarantees wounds, indispensable conditions, eternal means in which neither life is not worthwhile, nor is its development possible, nor are its sublime ends

(i) Sloriadéliesùcielà sccrelc slabprime origini agliultimi tempi, di Osvlado Pernii(2vol. iu-8", Milauo, 186J}, l. l,pp. Cûj-006.

298 Masonic Dogma and Morality

can be achieved. That is why she must always defend without question. doctrinal distinctions nor hypocritical reservations all institutions which in the social, political and legal order, are in better conformity*' with law, religion, justice. His responsibility, his mission, his aspirations are therefore eminently political and social, just as they are re-religious, moral, scientific, artistic; but all of it, to the point of practical, achievable view, producing a strong influence, an action etched in the hearts of the people, in all classes of society, in institutions, on interests, on the active elements of life and of progress, improvement and reform (1).

At the Charity Lodge in Malaga, the speaker addressed the ladies in an A'adoinion outfit, he told them

The temple of La Mae*, stands stronger than ever, because it has For dogma, logical reason; for practice, universal morality; and for the ideal of indefinite progress; these sublime elements and its program of real liberty, equality, fraternity (sic) guaranteeing him forever

The supposed indifference that Freemasonry boasts of, vis-à-vis religions, is therefore in reality a declared hostility. Saying it openly, instead of insinuating it, was only a question of time and circumstances:

The essentially moral and universal work of Freemasonry, wrote, in September, 'i H(\l, Le Monde maçonnique, far from comprising no religious demonstrations, formally exclude them under penalty of illogic, of violation of his law and even of forfeiture.

At the convent of the Grand Orient, of 1881, lof.*. Belat, member du conseil de l'ordre etoratenrdi} couvent, s'exprime ainsi dans his opening speech:

My brothers, where will you find for grown men, for spirits mature, such a school of progress, such a diffusion of light re? Will it be religious instruction, the lessons given by the members of the various cults in their respective pulpits which can be given ner as the equivalent of Franc-mneouneric? Ah! here, all the intimate feelings, all consciences would protest against a

(1) Pure product of the Union Chain, I87â.

f2) IIh0. We brought closer to these oxlrails the document A of ((uiic 1. l.uFrunc^ the expagmian ironwork and the exùlence of IHen.

THE TRUE SECRET OF FREEMASONRY 299

%has such assimilation. Catholic, Protestant, or Jewish temples* Your religions! But my brothers, it is precisely against them, it is against the priestly work of all times and all countries that the Freemasonry was founded; it is against them that it delivers these commands. centuries-old battles, which have brought progress, sheltered under our banners res, all this space of field and sun, where it unfolds and extends today (1).

2. – The TRUE SECRET OF FREEMASONRY

In the presence of this radical negation of what constitutes the the basis of all religions, namely the fundamental principle that each of them due to its exclusive verilô, it is singularly instructive to consider der the altitude taken by the dilTrentes confessions.

Islam and the Greek Church pretend to ignore Ma-Nonsense.

In many Protestant denominations, the authorities nuns sympathize with her, and from this rapprochement arises The two institutions are in a strange state of affairs, which we we will study particularly with regard to England and the United States United. However, a number of animated Protestants of the Christian spirit see the danger that the very part runs a sliver of Christianity that their confessions have preserved. (See (Book III, preliminary chapter, sections 7 and 8, and Chapter XXXIII, section 3.)

As for Judaism, it rushes to meet Freemasonry and unites closely with her (see Preliminary Chapter, § 9). Alone The Catholic Church condemned Freemasonry from the very beginning. the day of its outward manifestation, and since then it has not ceased to condemn it, even in countries where it seems almost harmless defensive, because no click can ever compromise with an error dogmatic.

If other religions accept to live in this way with Freemasonry-^ Nonsense, it's because none of them are truly certain that she is in possession of the truth. Only the true Church knows that she releases the deposit and is aware of her infallibility.

(t) Published in \i Chain of union, scplcmbrc-octobro 188t.

300 THE DOGMA AND MASONIC MORALITY

That is why the struggle has coalesced between Freemasonry and Catholicism.

The destruction of the Church, of the social order founded on its foundations teachings, from the Papacy which is its keystone" such is the Freemasonry secret:

In vain did we flatter ourselves with the 18th century that we had crushed the infamous one: the infamous one is reborn more intolerant, more rapacious, and more fan Never. The Catholic religion is a greedy theocracy, devoid of any spirit of family and homeless, obeying a foreign leader and making them bow governments and peoples are under its yoke... It is against this domination that must be fought... To achieve this goal, it is necessary to establish altar against altar.

Freemasonry fights Christianity to the extreme. It will be necessary to... that the country will finally bring about justice, even if it has to use force to cure oneself of this leprosy (i).

1854. They show that the movement we are witnessing today has been prepared for a long time and that was the true goal to which the lodges worked in silence. (See book. III, chap. XII.)

The audacious words spoken by Mr. Gambetta, in his speech Romans course, Clericalism, that is the enemy, has in all the raised boxes of frenetic echoes. We saw what a start silence had been given in 1879 by Mr. Courdavaux, to VÉtoile North of Lille (Book II, Chapter XII, § 10):

The distinction between Catholicism and clericalism is purely official, subtle for the needs of the tribune; but here, in the box, di- I speak loudly and truthfully, Catholicism and clericalism do not make one.

Since then, language has been the constant echo in the lo- We will cite two or three examples among thousands:

On December 25, 1881, the logo of Good Faith, of Saint-Ger- Main-en-Layc adopted a certain number of young children, that their parents handed them over to the Masonic protectorate.

The Chain of Union thus summarizes the words addressed by the F.', speaker to the women who were present:

(i) Meetings of the Belgian logos of July 1, 1846 and June 21, 1854, in the newspaper From Antwerp, August 1857.

THE TRUE SECRET OF FREEMASONRY 301

In highly refined language, he perfectly retraced the role that the mother is called upon to fulfill in order to give the child fant a healthy education, free from all fanatical practices, superstitious and absurd ideas, which stifle these fleeting imaginings and hinder the development of their intelligence. He particularly emphasized so that our sisters may protect their childhood from contact with the priest, who having voluntarily renounced the pure joys of family, finds itself in the worst possible conditions for teaching morality. A mother's heart is the best thing to fill effectively. this task.

That is why it is necessary for her to redouble her efforts in the accomplishing this difficult task, in order to make his children men and mothers, on whom we rely to ar* river to effectively improve the generations that will follow us (1).

At the end of the session, Brother de Serres, a member of the Grand-Orient, insists again on "the powerful considerations which must works of the nature of those of the Sou des Écoles and the League of "Teaching, works born from Masonic initiative."

On the same date, at the solstice festival of the V Union lodge The philanthropic brother of Sà\ût-Deais, Galopin, made himself heard a veritable cry of rage against Religion;

In the past, two feelings existed in the rudimentary state of the world: religious sentiment and the feeling of duty fulfilled, that is to say, the feeling of pride and that of philanthropic union These two sentiments led to the evolution of two classes of very distinct men: the clerics and the freethinkers. The first are represented today in society by men of the various churches and theological sects; the latter are so by the Freemasons. The latter, convinced that religious sentiment is that a bastard feeling grafted onto fear, have made every effort to to fight it and built upon the ruins of a philosophy of words and reasoned science, formulated in figures, is a product of exalted passions. naked all the attributes of the human mind.

It is Freemasonry which, in the great human struggles, It breathes truth through every pore of selflessness.

As a practical conclusion to these absurdities, lef.'. Galopin proposes to all the brothers the example of Mr. Hôrold, of

(1) Chain of Union of January-February 1882.

302 Masonic Dogma and Morality

to spread propaganda through civil funerals and to seize youth education (1),

On December 11, 1881, according to the Masonic Jlipublique, the lodge La Libre Pemée, Or,*, from Gastelsarrasia (Tarn-et-Garonne), was holding his festival of ins-assembly. At one o'clock in the evening, nearly one hundred masons, delegates from the loc People from the region crowded into the nice little Libi'e-Pensée premises. After the opening, a presentation was given on the work of the workshop since its inceptive foundation. Everything was clearly laid out: the civil burials, the inaugural res in this Or.\ by the l, '. ; the incidents, the initiations, the discussions nothing has been forgotten.

A conference at the theatre had been organised to benefit the League of Education... The floor is given to our f. *. Joanne-Made-Leine, editor of the newspaper La Constitution de Lot-et-Garonne. He took The text of his speech included Gambetta's famous phrase: The clerical lism, that is the enemy, a text which he developed very well to the applause Assembly proceedings. The f, *. Jeanne-Madeleine finished her discourse which belongs to the Republic.

But the main attraction of the meeting was the conference of f.*, Gal-Vinhac, editor of Le Réveil, from Toulouse. We were eagerly awaiting... that the well-known speaker from the popular meetings of Paris should take the floor...

Father Galvinhac brilliantly concluded his lecture. "Up with the "Cu'urs!" he said; "Let's fight for the Republic of tomorrow..." (t).

The Masonic Bulletin, of the Grand Symbolic Scottish Lodge Seizure of December 1882, we show that what will become of the Republic of tomorrow^ organized |) by Freemasonry. After having boasted about all tones a vile parody of the Bible, the Bible farce, work vre d'un f.*. he points out that this book, condemned by the courts under Marshal MacMahon, was authorized to re- to appear through the Ferry ministry, and he adds; "It must be read, and Also, have him read it and share it, because it's one of the best books. of republican propaganda.

One of the contributors to the same Bulletin announces that under Soon after, he will publish a book entitled: "God, that is the enemy." which reproduces a series of lectures given before the large symbolic lodge. The editorial staff adds: We would like to see this A book for everyone. The other 70 wmao; Masonic recommended this work no less strongly (3).

(1) Ghaine d'Ifmon, January-February 1882.

(2) Reproduced by Le Français, January 11, 1882.

(3) Y. nolamment the Masonic Republic of April 9, 1882.

Atheism and Freemasonry 303

Foreign Freemasonry – except in English-speaking countries – is animated by the same feelings.

Plancha of gr. 0,', of Italian Freemasonry of August 3, 1872. The f.'. Mazzo declares that all the workshops that depended on the supreme council sitting in Palermo, of which F.. Cavo is secretary, have decided stained to unite into a single bundle, which was the ultimate goal which was the focus of all the efforts of the true Italian Freemasons. This goal has fortunately reached, and the Roman Masonic assembly, composed representatives from 200 workshops, solemnly, on April 28, 1872 proclaimed Unity of Italian Freemasonry having its seat in Rome, which is nerie française has received numerous congratulations.

HIS TRUE BATTLEFIELD (1).

Brother Hérédier, known as the 3rd Masonic Brother, achieved a resounding success. by showing that Swiss Freemasonry is no less anti-clerical than French Freemasonry and that it shares the same opinions and aspirations than this one. (Lodge meeting of the Rose of Perfect Silence) (from Paris, February 2, 1881.)

S 3. – Atheism and Freemasonry

The logical development of his principle was to lead to the Freemasonry is embracing atheism. It is fully immersed in it today, except in England and the United States.

In France, since the day the Grand Orient abolished recognition of the Birth of the great Architect of the universe, not a single defect no such event occurred for this reason within the lodges; this which proves how advanced the ideas were in this direction. For a long time, God was just a word to the Freemasons. meaningless. See how Mr. Fé explains it. Lix Hément, school inspector for the K//® district of Paris, in a speech delivered at the prize distribution of these schools, December 5, 1880:

(1) Cnion chain^ September 1872, p. 519.

304 THE DOGMA AND MASONIC MORALITY

I have spoken the name of God, and I owe two words on this subject. plication, so as not to separate myself from the people who were in the audience would not share my ideas. Suppose I did not pronounce it, et quo je me sois confiné à dire que justice, la Human beauty is flawed in some way; which we conceive perfect justice, truth, and beauty; that this whole of all All perfections, whether called the ideal, surely no one can to deny what we are saying, and, if it is true to say that the sensation of Thirst proves the existence of a body that must quench it, our aspirations towards the ideal is no less certain proof of its existence. Finally, It is no less true that our superiority depends on the progress that We are moving towards the ideal. Let us therefore agree on the points that all can admit. Let's say that the bundle of perfections is called the ideal and that through our efforts we must strive towards it. Some give him a form and a body to better grasp, and they call it God; others conceive of it, but renounce representing it (1).

In foreign Freemasonry, the same movement is intensifying.

suppression of the neregulation, eu rôle des statuts, du grand Architecte of the universe (see Book I, Chapter II, 4 and Vol. I. Attached document) We must add the eastern part of the Netherlands.

On April 3, 1879, he sent a paper to the Grand Orient of France, in which he declares that this vote will not anger their fraternal relations. It follows that deists are tolerated in the Iranian lodges. Also, if he did not follow the example of the great lodges of England and Amsterdam. "Some facts have mitigated "the scruples of the great council of the Netherlands," says this monument. "of rare hypocrisy, namely that having 1789, the Constitution "French Freemasonry did not contain the determination "now withdrawn; that moreover the principle is not yet "expressed in other Masonic constitutions, and that this "omission does not hinder the maintenance of existing relations" your aunts. Moreover, the Grand Orient of the Netherlands believed it could "to settle in the inlets of the Grand-Orient of France to remain

(1) The Itinerary of December 1882 strongly recommends a political book intended for schools, in which Mr. Félix Iléonont treated the physiological part of programs of f.*. Paul Lion, and no less the origin of life. He found the hub of telling everything, according to the Mayouaichuurgie. Here we are brought back of ancient paganism, which, at least, recognized that maxima puero debetur raverentia.

Atheism and Freemasonry 305

"faithful to the maxims of the Order, while retracting the article in "question (1).

Belief in God was therefore not a dogma of the Order, but only one of these common opinions, which vary according to the time and the countries to which the lodges adhere for political reasons, but in reality their principle is identical.

The following year, in the Peace logo, one of the main from Amsterdam, the f.. Knapper dealt with this question: the atheist Could he be a Freemason? He resolved it in the affirmative, to the unanimous applause from the assembly, after a speech in which he claimed to overturn all evidence of existence of God. We will only cite one passage, in which he contrasts to the opinion of Orthodox Christians who believe in a creator God that of the liberals (who profess that God is the cause of everything) nante of the system of the world^ Architecte of the universe (1). So when Freemasonry, during the period when it took a spiritualist mask, used to designate God by this expression. it was, as Mr. Félix He- told us earlier lying, to suggest something other than the living God and creator of Christians. Moreover, from 1865, the f..

Grand Orient;

By declaring that she professes that God exists, that the human soul is immortal as it is, sought to dogmatize in the manner of... Churches, which impose a profession of faith? Not at all. Freemasonry never considered excluding anyone for personal beliefs. Forced to define herself in order to assert herself to the world and to her pro- Up close, she has to say what she is. So, like everyone His symbols, all his actions, reveal a certain science of being and of immortal life, she translates its symbolism into the vernacular and posits as a basis, as a principle of its constitution, the doctrines in teachings to its initiates.

French Freemasonry is thus consistent with itself.
when she proclaims today the most brutal form of atheism.

We read in the Masonic Republic of October 1882:

(1) See in the Cliaine d'union April and May ISS1, p. 100, the complete text of this document.

(2) Chaine d'union, April and May 1881, pp. 155-186.

III

20

306 Masonic Dogma and Morality

In its meeting of September 25, 1882, the L.\ Union and Perseverance (of Paris), unanimously decided to appoint an honorary member F.*. Bradlaugh, Member of the English Parliament, expelled for refusing to religious oath.

The F.» Fontainas, ven,. of the at.. relates that introduced in An- England with Brother Bradlaugh, on the recommendation of the brothers... Yves Guyot and Dreyfus, he received a charming welcome. The freethinker An English sister declared she would no longer go to the English 1.. because of the allu- religious matters of Freemasonry in his country. It was in these circumstances that Father Fontainas, explaining to him the progress made in France, had Taffiliation offered.

F. Bradlaugh owes his fame solely to his profession as a scanner. daleuse of atheism in English arlemenl and the part that it took at the founding of the Malthusian League (see Volume I, Document Annex C).

Inspection of the lodges carried out at the Grand Orient by Brother Optât Scaîlquin
It ends with these words:

A formidable collision occurs between the riotous reactions and the forces of expansion of progress; our Freemasonry will not be worthy of it-child, of her glorious mission, that if she is imbued with the necessities of and if, leading the nation in its wake, it throws itself to the four winds the resounding cry of progress, the delight of the black masses who gather in the shadows; and this cry will only be heard if it is uttered by a breath powerful and generous, if it is repeated from the highest spheres down to the more humble, if reforms that appear inevitable, inflexible, are obtained through common sense, reason, and patriotism, instead of the being by force or humiliating interventions, if they appear under the double calm and resolute halo of the Freemason*, and of democracy wise and peaceful.

Littré, that immense genius, that august old man who, after an existence memorable tence above all others, came simply and modestly to dedicate his immortality on the pediment of the Masonic temple. Littré said: Instruct, instruct. Always destroy. Our strength, our hope, our certainty, is the science that surely dispels what is phantom, superstition, Iniquities: this is the letter G, symbolized by the blazing star, immortal ray, eternal like matter, infinite like intelligence^ which projects its light reaching the very bowels of the earth and boldly penetrating to the depths of both (1).

(!) Journal of Belgian Freemasonry 26th day of the 10th month, 5880.

TWO DAYS OF BROTHERS FERRY AND GAMBETTA 307

These statements are remarkable: it is both an adherent sion to materialism, positivism and the scientific republic-that^ as understood by Mr. Gambetta. So as not to frighten The monarchy, the Lofjes simply call it wise democracy and peaceful.

§ 4. – Two speeches by Friars Ferry and Gambetta

It suffices to read these two speeches, after the quotations that we we have just done, in order to recognize the quintessence of the doctrine lodges.

The Senate was debating the education law on July 4, 1881. primary. Article 2 determines the subjects of intelligence and excludes religious truths by way of preterition. An amen The dement presented by Mr. Jules Simon proposes to understand the en-teaching of duties towards God. Father Ferry, Minister of public education, takes to the podium to demand the

The goal is to find a clear and simple form; and the formula that we what you propose relates not only to philosophical doctrine, of which the honorable Mr. Jules Simon is one of the most eminent representatives nents, but it can also be linked to a confessional duty, to such or such religious dogma, and then, as we were saying earlier, we can ask this question: Which God are you talking about? (Vives (Exclamations and rumors on the right.) – Mr. Baron de Lareinty; There is no There is only one. He is the God of the Christians. (Very good! Very good! Long live agitation on the right)).

Mr. Minister. – Please, gentlemen, moderate yourselves.

The honorable Mr. de Lareinty, who interrupts me impetuously, It's really too good to be true, and I don't want to take advantage of it. (Very-good, very good on the left).

Mr. Baron de Lareinty. – So much the better! On the contrary, take advantage of it!

Mr. Minister. – Yes, you're making things too easy for me. If there isn't that a God, the God of the Christians, according to you, we come to the point that As I was saying earlier, you are affirming a positive religion. tive, you provide religious education. But I ask the question tion from a philosophical point of view, and I ask who the God is which you hear about, because the concept of God varies according before philosophical systems. This God whom you wish to charge The schoolteacher, speaking, is he the God of Christians, is he the God of

308 Masonic Morality and Dogma

Spinoza, the one of Descartes or the one of Malebranche? {Lively interrupts (sighs and ironic laughter on the right. – Very good! Very good! (on the left).)

Shortly afterwards, on August 29, 1881, the late Gambetta presided dait, in Paris, a conference on secular intelligence held by lef.*. Paul Berl, and here are the words with which he opened the session :

You know, – and there really is no need to remind you of this here, – that, whatever the difficulties and inevitable troubles of the In public life, beyond personal quarrels, there exists a cause to which you have always remained faithful to, to which I too (I can (I say this with some pride), I have always remained inviolably attached.

This is the cause of democratic progress; not of that chimerical progress. that we formulate in two words, as if the whole world didn't have proof that one can only build and create through sheer effort continuous and sustained, with the support of his constituents facing an obstacle, no more than letting oneself be intoxicated by the favors of fortune or victory.

And of all the efforts that thinkers and orators can attempt, Statesmen, there is only one. "One, understand this well, who is What is truly effective and fruitful is the development of this capital. the first one that we received from nature and which is called reason.

Yes, our highest task is to develop in everyone man who comes into the world—and by this word I encompass the entire species, – to develop the awakening intelligence, this capital with the help of which we can conquer all the others and consequently achieve peace civil war on earth, without force or violence, without civil war, nothing but through the victory of law and justice.

This is our religion, my friends, the religion of intellectual culture. This sublime word "religion" means nothing else, in fact, THAT the link which is attached to man and which makes each one equal to the one he meets face to face, he salutes his own dignity in the dignity of the other. It is true and bases law on the mutual respect for freedom.

It is for an act of this religion that we are all here. gathered in a spirit of common solidarity. We come to contribute, You your offering, we our word, to this communion that we can and must name the republican Easter of democracy.

Never before had the terrible power of blasphemy, which was permitted to the creature, rebelling against God, had not occurred in a way more calculated and more airborne.

THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY^ 309

The man alone faced Thomme; all religion being in this link from man to man; man, in short, becoming God: – that is what Father Gambetta affirms as dogma of the McCannséey company after F. Ferry outrageously denied the true God.

§5. – The Religion of Humanity

It is found within the lodges of men with logical minds. that, who argue that since we have finished with God, this old A little word, as Renan said: worship is a superfluous thing. Proposals to this effect are constantly being made in the lodges (1). We have said how the Masonic Powers welcomed them (v. Introduction^ S IV}.

society of free thought, and that is how the revolutionaries very ardent are found not to be part of the lodges; but the a Theism is so contrary to nature that this brutal impiety Tale and self-awareness will always be the sad prerogative of a small number. The large mass needs to be deceived by vain pretenses. That is why Freemasonry will retain always assemblies and rites that make it a counterfeit of the Church* The following speech, delivered at a joint session of the Masonic lodges of Lyon on May 3, 1882, by Brother Régnier, and published in the Chaîne d'union of August 1882, explains This situation and this role are very good. We reproduce it in English, despite its length, because it contains many confessions interesting information on the current activities of the lodges:

(1) See, among other places, in the Chain of Union of January 1974, this thesis supported with great verve by a f.*. Vallotton. < Freemasonry is overloaded, he We must not be afraid to acknowledge it, from an old baggage of errors and falsehoods. prejudices, superstitions, monarchical, despotic, oriental customs and traditions Tales, Jewish, Egyptian, Greek, and Audean. That Freemasonry, which ut

Pure anthropology abstains from all formulas, all theology or philosophy theological." In a note, the newspaper's editors explain the reasons for to maintain the symbolism; moreover, it reassures atheists against the consequences that The f.*. Valleton draws from the formula of the Great Architect of the Universe. < When the The fool tells the novices: Admit to the idea of a Great Architect, it has good taking care to give each of them the freedom to define this Great Architect by themselves "Brightly guided by reason alone."

310 Masonic Dogma and Morality

My brothers, if you take an impartial look at our country, placed Undoubtedly at the dawn of civilization, one is struck by the spectacle of the disagreement that exists between minds and material interests and morals. Society is divided into a multitude of religious sects or philosophical sects that were united as long as Catholicism was triumphant, but since the ultramontane ghost is no longer threatened* which, in the eyes of a few visionaries, are separating more and more Moreover, from the purest deism to the most extreme atheism. The same applies in the realm of politics; as long as the despot The pressure was intense, the parties were united in attacking him; he fell, all political factions have fragmented into such a large quantity a number of nuances, which a bench in our Assembly will soon be insufficient so that each of them is represented there. To what can we attribute this state of things? What are the causes that led to it? That's what we will say. let us examine.

in a uniform and continuous manner, but rather in alternating phases targeted in two periods, which we call organic periods and critical periods. Both have a similar character: in the In organic eras, society conceives of its destiny; it knows where it And, notably, these eras are all religious. Religion thus that the institutions being in perfect harmony with the ideas, the be- Care, the trends of peoples, society thus gravitates without upheaval. too serious, until the day the dogma is discussed, challenged, denied, and where institutions no longer represent the current, as a result of pro- accomplished sandstones. Finally, and even more remarkably, all the epochs~ These criticisms are irreligious.

As a result of the material and moral disorder in which we find ourselves vons, the highest intelligences humble themselves, beliefs... The sturdiest falter, the majority wander aimlessly without sa- to see where to rest one's conscience; hence the most extravagant ideas, the most absurd theories, all having ardent supporters, and at Their martyrs are needed. The meetings we attend at every ins- The fact that so many were invited is proof of this. It is also this state of turmoil of t I believe that we owe the emergence of the sect of Freethinkers, of which The name hardly reflects their principle. Every man can think freely. to have one's views, one's knowledge, without being obliged to think like everyone else, and even among themselves (the Freethinkers), the thought Is the seat truly free since, to belong to a group, one must accept regulatory articles?

Freethinking is simply a protest against the ca- Catholicism. But it is completely powerless to found the new social code. It is therefore destined to disappear and merge into the new law, which will reunite the scattered fragments of our modern Babel, for to usher society into a new organic era. This will be, it will Hopefully, it's a work from the end of the 19th century.

THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY 311

The main objective of freethinking is to repudiate worship and not to believe is good, and yet a society cannot live normally without any religious link, and if science is ever to replace According to the dogma, it has not yet acquired its right to exist within the society. Our freethinkers themselves will soon feel the need for this religious link, and I only want proof of what I'm saying; it's in the fact of the birth of two children of freethinkers baptized in a Parisian cabaret by the high priest Henri Rochefort, and in fact even more significant was the funeral ceremony held at the palace of Trocadero, on All Souls' Day, in memory of all freethinkers deceased.

No matter what anyone says or does, birth, marriage and death

Catholic worship still clings too tightly to certain ceremonies, and the Women, especially women, are too attached to them to abandon them before that they be replaced by others that are superior to them.

From the foregoing, given the decline of Catholicism, Given the impotence of free thought, we must now examine what the role, what action can Freemasonry exert in this work? the drive for social transformation, and whether or not it is powerless, as some gloomy and frivolous people claim... See what sublime data contains this legend which makes of society and of the ci- the development of an entire edifice, retracing its miseries, its struggles, its oppressions; then these three companions, wanting to seize by force the se* the master's credit for making their profit, - (see book 1, cliap. I, § 2), - and What hope does the resurrection of him who in reality did not give us? He was not dead, but he will return one day to resume the work of master, that is to say, to rebuild society on new foundations, where The triple motto of Liberty, Equality, Fraternity will reign. Also, faithful to This motto, we see Freemasonry at work and give a large part to the French Revolution, which seized upon its motto. Thus it is currently adopted in France... It served as a model, by its organization nisation, to those societies which, through their conspiracies, brought about the state current events...

To believe that Freemasonry* has run its course would be a serious mistake.

error, especially in France, because the republican regime^ modeled Regarding our institutions, it is a fait accompli. It must be currently the school for men who aspire to become the leaders of democracy. There they learn about social life. The graduates sort them out, because those Those who lack a sense of public life will not stay there long.

312 Masonic Dogma and Morality

time; it is destined to unite the mass of independents sooner or later. free thinkers who, without this, would still only be a push a series of disintegrated elements, facing the still unified and formidable mass the problem of clericalism, and of the ignorant crowd that follows it. One must not that we are no longer using what is a mvstèue: that for a long time two armies are present, and the fighting is currently open in France, Italy, Belgium, Spain, between light and darkness ignorance, and that one will prevail over the other. Therefore, we must know THAT THE GENERAL STAFF, THE LEADERS of these friends, are on one side the Jesuits sequels, on the other hand the Freemasons.

La Fr.'. Mac.', must therefore olfriranx true libre'^-penscurs an element without which any victory would be merely fleeting and futile. Let us not forget Not only from the point of view of rallying, men need a thought, a common link; hence Relkhon's word. Nothing! Franc-ma-independence, without imposing on them a dogma relating to the first cause things, to the ultimate goal of life; love of humanity, practice solidarity, the philosophy of work, all of this can and must... suffice.

A civil burial, at worst, as is currently practiced, cannot long enough, despite the immortelles worn in the buttonhole; it Whatever people say, a human being needs some kind of ceremony. He leaves this world and goes into the great unknown. Well then, my brothers.' The Mae... offers all of this. She has her secret; she also has her temples which should be larger; it has its festivals, its decorations, its encens, its candles, its organ, and its flowers. It has its golden vault, its mallets; it has its baptisms, its weddings, its funerals; it has All this, and more. Its ceremonies are symbolic, and, practically guided by intelligent masons, their sunniftcalion bears fruit.

Furthermore, it finally possesses one of the main elements of religion, seniority, because it is older than Catholicism and can be placed at the same age level as Brahmanism.

Finally, I still need to discuss other matters with you, such as the burning question of the day, a question we absolutely must answer and... to absolutely include in our agendas, a question that we would need If not to solve it, at least a solution should be prepared: "A more equitable distribution of material and moral well-being!" This work, my FF.*, is that (which the legend of IIRain gave for tâ- to Freemasonry.

Mac.', therefore, has not completed its work, but to accomplish it demands greater freedom. He needs the ease of being able to move to improve and perfect themselves; and to those who say: the Freemason Nerie should not concern itself with politics, religion, or socialism.

INVIOABILITY OF THE HUMAN PERSON 313

I boldly reply: Freemasonry has been, Freemasonry is, and Freemasonry will be.

ALWAYS POLITICAL, RELIGIOUS AND SOCIAL, OR IT WOULD BE NOTHING.

Following this speech, Brother Regnier made the proposal next:

1® That every year, in the spring, a baptismal festival takes place, where Both girls and boys will be admitted.

2® That every year, in October or November, a funeral celebration be given for all masons who died during the year.

3® That a voluntary subscription be opened in all workshops for the making of a Masonic funeral pall, so that all those connically.

4® That the conference committee draw up a questionnaire on the a question that is stirring up minds, particularly among the working classes, regarding the role of labor and capital, so that all competent masons apply they bring their share of insights to this burning issue.

§ 6. -- This WHERE signifies the inviolability of the PERSON HUMANITY, THE BASIS OF MASONIC MORALITY

We will give some examples of the new one later.
worship that Freemasonry substitutes for that of Christians (see the cha-clown XVII, The New Theophilanthropists). We will finish this one through a few quotes on the morality taught in the boxes.

Lef.*. Félix Pyat wrote in December 1880, in his journal
nal la Commune:

I remember that under Louis-Philippe – I remember Far away, you see, – I was received as a Freemason at the lodge La Clémentine Amitié by Brothers Clavel, Altaroche, and other republicans of that time. My ordeal, all politics, rolled on the regicide, which I then supported as to today.

This is the same person who said in 1840;

The Republic has both powers, both swords, for it prothe sovereignty of the people, and the people are spiritual sovereign

314 Masonic Dogma and Morality

as he is temporal sovereign. No more tiaras or crowns; the
The people are pope as they are king.

Far from being excluded from the lodges, Félix Pyat remained a of their most important characters.

U Almanac of Free Thought (Liège section) for 1882
He made an apology for political assassination in these terms:

Ultimately, Orsini is aligned with Judith, Agésilas Milano with Garibaldi.
The Counts of Egmont and Homes belong to Gerard Dalthazar, Jesus belongs to Barabbas, and the Russian nihilists are to autocracy what failure is key to success.

This is what the inviolability of the human person means.

tecte of the Universe and the immortality of the soul, as a principle fundamental to order.

Listen again to this glorification of human hecatombs
The Terror by F.*. Barre, at the meeting of the supreme councils Scottish Rite lodges, in 1875:

The Encyclopedists, Rousseau, Voltaire, affirmed free thought.
The ground is prepared, the seed has germinated. Lightning tears across the sky and illuminates the blazing star of '89. Let us all salute: it is the Convention who passes by. Alas, the work is incomplete; they demolished the old one.
In reality, they were unable to completely eliminate it in the Ideas: destroying abuses is not enough, we must change customs.

I know full well that we are bombarded every day with the grim date from 1793. A cloud formed over 1590 years; after fifteen centuries ago he died, and where was the trial held by the thunderbolt! Apart from the Revolution, which, taken as a whole, is an immense affirmation human tion, 1793 is a replica; many find it inexorable.
Marat claps his hands at the guillotine. But Bossuet sings the Te Deum.
on the dragonnades.

The French Revolution has its reasons; its anger will be absolved by the
to come; its result is the best world; of its most terrible blows
He offers a caress for humankind. The brutalities of the problem sandstones are called revolutions; when they are 11th, we recognize that the Humankind has been roughed up, bruised, but it has also walked (1).

(1) Cftainc d'unio », soplora-bre-octobre t875.

WOMEN AND FAMILY

315

§7. – The woman and the family

The work of the Revolution will not be complete, he just said the f. *. Barred, that when Freemasonry has reached to change morals. That is the reason for his efforts to to seize the souls of French women. We have seen (Uv. II, cha-(Pitre IV, and Book III, Chapter XII, 7) some extracts from the watchwords given in the lodges on this subject. Now that they are in possession of power, they agree on this decisive point all the forces of the Revolution.

pronounced on August 12, 1882, at the distribution of school prizes of the fourteenth arrondissement, by Mr. Schmidt, deputy to mayor. We extract the following passage:

For girls, their role is no less noble; it will be theirs one day to guide the first steps of citizens of future generations; to make them in turn cherish family, school, to make them know this beloved, free and prosperous France; to make them hate this cosmopolitan religious liturgy, which places a hymn homeland above the earthly homeland poetic, lost in the celestial vault; to distance them from this humility misunderstood, this leads men to kneel before others who, Whatever they say, they are no more infallible than we are; do tes amen to obey only their conscience and their reason (1).

What will Freemasonry do with the homes where it has established itself? mistress ?

(1) We cannot pass this Uscr ceilo oflieuso accus.ilion, without recalling by Some quotes on what Masonic doctrine rejects from patriotism. – "It is worth "It is better to be a little less patriotic than not to be a citizen of the "world," said Brother NéJoncliello, venerable of the Hospitallers of Saint-Ouen, held in July 1874. – "The German Masonic Union must not differ from "To mark the exact point where palriolismo ceases to be a virtue," said BauhüLe of Leipzig (in 188'), by threatening Mr. Bismarck with the withdrawal of the lo- ges. V. furthermore Secret Societies and Society, \\y I, cliap. V, g 7, France- destructive masonry of love beyond peers and of all nationalities.

No doubt many of the French masons have shown patriotism in practice. but in this they are inconsistent with their doctrine; they violate the oaths which they oblige one to come to the aid of a brother on every occasion, while the Catholic, by serving his country, no fact that he was only putting into practice the doctrine formulated by the command.

316 Masonic Dogma and Morality

Listen to a certain F.*. Zaniawski, making, in 1875, a confury on women and the family:

A woman aspires to the enjoyment of the rights that should be hers. common with man, and to higher studies, than man, by the rule of the strongest, appropriated for himself alone; this educated farm as man and jointly with him will ensure the dissemination of the lux morals, civil liberties, and general happiness. Without the With women thus emancipated, the progress and happiness of humanity are not Just dreams.

As far as the family is concerned, it must be said that marriage, not being that a contract between two persons of the same sex for the purpose of vi- Living together and raising children, is dissolvable in certain cases.

to deal with the order of nature and morality (1).

The emancipated woman, the democratized woman^ as said another brother, "That's a vast program. We're not there yet." Not yet fully implemented. Divorce alone is possible. at this moment and still encounters strong resistance in our Christian society. After the 1881 elections, the Chamber The French deputies voted for the bill establishing the divorce, and this time, the f. *. Irisson did not raise any protests: electoral interest was no longer at stake!

In Italy, a similar bill had been tabled in the Chamber deputies, before the elections of 1882, by Mr. Villa, the year former agent of Mazzini (v. lib. III, chap. VII, § 13.) At the opening ture of the new legislature, the ministry of f.*. Depretis has not he did not want to give him exclusive credit for this initiative and he presented on behalf of the government a draft establishing the divorce (2).

But this is only one step. Freemasonry has something better than the Dissolute marriage. This will be judged by the discussion that took place. at the lodge la l*arfaUe ér/alité, Orient of Paris, the fourth Tuesday of July 1871 (3), where the question of religious marriage, of the ma Civil marriage and cohabitation were discussed:

P. Cerezoli. – Freemasonry no longer has to inquire about the

(1) Chain of Union of 1875.

(*t) See FanftMa of January 9, 1883.

(3) Union decree, August–September 1874, p. 532,

WOMEN AND FAMILY 317

the way in which laypeople, who want to be initiated, unite only in the the way they are buried.

F. Minot distinguishes between marriage, cohabitation, and common-law union. Free unions can stem from respectable theories.

The intervention of civil authority in the major act of marriage under the form of a magistrate, having the inclination and inertia of the priest who to proceed with a burial, is something shocking for na-sensitive and high temperatures.

On the other hand, insubordination that the law systematically imposes The role of women in marriage partnerships can deter some consumers.

to be free from the formalities of marriage according to the law, so as not to have to course that to the intimate contract of hearts. But it

There are cases where free union, despite the opposition of words, is forced. husband, who had to leave his lawful wife because of her promiscuity either on her part or due to her lack of basic virtues of the home, cannot be condemned, without contempt of the law of nature, to remaining in isolation, deprived of the necessary charms of life jugale and offspring.

In this case, free union is the obvious solution for the most fâ- misfortune, and far from condemning such unions, those who use the term "concubinage," on the contrary, must, when they are moreover irreproachable in all other respects, surrounding them with consi- irrationality, of sympathy. The brother speaking concluded by not pronouncing of general exclusion, but to examine each case individually.

F. Maret supports these words. Each case must be examined.

FF Gbappy cites the example of a F. •. man who was honorable above all others.

F. Mazzeorelli requests the reinstatement of the divorce. He supports the ideas put forward by F.*. Havet, and A. Minot.

F. Gatalo. He asks that in matters of conscience and of feeling, such as that of the mode of marriage (free marriage), the law it should become advice, not an obligation.

This discussion does not lead to a conclusion: that's how it is. that the lodges readily proceed in matters where opinion The public is not yet sufficiently prepared; they sow ideas which then spread shortly afterwards; she sketches, as she said a brother in 1863, the articles of faith of Vavenir (book 111, chapter 1). XII, S 4).

CHAPTER SIXTEEN

CONSERVATIVE MASONRY

"progressive masonry"

§ 1". – The FF.–. Renan and Jules Vallès

Freemasonry has two faces: One is polished, correct, it

The other is abrupt, crude, and radical. It is above all this second face of Freemasonry as we know it in this world; but the first one has been important at various times. and it could resume under certain political regimes; it It is therefore necessary to seize upon all its manifestations in passing.

Brother Renan represents the tradition within the Masonic army. of profoundly hypocritical impiety of Weishaupt and the High-Roman Sale (see Introduction^ 6 and 7. -r- Book II, Chapter IX, §2. - Liv. III, chap. prel., S 3).

We have had to remind people several times of his ties to the sect. (Book I, Chapter II, § 6, and Chapter V, § 6). He expresses his thoughts the deepest ones with a refinement that disguises them to the literal superficial thinkers, and his mockery of democracy noisy and ignoble, to Caliban^ made the readers take Boulevard papers for a conservative!

It is therefore useful to recall here some of his writings

320 CONSTRUCTIONAL AND PROGRESSIVE MASONRY

more recent; because they testify to the continuity of his work in in favor of the destructive work of the Revolution, and at the same time time they shed more light on the inner doctrine of the sects.

The f •. Renan, in scs Üialoipics phlLosophif/ues^ expressed with a ray of precision their thinking in what shady the role of the power in royalty (book 1®*', chapter V, 0). In a writing more recently, VEau de Jouvence (l), it sets forth the concept that the The sect focuses on morality and personality development. human:

Gostelcac. We should, however, consider moralizing the masses; he That's the only thing that matters.

Prospero, at our age, Gotescalc, can we say such childish things? Ges? If we are not disillusioned, when will we be, my dear? How can you not yet see the vanity of all this? All three of you, We led a wise youth, because we had a work to do. In good conscience, seeing how little this yields, can we advise For others, who have no work to do, what are the little maxims of life? Morality should be reserved for those who have a mission like us. He who occupies a special place in humanity must assert himself, in return of his privileges, austere duties, a constrained way of life to difficult rules. But poor ordinary people, come on! They are poor, and you want them to be green on top of that? Killers! That's asking too much. Elil, my pious one, their share is not the worst. It's wrong. Only simple people have fun. But having fun is a...

The people must have fun; that is their great reward...

Gotescalc. So you don't believe that temperance societies would save the world from the dangers that threaten it.

Phospero. But this is truly outrageous! Depriving ordinary people of the only joy they have, by promising them a paradise they will not have Not 1. Come now! Poor, desolate lives! Why do you want to prevent
Dear to these unfortunate souls, to immerse themselves for a moment in the ideal? Perhaps to be the hours when they are worth something.

At the end of this short work, Renan has the Cardinal express another thought dear to Freemasonry (see book II, chapter IV, <§ 2 and liv. III, chap. XXXV, § 3). *

Cremation is the only burial worthy of the idealist, because the body human, as long as it is no longer the substratum of a person, is not

(1) ln-l«, ^aris, 1881,

THE FF.-. Renan and Jules Vallès

321

nothing but a cluster of atoms like all the others, nothing to respect order to disintegrate. But we are not equipped for this type of funeral*

For many years, Father Renan has disdained frequenting to the French lodges. He leaves the empire to Calihan. But his relations with high-ranking officials of foreign Freemasonry are narrow, and his travels are always an opportunity for meetings important.

In 1872, the highest members of Italian Freemasonry They offered him a banquet, which caused quite a stir at the time, and where the great victory won by the sector was celebrated Christianity, the occupation of Rome by the Piedmontese (1).

Also the members of the Loc congress arno (liv. II, chap. XII, § 4) did they recommend, to substitute another cult for Christ Tianism, to reduce Renan's books to the form of a catechism and popular writings (2).

In 1881, a new trip to Rome by F.*. Renan.

Upon leaving the city of the popes, he addressed his Roman brothers to continue their work with perseverance, but with restraint, in order to not to compromise its success.

Here is the beginning:

I was deeply touched by the expressions of sympathy I received. received from you in this city of Rome, where the religious problem of Humanity has been posing itself with a kind of clarity for eighteen hundred years. sovereign.

Rome has always been remarkably adept at two things: the first is the great art of waiting; the second is the inflexibility in maintaining the principles destined to triumph one day. Now, what is in the religious order? gieux, the principle to which the future belongs?

That is undoubtedly freedom.

Rome, I am convinced, will now work just as hard to establish this a salutary principle, which it has been able to help instill in the past opposing doctrine.

You have suffered more than anyone from the abuses of the imposed belief see; you will know better than anyone how to drive the last of the world out of the world

(1) V. iUnivers du 4 novembre 1872.

(2) See rUnùwTf of November 19, 1872.

in

21

322 CONSERVATIVE AND PROGRESSIVE MASONRY

remnants of a regime that contradicted the most firmly held principles of modern civilization.

In the early days of human societies, the city was merely an extension of the family; the family had sacred rites that constituted it; It was therefore natural that the city should have its rites and that whoever refused to to conform to it would cease to be part of the city.

When the state was formed on broader foundations, embracing masses more or less imbued with the same belief, it was also It was natural that there should be a state religion.

But everything has changed these days. There are no longer masses of believers.

enjoy, the people of the big cities no longer go to church or temple; He will not be brought back there. The secondary towns and the countryside follow the same trend. The progress of public education minuent plus en jüus the sum of superstitious viruses that is spread in humanity, and we can foresee the day when belief in facts about-natural (I'm not saying ideal) will be something in the world of such little regard as faith in sorcerers and re-coming.

It might not be worth stopping this re-edition tion of the impious lucubrations of the Life of Jesus if the organ the the most important of the Bonapartist party, the official newspaper of the prince Napoleon, the Orrfre, of November 7, 1881, had not seized this opportunity to indicate how this party understands the issue of relations the Church and the State, and what, according to him, religious freedom should lead to gieuse registered on her program.

We quote without comment:

The question of the relationship between Church and State has just received In a way, a resurgence of activity.

Mr. Renan, on October 28th, wrote to the anti-circles clerics from Rome and Italy, a letter to thank them for the witnesses signs of sympathy he received from Rome, that city where "the pro-The religious problem of humanity has existed for eighteen hundred years with a kind of sovereign clarity.

The letter in question is very important, and constitutes a document Invaluable. Conceived with the author's usual open-mindedness. In her Life of Jesus, she concludes that the State is neutral in religious matters. gious. For everything concerning human consciousness, for the science, for faith, {the illustrious writer demands the most absolute freedom solution j

THE FF.*. Renan and Jules Vallès 323

This principle is none other than the very principle of democracy. We We could only be its zealous supporters.

The future belongs to freedom.

This shows what the authorized representatives of the idea na-Poleonian, of the Bonapartist tradition, have in mind, when They talk about religious freedom and what they expect from it. The ar Article of the Order and the letter of the f.*. Renan, determine the true meaning that must be attached to the promises of Prince Napoleon in his manifesto of January 16, 1882 in favor of religious freedom and respect for the Concordat... stifled and distorted by the articles organizing Renan's Bonapartist ties do not prevent him to support all measures directed against Christianity by the ministers of the Republic. Much has been noticed in his volume on MaroAurèUy published in 1882, this encouragement direct message given to Brothers Ferry and Paul Bert:

If Marcus Aurelius, instead of using lions and the red-hot chair, had employed primary school and a rationalist state education system, he would have Much better prepared was made to avoid the world's seduction by the Christian supernatural Demonstrating the futility of all things supernatural, that is the radical cure for fanaticism

Otherwise probably didn't take a single disciple from Jesus. He had reason from the point of view of natural common sense; but simple common sense, when it is in opposition to the needs of mysticism, is He listened very little. The ground had not been prepared by a good minister of public education.

It is at the heart of the organization of state education. Tishrean and materialistic, which will crush the new generations within the framework of the omnipotent state, which Freemasonry... tends to resume the fight to the point where the pagan emperors per The seducers had abandoned her, and they flattered themselves that they would triumph this faith of Jesus Christ!

The herald of this new phase of persecution receives testimonials of support from all the men of some perspicacity which are engaged in the sect. His dis-lecture at the Academy, during the reception of Mr. Pasteur, was the object, on the part of Brother Jules Vallès, of significant encouragement ficates. Le Français of May 1882 reported them with re-bends that are useful to reproduce:

"We would not want the French Academy to be unaware of this"

324 CONSERVATIVE AND PROGRESSIVE MASONRY

^ a

çaisc, says this newspaper, the approval given to one of its members, to Mr. Renan, by the spokesperson for the dissenters, by the scholar of the Commune, by Jules Vallès. He shows us quite Mr. Renan, in fact, was pulling Mr. Pasteur by the coattails of his habit and saying to him in a childish tone: V infinity? Are you finished? Then He adds:

"Last Thursday, he bravely led impiety through the pews." where the mummy aristocracy and literature celebrating Easter reside, as an eighteenth-century abbot presented, in the salon of Holfrost-proof.

a Nom rCavons qu'à applaudant, l'opené la breach,

"The nails of Golgollia no longer hold your glory;

"Over your divine tomb the sky has withdrawn;

< Your glory is dead, O Christ, on the ivory skull;

Your celestial corpse has fallen to dust.

"The blow was even deeper, thanks to sentimentality and..."

simpering, which further accentuates the contempt that the one deserves

She is treated like a dirty old woman, who loves to play games in mockery.

laughter. It is the lighthearted form of the sentences that others have praised as flowering of style; it is the poison they hide in their corolla that I distilled it and I weigh it by the weight of gold. Religious tradition has had looking as if she'd been touched by a skeptic's hand, I think she's dead inside.

Once skepticism was welcomed and celebrated, atheism soon began to show its true colors.
his face.

"Where the father has gone, so shall the child go."

"Mr. Jules Vallès therefore believes that the statements of Mr. Re-

No, frail in appearance, they are pregnant with unholy hopes.

"He sees it primarily as a great advantage for social revolt, for the revenge of the refractories, for the vanquished of 1871, and

He concludes by addressing Mr. Renan and his friends in a me- tone naçant:

"Perhaps they were wrong to pull God by the feet. Their so

Their wisdom and caution may perhaps be linked to this idea of infinity.

Mr. Renan, with a coquettish gesture, has just delivered the rabbit punch.

"If they continue at this rate, having reached letter 11 in their dictionary, -• infinite, that one, for goodness' sake - they might be capable of swordsmanship

"I'm going to write the word 'Revolution'."

THE FF.*, Renan and Jules Vallès 325

We invite the brilliant minds who have tasted Pyrrhonism

Mr. Renan's academic work, said the Frenchman, is something to ponder at the same time

Mr. Vallès' compliments and threats.

And we would add, for our part: Never lose sight that in a certain sense, as Joseph de Maistre said, "it

"Neither ignore nor forget (i)."

(1) Qwüre unpublished chapters on Russia, p. 175 and 185.

CHAPTER SEVENTEEN

THE NEW THEOPHILANTHROPE.

Freemasonry has rites for its followers to which it attaches she attaches great importance to them. She agrees to simplify them, to their to give a positivist slant instead of pantheistic overtones that they had in the time of the ff. •. Victor Cousin, Matter and Ragon: but she still keeps them, for the reasons we we have indicated in our Introduction[^] III.

Apart from these rituals that are specific to her, she feels that it is necessary to the men she excludes from the Church's ceremonies, from the so-lennities that satisfy both religious sentiment, inde- neat in the city, and habits of sociability. The conventions The traditionalists had tried the cult of reason and the festivals of Our Lady supreme; the Theophilanthropists continued under the Directory. They soon ended up in ridicule; but this weapon is not dead. such as for Freemasonry, and we are witnessing nowadays a complete overhaul of the Directory scenes. We Let's reproduce some accounts of the ceremonies. of baptism, of Masonic adoption, which corresponds to the confirmation Finally, the Masonic marriage ceremony.

§ 10. — A Masonic baptism

The Masonic Bulletin of the Grand Symbolic Eco- Lodge Saisoy, in his August 1881 issue, recounts the white outfit thus{\\)dG

(1) Oa Apollo held white Masonic meetings to which the profane are admitted.

328 THE NEW TILKOPIELANTIMORES

The VIndépendance lodge of Paris. The Worshipful Master opens the session. through a lengthy speech, in which he clarifies the purpose of the haplêmc independent civilians:

The civil ceremonies lacked that of baptism. People forgot to overthrowing the first of the clerical Bastilles, the starting point, in a word, of this intolerable enslavement of all the existence of the individual. Some had the child baptized according to one rite or another, and they stopped there, without realizing that by sacrificing to the inode, they were lacking seriously jeopardized the integrity of the honest citizen and the republican sincere, after having failed to show due respect to the child. Others, more Those who were logical abstained, as a sign of protest.

We found that this protest was insufficient, that it must have an unusual impact, and that the civil baptism of this This evening must be the beginning of definitive emancipation.

Before concluding, I must acknowledge the public's testimonial of esteem. our excellent f.*. Gestliau.scn, who was the first to raise this question the study in our workshop—and, joining the example to the idea, we presented sent, with the eager consent of our Lord, his child to baptism independent.

Brother Galopin continues by saying that Macilai, who will preside over the independent baptism of the Lowt.'. Gesthausen, no, will not lose it. seen, and that she will watch over her with the utmost care.

The clergy takes the child as soon as it is born. We must do this to So much. The father who imposes his religion on his child will do with him what the The clergy calls a renegade. Let us not give him religion; he finds himself will find it impossible to deny the one he will not have. The child, who is presented to us today, is excommunicated by the sole fact of cotte presentation; we can say that, although there are accommodations If we are in cahoots with heaven, the clergy will not take it back from us.

A triple round of applause greeted this peroration.

The godmother and the two godfathers stand up and stand around the child.

Levén.'. addressed the following questions to them:

Madam, Sir, you have just heard the excellent words of Our friend Galopin; you know what your rights and duties are. Now, regarding this child, do you agree to be her godfather? And godmother? – Yes.

Do you consent to act as his father and mother, if his natural guardians If they were to miss him? – Yes.

Promise yourself to use your influence and power to to provide the child with an education in accordance with the principles of sound

Moral and free from prejudice and all intellectual servitude?
Yes.

Promise you will not interfere in any way with his freedom, if,
At the age of reason and of her full will, she declared she wanted to embrace
Is it a religion of any kind? – Yes.

F.*. Galopin, are you ready to ratify these declarations?– Yes.

We acknowledge your promises.

The father and mother, the godmother and the two godfathers, the venerable* and the sccr.'. affix their signature to the document, which is then endorsed with seal of the L,*.

At the invitation of the Venerable*, the secretary reads this document aloud.

thus known;

■>

Liberty. – Equality. – Fraternity.

L.*. n® 17. – Independence.

In the name of freedom of conscience:

We, the undersigned; Grandjany (Eugène), Bayle (Aline), and doctor Galopin, honorary member of the L.*. Independence,

We publicly declare our consent to serve as godparents to Anna Aline Gesthausen, manonically named "Independence", born on November 24, 1880, daughter of Guillaume and of Zoé Anna Jenzsch, his wife.

Let us promise on our honor to protect and rescue her in case
His natural guardians would fail him.

We declare our intention to follow up with him by all means within our power.
to see an education in accordance with the principles of sound morality and independence intellectual dependence.

Furthermore, let us declare that we grant him the freedom to embrace any religion.
that he may please, provided that this choice is made of his own free will.
and only when his age will allow him to act with full knowledge cause.

Done in Paris, and recorded in the guestbook of the Lodge L'Indépendance, Saturday, August 27, 1881.

Signed È. Grandjany, Aline Bayle.

The child's father and mother.

Signed: Gesthausen and wife Gesthausen,

The Masonic godfather.*..

Signed D*^ Galopin.

Certified true and sincere.

The President of the Lodge: Signed: Guenot.

The secretary: Signed: Delhotal (LS).

330 THE NEW TIIEOPHILANTIROPES

Having finished reading, and after a few seconds of reflection,
A resounding and prolonged round of applause demonstrates that
The assembly understood our thinking and agrees with it.

The Venerable invites all the Freemasons present to stand up.
order. My Brothers, he said, we now have a duty to accomplish.
fold. Our F.. Gesthausen presents his child to the protectorate maç.',, and according to his wish, our F.. Galopin agrees to serve him as godfather. Freemasonry, by virtue of its principle of solidarity, must confirm sea this acceptance by its own.

F.. F., maç.*., do you consent?— Yes.

Do you agree to be the unsung supporters and protectors of Lowt.*. Gesthausen, called "Independence"? — Yes.

'Do you swear to love her, help her, and rescue her in the world?'
Difficult aspects of life? — We swear it.

In the name of France, universal, in the name of the Great League, Symbol of France, I proclaim the Lowt. . Gesthausen placed under the protectorate maç.. and make for her the most ardent wishes for happiness and prosperity (1).

In your name as well, my brothers, I give our child my embrace.
frat.., and to you, my dear S..Gesthausen, I will say: Remember!

A schoolteacher, Ms. Hardouin, attended the ceremony.
€ first school principal who, under the empire, proudly displayed—
"The flag of free thought is flying." She is asked to go up to Addressing the topic at hand, Ms. Ilardouin said that a birth

A birth without baptism is very sad. Therefore, a ceremony is necessary.
Tonight's is definitely the one we need.

But the role of Freemasonry* should not stop there.

The time of First Communion is for children a day of
At the party, the boys wear white trousers and an armband, the girls have a white dress, they give them gifts, etc. Why the Freemasonry*.
Wouldn't she throw a party for 12- and 13-year-olds? That would be their first Masonic communion*. and this ceremony would attract us many mothers.

The Freemason*, adds Mrs. Tardouin, threw the first stone at the Royalty; she now casts the first stone at clericalism. She makes veto give to her the little children and the women, and to take them away, to return free and independent, from the clutches of the clergy, who, through the education he

(1) These promises of protection in civil life, in the business, done to the affiliates of the Ma<onnerio. It is one of the main means of propaganda back logos and it provides them with subjects for their baptisms, many .more than the grotesque ceremonies we have just read about.

THE MASONIC CONFIRMATION 331 gives, throws nations into slavery. All his wishes are for our three cause.

The end of this speech was greeted with warm applause.

The Venerable* takes advantage of what Mrs. Ilardouin just said a moment ago to inform the audience about the issue of first communion maç*. cstrccisément à l'étude ce moment dans le R.. L.. les Hos-hospital staff of Saint-Ouen, our affiliated S.'. L.*., and that this first com» Masonic communion will take place on the same day as the first clerical communion.
wedge, which will remove any cause for envy or jealousy between the children.

§2. – Masonic Confirmation

The following account is taken from the C/mme d'union^ of 1880, pp.
252*253 will indicate which sacrilegious parodies the sect engages in:

The L.*, the assembled Philanthropists, celebrated its summer solstice festival, the August 8, 1880, by a Masonic protectorate.', followed by a banquet and ball.

The adoption party, which started at two o'clock, was charming.

The works opened to the vibrant strains of the Marseillaise, under the presidency of F.'. Fleiivy, assisted by F.'. Duvoisl and Boulet, 1@'' and 3* serv,*, the children, twenty-one in number, make their entrance into their temple accompanied by their protectors, and passing under the steel vault; they come to line up at the foot of the altar.

The venerable..., in an address, explained to the large assembly – (more than three hundred people enhanced the splendor of this celebration) the but of the Masonic protectorate.'.. He says that the Freemason,*, is concerned with childhood, from a young age, not to justify this statement of Christ: "Let the little children come to me," so that he may make them... heavenly chosen ones, but to guide them in life, and make them honest family men, useful citizens devoted to their country and to humanity.

The venerator then calls upon the woman to help the man in his difficult mission: raising children; he pledges to shake off the yoke of priest, the religious yoke, which are an obstacle, an obstacle to reality the sation of humanity's ideas.

The work continues, and each of the children, after breaking the BREAD AND THE VL\ (1), comes, in turn, to receive at the altar, from the hands

(t) This parody of the august sacrament of Christians is an ancient practice in Freemasonry, and to which she readily returns, when she is not afraid not to shock public sentiment. We found it mcolionnéo in the ou- book The Crushed Freemasons, published in Amsterdam in 1747 (see book III, chapter I, § 2).

332 THE NEW TIIEOPIIILANTIROPES

of the Venerable, the name and the Magon jewel, signs of its adoption by the Franc-maeonn.-,.

F.*. Gouciiaüi) then takes the floor and, in a charming and witty conversation, this F.", highlights the role of women in the society and its duties within the family. Warm applause. welcomed these words.

The music once again fills the air with its melodious sounds. It is while F.'. Goxxvni), doctor, gets up, and, in an improvisation a warm and eloquent message addressed to the children, highlights what are Their rights and their duties. Their rights, the right to exist, the right to the Social life, these are the duties of society towards them; their duties, This is the debt they incur towards their family, towards their country, in towards humanity.

Describe the applause that erupted at each of the words of The orator is almost impossible. Speech full of elevation, of

When he finished, there was a real ovation.

After a fundraising campaign for the Masonic orphanage, which produced 655 francs 75 centimes, the works are closed in the usual manner, and the Venerable*, gives a rendezvous at six o'clock for the banquet to the whole assembly seemed.

This appeal was heard, and at six o'clock, 250 guests crowded in around the tables.

The most sincere cordiality and the most vivid sympathy have not ceased to reign for the entire duration of the works.

For dessert, warm toasts were served.

This brilliant celebration, of which the lodge Les Philanthropes Réunis can, quite rightly The title, "Being Tied," ended with a ball, where charm and elegance reigned. The dancers never ceased to captivate attention until four half past the hour in the morning.

§ 3. – Masonic marriages

Here, the rituals vary greatly. The Masonic ceremony follows quchiuefűis the civil marriage contracted at the town hall. Here are between au- very the story of a wedding celebrated in Paris in the lodge the l^'ancc

Masonic Marriages 333

■Masonic, and the account of which can be found in the Chain (Union of January–February 1881:

...Long before the bride and groom arrived, the room was full. Around two hours later, the ceremony began. Following Father Lépine's request, to present his wife to the Lodge, two masters of ceremonies will look for the couple and, while the pianist Mr. Dupré plays a an impromptu march, they lead them in front of the platform, where F.*. Bé-Trémieux, the venerable master of the Lodge, was waiting for them.

In a short speech, which nonetheless is very The happy F.'. Bétrémieux welcomes F.. Lé 5 »ine and to his young wife. He congratulates F.. Lépine "for having affirmed by all his actions, his principles as a freethinker"; then, addressing the young married, he said to her: "Our congratulations to you, Mr. Lépine, who ave/, knew how to understand that, by becoming the wife of a Freemason, You had to free yourself from the prejudices that give men their strength.

the respectful tribute of your husband's friends, who, like him, have the death of family and country.

We must, S.*. Lépine, thank you, for your presence here.
is for us the dawn of the new era to which Freemasonry

Aspire, and for which she has fought and will always fight, this era
SO DESIRED, OR THE WOMAN WILL FLEE THE EULISE AND ITS CONFESSIONALS TO COME TO US WHO CLAIM TO BE FRIENDS OF THE LIGHT.

"Our Lodge, my sister, has considered it an honor to offer you, as as a token of our deepest sympathy, its cord and jewel, on the reverse of which She had your names and wedding date engraved. So, tell me the favor of letting you pass this cord, and allow me to don-*
To give, on behalf of all my Brothers, a fraternal and Masonic embrace.

After the presentation of the ribbon, Brother Bétrémieux gives the floor to F.*. Galopin for a little private chat.

First, F.*. Galopin sends his congratulations to S.\ Lépine for the courage she showed by coming to a Masonic temple, and then he pronounces, addressing himself mainly to the ladies, a very large number In the audience, a very remarkable speech, from which we extract the following passages:

"The civil marriage we are celebrating today," he said, "because it is a true consecration that Masonic France is making in its time ple, inaugurates this republican civil marriage that our enemies fear so much.

"It is today that our Brothers take the oath never to [be] to go to church, and it is likely that many of those we call The uninitiated will imitate this example.

334 THE NEW THEOPHILANTIROPES

"We, ladies, we, fathers of families, want to persuade you, Because if we don't persuade you, the priest will.
will persuade. It has never failed. If we want to persuade you, (ballast that we are things that we can only overcome with you^ and For that, we need the strength that only you can give us.
when you have stopped attending what is called the confessional sional.

Republican municipal administrations do not disdain not to associate oneself with the flaws of Masonic marriage:

There was a large crowd around the Capitole, reports L'Union du Midi, from

Since the couple did not have to go through the church, the Libre-Pen- society the sée and the Masonic lodges had taken steps to give to their manifestation an exceptional brilliance.

\j' K mancipation publishes the speech given by the mayor of Toulouse on this occasion. Mr. Castelbou congratulated the hero and the heroine of the small celebration "of having known how to disdain the outdated traditions of the Catholic law, which imposes submission and humiliates.

From the town hall, the couple proceeded to the Masonic temple. Héveü informs us that "the F.*, of the Lodge Les Vrais Amis Réunis, re-dressed in their insignia, they occupied the area around the altar, where the venerated "The meeting was presided over by Mr. Valentin Roumers, a municipal councilor."

After the marriage was "consecrated in a Masonic manner, Mr. Gal-Vinhac, the former Toulouse city councillor, declared that he pre- This gives rise to the commitment, in his name and in the name of his brothers, that "no c From now on, he will not marry any other way; otherwise, he would be excluded. unworthy of the rank of Freemasonry.

The ceremony over, the artists of the Irand Theatre, who were released in order, sang several pieces from their repertoire (I).

In the same vein, Mr. Denis Poulot, mayor of 11th arrondissement, founded in June 1881, with the patronage of The entire opportunistic general staff, a civil marriage society, in order to compete with the St-François Régis company and at the St. Vincent de Paul conferences. She intends to offer to the poor the financial means to celebrate their marriage, to the condition that they will not go to church.

(I) Reproduced in Le Soleil of June 1881,

ËNGORË SIMPLER

335

§ 4. – Even simpler

No sooner had Denis Poulot launched the idea for his company, that the Intransigent declared that freethinkers had not What to do with civil marriage. "What need," he said, "does a man have?" "and a woman, who want to live peacefully together, from al- "First, they had to tell their little stories in front of a belly"

"Useful only to the rich: for the poor, it is full of disadvantages"
"Nonsense. For all couples, if they are happy, they only have..." to make marriage happen; if they are not, it is slavery for them.
"A wave worse than death."

After the theory, the practice. Le Gaulois, October 18 1882, tells this story:

On Saturday, a wedding took place in a large furnished hotel in Paris.
which recalls the famous saying of a celebrated revolutionary, recounting his marriage to a citizen of her caliber: "I married her in front of the nature. "

Nature, this time, was represented by a table planted with plants.
lavishly served, covered with candles and flowers, around which A number of guests and three families were present, because there three families were present.

It was a wedding like few others, a wedding of a... freedom beyond which there is nothing.

Mr. Elysée Reclus married off his two daughters – without the help of the priest tre, needless to say, – and even without the help of the mayor or his ad-seal.

Two free unions at the same time.

At the end of the meal, Mr. Élysée Reclus, – the father of the two brides without marriage, – he raised his glass and his voice, – the late Scribe would have said, this language, the secret of which he held, – to tell his guests that they to crown the celebration, they were going to see two young people – the two daughters of the illustrious geographer of the Commune – each going off to arm of each.

I'm not laughing, I'm not mocking, I'm telling a story, and I assure you that I
I never felt less like laughing.

"My daughter Josephine," said Mr. Elisée Reclus, "freely—I tell you 336

THE NEW TIIKOPIirLANTIROPES

united with Mr. Victor (I warn you that the first names are made up); my "Daughter Marie, be Mr. Edward's wife."

Tor, they walked away arm in arm, freely.

We will not take the liberty of following these dou.v couples.

A few days later, one could read in the Chain of Union, October 1882, Part 2, p. 380, these lines:

Mauiaoes. We offer our sincerest congratulations to the families. that we register the marriage of Mr. Léon Cuisinier, son of our Esteemed Mr. *. Jules Cuisinier, with Mrs. Jeanne Reclus. '

Brother Élisée Reclus also belongs to Freemasonry for a long time.

Father Reclus did not protest against this account; he merely filed a false claim against another newspaper, which had accused him of having he used his paternal authority to force his daughter to be free,

The publicity given to this new way of celebrating unions provoked strange reflections from the organ of Anarchists, ((who are an even more layer of free thinkers advanced. We reproduce the following article, despite its crudeness of his expressions, because he makes it very easy to grasp the logic which, Once the religious idea is removed from the family, it degrades man down to the beast.

Here is what L'Egalité said on October 29, 1882:

The day when, as a result of the socialization of the productive forces, the woman will have become economically independent from man, the day when maintenance, like the education of children, will be the responsibility of the community, on that day the marriage-contract will have disappeared and the relationships sexual matters will finally be governed by complete freedom. They will re- will then focus exclusively on the only motive that can make them dre worthy, on a mutual desire. They will be able to adapt to the multiplicity of desires, and these desires are essentially variable; this Since the beginning is the most pleasant thing, one aspires, in fact, to to start over often. Therefore, in this matter, the future is no to Punion. free, more or less ceremonial, which may still involve some the idea of perpetuity, but with free love, with the diversity of relationships sexual desires as varied as the desires that give rise to them.

The union of the sexes being now merely a matter of necessity logically (1) and the Malthusian league (Book I, Document cm-- nexé G) is there to encourage weak minds, who experience would still see some repugnance.

SIMPLER TINCOUE

(1) V. Fribourg, International Association of Workers^ p. 184.

CHAPTER EIGHTEEN

Masonic Loans and Abolition

5

ON THE DEATH PENALTY

Breaking the magistrate's sword is one of the fundamental rites of the rank of knight Kadoch (book I chapter II, 8), and the Masonnerie remains true to the spirit of its institution, an essential enemy the basis of what constitutes the maintenance of civil order, when She calls for the abolition of the death penalty. We have seen in the... vrage of Father Descliamps (liv. II, chap. XII, § 6), that in 1853, the f.*. Goffin included it in the articles of his program. In 1863,
We read in an instruction for the apprentice grade:

The death penalty is the most egregious offense against divine law and natural; it is the most criminal usurpation that human society may accomplish, and the most immoral act that exists on earth. (1).

Wherever Freemasonry holds sway, it seeks to to fulfill this desire. In France, since the Third Republic republic, draft laws to that effect have been presented to several times by the members of the lodges (book II, chapter XII, 6) In Belgium and Italy, the death penalty was abolished.
do.

In Spain, Freemasonry continues the same campaign

(1) Would choose from the work Initiation "the philosophy of Franc-Vanonnerie.
by the f.'. FiscU, in-lî, Paris, 1803, p. 49,

40 THE LODGES AND THE ABOLITION OF THE DEATH PENALTY

gne, and nothing is as significant as this story that we borrow

On December 27th, the Madrid lodges met in the restaurant The Pearl's journey to celebrate the winter solstice banquet. Brother Romero Ortiz was unable to attend due to his poor health. In his absence, Lieutenant Grand Conmander Brother Manuel de Ha-Noly Peisi presided, with the deputy grand master, Brother, to his right. Martinez del Bosch, and to his left Brother Utor y Fernandez, great secretary.

The main toasts were offered in memory of General Pira, to the health of the Ruiz brothers Zorilla, Sagasta and Romero Ortiz.

The most important incident of this brilliant meeting was raised by Brother Utor y Fernandez, who with great eloquence proposed to his brothers to join forces to try to rescue him from the scaffold two atrocious criminals who were to be executed in Denio. He recalled that the entire Freemasonry demands the abolition of the penalty of dead.

Deeply impressed by these warm words, the meeting almost all of them left the banquet hall to go to the President of the Council of Ministers, Brother Sagasta. He was absent. A commission of twelve masons went the following morning at his home, and also thanks to the steps that he had taken on his side Grand master, she managed to share her feelings with the first minister. Brother Sagasta immediately convened the council of ministers. Three and seven, at noon, he was able to announce to the anxious masons that grace had been granted to the two convicts. It was about time, because They had entered the chapel at eight o'clock in the morning and from mid-nute to the other could be executed.

What gives this event its true character is that the Two scoundrels who thus escaped death had absolutely nothing which could be of interest to them. On this occasion, our brothers have were driven solely by the desire to achieve, at least in practice, the abolition tion of the death penalty. We believe that there will be no Freemasonry nothing but a voice to congratulate them on their Masonic sentiments and of happy success in their endeavor.

CHAPTER NINETEEN

Freemasonry and Political Action

§ !*'■ – The written statutes and the facts

All the Grand Orients continue to place at the head of their to politics." Willingly, the venerable and the brothers Speakers repeat this alTiruiation in formal speeches.

The constitution of the Grand Symbolic Scottish Lodge dQ 1881,
She also said: "She forbids herself any political discussion, any im-
"Interference in the conduct of public affairs, any criticism"
"Acts of authority, of the various forms of government."
It is therefore useful to compare this with some authentic confessions ticks, emanating from the lodges themselves in various countries.

In 1854, Brother Verhøgen, Grand Master of Freemasonry
Belgian, said at the solstice festival of the Grand Orient:

It will be said that our statutes forbid us from all political discussions.
religious and philosophical questions. But this must be taken seriously once and for all.
examined... Let us first note that in many circumstances the Freemasonry unanimously disregarded this restriction. It actively involved in political struggles; and, when the triumph of his
The cause, applauded by the entire nation, demonstrated how sympathetic she is.
tliique in the country, who would dare blame her? That would be slandering the history-ioire, to deny the immense service rendered to the country.^.

342 The Freemason IIIIE and political action

0

Let those who believe Masonic law is treacherous rest assured. attacked by the statement I just made. When I question the past of our institution, do I not see that Freemasonry has always These days have been the attentive lookout, watching over the progress of the political st

In political crises, whenever necessary, the center, the
The point of support where resistance lay was there, in Freemasonry!... Freemasonry nonsense actively became involved in political struggles... Liberation opinion Rale triumphed in Belgium; it owes its triumph. In fact and in law, we are justified in definitively dismissing vement the prohibition that the letter imposes on us (1).

Belgian Freemasonry has never ceased to be involved in politics.
revolutionary.

We know what a failure the liberal party, that is to say the Masonic party, has been.
nique, essuya au.x legislative elections of June 13, 1870.

However, we read in the Bulletin of the Grand Orient that, on the 18th
The following June, the Liberty Lodge of Ghent, a progressive lodge, in saw at the Grand Orient of Belgium a plate by which This workshop requires the grand committee to convene a meeting of the Grand Orient, "with the effect of discussing and deciding on the line of conduct to be followed by the lodges of the obedience, in order to fight the secular world on the 13th of this month.

On the agenda for the Grand Orient meetings of July 9 and 23

In the letter dated November 12, 1870, the following item is shown:

"On the political role of Freemasonry. – What should it be?"

THE ROLE OF MASONRY IN THE PRESENCE OF THE SITUATION

"CURRENT STATE OF THE COUNTRY?"

In the meeting of July 23, 1876, Brother Desguin, Deputy and speaker of the lodge Friends of Commerce and Perseverance

The assembled members of Antwerp read the following resolutions adopted through this workshop, of which the League of Beggars, from Antwerp, is only the public emanation:

The Lodge,

With the aim of remedying the country's political situation.

It mandates its deputies to propose to the Grand Orient:

(1) We refer here oncoro lo Icclour to the work of Mr. Amand Noul, Freemasonry Exposed to the Light (2nd ed.). It will be found in Jo volume 1", pp. 218–236, 260–27r), numerous official documents of the Graud-Orionl do Bolgii[uo, atloslant l'action politiquo do la Maçonnerie. See also those that we have published in the work on Secret Societies, book U, chapter XIII, page 2.

WRITTEN STATUTES AND FACTS 343

i * The use of legal means (?) compatible with the Constitution as it currently exists, and in particular: the party organization liberal in cities and the countryside, and the adoration of DB projects LOî to preside over the legislative chambers by the members of the minority liberal;

2" The examination of reforms that would require amendments to the Cons* institution, and especially the addition of capacity to the census, as a basis of the electorate;

3 Alternatively, in the event that attempts at the liberal wager* would remain powerless in the face of pressure from the clerical party, or, in the event of violent attack by him against existing institutions* yourselves or against men, organize now, throughout the country of resistance to these encroachments, so as to guide and to lead the popular movements that could be its consequence*

QUENGB.

For exact copy:

An Italian correspondent wrote the following to Freimaurer*
Leipzig Zeitung (1874, no. 19, p. 150):

The decisive point of our work lies in the higher degrees. It is That's where we make progress, politics, and world history. That's where we make progress, the entire raison d'être of the Scottish Rite. It is in it that our Fathers accomplished their glorious deeds, overthrew tyrants, drove out the foreigner. But the great work is not yet completely accomplished in Italy. That's why we still need Scottish Rite Freemasonry. A What are the first ranks for, then? Nothing other than to lend us their peaceful names, with which we surprise our enemies.
So what purpose do symbols serve? They are shields and Breastplates on the day of battle and nothing else. – What use are they to us?
All forms of lodges? They are there to hide us from our enemies.
when we are in misfortune or when we need to gather our strength (2).

However, note that, unlike French lodges, alle> English and British lodges, where many lodges belong exclusively sivement to Blue Freemasonry, in all Italian lodges we practice the higher degrees, that the three symbolic degrees do not

(1) Quoted by the Courrier de Bruxelles of July 14, 1882.

(2) Heproiuut in the work entitled: Der Hammr dw Freimaurerrei am Kai*
Serthrone der Habsburger^ p. 77, 2nd edition, Leipzig, 1880^

344 Freemasonry and political action are at home only the porticoes of the Rosicrucian chapters and consistories of Kadosh.

In Germany, where Freemasonry, as a result of its alliance with The Prussian dynasty, with its more moderate approach, took action policy is no less positive: let us cite only two examples. testimonies.

In 1874, Brother Bluntschli said at a solemn gathering of the Modestia Lodge of Zurich:

Freemasonry has a duty to extend its activities outside its walls. in a more effective way than in the past... It must not remain at the gap between the major battles currently being fought, for the good to be and the ennoblement of humanity, if it is to fulfill its mission...
A girl should no longer be confined to raising her limbs, but should spread out in social life, as it is with its antagonisms of ideas and his fight for progress.

We were in the midst of the Kurkampf, and these words indicate quite the direction given by Freemasonry to the works of its members. As for the method of operation, here is what he said to the Around the same time, the Freimaurer^Zeüung of Leipzig, year 1874, p.141:

Where the lodges and their members best respond to the leadership Given this, we must better instruct the lodges and enlighten them on all the major movements of the present. In Germany, a step has already been taken. in this sense, and the Swiss lodges should do something similar. If one a certain central point, data related to the circumstances were presented from a single point of view and were thus sent to the lodges, so that their attention was directed at the same time On these issues, a secret dissemination of opinion would take place, and this activity would be fruitful in results (1).

These are indeed the watchwords with which Freemasonry creates artificial currents of opinion and prepares political movements that!

In France, it's no different. The Masonic World January-February 1882 publishes a circular issued by the lodge VAmiliô of Paris, who is requesting a meeting of Freemasons) for to give new impetus to the work of Freemasonry:

(I) We borrow these gentle quotations from the work Iutituté: Der Ilammer der Freimurcrei am Kaiserthron der Kahtburger, Leipzig, 1889, p. 49-51.

WRITTEN STATUTES AND FACTS

345

My dearest Brother,

Paris, January 15, 1882.

It is easy to notice, for those who regularly attend the lodges, how many are sterile, so remarkable and so well run that they So, the work put on the agenda for the workshops, and each of us can see every day that, if Freemasonry, theoretically by Lant, is at the forefront of progress, it does little from a political point of view.

This would be a fatal symptom for the development of his in- influence, if we didn't all equally know that this powerlessness can hereditary, we will become the most powerful and the firmest auxiliaries of progress and freedom.

To what should we attribute this state of affairs? It is easy to say: Freemasonry, during the reign of despotism and of the monarchy, was forced to suppress its impulses towards liberty, to shelter to define its doctrines, its philosophical and social tendencies, under the disguise of charity and benevolence, enshrined in its statutes and constantly repeating these singular words to the most afflicted: "He is de-
"I'm so tired of talking politics," as if politics weren't the very foundation necessary social issues which we are allowed to study!

Since then, the Republic has come, liberty has pretended to appear to rise up, and, instead of immediately shaking off the yoke of restrictive laws which they oppress us, we have come to regard them as Masonic axioms, and, under the pretext of tradition, to preserve them preciously, whereas our predecessors merely endured them.

What we want is for Freemasonry not to be only a body that thinks, but also a body that acts. What we want, it is because our work does not remain in our temples in a purely literal form. dead; it's that, if, to better concentrate our efforts, to better to regulate our aspirations, it is necessary that we remain a society. In a closed society, it is also important to the cause of humanity, of which we we are the most ardent defenders that the fruit of our research, the result of our efforts spreads outwards to teach the de-democracy, its rights and duties, and to help it with its demands.

"The practical moral to be drawn from these revelations is said to be judicious." Mr. Coquille's point about this document is that, in the monarchies, the Freemasons have always mocked the monarchies and monarchical government. All monarchies Those still standing are found to have within them a secret society. whose members hold each other's hands, consult with each other, and obey a word

34G Freemasonry and political action of order. They came from outside/profess republican opinions. the most advanced, proudly acknowledging that they have all days professed and that it is solely out of fear, and to enjoin "To the princes, that they disguised them in the past."

This initiative by the VAmitié lodge is not the work of a group of lost children.

In 1881, on the occasion of the banquet of the order of the logo the Admirers of Univers, of Paris, the f.*. Barre, member of the Council of the Order of the Grand Orient, therefore, was issuing a statement.

Remaining true to its motto, you will always find Freemasonry in Before.

In 1830, it inspired the most liberal elements.

In 1818, she studied some aspects of social issues and did not does not remain without influence.

In 1870, it largely supplied the men who, during the invasion Sion, helped to establish the republican administration,

Jo still sees, after the shame of Sedan, our dear and missed Mas-ground, occupied from morning till night in noting down the names of the good masons lonté who, through their specialized knowledge, could make themselves useful^ and immediately transmit these names to those who had accepted power...

Reunited after the war, we were naturally the early wrestlers, when men of the past, after surprising the power, e.stryèrcnt to maintain themselves there in order to in turn evade the-public freedoms (!).

We can proudly claim the successes of the last elections (of 1877), which brought back to power such clumsy men people ousted by shrewd policies, but devoid of a judgment (1).

Given his status as a veteran of the institution, Barré fears that... Freemasonry does not identify too closely with a faction of the revolutionary army. lutionary, to the Gambettist faction; hence the discreet advice by the which he concludes:

This latest political struggle, which we could not avoid, because under The mason's envelope naturally finds a liberal citizen, a Perhaps it had a bad influence on Macxinnerio: click did it to deviate slightly from the purely idealistic path that she must not abandon.

The success of politicians supported by Freemasonry

(I) The Masonic World, 188?.

THE KUIITS STATUTES AND THE FACTS 3i7 obedient to ambitious young people who, rightly or wrongly, aspire to lead the others, and we saw men knocking at our doors from all sides who, having previously disdained us, do not seem to cooperate in our work that to have our support outside, and who will abandon us by day where they will have nothing more to expect from us.

For them, Freemasonry is not a stepping stone?

Eq 1881, at the general assembly of the Grand Orient, we Less embarrassed than usual. The Masonic World of December 1881 speaks, in effect, of the eloquent exhortations addressed by the speaker of the last assembly and all the lodges, to know this to focus more on issues related to utilitarian/ucs.

In an article published in La France on December 19, 1882, Father Charles Limousin wrote this:

Democratic doctrines and Masonic doctrines are identical.
tics; what is true is that the reforms having the objective of bringing the substitution of the people's interest for the interest of a class, in the Legislation and government policy have been, are, and will be discussed in the boxes.

What is also true is that the important men of the...
French democracy has, for the most part, produced its political education in these same lodges.

What is also true is that it was we who fought, at Through the ages, superstition and despotism; that's because it's us who made the Revolution; it is because it was we who, after as before this great stage of human progress, we have fought for political, social, intellectual and moral progress.

The clericals' hatred of Freemasonry stems from this that this association is, in reality, organized democracy; from the fact that It is through her that the agreement of opinions, the concert of wills, takes place.

There is only the age-old organization of Freemasonry, with the power the power given to it by its secrets, its rites, its traditions, its symbol, that can combat the equally age-old association of theocracy.
The events we witness and take part in On the other hand, these are merely incidents in the struggle between these two ancient na enemies who personify: one, physical, intellectual freedom and moral; the other, enslavement, in all its forms.

One day, which cannot be far off, when we will have completely Having triumphed on the political front, we will have to continue the struggle on the social terrain. Our opponents, who have a keen eye, have already-
They have taken a stand. They are actively campaigning for feudal socialism.
Dal and religious leaders among the industry leaders.

348 Freemasonry and political action

Here again, it will belong to Freemasonry, whose symbol is absolutely socialist, to undertake and accomplish the emancipation of

The following chapters will provide detailed evidence of the interference of lodges in politics; but, if one wants to know how this action is carried out, one only has to consider these two articles: Keys to the constitution of the Scottish Symbolic Grand Lodge from 1881, which are also found in all rites:

"In all circumstances, the masons must help, protection and assistance, even at the risk of their lives.

In all circumstances, no restrictions are placed on this commitment.

"The Grand Symbolic Lodge maintains order, the signs, touches, sacred words, words of pass currently existing in the Scottish Rite

OLD ACCEPTED, AS WELL AS THE USE OF SEMESE WORDS TRE. »

Qui potest capere capiat seems to say Masonry to its followers.

It is and always will remain a secret society, despite the innumerable publications that it authorizes. Under the cover of In the lodges, all communications are conducted securely and nothing is what one wants to hide is not likely to be revealed to the uninitiated (1).

(t) Those who ask how to know Freemasonry reconciles its political activity that with the prohibitions of the statutes, the text of which we have given above, will find the solution in a report made by Brother Doltard and the Jerusalem lodge on the logo of the Friendship of Saint-Denis, which he represents the Masonic convout of 1832. 11 words completely exposed the mechanism of so actioq;

"Shall I speak to you of the spirit of the L.*. l'^milié and of its activity? We submit all Freemasons of Réunion, Republicans, and we do not admit among ourselves, scrupulously, that republicans; free thought and the spirit of inquiry also count many representatives in our L.', ; the activity of the ff *. is admirable; all The topics covered include: politics, sociology, literature, science, arts, and This happens almost every night.

Politics, which is banned from our attire by our statutes, is being passionately discussed in these intimate evening meetings, and it is thanks to the Freemasons of Reunion that Republicans have always had the upper hand in elections over their opponents saires....,

"For a long time, Bourbon Island was under the rule of priests; these they all belonged to the Capuchin order, who had settled there at the beginning of colonization. They left as a mark of their power the name of the

The Masonic secret

349

2. – Masonic secrecy

Publicity and secrecy: under this name, the Bauhütte, from Leipzig, inaugurated a series of articles that the Unim Channel (issue March–April 1882) declares very important and that it summarizes Thus :

It must be recognized that the point of view from which we consider the Things have changed considerably these days. We have changed a lot. part of the rigor with which secrecy was formerly kept about everything which touched, even remotely, on Freemasonry. Since the Freemasons Freemasons walk the streets of our cities in full symbolic regalia. and that the periodical press reports in detail on the ceremonies held previously strictly secret, since the rituals have been revealed and that novelists use it in their sensational stories, the secret Freemasonry hardly exists anymore except in appearance.

In any case, it would be to misunderstand the spirit of the Order to re- to impose general secrecy on all initiates.

The author of this study makes a distinction between useful advertising and pointless publicity. He believes that the interests of Freemasonry require that we reform, through wise publicity, the erroneous ideas that are prevalent today in the masses concerning the real aims of the freemasons lessons. He doubts, however, that a Masonic publication ever had to success outside the circle of initiates. The general public is required to driven by deeply ingrained prejudices.

depopulation centers, all named after saints, from Saint-Oenis, there ca hospital, all the way to the seaside resort, which is called Saint-Gilles-....

This state of affairs has fortunately changed since then, and we owe it to the struggle tr The colonial masons' ceasefire against clericalism. The struggle was fierce and long. If you dream that the Revolution of 1880 drove many emigrants to our shores of the throne and the Holy See, one can understand how painful this struggle must have bee to support. Thanks to Freemasonry, monarchical and religious ideas have to They've pretty much done their time with us. Most of the Creoles, who have a coat of arms their family, no longer bear their titles of nobility. One of my relatives, who des Godfrey of Bouillon (?), simply signed Constant Godfrey; ...
...de Lasserre, died senator ü ý a quel-
A few months ago, Lasserre signed; in Italy, Demahy signed at the Reunion.

These fine results are largely due to the Freemasons of the L.*. Friendship, »

Reproduced by the Chain of Union, December 1882.

350

Freemasonry and political action

"By the way," he exclaimed, "is it really necessary to give a greater Extension to Freemasonry? Is the number of Freemasons a guarantee? tie to the success of the work? Assuredly, 7ion, the task of Freemasonry has a intensity character; it consists in the preparation of the limbs struggle for the defense of Masonic principles within society. We are told will no doubt object that the effect produced will be all the greater than the The number of members of the order will increase. This would indeed be the case if... all members were what they must wax; but if! increase of The initiation was done at the expense of the acquaintance of the building elements, one would go (I) against the good being pursued.

The author adds that the increase in the number of lodges will be achieved by the natural force of expansion of the Order and that it would be unwise to you to accelerate it excessively.

He believes that, in order to surely propagate Masonic principles in The public needs as much circumspection as activity.

He recommends public conferences where the discussion would focus not on Freemasonry, of course, but also other more general subjects, so that, by deduction, the audience can get an idea of the pro- principles spanked by the Freemasons.

He says that the various attempts he has made in this regard have always were crowned with success. The audience showed by a consistently high turnout As the days grew longer, he enjoyed these lectures.

The topics covered by the speaker were mostly em- borrowed from the social economy or indirectly from the issues of day (1).

Ji 3. – WHAT ARE THE HIGHEST RANKS STILL USABLE FOR?

The higher degrees, which form Red Freemasonry, do not without no doubt more currently, at least Franco, rimpoiTance prati- than they had before 1789. In many lodges they

(1) This question of secrecy preoccupies all lodges. The Bulletin, of the Grand Symbolic Lodge of June 1881 reproduced the deliberations taken on this subject by the Grand Lodge of the Grand Orient of Hungary. She approved the disclosure of tendencies and aspirations of Freemasonry, namely, "by combining the words and recognition signs, because without this precaution nothing allows us to distinguish the Masons from the profanes, which is the first result." Finally, speaking incidentally of the code of conduct to be followed by the brothers. Regarding letters to women, [Galileo recommends to the Freemasons that they do not give the "to instruct in Masonic matters only with the greatest caution and according to "It's their character and their intellectual level."

WHAT CAN HIGHER RANKS STILL BE USED FOR? 351

laid out to beat Moanaie. However, the fractions
The more advanced members of Freemasonry have not given up and believe that they can derive a particular kind of utility from it.

FOR INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS. We reproduce ODS in an entire article published on this subject in the Masonic Bulletin of the Scottish Symbolic Grand Lodge, in its issue of March 1881:

A fairly large number of masons holding high ranks are... thirty few supporters of the attempts currently being made to achieve unification of the blue lodges. It should not be assumed that all CCS brothers are hostile in principle to such a solution, but there is in their minds a misunderstanding that it is important to dispel, in order to not to have them as adversaries in this matter, which depends on the future of Freemasonry. These brothers mostly fear seeing In practice, the unification of the blue lodges will lead to the weakening the formation of Red Freemasonry and, over time, the disappearance of workshops of the higher degrees. In this they are mistaken, and it is easy to their to demonstrate that their fears are unfounded, and that they have, in the conclusion, everything to gain in terms of influence and authority to see to succeed in this great movement towards unity. In the state of Freemasonry universal, the existence of high-degree workshops is no less essential essential, that of the blue lodges. Certainly, if it were only a matter of Considering France, one could argue that Red Freemasonry is in contradiction with the democratic form of our secular institutions and the egalitarian tendencies of minds in our country. But the Masonic Stupidity is not just a French institution, it is of all countries, and, in the very interest of its universality, it is inconceivable that all the constituent elements of the association, which is required to be found among other peoples, let them be represented among us. To this end From this point of view, the existence of high-grade workshops is not only useful, It is necessary. But what is no less important is that in France, as in other countries, these two Masonic orders are essential so distinct that they never encroach upon one another, and that, maintain the most fraternal relations without ever confusing their existence administrative tenancy and without ever involving the workshops of the high ranks be subordinate to Blue Freemasonry, as in the Grand Orient of France, or the blue lodges in the workshops of the higher degrees, such as in the Supreme Council of the Scottish Rite.

The role of Blue Lodge Freemasonry is primarily internal; its influence and its action must be exercised in the secular environment in which it develops; that of the red Masonry is more specifically external; it is h she

302 Freemasonry and political action

that it is his responsibility to develop and maintain Masonic relations international.

Therefore, there is great value in the workshops of the higher ranks. in France they take the extension and inclusion to which they are entitled, and They can only do so if they find a large database of re~ cruelly within an active and numerous Blue Freemasonry.

Anything that can lead to the development of symbolic workshops must therefore, in turn, benefit the workshops of the higher ranks, and these, to consult only their true interests, must, for this reason, show supporters of the unification of the blue lodges, which alone can as~ to give real power to our association.

It is also believed that the success of the Vimification of the blue lodges would lead, by a kind of logical necessity, to that of the upper workshops grades, which would merge into a single Supreme National Council, whose self-Pride would be great abroad and would put an end to the deplorable conflict born of the the coexistence of two Supreme Councils in our country.

CHAPTER TWENTIETH

THE BELLEVILLE PROGRAM AND THE MASONIC PROGRAMME

We could see in volume II, p. 463 (book II, chapter XII, § C), how the Belgian liberals, the Swiss radicals and the republicans French citizens, since they came to power, have been gradually implementing but with a follow-up that attests to a concerted plan, a pro~ political gram presented, in 1855, by Brother Goffin, in the lodge of Liège.

It is also worth noting the analogy that exists between this program city, to the acceptance of a very obscure candidate at that time.

Let us first recall the main points of the program manifest; we will then compare the two texts.

Abolition of standing armies, a cause of ruin and destruction.
pressure for the people;

Abolition of the irremovable magistracy^ origin of the injustice and scandalous trials;

Abolition of clergy salaries, now paid by believers of each faith;

Free and compulsory primary education;

Reduction of all budgets, and especially that of war;

III

23

35' (PROGRAMME OF DECEVILLE AND PROGUAMME MAGONNIQUE

Organization of work through the creation of large associations this is the establishment of a vast credit system Commercial and agricultural land.

From the beginning of 1809, a silent work was underway.
was taking place in the first electoral district of Paris, which then included Decville and Montmartre. Groups of citizens were conspiring to shake off the yoke of the repudiated Burgraves clerics, from the group of deputies and men of 1818, who, supported by the Century, National Opinion, the National Future, believed to be able to dominate Parisian elections indefinitely.

These groups, in January, set their sights on a young lawyer, barely known at the time through a few public speeches and a resounding plea in the criminal police. This man was
Mr. Gambetta, and he was already a franc-mason (1).

He was pitted against Mr. Cailliot. The public... until the very last moment did not consider that application to be serious, when entirely new processes then occurred in the electrical arc rifle.

voters a proclamation of the first constituency, where he he said the application had been offered to him five months earlier before, that he had initially hesitated to oppose Mr. Carnot, but having received assurance a month ago that such was the at the voters' will, he presented himself as a candidate. It was noted quait, in this proclamation, the following phrase:

"I will give you neither a program nor a profession of faith. The co-
"Members of our constituencies must send me their promises" gram, and I must answer it. We will thus contract pu-"publicly and in full view of everyone." (2;.

This was the practical implementation of the contractual mandate that are demanding today the Parisian lodges (book III, chapter XXII, S 2).

Two days later, a note was sent to the newspapers dait account in these terms of a meeting held in Bcllcviile:

"A meeting was held at Bcllcville on Wednesday evening, May 5th. The Three Democratic candidates were in attendance.

(1) Chnim d'union Co J877, p. 17.

(2; V. r.lrtfwiv national of 'J May 18('!.!).

THE BELLEVILLE PROGRAMME AND MASONIC PROGRAM 355

>4

"Citizen Beaimiont, presiding, took the first floor.

I ask each of the candidates if they accept the program that I am going to ask:

Repeal of the general security law;

Deletion of Article 291 of the Penal Code;

Elimination of the budget for religious affairs;

Abolition of standing armies and reduction of the budget.
gct of war and navy;

Primary, secular and compulsory education^ and increase financial aspect of this budget;

Expulsion of the Jesuits from the teaching staff.

A seventh and an eighth article were added to this draft gram by citizen Dumont, assessor;

1® Setting the duration of the legislative mandate at one year;

2® Commitment made by the candidate to work to do to triumph over all the egalitarian principles established by the glorious Revolution of 1793,

The candidates refused to answer the question of re-newly annual of the Legislative Body, on the grounds that this If the question concerned the Constitution, they would expose themselves to the consequenc cutting to have their election overturned.

As for the rest of the questionnaire, Mr. Gambetta gave him a complete agreement. Mr. Carnot, more reserved, merely recalled that in 1818, he had been part of the provisional government (1).

On May 24, Gambetta was elected by an overwhelming majority.
21,731 votes against 11,001 given to Mr. Carnot.

The demonstrations made by French and foreign Freemasonry managed in honor of Mr. Gambetta on the occasion of his funeral (2) testify to the importance of the role he had played since that date for the completion of the great work. The speakers who celebrated his memory in the funeral ceremonies, they honored him everyone praised for having saved the Republic in the circumstances which We're going to read the story.

(t) V. la Gatellede France do mai 1809.

(2) V. in the Chain of Union of January 1883 lc3 ologoa funùbro du f.. Gambetta pronounced in the logos, thus qiio la lisio dos atoliers who attended ù scs funerals or sent to addresses. A good number of foreign logos are noticeable there.
gùrcs.

CHAPTER TWENTY-NINTH

THE GREAT MASONIC CONSPIRACY OF 1873

§ – The story of a conspiracy

We have indicated volume II (book II, chapter XII, § 3, the school/ieo of the monarchical Restoration)^ how in 1873 a great a plot had formed within the Republican party to raise in the country the banner of civil war, at the moment when the Ass

Here are two more detailed accounts, which show the
The important role played in this plot by F.*. Gambetta.

The first one appeared in the Revision, a reputable daily newspaper.
Progressive republican issue of September 28, 1881, under the si-nature of the f.. Bordone, the former chief of staff of the f.. Garibaldi, during the disastrous Eastern campaign.

In this article, Bordone wants to defend Gambetta against the attacks. questions of the Intransigent relating to financial manipulations, to which his newspaper, the French Republic, serves as an instrument, and to highlight "its role in the great struggle undertaken"

AT THAT TIME AGAINST THE GOVERNMENT OF THE 24TH AND 16TH
MAY. "

At the time when we go back to establish the financial precursors of the current campaign in Tunisia, the one to whom we must attribute the res*

358 THE GREAT MASONIC COJIPLOT OF 1873

direct responsibility of the food department, in Mr.'s newspaper.
Gambetta had long since introduced Mr. Gregory Ganepco behind the scenes at the newspaper, he had stated this axiom in our presence, against whom we had strongly protested: "A politician
"He cannot be strong if he is not rich." One might be surprised to learn that the author of this axiom was not Mr. CI. Laurier.

Far from being rich or even dreaming of becoming so, he was exhausting his credit to address a situation threatening the Republic. Having etc., perhaps only in the secrecy of certain measures prepared by
To prevent the Republic from "overshadowing," we must say that... no one else could have done what our conscience compels us to do.
to testify. Too bad for him if this revelation is painful for him, to today, where he has gone from being a man of opposition to a man of government.
birth.

The aim was to get at least ten people through the Vosges region a thousand rifles, to arm the citizens ready to rise up against the government who wanted the overthrow of the Republic, because only the South of France was equipped with everything necessary and in a state to undertake the countryside.

These weapons had to be bought, paid for, and transported on foot.
of work.

The devoted friend who placed his cash box at Mr. Gambetta's disposal and who could also make him rich, if he had consented, others would have-Did they find it?

It will be impossible for us, whatever happens, to ever forget the Mr. Gambetta's conduct in this circumstance.

It would be wrong to believe that these weapons were of the highest order to men. my readiness to accept Mr. de0alliffet's command, as well as the as another compromising friend once said on the Aventine Hill, Mr. Sich.

The one who writes these lines, an accomplice of Mr. Gambetta in the affair which is being referred to, would never accept, under any pretext, to to collaborate on even the most meritorious work, with this general officer, and He smiled with pity and disdain when he heard him boast of having One day his statue will be placed in one of Strasbourg's public squares.

Some time later, an extreme left-wing newspaper, the Ha-dicalf number of G December 188d, completed cos indica[ion.s through a much more detailed account, under this title: Story of a conspiracy. We reproduce it in its entirety without nothing should be omitted from its lengthy preamble:

G'élajtaux, the good old days of the merger intrigues. With the Marshal
Mac-Mahon and the Duke of Rroglic, the monarchist party had arrived

The Story of a Conspiracy 359

in power, and he made no secret of his intention to restore the royalty.

"Franco must work," Baragnon said at the time, and, we haven't Not forgotten, nothing had been overlooked to make it work.

The civil servants, half Republicans, half Orleanists, whom we had given the government of M, Thicrs, had not stayed long time in place; they were too soft, too timid for the agitators Monarchists. Everywhere, they were replaced by unscrupulous men.
those willing to carry out the most shameful, the most criminal task nelle.

It was then that Ducros, the prefect, even more grotesque than the general General, was sent to Lyon. He had been preceded by General Bourbaki, this he was appointed by Mr. Thicrs.

The two colleagues were destined to understand each other, and they did.
took hold from the very first week.

After a few days, the state of siege, long since forgotten, was exhumed and applied with unprecedented rigor.

At the same time that vexatious decrees were being directed against the

the press, hunted down first, chased from the kiosks and the road public, was soon affected in its o.\tstenco and struck by the suspension or even deletion.

Terror reigned in Lyon as throughout Franco; intelligence Some groups claimed that proscription lists were drawn up at the prefecture, and which was only awaiting an order to stop at home the heads of the democratic party.

The political police, led by the infamous Coco, also legendary, watched its prey day and night. For all republicans, these were... naked, incessant harassment and surveillance that was even exercised on privacy.

One night, as we remember, the prefect, who liked to laugh, offered himself the perverse pleasure of having a search carried out in certain hotels furnished apartment, where Mr. Andrieux, partly in a romantic mood, had gone to hide his happiness.

Never, not even during the terrible days that followed the coup, Individual freedom had never been so little respected.

The central committee resolved to oppose force with force.

It was then that his recently organized resistance subcommittee sea, began to act. All its members were set in motion, Some in Lyon and the surrounding area, others as far as the extreme Noon.

With the support of a large group of Republican deputies, to the which the Ordinary Citizen had been charged with making the first or – greenings. A gigantic defense plan was organized.

360 THE GREAT MASONIC CONSPIRACY OF 1873

General Bordone was designated, by common agreement, as ge commander-in-chief of the armies of the insurrection. Under his command were to to operate on former officers of the active army and the legions of the Rhône: Ballue, former captain of the Chasseurs, now a member of parliament; Jules Thivollet, former infantry captain, former colonel of the fifth Legion, municipal councilor; Ferrer, former infantry captain, an Former colonel of the Second Legion of the Rhône, general councillor; Or-dinaire, former staff officer in Garibaldi's army, etc.

The army of the insurrection – a legitimate insurrection if ever there was one – was numerous. Besides the able-bodied men affiliated with the committee tral, who were instructed to join, at the first order, such a point in their neighborhood to reconstitute the old companies In addition to the national guard, the central committee had an entire army at its disposa part of the active army stationed in the various garrisons of Rhône basin.

The support of the active army had not been obtained without difficulty. Many officers, even the most republican, feared brimstone. to jeopardize their careers in the event of the conspiracy – which they believe was prepared based on a mere hypothesis, – would have been exposed. However, the Some had promised their support; others their neutrality, others their silence. In some cities, it was agreed that they would let themselves disarm and arrest, and it was known that their troops, sufficiently prepared adorned, they would rally without hesitation to the insurrectionary movement.

In short, apart from a few regiments, especially the cavalry, the 11th, the 15th, 16th and 17th army corps, whose headquarters are in Lyon, Nîmes, Marseille and Montpellier were won over to our friends at the time, who, by through the intermediary of some general officers, had intelligent these, all the way to headquarters, could even paralyze the command. demented.

As for the weapons, the committee had made sure of that. First of all, there were a few thousand rifles were seized from military control during the the arming of the national guard; these were, finally, along with other rifles, munitions gradually brought in across the Swiss border, transported as far as Lyon and mysteriously buried a few kilometers from the town, in Irigny,

Everything was ready, the army and the weapons.

As for the resistance plan, it had been drawn up by General Bordon and his collaborators.

This plan was sent to Paris to be submitted to the group for review. of deputies, who, as I will explain later, had a role active in playing a role in the insurrection.

A curious incident occurred here. Mr. Gambetta—he had not—core invented opportunism – received the first communication of the plan

THE STORY of a CONSUMPTION 36 i campaigning. In his capacity as former Minister of War, he did some several objections; finally, after conferring with our political friends ticks and a few special men, he wrote in his own hand a plan amended.

The Ordinary Deputy, who served as an intermediary between the centrist committee tral and the republican representatives were to report this project back to Lyon definitive. When he came to demand it from Gambetta, the latter did not have it. had a copy made; also, only after much hesitation and in the hands of Ordinaire, who undertook to copy it and return it that evening kid.

The restitution was to take place in the basement of a café on the boulevard. Good News garden, where the entire editorial staff of the French Republic and a few members of parliament.

At eleven o'clock. Ordinaire hadn't arrived yet. Gambette was sweating. was trembling) was suffocating. For the first time, this man, who wanted Leading the Republican party well, but not compromising oneself personally. He had acted imprudently. Dejected and at the end of his tether, he he finally returned home, after sending all his friends after him Ordinary. But this one was nowhere to be found. Perhaps, oh terror! the Had the police arrested him while he was carrying the precious document?

When Ordinaire appeared, around one o'clock, we almost embraced him. friend, Spuller, faithful Spuller, if I remember correctly, took the autograph from the master and immediately took it home.

And that night again, Gambetta was able to sleep without worry.

This famous plan was immense. It encompassed both the direction military operations and the political organization of the insurrection.

At the first sign of worrying news, communications should have been cut off, by all possible means, between Paris and Versailles, from way to isolate the government for a few days or at least to separate its members, some of whom reside in Versailles, others in Paris. In any case, the meeting of the Bedroom.

In Paris, and in all the major centers, the unrest was actively maintained and the loyal troops thus condemned to immobility.

Meanwhile, the republicans throughout the Rhône Valley, leaving the cities in haste, they occupied, with the support of the ar the forts and strategic positions destroyed the roads railways were being cut and telegraph wires were being cut. The war was then being transmi carried out on the roads, in the countryside, where our friends, entrenched behind natural or improvised shelters, they could easily hold out several regiments failed, without exposing themselves to mass fire. Re- to fight back, never accept a pitched battle, but to worry by a war of snipers against an enemy as few as they are numerous Convinced, that was the tactic adopted.

362 THE GREAT MASONIC PLOT OF 1873

Under such conditions, resistance was easy.

It should also be remembered that the central committee had, in the region, a number of active artillery regiments and genius.

While the military operations were being conducted in this way, the de-Republican politicians, acting under the Tréveneuc Law, met were to be moved as quickly as possible to a city in the South, which was to be designated. Later, they transported the seat of the new Convention there and continued to govern republican France.

.(I)

One evening, around eight o'clock, a large meeting was taking place in a garden, behind the Guillotièro, in the Gharpennes district. Three count people approximately were in attendance.

They were delegates from the central committee; they were republicans. Coming from all over the South, they were finally the military leaders of the movement and, alongside them, generals of our army who had joined the insurrection reaction.

We will not name anyone. We must not forget that the general de Miribel held high-ranking positions in the Ministry of War, and that Mr. Gambetta is a man to be feared by those who resisted in the past with him, that they may not resist him again in the future. If he remembers He calls out the names of these officers and if he dares to threaten them, he who protects We used to rage, we will speak with less reserve, for we will be certain then that a Klat attack will be prepared,

The meeting of the Gharpennes had been organized with the utmost caution desired. The assistants, who came from all the cities of the South, were all arrived separately, at different times, and had disembarked at the different towards the Lyon train stations and surrounding areas; all, finally, received by a republic. The Lyonnais citizens had gone one after the other to the place. signed and known only to the leaders of the movement.

Furthermore, rumors had been spread that a large democratic meeting The event was supposed to take place that evening at the other end of the island, in Vaise The police gave a joint warning in the panel; for if they had any As representatives in the group(s), they only knew one thing, It was because they were preparing for the fight, because they were called upon to partici but they were unaware of everything else*

Our friends were therefore not worried.

Do I need to tell you the resolutions adopted by the Assembly? Unanimously, she declared herself in favor of resistance, resistance to ou- ,*rance, resistance at all costs and let's use the means.

.M) CeUo ligQ0 (!o polota is found in lojouraal the Radical,

the story of a 3G3 conspiracy

In the days that followed, the roles continued to be assigned, we the organization was completed, the last urgent measures were taken, and one waited.

But the merger failed. The government then dreamed of a coup d'état. for the benefit of the majority; he did not dare to do so; the reports of the prefects The southern fire frightened him. Calm returned.

The central committee did not give up, however. It was only with the advent The Jules Simon ministry, judging all danger to have disappeared, decided- He tore up his campaign plan, disbanded his army, and surrendered all his troops. He returned his weapons and ammunition to his chiefs and sent them back to where he had the sockets.

Thus ended that conspiracy, one of the most considerable of the history of France, as much by the number of its members as by its results.

These (two reefs, inspired by diverse feelings for the per sonority of f.*'. Gambetta, and which complement each other so well by The other, were published under his ministry, without provoking any an observation from his unofficial newspapers.

No, it wasn't with General de Galiflet, as he says Bordone, that Gambetta was then preparing for civil war; it was with the Masonic lodges. The debates of the trial. of Autun have established in connection with one of these incidents, the abduction of the marquise of Mac-Mahon (see book II, section XII, § 3, line II, p. 430), the part that they had taken in preparations for the insurrection. They acted know in concert with the most violent socialist elements, with the black gang, this secret society widespread among the miners of the Montceau coal basin, which, in August 1882, prematurely social warfare has recently begun.

The debates of the Lyon trial in 1876 revealed the alliance which was established at the time of danger between the leaders of Vlntrna-^ national and the leading figures of the Republican party.

A letter addressed to Boriassé, dated October 5, 1873, by a named Borniol (from Cannes), clearly indicates how the different your republican factions, united in a common part, re-served to allow each to act using its own means, and, after success, to to deceive each other.

We have so often exposed ourselves to beatings, shootings, and prisons and transportation for the success of the bourgeoisie, that he is Well, since these bourgeois are struck right in the chest by the advent of our support, to rise up against our common enemies, but of Let them this time expose themselves to the avant-garde... As we have,

364 THE GREAT MASONIC PLOT OF 1873

We, the true force, will always prevail at the end of the battle.
provided, of course, that we do not allow the power to take hold see, as in 1848 and 1870, the representatives of this bour geoisie decorated with the name of republicans (1).

The legal debates that arose from the movement anarchist of August and October 1882, in the Saône-et-Loire and Lyon, has once again highlighted several of the individuals those who had appeared in the 1873 trials of Lyon and Autun, notably citizen Dumay. It is at least singular to consider the remotion caused by these events within the lodges masonic. The defendants' lawyer before the Assize Court of Châlons provoked a meeting in Paris on November 6th, announcing Produced in CCS terms by the Radical:

Go evening, Monday, November 1st, at the Grand Orient of France, IG, rue Cadet, (temple no. 2), meeting of the Lodge of Human Rights^ at nine evening hours.

Initiation.

On working conditions and religious fanaticism in the basins miners.

Brothers Georges Laguerre and Camille Illiciard will report on this which they observed on site, during the trial in Montceau-les-Mines(2).

It is relationships of this kind that explain immunity which are enjoyed by certain high-ranking figures in Freemasonry, F.'. Félix Pyat, for example. He can incur with impunity
Despite his legal convictions, he can defy republican powers. established, the hand of justice can never seize it. Thus, in
In June 1881, he was very conspicuously in the vicinity of Paris.
coming and going, without anyone thinking of carrying out the consignment sentences pronounced against him.

(1) Uo already takes a good look at the situation. The Lyon revolutionaries discussed, 2 Novorabro, the drafting of a proclamation by the revolutionary action committee to the workers. The project, after numerous insults directed at Marshal Mac-Mahon and Mr. Tliiers, had a coisidoraut which inflicted a severe censure on Mr.
Gambetta. The delegates of the central government demanded the suppression of this phrase, to which was granted without difficulty.

white. At the exit, a collection was taken up for the benefit of the families of the accused. Montccau-los-Mines: the Radical, November 28, 1882, November 29, f.*. La-Grange, deputy of Ilhônô, venerable Je la logo la Candeur, in Lyon, made on the anarchist movement a conference at the logo the Disciples of Progress, in Paris.

FOREIGN MASONRY AND MONARCHICAL RESTORATION 365

Le Clairon, dated June 17, 1881, published the following article on this subject: before, without provoking any denial:

An evening newspaper reports that Félix Pyat is in hiding back in Paris, where he would do propaganda work in Belleville.

Mr. Félix Pyat may be in Paris, but he is certainly in France. After his conviction to two years in prison for condoning terrorism classified as crimes, he reads the rumor that he was taking refuge in London, and data even from this city some articles, which appeared in the large Marseillaise.

In reality, the theorist of regicide never left France. * Then for six months, he lived in a small town near Paris, at a political friend.

Another newspaper clearly indicated Gambetta as having made a request to the ministry to ensure that he was not in peace, and this approach naturally had an effect. He did not. We must not forget that Félix Pyat was the representative of the revolutions French missionaries at the Locarno convent, where, in October 1872, Gambetta's dictatorship had been decided upon (book II, cliap XII, Sections 3 and 4).

Jî 2. – Foreign Freemasonry and the Restoration

MONARCHIC IN FRANCE

There was considerable emotion at that time throughout the world. Masonic, especially in Germany:

"Take your eyes on France," said the f.*, after May 24, 1873. Smitt in a Leipzig lodge, in a speech published under this title: Us and the Ultramontanes. See what deadly plans they have for our brothers. French people are being prepared at this moment, what dangers do the French lodges face? çaises are threatened in the most serious way by ruitramontanisrae Roman (1).

This could not have been the ministry of May 24th; the academician distinguished, who was its leader, would not have inspired on his own

(I) Quoted by PachJJer, Stille krieg gegen Thron md AUar, 2» édili, p, 75.

306 THE GREAT MONARCHIAN CONSPIRACY OF 1873

So much anxiety in the lodges: it was the future that was being prepared. So, as for France, which they wanted to exclude at all costs,

At that time, as well as in 1877, the cry of distress from Freemasons nique: d me the sons of the widow I resounded throughout the world entire.

In Vienna, on the occasion of the World's Fair, large Table settings brought together Freemasons from all countries and brothers Austrians. There a certain brother, Charles Choudrouka, appealed to the Freemasons of the world "to support the French brothers in the struggles they had to wage against the ultramonarchs tains » (1).

It was not only through speeches that the German lodges Some expressed their sympathy. We saw this from the account in Le Radical. the aid that the leaders of the plot would read from abroad, from Germany and Switzerland; we know how in a sphere The higher the German government's efforts to prevent, as far as it depended on him, France's return to government nement, which alone could restore its national vitality.

The Italian lodges shared the concerns of the German lodges. orders. At that time, one could read in the monthly Bulletin of Italian Freemasonry, public in Rome, by the Grand Orient from Italy:

In the midst of serious events, which can happen at any moment taking place in Europe, we must understand that there is immense interest ready for all Masonic groups to be subject to an impulsive sion and to a uniform discipline, so that they can act in a powerful way, more effective on men and things in the interest of law and liberty (2).

§ 3. – Freemasonry during the period

FROM IG MAY

The great struggle that began on May 24th continued, he said. Bordone, during the period of the IG May. Freemasonry is in core in the front row.

- (l) Der Ilammer der Freimaurerei am Kaiserlhrone der Habsburger, p. 31.
(i) Roproduil par la Chaitie d'union do janvier 1874, p. il0.

Freemasonry during the period of May 16, 367

VÜnivcrs of September 25, 1882, recalls that "in 1877, Mr.
"Gambetta and the French Republic boasted of being in"formed by the lodges of the confidential orders sent to the defi-
"Returns to the Corps: the French Republic published them"
" text. "

In a speech delivered on March 4, 1882, at the lodge La Libre Aarillac's thought, the f.*. Paul Roques outlines in broad strokes the role played by Freemasonry in the revolutions of France since 1789:

As you know, gentlemen, it was during the great Revolution of 1789 that we owe the benefit of these political reforms which have transformed the facing not only Europe, but the entire world. But this Revolution, who prepared it, who directed it: in short, who Done? It is you, gentlemen, it is Freemasonry, which, daughter of the Reform, in the presence of the tyrants' armies, organized the popular masses.
lares, who in place of the royal banners unfurled the flag of humanity unity and led peasants and workers to storm the bastions of the people areas.

After the Revolution and the Empire, Freemasonry continued the affair crossing of the people. Persecuted by the Restoration, she did not
She was not unconnected to the 1830 revolution. She then fought Louis Philippe, which was supposed to be the best of republics, according to the Lafayette's word, but whose reign was nothing more than the reign of the high bourgeoisie.

Having arrived in modern times, it continues as follows:

Here again, gentlemen, I see you at work: on May 40th when united Treason brought the enemies of the Republic to power; you remained. on the breach, repelling the enemy foot by foot and reducing them to a capitulation lation, where all hopes of monarchical restoration have sunk (1).

At the Union and Perseverance lodge in Paris, a family celebration of the March 1, 1879, a health initiative is presented by Brother Aubert:

It was with patriotic joy that we saw in society civile the splendors, victories of the secret truths of Masonic society: the sovereignty of the people and universal suffrage, in a word the Republic.

Our enemies, the enemies of the sovereignty of numbers, as they say the supporters of the absolutism of princes and priests, the par

ti) V. the Chain of Union of July 1882.

368 THE GREAT MASONIC COMPLETION OF 1873

*

herbalists of some divine right or other, united in appearance, are divided at bottom, and they were defeated (1).

On the memorandum date, in the lodge the Fraternity of the Miditja, at Blidali, a speaker, expresses himself thus;

"Freemasonry has been struggling until yesterday. Why shouldn't it be?"
Not in the spotlight today? To whom do we owe the...

Free France, rid of its shackles and once again called to to lead the nations, if not in the spirit of moderation, then... wisdom and patriotism of all these great citizens, including France who are honored and who all, or almost all, belong to Freemasonry?

Our institution therefore has the right to be a source of pride, because it has made people Republic (2).

In 1881, Mr. Barré, member of the Council of the Order of Grand-Orie7it, presiding over the banquet of the lodge, the Ad-admirers of the Universe, recalling the role played by Freemasonry laughter at revolutionary politics, he said, speaking of the last time :

Reunited after the war, we were currently the first wrestlers, when men of the past, after having surprised the to be able, they tried to maintain their position in order to in turn conceal the li-public rights.

We can proudly claim the successes of the last elections of 1877), which brought back to power men so clumsily ousted by shrewd but unwise politicians (3).

German Masonic lodges were, in 1877, as in 1873, they came to the aid of their brothers in France. Threats of war, in case the elections had given a majority to the government the government of Marshal MacMahon, removed during the
This period was frequently reported in unofficial German newspapers.
and this foreign pressure was odiously exploited by the Republicans to influence universal suffrage in the election tin of October 1, 1877.

After the triumph of the radicals, the lodges of all countries...

was offered by the Supreme Council of the Scottish Rite to the Freemasons

(1) C/taine (the unionf April 187!), p. tr>8. (2) Ihid.

(3) The Masonic World of 1882,

LA. Masonry and Mr. Grévy 369 foreigners. The brothers Crémieux and Gam were noticed at the banquet. betta, Jules Simon, Etienne Arago. The f.. Jules Simon wears a toast 4c to the triumphant Republic advancing into the future without further hindrance." Brother Van Humbeck, Grand Master of the National Assembly National of Freemasonry in Belgium and Minister of Public Instruction the republic of this country, speaking on behalf of the Belgian delegation, said the official report of the crack, "joins in the sentiments ex- "awarded prizes in the eloquent toast to the Republic, to France, "Speaks f.. Simon. He congratulates France from the point where she is "Arrival. He places all his hope in the future. He develops the € considerations and feelings, which commit every Belgian to "to associate with the fears as well as the hopes of France" "republican, to rejoice in its prosperity and its successes" "These (1)."

S 4. ^ Freemasonry and Mr. Grévy

Marshal MacMahon had submitted in spite of himself, so much that he had not resigned, the lodges still retained some fears, mixed with many hopes, as the ff.*. Jules Simon and Van Humbeck. Once Mr. Grovy was elected president resident, their confidence knew no bounds and they demonstrated it rent immediately.

On January 1, 1879, the sovereign chapter of the Benevolent Friends-sants, was gathered in Paris.

The f.*. Glovis-Laureus announces that the National Assembly, meeting at Versailles has just elevated Mr. Grévy to the position of President of the Republic public.

The very wise F.. Alépée says that, although it is not customary to to speak of active politics in the work of Freemasonry., he does not believe not to contradict the constitution and the general statutes members of the Order, saluting in the battery of hope, which will to be drawn, the appointment of the head of the French government. adds that Mr. Grévy's rise to power ensures rafTermissemetit of the Republic: it is from this day that the trial will begin

(1) Union CheUne, November 1878.

m

24

370 LB GRAND MASONIC CONSPIRACY OF 1873

As the era of work is born, France will need the cooperation of all his children to resolve the serious issues so* ciales, the in-depth study of which cannot be delayed any longer. Friends of liberty and fraternity can rejoice. The heubs of Clemency will be granted. The man whom the National Assembly has just to name and whose honesty is proverbial, will be done, we have Your* management, a duty to have decreed, in agreement with the representatives elected officials of the country, a good general amnesty law, in order to erase the last* vestiges of our civil discord.

Triple battery of hope. (1)

The lodges now only had to exercise their power.

The Lodge of Good Faith in St-Germain-en-Laye was celebrating a banquet March 4, 1879, according to the Union Channel.

For dessert, the illustrious historian of the French Revolution, the f. *. Louis Blanc, responding to a toast proposed by the Venerable Daumont:

"Those who hesitate to reopen the gates lack deep faith."
They send their love to the homeland and to all exiles, and fear to see the sun of the Rep public opinion compromised by the criticisms of a few men who, impla cables for the humble, have treasures of indulgence for the great and tremble at the prospect of bringing the ministers of May 16th before the Senate, who are finally frightened by the need to bring the assembly back to the middle of the good people of Paris (2;. »

At a funeral celebration held on November 9, 1882, by the lodges the United Hearts of Toulouse, of which the f.*. Constans is ve- The honorary brother, Orateur, has loudly proclaimed For Freemasonry, the triumph of the republicans, and in particular The defeat of the government on May 16th:

Thanks to the energy and dedication of the Republicans, in the front ranks among whom, we can proudly say, were the masons, These dangers have disappeared, and the specter of despotism, for a moment evoked which has vanished; and, although today the role of Freemasonry It is far from over, we are witnessing its triumph, or at least, this which amounts to the same thing, to the triumph of his principles. The men qw very; it was under our black banner that they fought; it was within our lodges where they learned the love of freedom and devotion to the institutions democratic traditions (3).

(1) Chain of Union, March 1879, p. 141.

(2) chain of union, from April 1879.

(3) Chain of Union, December 1882.

CHAPTER TWENTY-SECOND

FREEMASONRY!

AND THE GOVERNMENT OF THE REPUBLIC

§ 1. — Lodges and factions in politics

The F. M. Gambetta, who subscribed to the program in Belleville Masonic, has since then given the watchwords to the lodges:

We read in a speech delivered on May 5, 1882 by F. M., orator of the L. M. Us Emules de Monthyoy Or. M. from Orleans (Chain of Union, August 1882 delivery, p. 269):

It is our duty to make known to the profane world what Freemasonry; for one should not always judge institutions by the apparent results that they can produce. Therefore, one does so in the society, and especially in French society, a very false idea of the Freemasonry. Some consider it an exclusive association.
political men; the others as a kind of relief society mutual; some others—I'm talking about the naive ones—take us for banqueters and bon vivants.

The clergy alone provided the exact characteristics of this institution, by defining it: an instrument for combating associations religious women, against the encroachment of clericalism into social society last.

Yes, my brothers, the great orator, the eminent statesman, the only Imme qu'ait produit notre troisième République, au milieu des tous ces

I said, uttered this phrase, which brilliantly summarizes the struggle
The last point against the principle of reaction: Clericalism, that is the enemy...

F.*. Raynal, his former Minister of Public Works, making a speech at the lodge in Lormont (Gironde), recalled the word famous clericalism, that is the enemy, to oppose it with that-here: Freemasonry, that's the friend (1).

The reader will have noticed in Father Deschamps' work (Introduction V and Book II, Chapter XII, § 5), the quotation from an article of Belgian independence, giving very precise details on the acc the role of Freemasonry in Parisian elections; here is the confirmation within the Masonic Republic:

The brothers of the Polar Star offered, on October 8th, a ban quet to their venerable, the f.*, of Hérédia, to celebrate his appointment of Member of Parliament for Paris.

We had gathered in one of Gillet's salons at Porte Maillot.
The evening was marked by a character of cordiality and joyful camaraderie.
ethical for the honor bestowed by the voters of Paris upon one of the most fervent apostles of Freemasonry,

For dessert, the first supervisor of V Polar Star, Lef.*. Clément, a: offered a most warm toast to the f. of Heredia and attached to his buttonhole held the insignia of a member of parliament, which, as a thoughtful gesture the lodge wanted to be the first to offer it to him.

The f.*. of Hérédia, very moved, very touched by so many signs of sympathy, responded with a magnificent speech, in which he made res to bring out all that the Republic has long owed to action and to examples of Freemasonry. But the most eloquent passage of his improvisation, and what deeply moved the listeners, was when, wanting to address some doubts raised about his perseverance in remaining devoted to the extended family, since his appointment as a member of parliament, he has p he claimed to be called one of the most faithful sons of France Freemasonry, brought him all the honor that the voters have just to do it for him, and solemnly renewed his protestations of devotion unalterable to the mother of his heart and mind (2).

(1) See Le Monde maçonnique of 1882.

(2; Gi(é par le Français, dated October 29, 1881. Il est à notre conconaissaDce person-such as in the municipal elections of Paris, in January 1881, of the Freemasons between the two rounds of voting, they went to promise success to one of the candidates conservative figures, a highly respected merchant in his neighborhood, who outshone the ca opportunistic and radical didats, if he agreed to be received as a Freemason. This
The proposal was rejected, and the opportunistic candidate won, thanks to the union of the Republican factions.

The great successes of Freemasonry, the part it plays in The exercise of power inspires concern among its veterans. who fear a repetition of the mistakes made during the pre-first revolution and its absorption by secondary fractions.
They would divert it, as Brother Barré said (Book III, chapter 1-pit. II, 19), of the purely idealistic path that it should not to abandon, that is to say, its essential goal, the war against the Church.

At the same time, Brother Duparc, one of the oldest members
The head of the lodge "Les Cœurs réunis" in Toulouse said:

Let us be careful, now that Freemasonry is no longer persecuted,
Now that she is in power, only clever and selfish people do not allow it to deviate from its principle and do not use it to oppress their brothers (Ij).

Several of the most important politicians of the day regularly attend the lodges and discuss matters there day. The workshop summons sheets mention constantly the communications of the brothers •. Brisson, Clemenceau, Constans, Paul Bert.

F.-. Floquet, shortly after being appointed prefect of The Seine, on October 30, 1881, went to the banquet of the lodges confederated, forming the Grand Symbolic Scottish Lodge, the the most influential Masonic power in Paris today, (v.
Introduction, III). Here is a summary of his speech, according to the Masonic Bulletin:

As for me, as for those of my colleagues in the House whom the Parliamentary work takes us further away from the tra-Lodge members, we are happy for these opportunities to get together
We see among you and we seize them eagerly. We do not Let us never miss these appointments. – What's the point, people sometimes say, These Mac.* meetings? No doubt they are useful under tyranny.
nie; it is there, in these dark times, that public life comes to concentrate that, the spirit of freedom, resistance and social progress; but today
"Today," they add, "we have freedom and the Republic, why?"
Are we hiding behind these rituals that may seem childish?

Well, my brothers, Freemasonry retains all its usefulness. We will save
We defend freedom when it is threatened; we propagate it when it triumph,

(t) Chain of Union, January 1883, p. 34.

Freemasonry has now become an official institution.
and she is keen to assert herself in all public ceremonies.
Thus, she was represented by a number of her dignitaries.
res wearing their insignia at the inauguration of the monument Bara (September 12, 1881) (1), at the inauguration banquet of the hotel* such as the city of Paris (July 14, 1882), at Gambetta's funeral (Official Journal, January 6, 1883)

In the colonies, the administrators of the Republic did not don't bother changing premises to fill their official functions. The Amitié lodge of Saint-Denis distributed, On October 30, 1881, prizes were awarded to students of the high school. The governor from the colony* went to the lodge^ to take part as complicit in this exercise of Masonic supremacy over information public administration.

11. Moreover, there is only the final word in his speech which means something; "We can hope that one day will come when we will all be Freemasons. I, for one, desire that May that day come soon. In the meantime, let us drink to Freemason France.
"Nice, which gives us an example and shows us the way."

It is in the lodge of Equinoctial France of Cayenne only, on December 25th of the same year, the f.*. Charvein, di-
The rector of the interior, presented the Legion of Honour cross to F.. Siguier, president of the general council. F.. Charvein is in same time orator of the lodge (2).

The watchwords of Freemasonry are translated into laws by the rooms.

Immediately after Grèvy's accession to the presidency,
The amnesty was voted in accordance with the demands of the lodges.
which we recalled in the previous chapter*

At the meeting of July 17, 1879, of the lodge Les Amis Bienfaisants and Osiris imitators gathered from Paris:

The f.*. Ranc, said the Chain of Union (3), gave knowledge to the lodge of a kind of geographical map of religious establishments not

(t) This ceremony, in which Masonic lodges held the first rank, elected, presided over by General Tibaudin, Minister of War, as representative
The government – The general delivered a very advanced speech and handed over to The gold medals awarded by the logos were given to secular schools. See the Reminder of September 13, 1881 and the French Republic to the memorandum

(i)Chaine Xunion, 1881, pp. 411–416, and 1882, pp. 30–31.

of this lodge in 1879, by the f.*. Bourdiu.

LODGES AND FACTIONS IN POLITICS 375

authorized in France; the list is long^ and it ended with a wish that is in all our hearts and that we are perhaps at the day before seeing it come to fruition: it is that of seeing it restored to social life active, productive and useful, this immense quantity of creatures less useless and most often harmful and dangerous.

A year later, the decrees of March 29th were issued, and the Chamber bre, following this program to the end, ordered the execution of this map and these statistics to prepare the confiécations, to which the lodges keep pushing the Government.

On August 17, 1880, Brother Gonstans, the day after the expulsion of the Jesuits, would visit his brothers of the lodge La Parfaite har-Mortie^ of Toulouse, of which he is an honorary venerable master. The lodge He received an enthusiastic ovation and was awarded a palm:

Receive, F. Gonstans, this palm, said the Orator; around it The symbolic acacia of the mason and the oak, the reward, are intertwined. of the citizen who has served his country well.

To whom could it be awarded more justly than to the minister? publican who has just dealt a terrible blow to the threatening enemy? Unwavering and serene like a principle, you drew strength from the law, and moderation in force.

Your task is not finished, however; you will continue it with the even invincible courage, and the name of Gonstans will shine in history history of democracy and the strengthening of our young Republic, as it will remain engraved in our hearts (1).

We read in the Masonic journal of March-April 1882:

On March 25th, the lodge Les Zélés Philanthropes celebrated, at the Grand Orient, the return of spring with a banquet, followed by a concert and a* ball.

Brother Desmons (member of the council of the Order, deputy for Gard), shows, through a few examples, how the action of the Ma- is exerted Nonsense, indirectly, but surely. It brings to mind his famous speech at the convent of 1877, indicates what Freemasonry did and wanted to do French at that time, and sees in the projected abolition of the religious oath gieux before the courts^ one of the applications of the principle of tolerance proclaimed and pursued by Freemasonry.

The Paris City Council, as we saw in volume

(1) Ohaine d'uniouf do December 1880.

376 Freemasonry and the Republic

second, a veritable lodge. The lists we publish were reveal that not a single Republican member of the Council foreign to the lodges. The same applies to the borough halls and those in the suburbs. Unlike what happens in the higher political regions, the city councilors continue to regularly frequent the lodges in their neighborhood. A sort of hierarchical advancement has been established within Freemasonry. Nonsense. After a certain period of training, the most senior members of the council deserving individuals become deputies of Paris: it is through this path that The IT.* teams from Ileredia, Lanessan, and Delattre arrived. Marmottan, Roques de Pilhol; others, more obscure, are recommended for a few rotten provincial towns. Thus, the ff.*. Marius Poulet, Jules Roche removed elected deputies from Var.

The council is increasingly affecting the Chamber the role of initiator, like the Commune of 1792. It was he who first, before the new laws, raised the question of secularization schools and hospitals. Within the scope of its responsibilities and Sometimes, by exceeding them, he achieves the separation of i'ü-Church and State, abolishes the salaries of ministers of religion, He drives out the chaplains from the hospices. He imperiously pursues with the government the withdrawal of the buildings allocated to Daughters of Charity and Brothers of the Christian Schools. At six month, one year from date, the Chamber follows the impetus given.

This strength is due to the Masonic bond: one does not take There's no point in hiding it. Therefore, no one should be surprised by the proposal made by Mr. Monteil in July 1881, to make to remove from worship some churches in Paris, nor the reasons he gives not in his report:

Churches are not, as one might believe, monuments buildings erected by believers. The buildings that were constructed during the fifty or sixty years of religious fury, which seized the Christianity in the eleventh and twelfth centuries, have long since Times have collapsed, and what we call Christian art today is nothing other than Masonic art.

It is Freemasonry which, developing from the tenth century onwards century and turning towards Christianity, the only ideal, the only constitution, the only knowledge at the time, was Freemasonry which elevated our magnificent cathedrals. Always traveling, in constant contact In their interactions with one another, the Freemasons founded a new art.

is methodical, reasoned, clear, orderly and precise. That the style was French or Norman, the principle was the same. The Sainte-Chapelle From Paris, replied to Saint-Ouen of Rouen, and Appelmans of Cologne replied, from the top of the Antwerp bell tower, to Erwin and Jean de Steinbach. And, as if they wanted to testify that religion was not for They were merely using a pretext, these Freemasons, these admirable architects, marked in a gargoyle, a capital or a cornice of their work, the merciless mockery of the clergy... »

Yes, churches, those places of gathering, pleasure and business for the po In the medieval period, the churches truly belong to us, in principle cipe as in fact, and, also determined to leave free the beliefs that We are determined to put an end to priestly organizations, ü It seems wise to us to start renting today to the factories (1).

In May 1882, the lodge VAmitié, Or., of Paris, put to on its agenda was the question of the "separation of Churches and of the State," and its Or. has already drafted a bill intended to to put into action the principles accepted by the "National Congress of 1882 for the separation of Church and State. » The f.'* Achard, deputy for the Gironde, was simultaneously addressing this question in the French Letter of Aquitaine, Or., of Bord deaux. A little earlier, lef.. Jules Roche, also a member of parliament, gave a speech on this subject in the L.. Alsace-Lorraine^ Or., of Paris. In the orders of the day of Their Majesties, in 1882, we note a conference on "municipal reform", by Mr. Dreyfus, deputy for Rambouillet, in the L. *. the Friends of Humanity, Or. . of Meulan; another on the "question of railways", by Mr. Cheneau, deputy of Cher, in the L.. the Disciples of Progress, Or., of Paris. On May 1st, the L., the Human Rights Committee discussed the issue of "repeal" of religious oaths in court.

It was shortly afterwards, on the same date (January 15, 1882), that place the curious circular of the Amitié lodge, of Paris, that we have reproduced above (book III, chapter XIX, § I), for e.exhorterles freemasons to push the Republic along the paths progressive and to change the laws, a legacy of the old regimes narchic. It was like a spur to the chambers and to the ministry.

As the Masonic Republic said, Freemasonry intends to be the mistress of political parties.

(1) Reproduced by the Frenchman, July 5, 1881.

378 Freemasonry and the Republic

Often conservative newspapers, such as La Patrie and Le Moniteur, recounted the intervention of the main lodges of Paris and of the Grand Orient in the ministerial crises of the last years. Such, for example, is the story of the Fatherland:

Here is a fact whose authenticity we can guarantee.
in the most absolute way, without having to fear the slightest contradiction.

The war against the religious orders is only the beginning of the war.
ostentatious, open, implacable towards religion and any idea of God.

After the expulsion of the religious orders, the hunt for bishops will begin.

After the cowardice against the bishops, the war against the lower clergy by all the possible means – we mean all possible means.

We are only mentioning, for the record, the elimination of the budget for religious worship and the separation of church and state,

This ruling was issued and communicated, we specify, by the Masonic lodge-nique of the Grand Orient of France, in the session held on the second Sunday sleeve of the Lenten season of 1879,

The grand council decided that it was necessary to tear it from the heart of France up to the Idea of God.

After the ministers of the Catholic religion and the Catholic religion Protestantism itself will be persecuted in the person of its pastors, from his associations, and his temples will be closed as one will close the churches.

We remember the letter from Mr. Ducarre, a Freemason, announcing that he was withdrawing because the idea of God was under attack.

It is to the decision that we have just revealed that Mr. Ducarre was allusion.

This is where we are going.

This is what the government of the Republic wants, the executor of the order.
vile decrees issued by atheist Freemasonry.

Once again, we do not fear any denial.

If these claims, based on revealing indications, are Denied by the lodges, they will not be able to refute the following account by France on May 16, 1882, one of the newspapers placed under their

There was talk, last January, of the admission of Mr. de Freycinet in Scottish Freemasonry, where his father had held a position the high functions of venerable.

(!) Lo f.*. Farcy, editor or cbef of France, was affiliated in October 1881, and Since then he has regularly frequented the lodges. See the Chain of Union of December. bre 1881.

LODGES AND FACTIONS IN POLITICS 379

One of the most important Parisian lodges of this rite, the Libre Examen, which includes several members of Parliament, has declared bequeathed, for this purpose, to the Honorable President of the Council, Messrs. Raymond, member of the supreme council of the Order, Durignieux, Maurice Faure, Albert Tournier and Eugène Deloncle, former prefect.

The Masonic delegates were received yesterday morning at the Ministry of foreign affairs.

Mr. de Freycinet gave the delegation the warmest welcome. He assured of his strong sympathy for Masonic work, but he believed must postpone its determination, given its current situation of President of the Council of Ministers.

What is remarkable about this note is not at all the approach taken by the lodges towards a person he could It would be useful for them to attract people into their ranks; it was advertising that... has been given. The lodges want this to be known: no one can to remain in power if they do not submit to their leadership. It is not enough not to execute their work: today, it is still necessary to appear to them To hold on. That's what France's note means.

It makes what had been said about of the fall of Mr. de Freycinet's ministry in September 1880 (vt II, p. 487, book II, chapter XII, § 10). It will be noted that in July 1882, two months after the Scottish brothers' initiative, Mr. de Freycinet was overthrown by a sudden reversal of fortune. majority and replaced by a frankly Gambettist cabinet (1).

(1) G'ost to These maneuvers within the lodges that the Masonic Republic alluded to in an article cited by Franpaû on May 4, 1882:

"The departmental Freemasonry must be vigilant. It is currently the subject of..."
"attempts at political absorption that could cause it the greatest harm.

"There is a party in the Republic which, having been excluded from power, seeks to return f by all possible means.

Let's not specify further, everyone understood us.

(One might wonder why Messrs. Ménard, Dorian, and Paul Sert were there, there "A few days ago, while travelling around Africa and visiting the Lille Metropolitan Area," c nes.

"Why did Mr. Constans, who had long since ceased to be a regular citizen, become..."
to offer you a banquet by the Lll.', of Toulouse!

And if Raynal, at the L/. of Lormont, what fine zeal has seized him, he who, there
"Barely a year old, he refused to come and visit a logo of a city in the center, in
"And claiming that he hadn't gone to those places for a long time?"

"This confluence of circumstances is too bizarre to be accidental. A political party-that tries to get hold of Freemasonry. Freemasonry must dis€ splits and remains what it should be, THE MISTRESS and not the servant of the parties "Politics."

380 Freemasonry and the Republic

During the subsequent parliamentary recess, the Freemason nerie did not waste its time. One could read in the French Republic French decree of October 30, 1882:

Approximately five hundred Freemasons belonging to the five lodges of the East, had gone to the meeting of the lodge Les Cœurs réunis, that was to visit Mr. Gonstans, a member of this lodge and its venerable of honor.

After a very lucid explanation of the policy he followed during his time at the ministry and the difficulties he faced in the execution of the decrees desired by the country and by the Chamber, Mr.
Gonstans addressed external and internal issues, which, in these Recent events have greatly concerned public opinion.

He stressed the urgent need for judicial reform by the the abolition of irremovability and the need to put an end to to the encroachments of the clergy in civil affairs.

Mr. Gonstans stated that he had faithfully followed the policy of the republican union, which he persists in believing to be the most favorable to developme development of our institutions, and which he is determined to defend with Mr.
Gambetta in the future, as he supported it in the past (1),

§ 2. – The deliberative sections

The Constitution of 1793, in which all powers were

The armed leader, known as a Freemason, remained the ideal of Freemasonry. In Paris, where it has considerable importance, she seeks to achieve it.

U Belgian Independence, in the very curious article that we have already cited (//lirof/wciio/i, § V, and liv. II, chap. XII, § 5) pointed out This work. The following excerpt from the meeting of the Social Lodge,

(1) This article shows the intensity of the personal rivalries that divide the Masonry.

In the final days of Gambetta's life, they became very lively and in most Parisian logos showed a strong hostile current emerging against the opposition Tunisianized. He had notably made his presence felt very strongly at the celebration organ Scottish Federation on November 5, 1882 (see the Masonic Republic at 15). The Death, which sets everything right, has momentarily quelled these dissensions; but they will inevitably renew.

This represents a permanent cause of weakening for Freemasonry, due to its origin, and which neutralizes part of the power of its organization.

DELIBERATE SECTIONS 381

No. 22, dated April 4, 1882, clarifies its scope. The speaker, after having first recalled what the purpose of the foundation of the Grand Scottish Symbolic Lodge, on which the Social Lodge depends:

Our watchword is merger. – Like you, we believe that It is by gathering all our scattered forces into a compact whole. in the different rites or obediences, that we will be able to walk from the front and to give Freemasonry the place of honor, which it → comes by right in the professional society*.

Then he adds:

From a political point of view.

Without wanting to consider ourselves in any way as the party more intelligent of this population of the 18th arrondissement, also large by number as well as by heart, we nevertheless believe ourselves to be the the most active and morally demanding part. Our idea is therefore to study together the major issues on the agenda, of coordinate the results of our studies and confer directly with our representatives in Parliament. Our role will therefore consist of being the link between principals and agents, between elected officials and the sovereign, that is to say the people.

Too often the elected official forgets that the sovereignty of the people is permanent. nente, and only considers it to exist virtually on the day of the elections.

without understanding the danger that could result [from non-compliance] commitments made.

Several Parisian lodges have adopted this line of thinking. and have put on the agenda the question of the assimilation of the man political and civil mandate. The deputies would be mandated contractual partners, obliged to answer for their actions to all their constituents at every opportunity in periodic meetings. It is in these primary assemblies that the real power resides. government (1). This is obviously the step forward that the government intends now have to make the Republic do the lodges of before—^ guard, who have grouped themselves into a confederation under the grand lodge symbolic.

Obeysing this impulse, several newspapers support

(t) See this plan developed in several articles of the Masonic Bulletin of the Grand Symbolic Scottish Lodge, notably no. of February 188*2*

382 LA. Freemasonry and the Republic

in their columns the theory of the contractual political mandate political and the f.*. Henry Maret, deputy of the Seine, in a public meeting, requested that the next review of the The Constitution introduced Vasshnilation of the legislative mandate to civil mandate (1).

§3. – The lodges and the administration

Throughout France, lodges are currently active direct and daily control over local administration.

They control the municipal elections in many country.

They force civil servants to join their ranks.

They monitor the administrative reaction, stimulate it in the meaning of the struggle against the Church^

In short, they are like so many public safety committees. blic au petit pied.

We quote without comment.

In a letter addressed from Bordeaux to the Masonic World March 1881;

I am pleased to begin my letter by addressing your attention on the success achieved in the last municipal elections of Bordeaux by Brothers Roquas and Laroque, the first Venerable in Title, the second member of the L.*. the Candor^ who were elected to very strong majorities. Several of the new councilors, the ff. Furt and Oodé, in particular, are former Freemasons. Pbesque half of the

The members of the Bordeaux Municipal Council are thus formed of Freemasons.

In the suburban municipalities, Bordeaux Freemasonry has achieved numerous successes. We will cite Brother Lucas, from t7Asm-lier» da of the Pt*aternity, appointed to Rules; Max. Laterrade, secretary of Candor, elected in Talence; Arnut, from the same workshop, elected in Le Bouscat, etc.

On the other hand, we read in the Masonic Bulletin of December bre 1881:

(1) Y. riTal0ft da 6 oovembM 1882.

THE LODGES AND ADMINISTRATION 383

B,.', h., the United Friends, Or., of Poitiers,— Meeting of October 4th bre 1881.

At Amis Réunis, October 4th was a day of celebration. It was about re-to know, as a member of the Council of the Order, the f.*. Guimbaud. For almost five years now, Mr. Guimbaud has been firmly directing the work. *. of the Friends reunited.

At this moment, all the ff., who illuminate our T,, (temple) of their light. . have managed to acquire a respectably marked position in the ranks of the liberal party of Poitiers. Thanks to the members of the L.'. who were able to show the professors what a devoted Freemason can do for the cause of progress, instinctively, as soon as one returns in a period of active politics, the vast majority of liberals raises his eyes towards the recognized leaders of the L.', as if to ask them the watchword II must also be said, if the Mac., of Poitiers, no more than their Venerable have never brought politics into their L.*. (!!!), as citizens they have never failed to respond to an in-avoidance of secular work, whenever it was made to them.

Mr. Guimbaud has been deputy mayor of Poitiers for almost one year; he is also a member of the Council of the League of Education ly...

Freemasonry, which we publish further on, shows that in the
In most cities, mayors and deputy mayors are chosen from among the Lodge members: again, we were only able to do this work because very incompletely. The above excerpt from Le Monde maçonnique proves that this action also affects small centers.

For the past four years, Masonic newspapers have been reporting taking into account the receptions of the prefects, sub-prefects, and professors of the University in the lodges of the cities where they are sent. It would be tedious to multiply the quotations from this genre. Let us note, in passing, the reception in 1880 of the
f. *. de Girardin, the prefect of the Vendée; a particular interest is attached to it because of his family history (1).

Masonic despotism extends even to municipal employees principals in Paris. Mr. Alphand, director of works for the city, has He was initiated in 1881, and to pay for his welcome, sent all the city's shrubs adorn a Masonic lodge's attire, to

(t) in Masonic World of February-March 1881.

384 Freemasonry and the Republic

•J

which was also assisting Father Charles Floquet, prefect of the Seine (1).

In Marseille, Brother Brochier, mayor of the city, and venerable of The Truth and Reform lodge, in August 1882, expelled from the town hall all employees who were not affiliated, by taking the pretext of a derisory examination in view of their position (2).

Freemasonry has everywhere taken on the task of monitoring the execution rigorous enforcement of the impious laws that she had passed by the chambers, or decrees that she had issued by the ministers to his devotion.

In September 1881, the presidency of the general assembly of Grand Orient is given to Brother Ali Margat, mayor of Nîmes and Venerable Master of the Echo Lodge of the Grand Orient. Le Monde maçonnique
The conic journal, October 1881 issue, justifies this choice by saying that "he is a very distinguished man and a Freemason"

"Experienced. We haven't forgotten his driving, frankly."

republican in his capacity as mayor of Végard des clericals
"From Nîmes."

The lodge of Besançon, in its session of May 26, 1882, pro-yielded to the initiation of three laymen, "one of whom was the mayor of a town. The municipality of the Doubs department responded, according to Le Monde. conical, with great relevance to all the questions which questions were asked of him. Do we know what the interrogation focused on? has focused, says the Masonic world, "on the attitude that it would have if he encountered resistance in the implementation of the law on public education recently voted on by our legislative assemblies latives. »

Nothing surprising about this question, really. The school law
Is it not essentially a Masonic work, whose Brothers boast?

The lodges have undertaken to replace the cult of the saint Virgin by that of the goddess of the Republic. A committee addressed to all the venerable masters of the lodges a circular thus con-received:

...A bust of the Republic, born here, since it was designed

(1) Union Chain, Jauvier-FéTrier 1882*

(2) See all the Marseille newspapers of that date, in particular Le Sémaphore of the 10th August 1882 and the Citizen he.

THE LODGING AND THE OMINISTRATION 385

by one of the ff. for a 1. *. is now adopted by the world secular and sponsored by independent groups in a very large number of municipalities.

It is easy for each of the ff.. of your 1.. living in a commune rural to take the initiative at home of a subscription committee to the elf to raise the necessary funds for the erection of our monument which has a very wide reach on the still ignorant and backward parts* some of our countryside, who, if they see the Virgin Mary or any other saint in plaster in their church, they will also see the Republic, symbol of justice tice and Véquilé in indelible metal, gain a foothold on the communicative forum nal.

We are addressing brethren; we do not need to elaborate.
to demonstrate to them the enormous scope of the goal we are pursuing.

At the head of the "Honorary Committee", we find, as president tooth, Victor Hugo. Among the other names, we will note the following fronts:

Arago (Emmanuel), Senator T.. III.. F., and Power, Souv.. Place

Beauquier, Member of Parliament for Doubs, M.. de la L.. Perfect sincerity, Union and Constant friendship reunited;

Cernesson, municipal councillor of the city of Paris, M.. of the L.. the True Friends of Peace;

Desmons, deputy of Gard, Member of the Council of the Order;

Dréo, deputy of Var, 30* T.. S., (very wise) of Chap.. Isis-Mon^ tyon, Vén.. de la L.*. É(x>le Mutuelle ;

De Hérédia, deputy of the Seine, Ven., of the L., Polaris star

Hovelacque, municipal councilor of the city of Paris, M.. of the L., Friends of Tolerance;

Level (Emile), municipal councillor of the city of Paris, A., of the L., Polaris;

Macé (Jean), president of the Ligue fraise de l'enseignement^ M.. of the L.. Alsace»Lorraine;

Martin (Georges), municipal councillor of the city of Paris, M., of the Scottish L.. Jesttsalem;

Measurer, municipal councillor of the city of Paris, M.. of the L.. Justice;

Roche (Jules), deputy for Var, M.. of the L.. the Friends of the Tolérance. (1)

The Bulletin of the Education League (June 1881 issue)

(1) Reproduced by the French newspaper of April 6, 1882.

m

25

386 Freemasonry and the Republic

The patron also has a bust of the Republic, probably the same one.
Here is the description of the base:

On the right, Ignorance and Superstition, symbolized by a monk Milréy are strangled by a cord on which is written "League of the En-left. Voltaire lifts it up and laughs at the progress his ideas have brought about.

This mitred monk wears a bishop's costume; he has donkey ears, and Snakes come out of its mouth.

§ 4. – Freemasonry and public assistance

We will describe these actions in a separate chapter. of Freemasonry to establish atheist teaching: that was his main work. But she also has a hand in the odious laicisation of hospitals and charitable institutions.

The following can be read in the Masonic Bulletin of the Grand Scottish Symbolic Lodge of June 1880, at the beginning of the campaign the building that was to be inaugurated by the Paris City Council:

In a series of lectures (three at the lodge "Union and Benevolence-sancé" and one at the lodge "la Franche Union"), the brother Georges Martin has briefly and quickly outlined some aspects of the public assistance; we thought it would be useful and interesting to give greater publicity to the information provided by our f.'. G. Martin, especially since we generally know little this important administration, which however operates alongside it absorbs a respectable amount of our money.

For a long time we ignored the actions of public assistance that, which was almost completely under clerical domination wedge, and we all know how skillfully clericalism has managed to draw part of the exploitation of misery. There, as on many other points, we have only begun to be somewhat enlightened since the rescue The safeguarding of the interests of the city of Paris was restored to a municipal council elected official.

In 1881 and 1882 the summonses for the lodges of the di- The various obediences of Paris indicate as one of the subjects the more frequently dealt with public and private charity and its organization.

THE PLAIN-MASONRY AND PUBLIC ASSISTANCE 387

Not content with having secularized hospitals and having hindered by all sorts of administrative persecutions against free works charity, Freemasonry aspires to direct everything by itself public assistance.

Also, the Chain of Union of December 1881 brings us the a highly solemn account of the Masonic work of the booklets

The lodges had gathered in the main hall of the Franklin circle. all the secular municipal schoolteachers under the presidency of duf.. Sénécart, Venerable Master of the VAménité lodge, assisted by Mr. Richer, deputy of "our friendly municipality," said the count rendered. The entire account of this ceremony shows the lodges affirming their senior management of public education in this city. The f.. Sénécart, in his speech, expressed, to enthusiastic applause, Nîmes, from the hall, the wish that "the children of the hospice be sent to live communal life in secular schools. We believe, he added, that in a free and democratic country like France, it could well be seized by the administration competent intervention, a measure in that direction.

This is how Freemasonry intends to exploit misery and The suffering of the people to fill their atheist schools!

In its meeting of May 17, 1882, the Scottish Olive Lodge, 38, in Le Havre, is studying a reform project for the distribution of aid by municipal charity offices paux (1).

The lodges of Le Havre organized, under their direction, associations apprentice associations, a shooting competition for schools at the shooting range, a social child protection services, a daycare center. In nine years, they have distributed 22,870 francs in savings account booklets to students secular schools. Their activities cover all useful objects. public.

Contrary to previous practices, they have sessions common to their offices; this concentration of their forces makes their more effective action (2).

The Chain of Union of May 1882 provides us with the indications following:

(1) Chain of Union, October 1882, p. 353.

(2) See in the Chaîne d'Union of October 1882, pp. 350-354, the report of IraTanx of the lodges of Le Havre for a year.

388 Freemasonry and the Republic

The lodges of Nantes are not asleep: they are on the eve of to reach an agreement with the Society of Secular Schools to organize a workshop erected by non-religious women. They consulted and united. to appoint delegates responsible for responding to the ff.. from outside, who would need information about the Nantes exhibition, before opening evenings, from 8 to 10 o'clock, ff.. are permanently on duty to receive the ma-travelling lessons.

The Freemasonry substituted for religious congregations. – Under This title calls for the establishment of agricultural colonies and in particular in favor of the one already existing in Rey, under the direction of Rection of F.*. Jouanne.

This circular is accompanied by a statement of the situation as of December 31st.
1685, from the Rey rural experimental society house (Seine-Inferior), first colony of the work.

5. – Freemasonry and the army

At various times, Freemasonry has tried to im-to plant in the army. We have recounted (Book II, Chapter VII, §6) the use that had been made by Napoleon I of military lodges.
They had not survived the fall of the empire. During the During the African wars, Freemasonry once again became fashionable in the regiments that were garrisoned in Algeria. These affiliations were made under such unserious conditions, often en masse in a corps of police officers, that they might have seemed harmless. The Marshal Soult, however, who had equal experience of Masonic matters and military matters, which, during the Spanish wars, had made use of Freemasonry, afrancesados and had experienced the counter-action of the English lodges, the Marshal Sault, we say, through circulars dated 1844 and 1845, absolutely forbade active duty officers from affiliating to link to the lodges.

Freemasonry was almost completely unknown to new generations of military personnel. But since 1870, many attempts (and this time with a very specific political aim) have been made to infiltrate the sect into the army. It is through her that the authors of the great conspiracy of 1873 (see in this volume, chap. XXI,

THE Freemasonry and the army 389

§ i, {'History of a Conspiracy'}) hoped to find a complicity, more or less openly admitted, in some regiments. Since
At that time, a number of affiliations were made. The days
Masonic lodges have eagerly reproduced the story of the solstice festival General meeting of the lodges of Rouen, January 27, 1881. At the banquet which... crowned, the f.\ Vézieu, adjutant in the 74th line, former member bre of the Rouen lodge, Constance Proven^ currently member of the 1st*, the Temple of the Friends of French Honor, after a very anticlerical speech, he addressed his

I will now fulfill another duty and declare to you, so in the name of the brothers of the R.. L., the Temple of the friends of French honor. Or., from Paris, of which I am one of the delegates here, that in the name of the ff., Méry, battalion commander; Le Leurch, captain; Rat, second lieutenant; Delcambre, musician; Mr. Gaudron, musician; Mr. Petit, lieutenant; A. Gliquot, lieutenant; A. Debert, lieutenant; A. Roux, lieutenant; A. Vary, Second Lieutenant; A. Mabon, Second Lieutenant; A. Boulet, Sergeant-Major; A. Gentil, Private; all children of this R.. L., at with the exception, however, of our dean, the T.. G.. F.. Méry, – whom no- Our greatest desire is to see the two workshops continue, the friendly, intimate, fraternal relationships that currently exist between their relationship, which must be all the closer, all the more followed, which our If.'.of the Temple of the Friends of French Honor have done a joy to welcome among them the many military children of The proven Constancy forced to leave your Gold.*

The F. Rat (second lieutenant in the 74th Line Infantry), another delegate of the lodges the Temple of the Friends of French Honor, in an improvisation happily, she affirms that the army is no longer the devoted force it once was. servant of authoritarian and absolute governments; that her role is not more than to prop up the shaky scaffolding of a monarchical government or any hereditary condition; that, thanks to the benefits of education, All soldiers today understand that their duty is to be in a communion of ideas with the national will, and that everyone also knows appreciate that they no longer need to lend themselves to any entry into the ways illegal and dangerous. Ge f.*. concludes by saying that, if there are still men to forget the army's mission and its popular origins Yes, not all military personnel will forget their duties to the law. and the government of the French Republic, resulting from unanimous suffrage versel (1).

(1) The Chain of Union, January–February 1881.

390 Freemasonry and the Republic

Despite all the talk from these budding Laborderes, the Freemasonry had made little progress in the army until these Lately. Both institutions are based on principles absolutely opposed. The contradiction between them is such that the Freemasonry places among the demands of its program the abolition of standing armies (v. lib. II, chap. XII, § G). Without No doubt, after our disasters of 1870, we leave this in the shadows point of the program of the great work; but it is not erased For this reason, and progressive thinkers remind us of it from time to time. Thus, Father de Lanessan gave a lecture in Troyes in June 1881. in which he again called for the abolition of the armies

Freemason officers find themselves, as a result of the doctrines which permeate all the rites of the institution, in a strange situation. What to think, for example, of a conference on Wmnéc news, made by the f.'. Fa.. officer, at the lodge the Free Thought of Aurillac, in which he calls for the transformation transformation of the army into a kind of national guard, and ends with this peroration:

There is no war between states, nor between individuals.

That is what reason dictates.

Humanity, the only providence that works for us! It advances, abolishing war, which was the harsh and bloody condition of societies past.

She advances, consecrating industry and labor which will be the pacification that and salutary condition of future societies. Hands turn away of the sword and head towards more useful labors.

I conclude, my heart filled with the hope of the great poet: "One day the The entire globe will be civilized, all points of human habitation will be enlightened, and then will be fulfilled the magnificent dream of Intelligence: "To have the world as one's homeland and humanity as one's nation!" (2)

That is very humanitarian and very Masonic.

But it is poor preparation for military courage, for the unyielding discipline, the ardent patriotism, which constitute the strength of armies.

(1) üep&ches (the VAgence Uavas of June 27, 1881.

(2) Ohnine d'union, January 1882.

The Freemason and the army 391

The introduction of Freemasonry into the army often leads to incidents likely to damage team spirit.

"In May 1880, a soldier from the 63rd Line Infantry Regiment, having by surprise drawn to a civil funeral, the colonel and the officers of his regiment

The assembled members of Limoges took charge of the matter. Delegated by them, the f.*. Georges Perin, deputy for Haute-Vienne, obliged the general Farre to lift the orders issued against the officer, and to substitute a punishment of eight days' detention, which was imposed to his colonel (1). »

Such methods, no more than the homilies of the f.*. of Au-Rillac, are not designed to make Freemasonry appealing to the army.

In September 1882, Mr. Billot, Minister of War, following of incidents raised by the Patriotic League and to which which that general officers had been involved, published a circular to reiterate the prohibition, imposed by regulations on the military res in active service, not to be part of any association. In his circular, General Billot cites as precedents similar measures taken by his predecessor, the Marshal Soult. But he forgot to mention that they were directed against the Masonry.

So Freemasonry paid the price for its audacity and acted as if it was above military regulations and the circular of Minister of War. The Masonic newspapers of October and of no* November 1882 brings us the accounts of a number of Military receptions following the circular. The Channel of union of October 1882, in particular, by announcing the presence in Tunisia of F.*. Desmons, military surgeon, report shovels the activity he instilled in Freemasonry in the department from the North, and expresses the hope that he will enjoy his stay in Tunisia to unite its efforts with all brothers and spread the instH tuition.

The same newspaper, in its December 1882 issue, has clarified the situation completely by publishing the following note in Large print:

In our previous issue, we had hinted to our ff.*..

(I) Universe of September 25, 1882.

392 Freemasonry and the Republic

that we were sufficiently informed to be able to pen ser that the circular from General Billot, Minister of War, to generals, army corps commanders, having the effect of defending instructing active-duty military personnel not to join any association, not to... Freemasonry is not well known. What we have learned since... It can only confirm our first impression.

, A mason friend of ours informed us that the Sup.. Gons.'. Scotland, of France, rightly concerned about the consequences cheuses of the circular of General Billot, for the Mac. •. fran- If this circular actually prohibited access to our work... active-duty military personnel, masons, or those aspiring to become masons, resolved to to appoint a commission of 33®, taken from within its ranks, which would have to mandate to obtain an audience and to go to one of the ff,\, mem- active member of one of the LL.\.*. Feoss. of the Orient of Paris, which occupies a important position in the State. The Supreme Council's commission was to to seek to obtain from this eminent figure, that he intervene with the minister war, so that an exception would be made in favor of the Ma- French consonant, and that thus our military brothers would have full faculty to be part of our LL.

The commissioners of the Sup.*. Cons.' were perfectly received, and, when they withdrew, they carried away the assurance that the circulation General Billot's decision had not been intended in any way whatsoever, Freemasonry, but a certain association that is too noisy and embarrassing reassuring, and certain companies, having occupied the courts too much.

We are pleased to be able to provide, through this account, which is accurate in every respect to reassure our brothers belonging to the army.

To better emphasize the triumph of Freemasonry over the r
In the same issue, the Chain of Union publishes the
The following is a list of dignitaries of the Lodge "The Disciples of Progress" in Paris, who have just been elected for the year 1883:

The ff.'. .'. Sbver, commander of the engineers, aide-de-camp to the minister OF THE WAR (then General Billot), venerable.

Simon and Galbtzeustein, supervisors.

Marmonier, deputy chief of staff to the Speaker of the House, ora author, Postelle, attached to the prefecture, secretary.

Roty, treasurer.

Warin, captain of dragoons, aide-de-camp to General Faidiierbe, hospital.

Strauss, juror.

Masonry at the police headquarters 393

This presents a new and perilous situation for the constitution. army tuition.

§6. – Freemasonry has the police prefecture

Lef.*. Gambetta, by forming a strong government in 1879 who, during his lifetime, had a significant influence on the Republic, the prefecture confided the police to a man of undeniable ability, but who had plus the merit of being very advanced in all sects and of being one of the most prominent members of the Grand Orient: we have appointed Brother Andrieux. He has called to his side another member of the Grand Orient, Brother Caubet, and, from this moment, the prefecture received a much more vigorous boost. more than in the past. To use secrecy, power for the police affiliation, which until then had only served to conspire, was obviously a stroke of genius.

But this essentially opportunistic maneuver has raised within the Order of keen sensitivities. Lef.. Andrieux has left the prefecture in time; but F.. Caubet stayed.

La Lanterne, issues of July 5 and 6, 1882, published articles that we reproduce as if they were pieces of evidence in a trial.

Mr. Caubet is the author of small manuals of Masonic morality in which we read excellent principles;

Freemasonry proclaims, as the foundation of law and morality, the inviolability of the human person.

"Its motto is: Liberty, equality, fraternity.

Fraternity is the conscious development and application of the relationships of life, affectionate feelings that we carry with us to love and help each other.

"Freemasonry honors and recommends work, respects the law. It upholds the law and condemns all violence.

The mason must be good, just, worthy, devoted, courageous, and exempt. free from pride and ambition, liberated from all prejudice and servitude, Ready to make any sacrifice for the triumph of right and truth.

Then, further on, Mr. Caubet asks for an explanation of a symbol:

"– What does it mean?"

394 LA. Freemasonry and the Republic

"– I would rather have my throat cut than reveal the

We will see how Mr. Gaubet interprets, for his part, these axioms of Masonic morality, ever since he became chief of police municipal.

We know how Mr. Gaubet entered the police headquarters. Mr. Andrieux and he were both members of the council of the order. Mr. Gaubet was, at that time, for reasons that were never known, vice-president. a member of the city council. He was in a precarious situation. Mr. Andrieux said to himself; – By taking him, I am doing him a favor.* I will tie him up With golden chains, he will be at my disposal. On the other hand, this The nomination will have a flattering aspect for the city council and the Ma- Nonsense.

Ge wasn't badly calculated.

We must say that Messrs. Andrieux and Gaubet, upon arriving at the pre- The police department asked for the names of the officers in charge of surveillance. They went to the lodges and ordered the surveillance to be suspended. They had still scruples.

His scruples lasted only two months. In April 1879, Mr. Gaubet began requesting reports on the affairs of the Scottish Rite. I know, and especially about the formation of the Grand Lodge of Freemasonry. fuck.

Mr. Girard then organized a veritable service. He procured, one would not He knew how to summon the lodges and chapters. He would bring them in. sometimes one agent, sometimes another, and they would say to him:

– I am told that MX., journalist, member of parliament, etc., would have presented himself sent to such and such a lodge; let us have the information immediately.

Or he would add:

– In such attire, MX.. took the floor and is said to have uttered such- those words and such. Why didn't you tell me about them?

Several agents fulfilled these roles as mason informants. niques.

Mr. Gaubet particularly recommended monitoring the It houses Perfect Silence. We will understand why. He is its venerable figure.

This is how Mr. Gaubet understands brotherhood towards his brothers and the observation of silence.

That's not all.

Yes, but only halfway; Mr. Gaubet was specifically focused on

In turn, Mr. Girard said to his agent;

– So keep an eye on Mr. Gaubet's agents at the Masonry.

It's the age-old story of the police. Every department spies on the others. It's reciprocal and mutual espionage.

Masonry at the police headquarters 395

However, the agents who monitor Masonic lodges all end up by getting to know each other. They find themselves in the same lodges, in the same circumstances, doing the same jobs. Then they have an air of fat-thousand.

Mr. Gaubet's young man took a long time to realize that* he was being watched. He initially thought it was Mr. Gaubet who was doing it. to watch over himself. Then he realized that the surveillance was coming from elsewhere. Officially, the second brigade has Freemasonry among its attributes. butions.

The young man never forgave Mr. Girard for this mistrust.

The agents in charge of masonry are sometimes quite They were embarrassed. They didn't want to arouse the suspicions of the other brothers. At Sometimes, Mr. Girard knows that such and such a reception will take place in such and such and such lodge, such and such day, before the summons boards be sent.

I cite one fact: when Glovis Hugues was affiliated with Saint-Ouen, his His name was not written on the summons. The day before, However, Mr. Girard dispatched his agents to this lodge, with orders to to provide a report of the speeches.

But the agents do not limit themselves to recording speeches. They take They also take part in discussions and votes, when they can. Sometimes naive people wonder: – Why this opposition against so-and-so person?

Look around, and you will find the policeman's brother, – the officer of Messrs. Gaubet and Girard.

I sometimes wonder what Mr. Gaubet must think of himself. even.

He didn't think anything of it. He's too congested.

That's likely.

what he should say;

– When I was in the opposition, I presented myself as one of the fiercest opponents of the police headquarters. Now, she follows the same traditions as before. I then called his actions infamy. Today, I'm the one committing them.

When I was in the opposition, I made it a principle to fight petty treachery. comments; today, I'm signing off on a large one with satisfaction, without any complaints to end small profits.

When my only title was that of council member of I was a staunch Freemason, a staunch member of the order. Today, I am betraying the Masonic Stupidity by my police.

But Mr. Gaubet didn't think all these things to himself. The food is good, cigars too; and all the principles of honesty he could have had go up in smoke.

390 Freemasonry and the Republic

0

This is how the former manager of La Morale Indépendante preaches example (1).

The f, . Caubet did not pursue the Intransigent; but our Impartiality compels us to add that the lodge La Rose du par^ silence of Paris, of which he was long venerated, felt obliged to award him a jewel of honor as a token of protest against these im calculations and as one of the most active workers of the Ma- French stupidity. The Masonic World, September In 1882, the public recounted the entire story of this family celebration. The conclusion to be drawn is that the police functions appear Freemasonry is perfectly compatible with public attendance. lodges.

Ji 7. Popular associations stemming from Freemasonry

Masonic lodges are only one part – the most complete and, it is true, the most solid – of the great sectarian army which marches to attack the Church and the Christian social order.

A considerable number of associations* are grouped around them. popular citations, which attach adherents to them without requiring a solemn assembly of them, without imposing expenses on them quite considerable, resulting from attendance at the lodges, the Order's risk assessment, the assured cover of the most delicate.

These associations are very diverse; they include all kinds of nuances, to respond to the diverse temperaments of the members.

The Intelligence League is the most important. Its goal, essentially political, is clearly proclaimed today.

"We have," said Lef.*. Macé, opening the congress session "of the league in 1881, to do, not pedagogy, but of the "If. Republican propaganda."

Its founders deserve recognition for their genuine organizational talent.*

(1) These articles have been reproduced by the Masonic Republic.

POPULAR ASSOCIATIONS ISSUED FROM FREEMASONRY 397

They leave behind a great deal of initiative and apparent autonomy. rent to the numerous local clubs they founded in the provinces, while giving impetus through the Parisian circle^ which in reality fulfills the role of a central committee.

These circles or societies currently number nearly 500 and we can estimate the number at nearly eighty thousand of their members.

The circle was initially founded with the aim of propagating the instruction primary tion. A step forward was then taken with the creation popular library societies, which constitute a kind of a permanent club, where the leaders energize the lukewarm, gather the uncertain ones through careful reading of newspapers and books members are chosen. Members scattered throughout the countryside are tasked with circulating libraries and creating a first grouping. Here is a notice published by a republican newspaper of Marseille in September 1882, which indicates how the pro-sect yields;

30 volumes will be given away free of charge every month, to lend to the fa' a thousand of their customers, to the cafe owners and hairdressers of the towns and count who will send their address to the Director of Libraries, Bert, 15, fau Montmartre district, Paris.

These methods succeed in bringing people together under the direction of the lodges. many companies, whose goal is in itself quite legitimate. League reports show us that many companies mutual aid organizations have made contact with them and have accepted political experts know with what reason the Bishop of Verdun, in a circular that we have already cited {Introduction, V), signals its efforts to seize control of meetings of all kinds, drawing classes, adult classes, choral societies, gymnasium societies tick.

Father Macé will tell us himself how a second
A layer of affiliated companies has been created:

Since 1870, he said, I felt I had to give a different character to my personal propaganda, and, abandoning the ground of political neutrality... litigious and religious on which I had based the ancients League circles, I create societies wherever I am called republican education, having by the sole fact of their title a cou*

398 Freemasonry and the Republic

their clearly determined policy* Saying this^ we do not believe to exit (our primitive program of political neutrality^ which had^ I Then, to be perfectly clear, it was a forced implication. We haven't lost anyone. in the league by proclaiming ourselves republicans (1).

Here are the first articles of the model statutes of these associations published in the Bulletin of the teaching league:

11 is formed, between all persons who adhere to the present statutes, a society under the title of Republican Society for Instruction of... This society is calling on the support of all republicans to tra< to strive, by all legal means, for the development of education. Its headquarters are located at...; its duration is unlimited. Ladies are admitted. to be part of it. The company's goal from now on is;

Article I. – To establish public libraries in the communes those that will have gathered the most members relative to their population tion; to encourage the creation of local library societies having no other link with her than that of a community of principle and elTorts; to help establish rural bookstores in the municipalities of the district; to organize public readings voice and familiar lectures, either at home or in public meetings* bliques; to draw the attention of municipalities to all the me* certain measures they could take in the interest of their schools; to install, wherever possible, trunks of the Sou des Schools.

The Republican Societies for Education quickly developed, thanks to the administrative pressure that was exerted by dressing them in it. Prefects and sub-prefects enlisted eagerly in their ranks and affiliate their subordinates.

From 1881 onwards, it will suffice to find a man there who takes the matter to heart, and if he manages to gather five or six neighbors around him, that's quite to create a society that will then grow, however little it may... a hub of activity, and will become the natural rallying point of the elements Republicans of the commune.

Another member added:

In every village there is now a group of republicans.

(1) Report of the proceedings of the Parisian Circle for (1879, p. 261, and Congress of the Vendémiaire league of (1881>

POPULAR ASSOCIATIONS ISSUED FROM FREEMASONRY 399

They cannot, under the current state of legislation, organize themselves openly. mentally to the state of permanent political associations; but they can to constitute themselves as educational societies. It will therefore be, under this title and beneath this ingenious organization, a true party organization Republican throughout the country. Therefore, what must be voted on by acclamation? the commission proposes.

Let us recall here, for the record, the work of the secular schools' fundraising efforts. which is also a means of grouping.

Regional congresses of the League of Education, a con- annual central sandstone in Paris, periodically restore to all These companies have an active impetus and are strengthening their ties. bres les liens de TalSliation.

The petition for free, secular and compulsory education toire, was also conducted in such a way as to create a kind of place permanent between the signatories (see chapter XXXII, § 1).

The direction given to them is essentially gambet- tiste. Lefr.. MaCé is an editor at Petite République French. This situation has even raised some sensitivities within the congresses of 1881-1882; but discipline The conic section won, and the league's general council is composed exclusively the henchmen of Gambetta.

Among the more or less dependent public organizations lodges, it is also necessary to point out the existence in the capital of each dismantling of a democratic republican circle, which corresponds pond with the societies of people originating from the various departments, founded in Paris for the purpose of mutual aid, but whose in Political influence cannot be denied.

This organization had been created by F.*. Gambetta: in Paris compromisers we mentioned earlier, but the provincial, the departmental circles, generally obeyed opportunistic action.

Another, more advanced group is formed by professional companies* anti-clerical paganism and societies for funerals civilians, called freethinking societies.

The Society for Democratic and Anti-Clerical Propaganda, self-ridiculed by a prefectural decree of August 19, 1880, and in imitation from which several companies of the same name were founded in the departments, aims to satisfy the sectarians

400 Freemasonry and the Republic

more ardent, to those who love public demonstrations. Here its statutes;

I. – A Society is founded in Paris, under this title: Democratic Union than anti-clerical propaganda.

II. – FIIo aims to combat the encroachments of the clergy-Cmism, by fighting superstition, ignorance, fanaticism, – and to propagate the doctrines of free thought, that is to say, to bring about triumph to uphold reason, science, and freedom of conscience.

III. – It will pursue its goal by the following means:

1" To institute large school festivals, conferences and patriotic courses;

2® Organize civil ceremonies to mark major events of life;

3® Compile a periodic catalogue of republican works and anti-clerical works published by members of the Society; to propagate the works books of reading, music and drawing approved by the Society;

4® Compile statistics on the general movement of freethinking; to gather and publish all laws contrary to clerical claims; to provide for the members of the congregation, who have ceased to have faith, but whose The station is spotless, honorable ways to enter life civil;

8® Ensure the execution of the last wishes of the dying in what concerns their civil funeral.

The main organizer of this society is Brother Victor Poupin, who is also one of the main characters of the moth-eaten:

President :

Mr. Victor Schœlcher, Senator.

Vice-Prudents:

Mr. Paul Bert, Member of Parliament.

Wl. Gagneur, Member of Parliament.

H. de Lacretelle, Member of Parliament.

Â.-S. Morin, municipal councilor of Paris.

Secretary General:

Mr. Victor Poupin, publicist.

LBS POPULAR ASSOCIATIONS ISSUES DE LA MAÇONNERIE 401

Secretaries:

MM. N. Blanpain, publicist.

J. Chennevière, publicist.

E, Figurey, publicist.

J. Hergomard, publicist.

Léon Richer, publicist.

E. Thiaudière, publicist.

Treasurer Administrator:

MA Ginquatre, publisher.

Librarian-Archivist:

Mr. Georges Bonnot, managing director of the Anti-Semitism Week clerical.

Members:

Mr. Allain-Targé, Member of Parliament.

Barodet, Member of Parliament.

E. Bonnemère, publicist.

Gantagrel, Member of Parliament.

Germain Gasse, Member of Parliament.

Gh.-L. Ghassin, publicist.

Delattre, Paris city councillor.

Outdated, publicist.

Deschanel, Member of Parliament.

Eugen Farcy, Member of Parliament.

Gh. Fauvety, publicist*

Floquet, Member of Parliament.

Ernest Hamel, Paris city councillor.

Jobbé-Duval, municipal councilor of Paris.

Leaving, Member of Parliament.

Édouard Lockroy, Member of Parliament.

Martin Nadaud, Member of Parliament.

A. Naquet, Member of Parliament.

E. de Pompery, publicist.

B. Raspail, Member of Parliament.

Tony Révillon, publicist.

Jules Roche, Paris city councillor.

HONORARY COMMITTEE

VICTOR HUO – GARIBALDI – LOUIS BLANC

Mr. Emmanuel Arago, Senator. – Mr. Baudot, Mayor of the 1st arrondissement Department of Paris. – Caslagnary, State Councillor. – Glémenceau,

III

Freemasonry and the REPURMOU deputies. – Gambetta, president of the Gliambro of deputies. – Lau-Rent Pichat, senator. – Jean Macé, publicist, founder of the League of Education. – Madier de Montjau, deputy. – Marmottan, de Pute. – Ménard-Dorian, deputy. – Ménicri, deputy. – E. Millaud, Senator. – Pelletan, Vice-President of the Senate. – Peyrat, Senator. – Denis Poulot, mayor of the 11th arrondissement of Paris. – Spuller, de puté. – ialandier, deputy. ■ Thulié, president of the Municipal Council Paris. – Thurel, senator. – Tolaih, senator. – Auguste Vacquerie, editor-in-chief of the appeal. – Emmanuel Vauchez, segeneral crétaire of the Parisian Circle of the League of Education (\).

All members of these committees belong to the lodges, to Republican party. The main figures are the leaders of the municipal council and chambers.

The Society for Clerical Propaganda must therefore be considered Derée as a direct offshoot of Freemasonry. Moreover, we have cited enough documents establishing the propaganda made by the lodges for civil funerals.

Note, in the statutes of this company, the paragraph relating to propaganda through drawings and engravings. It is up to her that we owe this overflow of illustrated newspapers and images that we wither the name of pornographic. In a pe-
This book was published under the auspices of the society, by F.*. Yves Guyol declared that modesty was merely a prejudice and a place of... mun (2).

This society organized two inter- congresses in 1881 and 1882.
national freethinkers, which were held in Paris in the ho-such as the Grand Orient, on rue Cadet, that's where they arranged to meet.
all socialist and communard organizations, the circles social studies, atheist groups, the League for Women's Rights My, the English free thinkers. Cries of savage hatred against the Church and against all religions. Com-

(t) The same characters publish a weekly newspaper, the Separation of Church and State, organ of a league of the same name, whose president is the f.-. Charles Boysset. This journal maintains a very moderate tone and republishes the lett by Paul-Louis Courier, winegrower. Freemasonry is multiplying its organizations" in different tones, so as to better capture all minds, according to their temperament, their prejudices, or the necessities of their position. And there is always Fools who fall for these labels without seeing the heart of the matter.

(2) The "Common Places", by Yves Guyot, in-24, 1874.

POPULAR ASSOCIATIONS ISSUED FROM FREEMASONRY 403

In response to current events, demands were made for the confiscation of the assets of religious congregations and the separation of Churches and State the State. A Protestant pastor, Mr. Hirsch, having tried to get involved To make himself heard, he was told that Protestantism was also Catholicism is dangerous! In short, these congresses were the repetition of the student congress of Liège in 1865 (see book II, Chapter XIV, § 3). The eccentricities of its speakers should not to obscure its significance. All these obscure names represent tent the general staff of the next Commune. It is thus preparing itself in advance with the complicity of the government and high-ranking officials Masonic authorities. These congresses are indeed held in the time the Grand Orient, and many delegates there ostentatiously 11. It is also necessary to note the pre-presence of a good number of Paris city councillors (1).

Anti-clerical propaganda societies are intended for noisy demonstrations. Solidarity societies remain at On the contrary, they are essentially secret and have much more importance. tance. They are called Societies of Freethought.

Here are the statutes of one of them:

Article 1. – It is formed in Montpellier, between the citizens who adhere to these statutes, an association which will bear the title of:

"Free Thought."

Article 2. – Its purpose is to combat the invasions of the clericalism, by combating superstition, ignorance, and fanaticism, and to propagate the doctrines of free thought, that is to say, to do to triumph of reason, science and freedom of conscience.

Article 3 – She undertakes to arrange, at her own expense, a purely religious funeral. civilian and uniform items for members.

Article 4. – The first condition of admission is for the member to formally declare his irrevocable wish to be buried civilly.

Article 5. – Voluntary contribution; a donation proportionate to one's means.

Article 6. – An administrative committee receives the members...

participates in general associations without paying the annual membership fee.

Art. 9. – The administrative commission: is composed of thirteen honorary members by absolute majority. It is composed as follows: a (!) See Le Français, April 1, 1882.

'i04 Freemasonry and the Republic president, two vice-presidents, a secretary, a treasurer, three mayors ceremonial officers and five assessors.

She has executive power and takes action without the approval of the general assembly.

The company holds a general meeting every six months; it is reported each time on the work and the situation of the Society...

Article 14. – General meetings shall be held when the commission The administrative body will deem it necessary...

Article 17. – The list of members of the society will never be published nor communicated to the public in any way whatsoever.

Article 18. – Political and religious discussions are prohibited. in meetings.

Article 19. – In the event of serious illness, the administrative commission, informed as soon as possible, will then take all legal action to effect to protect the dying or deceased member from the companies of the greed or religious fanaticism...

Article 21. – In the event of death, members must attend the funeral. relment.

Article 22. – Throughout the ceremony, each member will be core of an immortal.

Art. 23. – The body lowered into the tomb, there is a speech. Once the speech is over, each member will place their immortelle flower on the fall.

The society's emblem is the Masonic triangle, with these Words: "Free thought, Equality, Fraternity." At the top of the booklet is the formula: "Liberty, Equality, Fraternity." We are therefore within the very heart of the Masonic-republican institution.

"a matter between each man and the divinity" (Bayle); and: "When Since death has equalized fortunes, a funeral home should not not to differentiate them" (Montesquieu). We recognize in the first The first formulation of the ideas put forward by Mr. Gambetta in the manifesto speech which we have quoted (book III, chapter XV, § 4). The model for the freethinker's will is thus designed:

This is my te. "tament:

I am a free thinker. I desire and want to be buried in a civil ceremony. I entrust to my family and friends the task of carrying out my su-first will.

Done and signed by my own hand.

POPULAR ASSOCIATIONS ISSUED FROM FREEMASONRY 405

The measures to be taken to remove the priest are also outlined. at the last moment and to disinherit, as far as the law allows puts, the heirs who do not comply with the will of the deceased.

These companies also seek to contract only civil marriages; only they leave, in this respect, a more great freedom to their members so as not to cause too much difficulties in getting married. But this restraint is only temporary, and already in some localities the same pressure is being exerted to prohibit affiliates from religious marriage (1).

A mayor of Paris, the f.'. Denis Poulot, the author of Sublimet or Vouvrier as he is, has, as we have seen, tried to achieve the recommendations made in this regard by the lodges, in organi-establishing a special society to promote the celebration of marriages purely secular matters (book III, chapter XVII, § 3).

Mr. Coquille, citing the statutes of the free pen companies see, claims that they are very widespread in cities and especially in the villages (2). The investigation we have been pursuing since Several years allow us to affirm that this is the case.

These companies, in certain departments, consist of... vriers, and are indistinguishable from socialist organizations. The So-The black society of the Saône-et-Loire coal basin is an example of this. ple. (Book III, Chapter XXXVII, § 2). Elsewhere, they have a couple their exclusively political: in countries where the manufacturing industry The billing system is established in small factories or consists of... dispersed third parties whose products are centralized by manufacturers often these manufacturers, their foremen, their agents, are the propagators of these societies. The unfortunate ones who resist their Having signed the required written commitment, they are expelled and then have all the world's struggles to find work. Everywhere they encounter invisible enemies.

We have conclusive proof that these companies are run by Masonic lodges: their leading members are free-masons and thus attach them to a center, without the mechanism that this organization is known. The secret of the Order covers them. true. To attract workers and small shopkeepers, one

(1) See an article in this sense in the Masonic Bulletin (the Grand Lodge) Symbolism of April 1882.

(2) The .Vonde of November 4, 1881.

'106 THE FANC-MASONRY AND THE REPUBLIC

dazzled their eyes with the power of the lodges "of this society a society which, it is said, rewards three times the one who has done wrong "affaires."

The fact is that where the municipalities are Republican, the Only affiliated workers can obtain direct or managed orders even participate in auctions: artisans and merchants, who resist the obsessions of the leaders, encounter in their profession of hidden hostilities, under which they succumb Sometimes. That is the essential characteristic of these kinds of second-tier lodges. order: their organization has varied since the society of the solidaires, with a written and signed commitment; up to and including simple affiliation with a popular library of the League of Education.

Add to that the influence of the lodges on the journeymen's associations and the mutual aid societies, and you'll get an idea of the intensity of the action carried out by Freemasonry, in favor of the Republic that and for the benefit of a radical revolution, whose program will always getting worse.

This is a sign of the times that would frighten certain characters involved in Freemasonry, if we judge by this correspondence Dance from London addressed to the Chain of Union (February 1882):

Some of the speeches you inserted into the Channel unions clearly illustrate the progressive state of Freemasonry and its influence in the political world. The Masonic world is here in a state lukewarmness; he takes no initiative, and his leaders do not meet. It's not felt here like in France to prepare for political struggles and w-cials.

In London, politicians are beginning to worry about this latent form of the disease.

society. What will be the result? The year that has just begun will tell.

S 8. – Supplement to the list of politicians

ENGAGED IN MASONRY

We supplement the list with a number of additional details. that we published (volume 11, page M0 and following) in the fourth edition of Father Deschamps' work (1).

(1) We have Tait aucuno nilditiuii i\ ecKo Hsto in the fifth and sixth editions of the first two volumes of the work "Secret Societies" and "Your Society".

SUPPLEMENT TO THE LIST OF POLITICAL MEN 407

Three preliminary observations must be made;

1® Some repetitions will be found when comparing these gentle lists; for we have brought here again, among the members Freemasons from the chambers, a number of advisors municipal officials in Paris or journalists who have become deputies tés since 1880.

2® These lists are very incomplete: we have, in fact, made it a rule to only grant the status of Freemason to those who sonnages described as such by Masonic newspapers. Although we knew, through personal information We are very certain that several members of parliament were affiliated with lodges, we hav We did not feel it necessary to use it in this publication.

3® Finally, the distinction between active members and members passive bres (see Introduction, V), allows Masonic journals that certain ambiguities.

So, is Mr. Grévy a Freemason?

Masonic newspapers have denied it several times. However \ei Chain of Union of 1881, p. 220, published an account from a session held on June 6, 1881, by the lodge La Constante Amitié from Arras, in which we read the following:

Brother Dujat addressed the health issue in very noble and dignified terms. of the President of the Republic; an officer of the garrison, on behalf of the The officers present at the banquet (and there were many) asked that The toast was sent to our 111.*. F.'. Grévy. This proposal was accepted.

Scottish newspaper, no. 1 of March 1881, reproduced without any comment an article from the Bivista délia Massoneria italiana, in which is cited, among the illustrious Freemasons of France, the (f.*. Grévy and Léon Say.

The explanation for these contradictory allegations lies in the distinction that we made in the Introduction and that we must remember here.

Only those who are active or regular Freemasons are affiliated with a particular lodge and the annual membership fee. But all those who have been accepted, even if only at the apprentice level, They are nonetheless Freemasons, and everywhere they bear this characteristic with them, are in possession of the signs and touches, and are finally bound by their oaths to obedience and obligations that The Order claims to impose its will on its followers.

408 Freemasonry and the Republic

However, many political figures, who are affiliated and in They are incompetent, do not like to frequent lodges, especially in pre- the presence of their increasing encroachment by social elements quite inferior. Others simply seek to dis- think about the payment of contributions. Which confirms in us This assessment is that the Chain of Union^ in its number in December 1882, he launched into vehement recriminations against the politicians, who, after having used the lodges, abandoned them data and no longer contribute to their expenses. They no longer use it. Unfortunately, the projects of the sects are no less active.

Freemason senators and deputies (1).

F.*. Achard, deputy of the Gironde.

F.*. Buyat, deputy of the I- sere.

F.*. Cadet, deputy of the Seine.

F. Cazauvielh, Member of Parliament the 5th constituency of Bor- waters.

F.'. Cavalié, deputy of the F.*. Charton, senator of the Yonne.

F.*. Cheneau, deputy of the
Dear.

F.*. Courmeaux, deputy of the Marne.

Initiated in 1880 in the L.*. the Rose of Perfect Silence, O.
from Paris, Chamber of Union,
1882, p. 334,

Mentioned as a mason by the Masonic Republic of the 8
October 1882.

Mentioned as a mason by the Masonic Republic of the 14th
May 1882.

Initiated in May 1882 at the L.*.
The Englishwoman, No. 204, Bordeaux, Chain of Union, August 1882.

Honorary speaker of the L.*. the Perfect Friendship, Gold. *. of Albi.

Freemason since 1848, Le Monde
Masonic January-February
1881.

Admitted on November 22, 1881 to to be initiated into the L.. the Disciples of Progress, Or., of Paris.

In 18GG, member of the L.*.
Scottish, n° 133, Gold. • .of Paris.

(1) We consider it our duty to note once again that we have put to contribute the information gathered with the greatest care in the newspaper French^ by Mr. Eiiiiuiunuei Cosquin.

F.*. Delattre, deputy of the Seine.

F.'. Deniau, deputy of Loir-et-Cher.

F.*. Desmons, deputy of Gard.

F.*. Dreyfus, deputy of Seine-et-Oise.

F.*. Duvivier, deputy of the 1st constituency of Rouen.

F.*. Joseph Fabre, Member of Parliament from Aveyron.

F. *. Paul Féau, deputy of Seine-et-Oise.

F.'. Anatole de la Forge,
Member of Parliament for Paris.

F.*. Fourcand, senator of the Gironde.

F.*. Gerville-Réache, de» whore from Guadeloupe.

F.*. Goblet, deputy of the Somme, former Minister of the Interior laughing.

F.-. Adr. Hébrard, sena-author, director of Le Temps.

F.*. Hurard, deputy of the Martinique.

Mentioned as a mason by the
Chain of Union, 1871, p. 151.

Member of the Council of the Order of Grand Orient, Protestant pastor

Figure as a mason at the "festival"
solstice » beyond L.'. the Friends of Humanity, Gold.*, of Meu-
lan, March 12, 1882.

Chain of Union, August 1882, p.
251.

Mentioned as a mason by the
Chain of Union, 1882, p.
346.

Mentioned as a mason by the
Chain of Union, 1881, p.
370.

Raise a toast to the "solsti festival" ciale » celebrated on May 13 1882, by the L.. Union and Perseverance, O., from Paris.

Honorary Venerable of the L.*.
English, Masonic world,
December 1880.

He took part, towards the end of 1881,
to a discussion in the L.*.
The True Brothers united inseparable-- Rabbits and the Philanthropists gathered. Gold. •. of Paris.

Mentioned as a mason in the minutes of the meeting of the council of the Order of the G.*.-
Or,*. of February 13, 1882.

Member of the L. •. la Persévê-> Rante Amitié, in 1863.

Mentioned as a mason by the
Chain of Union, 1881, p. 370.

Loir-et-Cher.

F. Langlois, Member of Parliament
Seine-et-Oise.

F.', de Lanessan, deputy of the Seine.

F, *. Girodet, deputy of the Loire.

F.-. Lagrange, deputy of Rhône.

F.'. Clovis Hugues, Member of Parliament
Bouches-du-Rhône.

F.*. Albert Ferry, Member of Parliament
Vosges.

F.*, Doctor Marmottan,
Member of Parliament for the Seine.

F.. Ménard Dorian, Member of Parliament from Hérault.

F.*. Laurent Pichat, senator
author.

F. Raynal, deputy of the (Jrironde, former Minister of Transport) public assets.

F.'. Remoiville, deputy of Seine-et-Oise.

F.'. Tony Révillon, dewhore of the Seine.

Member of the L. •. the Perseverers Scottish Goldsmiths*, of Tours, Masonic Republic^ sep-
September 1882.

He was initiated on December 17th
1882, at the L. •. the Triangle Sacred in Corbeil, the Frenchman of December 25, 1882.

Veneration of the Liberty of conscience, Or. *. of Paris, in May 1881.

Received into Freemasonry at the L.*. the A-Paris, November 27th
bre 1882.

Venerable of the L.;. Candor from Lyon in 1881.

Venerable of the L.*. VÉgalité Vosges woman in St-Dié, in 1881.

Chain of Union, January 1883.

Mentioned as a mason by the Masonic Republic of April 30, 1882.

Masonic world of January-February 1881, p. 381.

Member of the English L.*,
Or.*, from P*ordeaux; pronounces, on April 13, 1882* a speech-lion at the L.*. of Lormont, near Bordeaux.

He was initiated on December 17th
1882, at the L.. the Triangle sacred. Gold., from Corbeil; the FrenchdvL^h December 1882.

He gave a lecture, in his capacity of mason, at the "solsti- festival tiale » of the L-* the Li-Hive bre, Or.*, of Paris, October 27
October 1881.

SUPPLEMENT TO THE LIST

P.\ Jules Roche, deputy of Var, former member of the Con-
Paris municipal council.

F.*. Oscar Rougé, Member of Parliament from the Aude.

Gironde.

F.*. Ténôt, senator of the Hautes-Pyrénées.

F. Tisserand, deputy of Puy-de-Dôme.

F.*. Rouard-Triolle, Member of Parliament of the 2nd constituency of Dieppe.

F.*. Verraond, deputy of Seine-et-Oise.

POLITICIANS 411

Member of the L. *. Friends of Tolerance, Gold, of Paris.

Mentioned as a mason, by the
Chain of Union, 1881, p.
151.

Member of several lodges of Bordeaux, Masonic World that, December 1881, p. 354
and 358.

Member of the L.*. the Renaissance session.

Mentioned as a mason by the
Chain of Union, 1881, p.
370.

Chain of Union, August 1882, p.
251.

Figure as a mason at the "crack.
solstice» beyond L.'. the Friends
of Humanity, Gold.*, of Meu-
lan, March 12, 1882.

F.'. Vacherie, captain
Chief of Staff, Chief of Staff of F.*. Brisson, president of the Chamber of Deputies.

F.*, Colonel Miquel deRiu, commander of the armed forces of the Chamber of Deputies

F.*. Marmonier, chief ad joint office of the president of the Chamber.

Initiated on April 25, 1882, into the L.*. the Disciples of Progress,
Gold.', from Paris.

La Lanterne assures that the dom interest rates obtained from the Tricannonballs will be paid to the works Masonic practices; cited by the French, November 25
1880.

Chain of Union, January 1883,
p. 25.

412

FsANC-HACONKEAIE AND THE REPUBLIC
•*

Council of State.

F.*. Courcelle-Seneuil, con« Masonic World of December
State seiller. 1880, p. 342.

Paris City Council.

F.. Lover, member from the Paris City Council, former member of the Commune

F.'. Boué, municipal councillor cipal.

F.-. Camille Dreyfus, con*
municipal councilor, former sub-his, at the Ministry of Finance.

F.*. Desmoulins, advisor municipal, in the district of Spruce trees.

F. •. Cernesson.

F.*. Martin (Georges).

F.*. Measurer.

F.*. Rousselle (Ernest).

F.—. Neighbor.

F.'. Songcon.

Masonic World and December
1881, p. 373.

Member of the pro-committee pagan of the Association of Masonic foresight.
Member of the Council of the Order of Grand Orient.

Done on July 26, 1882, a conference to L.*. VINDépendence y on the question of rents.

Member of the lodge Les Vrais. of the peace of Or.', of Paris.

Masonic Bulletin of the Grand Symbolic Lodge^
1880, p. 114.

Vôn.'. from there. L.*. Justice^
Gold.*, from Paris

Venerable* of the Lodge VEnseignement mutual^ Or.', of Paris.

He gave a lecture, in his capacity of a mason, in a "uniform of Mac. *. white » given by tuelj on November 24, 1881.

Mentioned, as a mason, by the Masonic Republic of
May 14, 1882

SUPPLEMENT TO THE LIST OF POLITICAL MEN 413

F.'. Louis Combes, cou- Masonic World, January municipal seiller, editor 1881, p. 444.
of the French Republic.

F. Calvinhiac, elected in the Masonic Republic, January 1880 member of the council - 1882.
National of Paris.

F.*. Alphand, Director. Newly a member, according to the works by the city of Chain of Union from January-

Paris. February 1882.

F. . Canis, assistant to the Venerable Master of the His Mon Lodge re du 3 arrondissement. thyon .

P.*. Trébois, mayor of Le- Venerable of the Lodge les Tra-Vallois-Perret (Seine). Vallemont, East of Levallois-

Perret.

F.*. Denis Poulot, mayor in the 11th arrondissement of Paris.

F.*. Leroy, member of the Worshipful Master of the VUnion lodge St-Denis philanthropic municipal council, in St-Denis.
(Seine).

F. Ferdeuil, lawyer to the Venerable of the lodge Les Frères court, former president of the Universal Congress, in Paris, prefecture seat.

P. Richel (Clément-Pélix), Worshipful Master of the VUnion Lodge vicc-présidentdelaiSoc/^t^<fsr Fraternelle, Paris.

Seine rescuers, presi-^ tooth of the French Society.

P. *. Koechlin - Schwartz, president of the Society for the spread of cremation.

Administration, General Councils, Councils borough.

P.'. Ardisson, sub-prefect, received as a Freemason at the lodge on to Chftlon. Progress and Equality, from Ohâ-lon-sur-Saône, December 26

bre 1880. Masonic Mrs.
January-February 1881.

414

The Prang-maconrib and the republic

F. •. Lesnier, member of the General Council of the Gi^ round.

F.'. Dubiez, general councillor
General of Saône-et-Loire.

F.-T. Bradfer, mayor of Bar-le-Duc, member of the Regeneration"

F.*. Martin, mayor of Mâ-con, general councillor of Saone-et-Loire.

F.'. Bouvagnet, sub-president fet.

F.*. Ali-Margarot, mayor
from Nîmes.

F.'. Broclier, mayor of Marseille.

F. Anthony Martinet, segeneral secretary of the prefecture Indre-et-Loire region.

F.'. Gros, sub-prefect of Montbéliard.

P. Moreau, General Councillor

F. Guimbaud, deputy to mayor of Poitiers.

F. ' . Pulley, member of the con-general seil of the Somme, appointed in 1882 as advisor to the court of Douai.

P.*. Fresne, prefect of Hérault.

Chain ^uniotij April 1882.

Chain of Union of 1882, page 292.

Chain of Union, July 1882
p. 205.

Venerable Master of the Arts Lodge gathered in Mâcon in 1880, Masonic world of Jan
February 10, 1881.

Masonic Republic, octo
bre 1882.

Member of the Council of the Order of Grand Orient.

Knight Kadoch, the Wise One chapter Perfect Sincerity and meeting of the chosen Friends and assembled, venerable master of the lodge Truth and Reform, in Marseille.

Admitted in November 1881 to the houses the Disciples of Progress.
The Frenchman of November 25th 1881.

Masonic world, August 1881,

Chain of Union, 1881, p. 175.

Venerable Master of the Lodge Les Amis gathered, from Poitiers.

Grand Orient.

Received into Freemasonry on December 26th in 1880, at the lodge Le Progrès and the equality of Gbâlon-sur-Saône, Masonic World, January-February 1881.

SUPPLEMENT TO THE LIST OF POLITICIANS 415

P.-. Péan de Serres, con-district seiller of Pantin, Seine-et-Oise.

F.*, de Girardin, prefect of Vendée.

F. Gravier, Prefect of Calvados Vados, in 1880, treasurer general general.

F.*. Hendlé, Prefect of the Seine-Inférieure.

F.*. Blache, lawyer, in Toulon, member of the council of ar-roundabout.

F.*. Cordier, deputy to the mayor of Bône.

F.*. Ducarre, former deputy from the Rhône to the National Assembly national in 1871.

F. Siguier, President of the general council of Guyana.

F.*. Charvein, director of the interior, in French Guiana.

r.*. Cuinier, governor from Reunion Island.

F. Clément Jobert, pro-professor at the Faculty of Sciences

Dijon.

F.*. Sever, battle commander the genius, aide-de-camp of the General Billot, Minister of the war.

F. Warin, captain of dragons, aide-de-camp to the general General Faidherbe, Grand Chancellor cellar of the Legion of Honour.

F.*. Giraud, mayor of Pont-charra.

Member of the Bar Council of the Grand Orient.

Masonic world, February-March 1881.

Chain of Union, September 1880,

Member of the L. •. the School mu-- tuelle in 1867.

Chain of Union, 1882.

Union chain, December 1882
p. 434.

Venerable of the L.*. the Perfect
The silence of Lyon in 1866.

Chain of union^ 1882, p. 32.

Chain of Union, 1882, p. 32.

Chain of Union, 1882, p. 416.

Venerable of the L. •. Solidarity and Dijon Progress; Chain
d*union, January 1883.

Venerable of the L.*. the Disci-Paths of progress; Chain of U'- nion, January 1883.

Chain of Union, January 1883,

Venerable of the L. *. Us Friends gatherings of Gremhle'iRépublique Masonic, October 1881.

[AU] The Freemason and the Republic

F. *. Belat, mayor of Va- Venerable delaL.\ Humility lence, vice-president of the Con- of Drôme in Valence, general seil of the Drôme.

F. *. Edmond Gharain, mayor from Tulle.

F. . Victor Farot, 1@“ ad-
joint in Tulle.

F. *. Jules Vauzange, 2nd ad-
joint in Tulle.

P.-. Delavelle, mayor of \ Members of the L. *. Sincerity^
Besançon, January 1881. / Perfect and Constant Union

F. . Fates, J fi • i (Friendship reunited feL^e&dLviqoik^XQ

F. *. Clerget, (^) French of January 30, 1881.

F. *. Delorme, mayor of St- Venerable of the L. *. the Frater-Sorlin (Ain). Religious community^ at St-Sorlin.

F. *. Gadaud, member of the Venerable of the L. *. the Friends Dordogne General Council - Persevering and Star of Vé” gne. rone united.

F. *. Lagache St-Jest, Venerable of the L. *. Friendship^ former sub-prefect, member of the in Boulogne-sur-Mer.
Pas-de-Calais General Council Calais.

F. *. Charpentier, mayor of Venerable of the L. *. the Demo^ Tours. Philists; Masonic Republic than of February 4, 1883.

P. *. .Joseph Jean, former Venerable of the L. *. fa Par/iw'tô sub-prefect, member of the Alby Friendship Council.

municipal council of Alby.

F. *. Gerand, General Councillor - Venerable of the L. . Star of F.. Biot, mayor of Fé- Venerable beyond L.*. 7a Triple Camp. Unit, in Fécamp.

F.'. Constant Menen, mem- Venerable of the L.*. the Demobre of the Municipal Council of Philières, in Tours, in 1881.
Tours.

F.*. Meynul, Venerable Substitute Judge of the Law of Justice, at the court, deputy mayor in Marmande.

from Marmande.

F.*. Le Cherbonnier, Venerable Mayor of the L. *. fa Gauloise, dTssoudun. to Issoudun.

Chai7ie d'union, April 1881.

SUPPLEMENT TO THE LIST OF POLITICIANS 417

F. *. Motlieu, advisor municipal of La Roche-sur-Yon.

F.*. Emile Adam, deputy to the mayor of Nancy.

F.*. Hippolyte Coste, pre-
President of the Chamber of Commerce Castres market.

F. Georges Level, Chief disputes concerning railways of the state's iron.

P.'. André Rousselle, con-seiller général de Seine-et-Oise.

F.*. Anatole Robert, con-district councilor in An-Gers.

F.*. Casimir Jugy, advisor
1st district of Saôneet-Loire.

from Oran.

F.-Lecertisseur, deputy to mayor of St-Quentin.

F.. Ambroise Bully, mem br of the General Council of Eure.

F.*; Antoine Roche, con-municipal councilor of Roche-strong, district councilor Charente-Inférieure laugher.

F.'. Lamothe, notary, con-district seiller of Gers.

F.*. Christian Nano, sub-Prefect of Vouziers.

Venerable of the L.. the Frater Vendée nation^ in La Rocheon-Yon.

Venerable of the L.'. Sl-Jean^ of Jerusalem of Nancy.

Venerable of the L.'. the Hearts united of Castres.

Venerable of the L. *. Jerusalem Egyptian valleys^ at Pa-laugh.

Chain of union, 1880, p. 433.

Venerable of the L.*. Work and Perfection.

Venerable of the L.-. the Frater-progressive.

Venerable of the L.*. VUnion African, in Cran.

Venerable of the L.*. Justice and Truth, Gold.'. of St-Quentin.

Progress, in Pacy-sur-Eure.

Venerable of the L.*. Accord Perfect, in Rochefort.

Venerable of the L.*. VAuguste
Friendship, from Condom, in 1881.

Initiated on December 13, 1881, into the L.*. the Disciples of Progress, from Paris; French of January 11 vier 1882.

neither

27

418 FREEMASONRY AND THE REPUBLIC

F.*. Chautau, Alfilié's advisor in December 1881 at the Vaucluse Prefecture. L.\lcs True Friends United h

Avignon; French, January 11
vier 1882.

F.. Malens, former deputy, Venerable of goodness of L..
first president of the Court of Humanity of the Drôme From Grenoble. Valence.

Press and education.

F.*. Rémond, Vice-President tooth of the Philosophical Association^ technical,

F.*. Marcel Chariot, pro-professor, attached to the ministry of public education.

F.'. Emile Duter, professor sister at St-Louis high school, teacher lectures at the Sorbonne.

F.*. Bécourt, professor at Turgot school.

F.*. Albin, editor in head of the Gleaner of St-Quentin.

F.*. Titard, editor of the Radical,

F.*. Lallemand, editor
chief of VAvenir de la Vienna.

F. . Joanne-Madeleine, d
actor of the Constitution.
(Lot-et-Garonne).

F.*. Jobert, professor at the Faculty of Sciences of Dijon.

F.*. Bone de Villiers, reactor of the Republican Union caine de VEurC) in Evreux.

Venerable of the L.\ la Merciful Friendship, Chain of Union 1882,
p. 57.

Rejected the L.*. Friendship, the IG
October 1881; French of the 25th
November 1881.

He gave a lecture on October 21st.
born in 1881, at the L.*. the Temple Friends of French Honor çais; V. le Français du 25 no-
November 1881.

Chain of Union, 1882, p. 93.

Masonic Bulletin, December
1882, p. 264.

Speaker of the L.'. the Friends re-nise of Poitiers, Union of the 21st January 1883.

Masonic Republic of de-
December 1881.

February 1881.

The Masonic World of 1875,
p. 384.

SUPPLEMENT TO THE LIST OF POLITICIANS 419

P.*. Joseph Remacli, door-pen of the f.-. Gambetta.

P. . Alfred Rambaud, an-former chief of staff of f..
Jules Ferry.

F.*. Gaëtan Simon, professor sister at the Lycée de Lons-le-Saltmaker.

F. Courdavaux, professor at the Faculty of Arts of Douai.

F.*. G. Bonjean.

F.-. Bourceret, editor from the Dauphiné Awakening,

F.*. Félix Rocquain, director of the newspaper VÉcole, in 1868.

F.'. Bokos, editor of the Mostakel.

P. Edmond Gardien, director of Independent of Haute-Saône^ in Lons-le-Saltmaker.

F.*. Laguerre, lawyer at the Court of Paris.

P.*. Pontainas, lawyer at the Court of Paris.

Made in 1881, according to the World
Masonic conference to his brothers of the L.. the Good Faith, Gold., of St-Germain.

Delegate of L.. the Clement Friendship, Gold., from Paris, to the "Solstice festival" celebrated, |the June 18, 1881, by Their Majesties*.
Sincerity, Perfect Union and Constant Friendship united,
Gold.*, from Besançon.

Venerable delaL.*. the Prudent Friendship in Lons-le-Saulnier.

Chain of Union, 1880, p. 199.

Held a lecture at the Grand-Orient, November 1881.

Masonic Republic of the 8th century
December 1882.

Initiated on July 6, 1881> to the L.*.
Jerusalem of the Valleys, Egypt Parisian girls; Bulletin maconic of the Grand Lodge,
1881, p. 134.

The Masonic World, December
bre 1882-

Done on November 6, 1882, a conference on the al-case of Monlceau-les-Mines at L.*.
Human Rights
Paris.

Venerable of the L.*. Union and Perseverance of Paris.

420 Freemasonry and the Republic

F.*. LéonRicher, director Chaîne dhuxion^ 1881, p. 195.
from the journal Women's Rights.

F.*.Notelle. Masonic World^ December

1880, p. 842

F.*. d'Abzac, author of The Masonic World, December
Social question. 1880, p. 342.

CHAPTER TWENTY-THIRD

THE FRANG-MAGONNERIE AND PUBLIC EDUCATION

§ 1. – The main goal to be achieved

"Whoever controls the schools controls everything," said Brother Macé at the congress. of the League of Education in 1882, by appropriating the word famous by Pascal. For what future does Freemasonry, served This is true of all sects, and of socialist organizations as well. Although by the highest followers, does she therefore want to have our en-fans?

These are the resolutions adopted at a very secret convent, held on June 11, 1879.

To de-Christianize France by all means, but especially by strangling Catholicism little by little, each year through new laws velles against the clergy; finally achieving the closure of the churches...

In eight years, thanks to secular education without God, we will have a generation. an atheist generation. We will then create an army and launch it against Europe. We will be helped by all the brothers and friends of the countries that this army will inv mée (1).

(1) Mgr Fava, U Secret de la Frane-maçonnerie (Paris, 1882, p. 121.

On this matter, see the note placed at the end of chapter XIV of book II, volume U,

570 –

422 LA. Franc-Jiaçonnurie and public education

The blue lodges, the Maroon community brought into the open, they speak no less clearly.

In October 1882, a school complex was inaugurated in Ivry near Paris. Among the official assistants, there was "a great number of representatives from Masonic lodges." One of them? Mr. C. Dreyfus, delivered a speech in which one must address these serious words:

Freemasonry is the school where men are formed, like the house
The place where we are is the school where children are educated.

It is Freemasonry that prepares the solutions that democracy will make triumph. It is up to her to close the nineteenth century, in crowning the work of the Revolution. Just like our glorious ancestors of 1789 enshrined the civil equality of men before the law, of just as our predecessors in 1818 achieved political equality of the ci-toyens before the vote of universal suffrage, likewise Freemasonry must to prepare, for the end of the nineteenth century, social equality, which would restore will be the balance of economic forces and restore unity and con-a thread running through our deeply divided society.

Freemasonry is the school from which those who founded the order emerged.
public and liberty: Voltaire and Lakanal, this grandfather of teaching primary education in France, and Danton and Littré, all those who, from Their efforts, their blood and their lives, prepared the modern world.
all have passed through Freemasonry (1).

Lakanal and Danton, the heroes of 1793, that's the time to which Freemasonry is working to bring us back! They themselves say so.

§2. – Freemasonry and the laws of the brethren.* . Ferry and

Paul Bert

An insidious confession escaped the notice of Jean Macé at the congress of the League (Information in 1882:

The league had launched, before Mr. Jules Ferry, into circulation, the Three words: obligation, free of charge, secularism – she had prepared the ground.

While public opinion ultimately prevailed, a part of it comes down to... assuredly to those who stimulated her, haïceléb, whipped her, pass me the word, until the day of victory.

(1) Cited in Le Monde, from October 4, 1882.

LA. Freemasonry and the Ferry and Paul Bert Laws 423

The main way to stimulate public opinion

paux, to whom the League's correspondents presented him as a necessary republican demonstration in the interest of the party. A multitude of ignorant people were thus trained to press the advance of laws actually contrary to their ideas. This petition—the process had begun in 1872, under the government of Mr. Thiers; interrupted first by May 24, a second once by May 16, it was vigorously taken up again in 1879. The Parisian branch of the League has published the membership lists for its petition, so as to create a public commitment from the signatories and to link them to his cause by this sort of affiliation (1).

Beneath the starry vault of the boxes, one is no less eager to celebrate the victory. The f. . Alfred Rambaud, head of the cabinet du f.'. Jules Ferry, attended the celebration on June 18, 1881 solstice celebrated by the L.. Sincerity^ Perfect Union and Constant Friendship reunited^ Or., of Besançon. The celebration at which delegations from a large number of lodges and the f. attended. Gros, sub-prefect of Montbéliard, was presided over by the venerable, Mr. Bruand, a member of the council of the Order, who pronounced the following words, according to the Masonic World of August 1881:

Although the primary education law ultimately prevailed in the Senate, It was the League that stormed out this last position.

Addressing specifically to Brother Hambaud, delegate of the Lodge Clément Amitié, from Paris and former member of the Workshop, F. Bruand expresses himself roughly in these terms;

Dear Mr. Hambaud, it is with great pleasure that we... let us see among the delegates our respectable Sisters of the Afflié, who come to lend us their support for this solemn occasion.

"You have surely not forgotten that you were a child of our lodge before belonging to the Clément Friendship, and that in this capacity you have always been the object of the warmest sympathies from the members of the Workshop who knew you.

"You also mustn't have forgotten that, on a festive day like this one, on August 9, 1861, the lodge had awarded you a great Medal of honor as a token of appreciation for outstanding achievements The success you achieved in your studies... Since then, you have maintained all the promises that such brilliant successes could have inspired,

(1) See the report of the work of the Parisian circle of the League of Education sent for 1879,

"You here remove in the name of our beloved sister, the Clement Friendship; She could not have been more worthily represented. A lodge which, since In recent years, it has received into its ranks so many notable figures in science, Literature, the arts, and politics required a scholar and a republican. a sincere man to represent her. If the Lodge of the Nine Sisters had the honor neur, on April 7, 1778, to initiate into Freemasonry the greatest philosopher The philosopher of modern times, Voltaire, a century later, the Clementine Friendship in turn received Littié, the celebrated and honored leader of the positivist school, and that will be her eternal honor. On the same day, she adopted still included in the initiation the f.. Jules Ferry, our current minister of ^public education, this great citizen (stc) who has done more for education a secular and popular approach unlike any of his predecessors. We know, My dearest F.. Rambaud, that, in this laborious task, he has in you a "valuable collaborator, and we congratulate you on that..."

Freemasonry everywhere assumes the role of pressuring and controlling to implement the Ferry laws. In 1880, the general assembly of Grand Orient has decided to form a commission "responsible for "to encourage the production of educational materials designed "In a liberal and democratic spirit (1)."

On August 4, 1881, Lef.*. Cousin, member of the Grand Orient, presiding over the distribution of prizes from Masonic schools, "enum- "Mother, the progress that Father Ferry has made in the last two years" "to public education, not only by developing it and in "transforming it, but also wresting it from the influence of the Je- "sequels (2)."

Freemasonry did more than applaud; it had a part absolutely paramount in the preparation of this legislation.

On February 14, 1878, the Scottish lodges of the obedience of The Supreme Council in Lyon is celebrating a family celebration:

Father Payet gives a lecture on the importance of education and the education of women.

He demands that elTorts be made energetically with the aim to obtain the creation of a special education program for young girls. He would like this teaching to include a good program of >no- ralCf from which the old errors would be rejected and where, on a very

(1) Masonic world, August 1881, p. 147.

(2) Masonic world, n*' do aoToinbre ol December 1881.

Simply put, we would take as our only principles the laws of nature, which speak directly to our consciousness and our reason. It is on these foundations that one could truly erect the moral edifice desired by all men of goodwill and on which, with the chisel and the mallet of The words of the republican motto could be engraved there: Liberty, equality ity, fraternity (1).

One year later, the law on girls' education was presented to the Chambers by the representatives of the lodges, and it was voted on after long discussions, which betrayed how much she disliked It was born of a national character. The curriculum of education The path traced by this law is exactly the one that F.. Payet indicated. Morality is based there on the laws of physiology. / Also, After the triumph, what exaltation among all the followers! The 4th December 1881, Lef.. Challamet, Under-Secretary of State for the Interior public education in the Gambetta ministry, thus celebrated AT Auxerre the new law, in a speech that reproduces the language usual in the lodges:

...If you get to the bottom of it, how insidious it is, how< Even an irresistible and all-powerful wind, the weakness of woman! She knows how to command without seeming to! What am I saying? Command! all while appearing to obey!

Imagine yourself in a family, poor or rich, it doesn't matter. It's about deciding who will be entrusted with the children's education, a decision Serious indeed, especially these days. There are two schools nearby. primary schools, two secondary schools.

On one hand, the leadership is entrusted to men who live off our livelihood, sharing our ideas, worthy of raising our children to one day make them citizens, patriots, men of our time.

On the other side are masters nurtured in the blind worship of past and in hatred of the modern world.

Well! It's a question of choosing between these two kinds of teachers. If the Father was free; I have a good idea which way he would lean. But he He is not free, because the mother is there. Is the mother herself free? Whether she knows it or not, isn't she under foreign influence and... Cult? In any case, the mother's opinion prevails, and if you ask to the father why he entrusted his son to teachers whose ideas, whose beliefs, whose very attire repulses him, he will answer you sadly: What do you want? We must preserve the peace of the... swimming I

(I) The jyonlde moponniq e, 1878.

What will you (read me about the influence of women on education) say?

Early childhood? The father is in the fields, in Tusinc, busy with his business. which keep him outside all day. He doesn't have time to... cutting up children. This early education is a household matter. which he readily abandons to the mother.

Consider the difference between first feelings , first notions that the mother awakens in minds and hearts that...

They watch over the young woman, depending on whether she is educated or ignorant! Ignorant! She feeds them all her ignorance, all her prejudices, all their superstitions, which they will have so much trouble getting rid of later late. Educated, she precedes school for them, she replaces it, she Completely, she is a mother and a schoolteacher all day long. However, the Lessons learned from a mother are the kind that are never forgotten. Never.

Let us therefore educate the young girls, so that there may be no contradiction between their ideas and the glues of their husbands. Let us educate them, so that a One day they become capable of raising their children well. Let's give- their education and moral strength necessary for them to know how to do their sons, hardworking young men, honest and devoted to duty, good citizens devoted to the fatherland. Let us educate the girls, if We want to transform the generations that will come after us.

...Women will open their eyes too! They will breathe and have like the invigorating air of modern ideas! They will escape the influence of the enemies of all our freedoms! But then, what will be left to Our affairs? They will have little left, I certainly hope; but Good household harmony and social peace will not suffer any loss. Women will have their role in this work of civilization that we we have undertaken, and it will not be the least effective.

In a general meeting of the Nantes lodges, May 20, 1882 To deny it, a high-ranking official announced, to applause from all the brothers, like the holder of a good source, that soon Nantes is said to have a girls' high school (1). One can judge of the teaching that will be given there. If necessary, the zeal that is put into it. the Paris municipal council to urge the establishment of these ly- The eunuchs would say what they should be used for.

Moreover, we are clear on the moral direction being given by the Republic to the official education of girls. A decree of Minister of Public Instruction, F.-. Ferry, dated October 31st October 1881, appointed as director of the VKcole normale secon- ,daite de fillesy established in Versailles, MTM® widow Jules Favre, a

(1) chain of union, May 1882.

Protestant; for Inspector General of Studies, Mr. Legouvé; and for professor of morality, Brother Joseph Fabre, deputy of Aveyron. This f.' has since distinguished himself in the Chamber by his proposals for proscription against the princes. At this time that, he was only designated at the discretion of F.-. Ferry, in addition 8. As a brother, through /Elements of philosophy where he en- in particular, it teaches that "morality can and must be constituted "independently of God," p. 258...; "that the opposing doctrine "authorizes the poisoning of a Socrates, renews the great "The scandal of the cross of Jesus justifies the Neros and the Dominates" Hey, relight Jordano-Bruno's pyre, reopen the dungeon of "Galileo, resurrecting the atrocities of the St. Bartholomew's Day Massacre, do not con- "not only consecrates an error, but transforms the sectarian into "executioner (p. 260)." Elsewhere, Brother Fabre says that some pretenders- "The evidence for the existence of God is insufficient." p. 357. On every page of this book, the traditions and doctrines members of the Church are insulted (1). Here is the morality professor kqai The Republic entrusts the task of training future schoolteachers to... Girls' high schools.

§ 3. *- Again, the League of Education

We will be brief regarding the League's actions. Thanks to the A fine book by Mr. Jean de Moussac; now comes the part... better known from the sects' headquarters.

His close connection with Freemasonry is published above ly today. In the League congresses in 1881 and In 1882, F.*. Macé said it: they are two sister societies. Also, the delegates from the lodges come there wearing their badges (2).

(1) See an analysis of this work in Le Français of November 13, 1881.

(2) (Let it be permitted to Brother Jean Macé, whom the enemies of the League are attacking (again, occasionally, the innocent joke of the three symbolic dots placed side by side) (in his name, to profile this solemn occasion to accept aloud a (solidarity that exists in clTot. The numerous delegates sent by the logos to (Our congress is there to attest that the work of the League is a Masonic work) (as well as patriotic. When a lodge is behind a society c of instruction which is based^ it is in its role., > The I.'. Macé at the congress of the LtÿueenlSSL.

In the speech he delivered at the closing session of the Congress of 1881, Mr. Gambetta also alluded to Freemasonry, "that powerful society which has done so much to enlighten universal understanding, and who knew so well how to popularize" "To mock the work of the League."

This sentence, recorded in passing by shorthand, was carefully omitted from the text published the following day by the Liégeptic French (1), which proves, by the way, how much the Freemasonry, in certain circumstances, is keen to conceal its connections with high-profile political figures.

She only allows what suits her to be published in her newspapers. and remains essentially a secret society.

The League threw open the mask by taking the title of Republican League of Education of 1881. One saw how she is even more involved in republican propaganda blicaine than the foundation of schools (book III, chapter XXII, S 5).

At its last congress, it decided to organize everywhere, with the help of municipalities, children's festivals intended for to leave a lasting impression from a very young age and to com* to complete the affdiations so numerous now in the lodges (Book III, Chapter XVII, 1). At the same time, under the pretext of ins military instruction, she seeks to create sections of Jacobins armed throughout the country.

The plan adopted at the congress of cannot be overstated. 1882:

The Intelligence League, extending the scope of its action, takes in hand the national cause of civic and military education. Eraser Regarding means of action, the congress believes it is necessary to take immediate action. The following measures are being taken: 1® to induce formation in each canton of France of a national education district, subdivided into sections by municipalities, and which will aim to organize, for young people people leaving school up to the age of twenty, a civil education and military, through weekly exercises and cantonal meetings" periodicals; 2® to train in the departmental and district capitals roundabout a commission of well-intentioned citizens, which would be responsible for establishing relations with each cantonal capital, and there to encourage the creation of cantonal circles and to serve as an intermediary

(t) LeFran^{au} of April 23, 1881.

Again: the League of Education $49

between local societies and the League's general council; 3" finally, for the formation and operation of these cantonal circles, of ve-nir en aides aux cantons moins bien. Que s'est est-il que la Ligue ac s'a-s' at his disposal sums of money proportionate to the scale of the work and the importance of the needs to be met. Therefore, the congress decides that all citizens will be called upon and that it will be open, in
To achieve this goal, a major national fundraising campaign is underway.

As always, the League only produces outside and to carry out a plan deliberately hatched in the lodges.

As early as 1872, the Masonic World recommended a brochure on compulsory military instruction in primary schools, by Ed. Salland, General Councillor of Seine-et-Marne, published at the Pagnerre bookstore (February 1873 issue). The political events Ticks prevented the implementation of this plan. But as early as 1880, we see it taken up again in this grand lodge which is called the council municipal council of Paris, and on the report of Father Aristide Rey, the
The first school battalions are being organized.

On March 17, 1881, this plan was discussed in these terms at the lodge.
The Benefactors gathered in Paris:

Brother Gateau has the floor on the matter on the agenda: "the ins military instruction. » The speaker would like to see artists trained in the trade young people from the age of 15 to 20, or even at all less to begin their education in such a way that they have little left things to do after their arrival at the regiment to be good soldiers.

Implementing this idea would be of great importance to from a political economy perspective, not only because each citizens will have less time to spend in the military, but because that these strengthening exercises will develop a greater amount of physical and intellectual strength. Young people could be brought together in the municipalities, for example on Sundays and Thursdays, place them under the orders from former officers; these would divide them by company, section 8 and squads. The students would have at their disposal, during the exercise only the weapons and equipment necessary for the instructions;
These objects, immediately after the exercises, would be handed over to the care of the municipality or the officer who would be in charge of it (1).

On these plans for the general arming of the population, see everything that has been said in book II, chapter XII, § 6.

(1) Masonic Bulletin of the Grand Symbolic Lodge, September 1881.

'130 FAANC-MACHINERY AND PUBLIC EDUCATION

The Ahace-Lorraine lodge, one of the most influential in Paris, took the initiative to fund a subscription for civic education military and sent, in July 1882, a circular to that effect to all of Franco's lodges (1).

As usual, one of the brothers took it upon himself to carry to the Chamber drafted and prepared the bill in the lodges. On the 27th Decapitation in 1882, Father Paul Bert had distributed to the Chamber Members of Parliament have proposed a bill worded as follows:

Article – Military training, made compulsory for all young boys by articles 1 and 4 of the law of March 28, 1882, must be extended for thirteen years until the age of the draw at spell.

Article 2. – From thirteen to sixteen years of age, it will be administered in the battal schools established in execution of article P' of the aforementioned law by the care of officials from the Ministry of Public Instruction.

Above the age of sixteen, it will be administered by officers, under the authority of direction of the Minister of War.

When the child is under sixteen, they strike the parents or the people responsible for the child's care. When he/she is over At sixteen, they either target these individuals or the minors themselves. my, that is, both one and the other.

The League also takes action through conferences organized on all points in the country. For it belongs to the League, says F.*. Macé to congress of 1882, to triumph over the resistance of Catholics to Laws of misfortune. We write from the lodges of Lorient to the Chain union (February 1882);

We still take care of the League of Education; we We increase our conferences; they are very successful; we We will go and do several in our villages or small towns. hopefully we can break free from the routine mindset that still holds them back, our Breton populations.

Father Jean Macé employs women to open his conferences Among these is citizen Paule Minck, who has acquired the reputation that Ton knows in the most criticized clubs of Paris and its suburbs. Like the name of this Communard. might horrify the peaceful middle class of small towns

(I) See the dmm iVunion of August 1882, p. 249.

WHAT WILL BECOME OF STATE EDUCATION 431

West, the f.*. Jean Macé uses a technique that paints well the hypocrisy of the sect. 11 simply calls the citizen, Paulc Minck, from the noble name of "Madame de Montrésor". Thus disguised, the Communard enters circles that... would be prohibited if his true civil status were known. What Would a mayor dare to close his door to such a distinguished lady?

The mayor of Avranches, the honorable Mr. Frémin, having refused to deliver municipal premises to this lady, was obliged to to give his resignation (1).

§ 4. – What will become of state education

The League of Education, in its early days, invoked freedom; Today, she dropped the mask: she wants to destroy the entire school. free movement, to retain only that of the fallen State in his hands.

Mr. Gambetta explained himself clearly in his speech From April 21, 1881, at the League congress:

I am a tireless champion of true freedom of signage* ment, not of a certain freedom: I know that one, it's a so* a physics by which all the lights are turned off, and I could not You can give a better demonstration of this than by committing to read and reread on this point the speeches of my eminent friend, Mr. Paul Sert, who combines incisive dialectic with the science of a Benedictine monk, to such signs that one no longer even discusses with him in the ranks of the clergy.

'This is the passion that drives me, and, inspired by your words, I will say to My turn; That's my faith, my Ortdo. I have no others.

It is therefore important to know what this state education will be like. surviving alone on the ruins of the free and paid establishments using budget funds, that is to say, at everyone's expense.

This can be judged by the speeches given in the lodges by the affiliated university professors.

He is a professor at the Faculty of Arts in Douai, the f.*. Courdavaux, who undertook to provide the authentic interpretation–

(t) the Jfonde, of April 18, 1882.

432 Freemasonry and public education that and auloris (3rd of the famous Gambetta's work; Clericalism^

There is the enemy, – Speaking on the Holy Books, before the lodge Vlhoile du Nord de Lille, on May 9, 1880, he said: "The distinction*
The relationship between Catholicism and clericalism is pure official, subtle, for the sake of the platform; but Here, in the lodge, let us say it loudly for the sake of truth, the Catholic Clericalism and clericalism are only one thing, and, as concluded Sion, let us add: One cannot be both Catholic and Republican: That's impossible!

La C'/idine in its May 1882 issue, we apcarries the continuation of the teachings that the brother imparts around him, during the leisure time afforded him by his professional work nels:

Arras, R.. L.. N 260, La Constante Amitié. – Meeting of February 24 1882. – Brother G... will address before his Brothers, from Artois, the question of whether serious and so interesting regarding the origin of the dogma of original sin.

After thanking the respectable workshop, Brother G. declares that, if he has
I chose this conference topic because it speaks to French people.
oons. Freemasonry, he said, is today the vanguard of the league bre-pensée, an association of people who clearly know what they They want them: to seek and spread the truth for the greater good of the liberal cause. Now, the liberal cause is intimately linked to the question religious: at the heart of almost all our political debates today we find The affirmation or denial of the truth of Catholicism; it is because We part ways on this point, just as we part ways on so many others; all of this Catholic logic is necessarily an ultramontaih.

However, the essential basis of Catholicism is original sin without which Christ would not have had to come. To deny this dogma, by showing that it rests on nothing and that many centuries have passed before that it should be admitted by the Church itself, is therefore to attack the Catholic cynicism in its very foundations. The speaker feels all the more at
I feel comfortable addressing this issue when speaking to freemasons.
Lessons, he speaks to excommunicated people.

We will not follow the speaker in his ramblings. They are in the realm of high fantasy, and, to produce them, he has had to rely on the ignorance and crude prejudices of his audience authors.

asserted that political issues are all fundamentally dominated by anti-religious hatred, and that the liberal cause, as it

WHAT WILL BECOME STATE EDUCATION 433

recalls by a singular audacity of language, that is to say the Republic^ is not, in our case, a form of government, a political question, but the current and positive expression of Tanti* Christianity.

We are struck, upon reading the Masonic journals, by see the increasingly considerable number of professors of higher education and secondary education, which affiliate with lodges.

On October 1st, -Le Monde maçonnique tells us in its December 1882 delivery, -the L.. ta Vraie Réunion dên Sirée, Or., from Gray (Haute-Saône), proceeded with the initiation of "a member of the University," and the Orator of the L.*, Brother Edmond Guardian, director of V Independent of Haute-Saône, pronounces there gave a speech, in which we note the following passage:

The future belongs to Freemasonry.

And the future lies in education, in the popularization of all... sciences; the future, newly initiated Brother, destiny V University walking side by side with our institution. (1)

Academics, you are the leaders of a new generation, and its to remain worthy of such a noble mission as yours.

Create men, establish citizens.

(t) One can judge the sentiments of universalist Freemasons by the letter the following, addressed by Mr. Gaëtan Simon, headmaster of the Lycée de Lons-le-Saunier, in the Courrier du Jura, and reproduced by VUnivert on April 17, 188%:

Lons-le-Saunier, April 13, 1882.

Masonic lodge,

Quai de la Mégisserie,

N® 9.

Office of the President.

Dear Editor,

mason, article at the end of which you will kindly take care of me.

You're going to a lot of trouble to state the obvious. Since the 22nd Last September, it became public knowledge that I am president of the lodge of Lons-le-Saunier.

I would add that I have been a Freemason for almost 20 years and that I have not never felt embarrassed in the performance of my professional duties, even and especially ("te!!!") those concerning the religious education of the children entrusted & my care.

This is followed by a eulogy of Freemasonry and its followers.

Who will believe that the men who hold speeches in the lodges similar to those we have just read in the text, do not reproduce them any more or less in their teaching?

III

28

434 LA. PuANG-MACONNENIE AND PUBLIC EDUCATION

**

Freemasonry welcomes you with open arms; it receives you as its dearest children, she shows you the goal you should strive for all your efforts.

There is an important fact here. Until now, despite the fundamental flaw in its principle, despite the bad influences that predominated in the upper ministerial regions rielles, the University of France had counted within its ranks a large number of sincerely Christian professors, who were deeply moved their professional duties included the importance of the religious elements in education, in many cases, the Men were worth more than the institution. This state of affairs will change quickly: the young university generation will be mo-Delée, like the Ferrys and Paul Berts, and now the teaching The state government will strive to instill atheism in young people* generations, from primary school to medical school.

Father Macé is careful to point out that in public schools one will outlaw denominational education, but will replace it by "this common fund of universal religion, which is imposed on all* "all confessions, and which broadens the progress of age by age" "Human consciousness (1)." Note this variant

S 5. – Masonic education in Italy

A few extracts from Masonic journals are enough to show me
It is clear that here too the sect obeys the same tactic.

The Caffaro lodge of Genoa, meeting on July 4, 1875, is working a lot in favor of Masonic and secular education. She makes a great opposition to religious instruction in public schools. It condemns all his power those where popular scientific education is based on experience. The lodge also dreams of founding a children's garden, according to the Fnebel system (2).

(1) Report on the work of the Parisian circle of the teaching league for 1879, p. 7 and 8.

(2) Correspondence of the G0acs, September 1875, published in the Chaine'd'union from 1875.

Masonic teaching in Italy 435

In November 1875, in Florence, the Goncordia lodge held a sort of the congress, to which she had invited all the workshops of the Tuscan group to send their delegates. That's the demonstration she wanted to make.
in favor of progress and modern ideas, to defend them against the repeated attacks from a powerful and widespread enemy. We were there focused primarily on establishing the preeminence of civil authority over Telereligious ment. Practical means of applying goodness were sought.
public activism.

Finally, the need to protect freedom of expression* was recognized.
lying against the interference of the clergy.

Leg.'. M.., who was unable to attend this congress beyond L.'. Goncordia of which he is a member, apologized by letter and took this opportunity to Congratulate MH for having the idea to organize this Mac meeting. with the aim of solemnly affirming the rights of civil society and of science at the very moment when they were most threatened (1).

We also read in the report of the work of the circle prisien of the League of Education for 1879:

A letter addressed to the Parisian circle by Mr. is read aloud.
Beluzzi, the president of the Bologna League for the Education of the Little* pie, which sends the statutes and regulations of the company, with the tap statistical tables established by her for the years 1877, 1878 and

Bologna, Mantua, Ferrara, etc., were founded under the inspiration of ideas, which presided over the founding of the French League of Education and Progress.

Already, in April 1872, at the congress of Workers' Societies meeting in Rome, amidst many wishes in favor of associations and cooperative institutions, an Israelite, Brother Arbib, had the following motion:

The congress expresses its wish that it be established in every community a sufficient number of elementary schools or a sufficient portion of a municipality and is convinced of the need to establish the obligation of education with criminal sanction (2).

(1) Chain of Union, November 1875.

(2) See the Gazette de France of April 24, 1872.

CHAPTER TWENTY-FOUR

THE POLYTECHNIC ASSOCIATION AND THE PHILOTECHNIC ASSOCIATION

Freemasonry leaves none of the institutions outside of itself. Institutions, which can exert an intellectual and social influence. Good men must therefore keep their eyes constantly open. to examine whether the sect has a firm grip on the works which present themselves to the public in the most innocuous guise.

In this regard, we draw attention to the following extracts from the Masonic world (i), relating to two institutions, which have exercised and still exert some influence on popular education in Paris and other major cities:

"We know the history of these two sister societies, which have given themselves over to the task of compensating for the inadequacy of primary education, the polytechnic society founded in 1830, and the philotechnical association created in 1848.

We cannot remain indifferent to the work and efforts of the dedicated propagators of education, who make up these two associations. Both are headed by eminent men, excellent Freemasons, Brother Laurent Pichat, senator, for the first time, Brother*, of Héredia, municipal councillor, secretary of the council of the Order, for the second time.

(0 Maçonnic Mende, iianiet-iévriee 1881, P*

438 POLYTECHNIC AND PILOT ASSOCIATIONS

a grand celebration on the fifth anniversary of its founding. After a lengthy speech by Mr. Laurent Picliat, its affable president, Mr. Gambetta delivered a speech that will remain among his best. and that we would have liked to reproduce in its entirety if our frame hadn't been there opposed.

In this speech, Father Gambetta made a profession of faith d, positivism, which is, as we have seen (Book I, Chapter II, § 15, and Book III, Chapter XV, § 4) increasingly the doctrine of the lodges:

"It is, gentlemen, this method, severe in principle, more se still visible in its application, which was traced at the very beginning of your association the greatest thinker of the century. Why won't I say it? right here, in this Sorbonne long devoted to another ideal and to other doctrines, but which, thanks to the effort of time and the competition of new men and generous spirits – I will allow myself this praise before the most authorized representative of the University of Paris, –se des gradually shedding the shadows of the past to look towards the future and cast the foundations of a true positive science–this rigorously tested method more severely practiced, such has been the philosophy of the most powerful a great thinker of the century, as I was saying, the one whose penetrating ideas thirty today everywhere, from Auguste Comte..., this thinker only concerned with ridding the human brain of darkness and chi* "Mothers, to make thought nothing but a pure gold ingot."

It should be noted, says Le Monde maçonnique after this quote, that this adherence to a doctrine, which today has so many followers in French Freemasonry.

"I

In an obituary notice dedicated to Brother Mahias, suc- causitively prefect of several departments, the same newspaper expressed as follows:

"During his unfortunately too short career, the f.'. Mahias He had devoted himself primarily to educational matters. A very active member of Lu Société Philotechnique, he created branches for it not only in all the departments he administered, but everywhere he could directly- through his friends to acquire some influence (1),

The Chain of Union of January-February 1882, after having re- produced a violent attack against Christianity directed at the lodge The Philanthropic Union of Saint-Denis, by Brother Galopin,

(1) Myconic world, decorobro 1831.

POLYTECHNIC AND PHILOTECHNIC ASSOCIATIONS 139

Brother Hémond, Venerable Master of the lodge La Clémentie Amitié, "in his quality of mason and vice-president of the Philosophical Association^ a He drank to the health of Mr. Galopin and thanked him for the assistance he provided. was committed to the democratic cause, by coming to Saint-Denis every fifteen days, for several years, to teach a course in physics biology "A public and free philosophical space."

CHAPTER TWENTY-FIVE

THE FRANCO-MAGONNERIE, THE COMPANIONS

Swimming and Trade Union Chambers

WORKERS

Purely workers' organizations, even those which affect taking the form of secret societies like guilds, are which have so far remained, at least in France, outside the scope of the tion of the lodges.

Masonic doctrine does indeed lead to socialism, and that is that's where the logical minds it contains within go: (Uv. III, chap. XXVI) but the social category, in which the lodges have so far recruited mainly, inspire an instinctive distrust of the workers.

However, great efforts are currently being made to rat to try to integrate into the lodges both the guilds and these organizations modern ones called trade union chambers. These attempts are facilitated on the one hand by the spread of anti-religious sentiments in the working class, on the other hand by the growing number of men my members belonging to manual trades, which the lodges receive within their bosom.

Here is an important fact, which relates to this absorption process through Freemasonry, representing the vital forces of the working class. The lodge LaJibStice, from Paris, convened a mixed meeting on December 9, 1881 of apprenticeship and Freemasonry:

The entrance to the temple, the report states, was given to the delegations.

442 LA. Freemasonry, the guilds of the various journeyman duties of Paris, which are represented by delegates of the journeymen coopers, stonemasons, carpenters, passers-by stonemasons, blacksmiths, young foreign men, tailors their stonemasons, bakers, shoemakers of the new era, duties gathered together: saddlers, carpenters, plasterers, fullers of cloth, ropemakers, locksmiths, turners, weavers, tanners, clog makers, basket makers and winemakers sorters.

Fr. Germain Gornille, the venerable master of the lodge, who presided over the meeting nion, has defined the role and outlined the purpose of these joint meetings. Fr. Borniol outlined in broad strokes the history of the journeyman system and the...

Freemasonry. Following Brother Borniol, Brother Germain Cor*

Nille took the floor to inaugurate, in a way, the discussion of the

The question on the agenda, he said, is to research what the...

"The relationship between capital and labor is to approach the social question by "Excellence." Fr.*. Mamelle addresses the practical side of the association and "demonstrates to the ff. *. journeymen of Duty and to the masons the necessity-

"if you want to group together into societies resisting capital,"

The session was followed by a meal.

The next meeting will take place during January, on the columns from one of the journeyman groups of the Duty,

The one in February, which will be held at the temple of the Justice lodge, com will continue the discussion of the relationship between capital and labor, and the study of the organization of credit! work. » (1)

This mixed-gender outfit is merely the fulfillment of one of the goals that the Scottish Grand Symbolic Lodge has assigned itself.

"Propaganda by the master craftsmen, mid-Ktes attire, festivals"

"in common: these are the three main means, which must be..."

"to lead to the future alliance and which would double the forces of the compa-

"gnonnage and Freemasonry, and would constitute a secular force"

"in a position to defy all clerical reactions (2)."

Furthermore, she placed on the agenda of all lodges the question of the admission of workers under preferential conditions companions. Propaganda would thus be easier (3).

This is an idea that is gaining traction in the lodges. She does. also within the apprenticeships.

(1) See the report of this meeting in the Masonic Bulletin of the Grand Symbolic Lodge, n° January 1882, and in the Chain of Union, January-February 1882.

(3) See the Bulletin of the Grand Symbolic Lodge, no. 10 March, May 1881, February, <.8^J2,.July 1882.

AND THE TRADE UNION CHAMBERS

443

We know of a city in the West where there is a fellowship. Every year at the fellowship members' meeting, Some are proposing to join the lodge en masse. The proposal has so far been rejected because the companions are brave and loyal workers, who intend to remain foreigners to the intrigues of the parties (1).

Unfortunately, a man to whom companionship owes A great deal, Agricol Perdiguier, has in this respect entered into a fatal path. His religious faith had greatly weakened, and he recounts He himself managed his relationship with Georges Sand. He was influenced by her. and was initiated into Freemasonry. While purging the journeyman system barbaric traditions that dishonored him, he unfortunately... placed on the path of a vague humanitarianism, of a religio* indeterminate location, which today gives rise to ma- action conic (2).

Along with the trade union chambers, organizations all recent and imbued with the anti-Christian spirit, the task of the Freemason It's easier to do nothing.

We reproduce here, despite its length, the account in a manner celebration, which took place in Poitiers and where the two institutions had a dispute confirmed their close alliance, the Future of Vienne (n° of 14 July 1882), published it under this title; Civil Burial

Yesterday, a civil funeral was held for a brave worker, who was abducted before at the age, after a long illness, to his family and many friends. More than two hundred people accompanied Charles-Gélestin Rossi gnol at his final resting place. Mr. Gamille Perré, member of the Chamber the workers' union and Mr. Guimbaud, president of the Masonic Lodge those from Poitiers who spoke at his graveside.

Mr. Gamille Ferré, a member of the Chamber of Trade Unions, spoke in these terms:

Gentlemen,

It is not in vain that one knocks on the door of a Masonic lodge. Whatever help you request, you are certain to receive it, because

Convinced of the legitimacy of your request, you came spontaneously-

(1) We must note that we have found no indication relating to external attire of journeyman and Freemason uerio, including the lodge La Juslice had taken the initial form and that the Masonic newspapers were announcing.

(2) See the 3rd edition of the Book of the Journeymen, 2 vols., 11-12, Paris, 1857. p. 7, volume II, p. 6C et seq., p. 224 et seq. Moral and religious dialogue,

444 Freemasonry, the guilds

We ask you to help us with the last homework assignments at the cama>* harbor that you have just lost, and we, without hesitating for a single moment, without asking you what you were basing this decision on. We have come to unite with you at the edge of this grave.

If you understood that Freemasons are workers for to which there must be neither truce nor rest, when it comes to helping the Men, you are mistaken. You have grasped, without realizing it, URL of the sides of our work, and we, coming to this funereal rendezvous- We are trying to prove to you that we will always be ready to to come to your aid in all circumstances.

Gentlemen, everywhere you look, you will see Freemasons at work. And you can believe me, there is no world a great thing accomplished, there is no progress in pre-preparation, without any discernible trace of our company's hand in it, 'All the liberal laws you possess were proposed and passed' by our Brothers; all these immense civilizing works, which illustrate the 19th century, bear the imprint of the Masonic seal.

What is the French Senate doing right now, which, perhaps despite the Does the will of its creators include a fairly large number of Freemasons? He is studying the law on trade union associations. And despite the efforts From the anti-liberals, JL will emerge from his discussions with wise regulations and strong, because it will be the expression of justice. Well then! ask- Tell us what part we have played and we take seriously these matters. will tell you.

Gentlemen, while you are bent over your work for twelve hours per day, while tied to the forge or the workbench, you earn peni- They provided enough to feed their families, did the lodges work? also: they had thought that your fate was unjustly bad; that you, who enrich society through your work, were deprived of everything; and they felt it was their duty to help you acquire to find a better position.

So, now that the arduous period of childbirth is over, you have sent. The liberal press, becoming our ally, has sold, by thousands of channels, the result of the secret work of the Lodges. And when the masses popular ones were sufficiently prepared when they appeared com to consider the scope of the questions raised one by one, have emerged These great laws will be the glory of the Third Republic.

Workers! From now on, thanks to Freemasonry, your children will study They will die. They, too, will possess the knowledge that makes a man and which, even today, are reserved for the wealthy classes.

Once they become men, your children will only be soldiers for a strict period of time. necessary to learn to defend the sacred soil of the homeland;

ET THE TRADE UNION CHAMBERS

445

workers, they will be able to come together and defend their interests collectively, and, With the help of our legislators' efforts, they will have in their hands a a powerful means of reconciliation capable of sparing them these bloody struggles* glantes, where the people are always defeated.

Oh! Gentlemen! Think about it carefully! Never deviate from the law; Don't try to resort to force; that would be, even assuming that you succeeded for a time, allowing in the aftermath of disastrous re-reprisals. – Do not listen to those who will incite you to violence the social order; rest assured, they would push you forward, and the When the big day arrives, you would be solely responsible, because they would not Not there anymore. Instead, consider using the law as it is or will be. in your best interests, and remember that if you rebel against society and completely overturn the current order, you You would have done only one thing:

To substitute the tyranny of the many for that of the few.

Finally, gentlemen, among all the laws owed to the Lodges, there is one another one that I want to remind you of, because it is the remedy for a great evil. – What is the fate of the worker who has arrived even today? In old age? Gentlemen, you know him. – When his faculties are diminished, his vision becomes blurred, his muscles refuse him service, he is replaced at the workbench and the workshop door closes for him. – What then becomes of this unfortunate man? – He is forced to to beg, until public charity allowed him to come and die to laugh on a hospital bed. – Well, it is this sad state of affairs that the Freemasonry wanted and wants to abolish. Thanks to the numerous members of parliament who are his children, the Old Workers' Fund will open. The E Tat will throw all the millions he can give without compromising

Savings to ensure the success of this work will lead to better and more productive work. reflecting that the Republic, which educates his children, assures him bread and shelter when age and fatigue have worn down his strength.

Gentlemen, it will still take some time to reap the rewards. of all these creations, that is why we must deplore that some Men like the unfortunate one, who is lying there, die before a see the implementation of these measures.

Rossignol, whom a long illness took from you too soon, was all her He lived an excellent and honest life. He had earned the affection of His friends, the esteem of those for whom he worked. He truly deserved it. that we should come and accompany him. You probably know this better than anyone else. me, you who are his friends.

Gentlemen, he had another merit, that of putting his death in a... Cord with his life; it's beautiful! – We respect all beliefs, We understand that people pray, that they have a religion, that they believe in everything whatever one wants; but we demand that the same respect be shown to our ideas. → We are not trying to oppose anyone's actions. So be it; but in return, we insist on being able to exercise our freedom. iiberiû! This word is inscribed on the frontispiece of our code; we insist on it too much to erase.

446 LA. Freemasonry, the COMPANIONS

My friends, let us make a covenant at this grave. It will be lasting, I I hope so; for one does nothing lightly in the face of death. The lodges, As you now know, they are made up of workers. Well! re– Let us recall what Freemasonry already did two centuries ago; on the Our fellow worker has fallen; let us unite the moral workers. to manual laborers; let's help each other, protect each other, advise each other we 1

My friends, if you do this, you will be doing the work of masons without being– three; you will only have more merit.

Now, farewell to the one who is no more!

Farewell, on behalf of all the workers, his friends!

Farewell, in the name of free thinkers!

Farewell, on behalf of the Trade Union Chamber!

Mr. Cruimbaud, president of the Masonic lodge Les Am/s Réunis, has pronounced the following words:

Before this pit, opened long before its time, closes again on the remains of the one who was Charles-Célestin Rossignol, we have our first duty is to express our gratitude to those who have not I never doubted for a single moment that by calling on us, they would find the
The fraternal society we represent here is ready to join to them to accompany to his final resting place the man so young and so very talented, whom death has taken from the affection of his family and friend separated from his comrades. Our second duty is to affirm to the The grieving family deeply shares in their sorrow.
the loss she has just suffered is all the more cruel because the honest or Friday, who is no longer alive, by his clearly manifested last will, given the measure of what could be expected of him. It is necessary, in fact, at the present time, and in this moment of failure, a strong character a poignant moment to shake off all prejudices during his life and to... to declare at the hour of death that, having not needed the assistance of We've had a cult since we reached manhood, so we can do without them.
that we no longer exist.

May his example be a lesson for us all, and may the con
May the conformity of his death with his life be a consolation to all those who They mourn him

AND THE TRADE UNION CHAMBERS 447

Rossignol died before he could witness the constitution defined* tive of the Trade Union Chamber of all the workers' corporations of its city. He will not enjoy the benefits it should provide to all those who are members. To those who survive him, may they allow us to tell them: We know of nothing better than vast associations companies placing the defense of their interests in the hands of men that they choose freely. One is never better defended nor better supported than by his peers.

We tell them again: Persevere in the path you have chosen.
traced, do not heed the cry of alarm we heard:
"Here comes socialism bursting into the provinces," The word so Socialism has long been a bogeyman for our adversaries that they threw to the wolves in the moment of social crisis.
Let those whom they seek to frighten rest assured, socialism as you hear it and as we understand it, is purely and simply plement than a completely new association of three combined forces:
The idea, the capital, and the workforce. The day when the application of these
The three elements brought together by the association will be a fait accompli on that day
The most perfect equality will reign forever among men.

Sleep in peace. Nightingale, if you were not given the chance to witness the realization
By making use of this blessing, those who survive you will benefit from it.

a way to honor the memory of the worker we are losing!

Nightingale, I bid you a final farewell here, in the name of brotherhood and unity.
Verselle I

These demonstrations indicate a highly skillful combined effort.
ment.

Will Freemasonry succeed in engaging the journeymen and guilds?
The unions under her control? That's another question. She may well, through its impious propaganda, destroy the faith among its members Christian, but the proletarian still regards the lodge as a bourgeois institution and instinctively distrusts it. Other cent
He was attracted to very active groups: the International, the Anarchists, and others.
of attraction for him, when he lost his Christian sense.

Freemasonry will nonetheless have exerted an influence formidable influence in spreading the socialist idea among politicians elderly people in limbo and the outcasts of all kinds who fill his boxes.

We will see this in the next chapter.

CHAPTER TWENTY-SIX

Freemasonry BT The Sociology

5

S 1". – The social revolution resulting from the

POLITICAL REVOLUTION

By the strength of the communist principle, which is at the heart of the document*
Masonic trine (see Book I, Chapter VI, and Book II, Chapter XIV, § 4),
The lodges were gradually led to adopt socialist principles.
and gradually, as the leaders, through political means, lower the financial barriers that once made it an aristocratic institution* cracy, then a bourgeois institution, these tendencies intensified kill.

The Scottish lodges of Lyon consecrated on February 14, 1878 a held to discuss the social issue:

Brother Bouland explains that poverty and degradation are accidents

a doctrine that claims that misery is of divine origin, Christ having said to his disciples, "There will always be poor people among you." The critic argues that misery cannot be of divine origin, that it is simply the work of corruption within social circles and the resistance of Ignorance.

Father Perrouet concluded the discussion with these words:

Any social order in which the individual does not encounter the guarantors*

29

III

450 LA. Freemasonry and Socialism

Sufficient resources to satisfy his needs will be misunderstood by him, economical constantly threatened. Human needs must be satisfied so that he is sociable {}.

On September 12, 1875, the three lodges of Le Havre distributed so the distribution of savings account booklets to the most deserving students from secular schools. The speaker from the VAménité lodge makes A speech on the emancipation of the working class by Vins, Liberal instruction and truly patriotic education.

The social problem, he said, is no longer, as it once was, the impossibility to produce enough for all men, but the difficulty of operating a fairer and more equitable distribution between them (2).

Reading these ambiguous declamations, these double-edged words In this sense, one wonders if these speakers want to create in the poor workers, who listen to them, with unrealizable hopes or well if they intend to take the lead in the social revolution and in to fall squarely into socialism.

Some people go for it quite frankly.

Brother Garnier, Worshipful Master of the Globe Lodge in Vincennes, In the meeting of August 23, 1874, he demanded the right to work. like in the old days, the f. *. Louis Blanc:

Freemasonry wants to use all scientific and so-called means to improve the lot of the workers. She wants order, the economy nomy, the moralization of the worker. She wants the right to work, the Work development, work organization. It's definitely there. in its element, this is the temple of work (3), free me in January 1877, very clearly highlights the logical lineage

So many ideas, which could lead to the most brutal form of socialism, tyranny of the State, of humanity, of the first principles of liberty and equality purely human issues posed from the outset by Freemasonry nonsense.

The founding members wanted, while having as their primary goal dial to fight our common enemy, clericalism, to devote ourselves

{\} Union chain, 1878.

(7) Chain of union, 1875.

(3) Chain of Union, 1874, p. 551.

A STATUE AT PROUDIION 451

particularly in the study of social issues.... equality of resources Sources. Pagan individualism was succeeded by Christian individualism.
and under the direction of scheming priests and false moralizers, humanity nity has deviated from its path. It must return to its nature: the reorientation Social organization is necessary; at the top as well as at the bottom, no one is satisfied... A compact mass of new men present for to sweep away Christian individualism in turn, and this mass thinks as we, with the philosopher Lessing, that man is not immortal such as by humanity and in humanity.

Let's work... Let's educate.

At the lodge "La Libre pensée" in Auriillac, on March 4, 1882, the f.*.
Paul Roques, after recalling that 1789 was the work of the Freemasonry, he concluded:

This past is a guarantee of what you will become in the future. The role of the Freemasonry is far from over: after having worked at the Revolution

POLITICAL ACTION, IT MUST WORK TOWARDS SOCIAL EVOLUTION (1).

§ 2. – A statue has Proudiion

These are not new trends in Freemasonry.
nonsense.

In 1870, Brother Mahias, who was, as we have seen, one of the main promoters of the PhUotechnical Association during his administrative career, had pronounced the Awakening maconic^ of Boulogne-sur-Seine, the funeral oration of f.\ Ar-

In 1881, Brother Dionys Ordinaire, deputy for Doubs, pro called for the formation of a committee to erect in Besançon a statue to Proudhon. This is naturally under the auspices of the Masonry work that he installed in this company.

On June 18 of this year, he delivered a speech as the speaker at the Lodge of Sincerity^ Perfect union and Constant friendship united^ at its

(1) chain of union y July 1882.

(2) Fact recalled by Le Français of November 17, 1881. Let us add, since we You have had to speak several times about Mr. Mahias, that he died a Christian death and piously in 1881, in the arms of the venerable Bishop of Grenoble, who united a such sweet apostolic charity in zeal for the defense of the Church.

452 Freemasonry and Socialism solstice celebration and to the applause of a large number of ff.*. visit, "a remarkable discourse on Proudhon, whose initiation- "The ceremony, as we know, took place in that lodge. He comments on the "The famous philosopher's answers to the three usual questions" "that which is done to the novices," the Masonic World tells us in his report (no. of August 1881).

On this occasion, the same newspaper (issue no. 1 of December 1881) has published an important article on Proudhon, which we reproduce here in full:

We know the stir that Proudhon's initiation caused in Freemasonry in 1847. At that time our institution had allowed itself to be invaded by the The irritating mysticism that reigned outside. Proudhon returned to this The moment the service awakened her from her torpor and reminded her that His tradition imposed upon him other tasks than founding a new republic. religion. This sudden intervention, which caused a scandal, did not leave only to bear good fruit, and it is right to remember that it was especially to his friends and disciples, that Freemasonry owed its brilliance and Pimportance which marked its existence during the second half of the imperial regime perial. Freemasonry also does not forget Proudhon, and when the celebratory The polemicist died in 1865; it was Massol who was tasked with interpreting to alleviate everyone's regrets and to show how much the life and work of Proudhon's views aligned with the aspirations of Freemasonry. We were told will allow us to reproduce this remarkable page, which may appear outdated to some, but which will remind more than one of our readers from an era of generous and selfless struggles, of enthusiasts my ardent ones, which were soon, alas, to disappear amidst the ca friendships without [shadow of the invasion and the civil war.]

Here is how Massol spoke at Proudhon's graveside:

"The man who rests in this tomb was great in spirit. Everything The world was able, through his writings, to appreciate the depth of his intelligence. and the power of this dialectic which has crushed so many prejudices. What only a few, those kids who lived in his inner circle, his wind how much beneath the rough exterior of a son of a Franche-Comté worker, there He had indulgence for others and genuine kindness.

"But what characterizes Proudhon, what makes him original, his Her distinctive trait is the strength of her conscience. She never wavers. cha; faced with many temptations, he always remained pure, he won his life lived by the sweat of each day.

"A proletarian he was born, a proletarian he lived, a proletarian he died, that is- that is to say, he has always been poor, so poor that we have been forced to pool our resources to provide him with this grave.

He had only one true passion, the passion for law and justice;

A PAGE FROM PROUDHON ON MASONRY 453

He had all the delicacies. He is one of those who have the most worked on the construction of the century's most important project, the foundation of Morality, free from all superstition.

His entire life was a corollary to this morality that he glimpsed. as the true sovereign of the future.

No one more than he had a sense of the dignity of man, no one No one proclaimed respect for the human person more than he did, no one more that he did not engrave in souls, by rejuvenating it, the motto; Liberty, Equality, fraternity.

Despite his diverse occupations, Proudhon never ceased to be inquisitive. to take an interest in Freemasonry. Let us reread this page written towards the end of his life and which was a valuable encouragement to the friends of progress.

3. – A page by Proudhon on Freemasonry

AND the socialist idea

Pranomaçonmrie.

What happens to any sect has happened to Freemasonry, which, Having started with symbolism, he doesn't know how to understand and develop philosophically the meaning of its emblems: it has lost its way in false speculations and corrupted by doctrines, which are diametrically opposed to it fundamentally contrary. Freemasonry, if it believes it can play not only on the ritual, as has already been tried so many times; but on a re-form which, by getting to the heart of things, would illuminate thought, the true Masonic thought.

For nearly a century, the vast majority of Lodges have professed the The deism of J.-J. Rousseau. This vogue for deism is understandable; for the weak souls who, while renouncing the Christian faith and giving themselves with an air of rationalism, they nevertheless wish to retain a core of religion, nothing is more convenient than this profession of faith in the Muslim way: the existence of God and the immortality of the soul. – With that we If he is considered duly informed, no further examination is necessary. – Is there anything What is better in matters of opinion than what is not examined? We might not find, from the dual point of view of religion and of philosophy, of a more inconsistent, narrower doctrine, than this The reduction of Christianity: that's precisely what makes it so successful. no longer wants to be lumped in with the mob of believers... but we are incapable at the same time of following the philosophical critique to its conclusion pique. Just as the pure idea is derived from the average of spirits, justice for her is above consciences, and one stands within an eclecticism that also satisfies presumption and powerlessness.

-554 The Freemasonry and Socialism

Some masons, however, having more ability or more law Sir, they allow themselves to search beyond. *– The Ecos– Oiler seism, published in 1812, and intended for high-ranking Freemasons, professes under the name of system of universal generation a kind of pantheism similar to that which was formerly taught in the mysteries and which fits into the ideas of Volney and Dupuis.

The aspect of the universe, says this anonymous author, presents to the eyes of the observer a perpetual cycle of creation, destruction, and regeneration Generations. To be born, to die, to reproduce, such is the law imposed on all that which exists. Movement, or, if you will, God, spirit, fire, the atoms, subtle matter is the efficient cause of these various states. He alone gives life, he alone causes death, he is the benevolent Osiris, it's the dreaded Typhon, these two are brothers, or rather they are not are but one God.

In symbolic language, it is commonly said that death is the gateway to life, a truth little known to those who hold the rank of master, although the emblems placed before their eyes, should have... to instruct.

This figure refers to this fermentation, this putrefaction tions precede birth and give it; that without the first condition tion the second cannot take place; that in short, for the generation that is to say, that they dissolve, become disunited through putrefaction.

Indeed, without an internal and fermentative movement, without the separation ment, without the disintegration of the surrounding parts, how the Will the germ be able to emerge through the layers that hold it?
captive?

The phenomenon of universal generation can be considered under a multitude of varied aspects... Hence this immense variety of fables, of rites, of symbols, all relating to the same goal, nevertheless have more than once embarrassed the myth-making commentators. Because the Ancient and modern religions are all equally physical, and this it is only among the principles of nature that one must seek the gods of the nations.

There is a long way, as we can see, from this doctrine to the glue of Jean-Jacques;
It also appears to have been reserved for the highest initiation. But Whatever mystery may have been created, she no more belongs to the Ma-
What nonsense deism is; it's just one more piece of evidence supporting...
CO, as we have said, of the void of doctrine, which afflicts us at this moment the lodges.

In CCS lately, some brothers, more indiscreet than wise.

A PAGE FROM PftOUDHON SOUTH LA MASONNEnie 455

0

Having proposed using the lodges for religious renewal, he
The Masonic world responded to them with great common sense. that the principles of free inquiry and tolerance, which form the basis of Freemasonry, opposed its becoming the agent and the organ of no religious thought; that any profession of faith, becoming mandatory, implied, with regard to the one who rejects it, excom communication, therefore, was in contradiction with the principle of universal brotherhood, which is the true purpose of Masonic societies niques.

"We are told," the editor adds, "that the religious link is indispensable" Religion, on the contrary, appears to us as a solution to modern societies.
as an individual feeling completely independent of existence of progress and the well-being of societies. Collectively, it...
"It almost always appears as a danger."

Thus, religion is clearly and duly excluded from Freemasonry.
nery^ not in the sense that it excludes from its fold, neither Jew nor Christian neither Christian nor Muslim, and that she shows intolerance for any opinion religious union, but in the sense that it is, like the Revolution, the justice, free reason, above all religion. Accepting a pro

She doesn't want it. What does this mean, if not that the Freemason, as that Freemason, recognizes only one law, which is justice, and in the arch architect of the universe, affirms, not the substance or the cause, but the reason Sound, relationship, harmony of things? – PJ Proudhon.

Proudhon did not judge the scope of the rituals and the spirit of the Freemasonry, but not as Father Deschamps did it in the first book of this work.

CHAPTER TWENTY-SEVENTH

IsA Sect in Belgium and the Netherlands

§. 1. – Independent Morality and the Neutral School

Around 1860, the theory of independent morality was invented. by the lodges and put into circulation by them to gain acceptance their fundamental given to the general public, the separation of life social relationship with religion (see Introduction IV). Here is a discussion lecture given by Brother Goblet d'Aviella on January 26, 1879. for the consecration of the temple of the Philanthropic Friends^ which ex- prime well the goal pursued by the sect;

I was telling you, my brothers, during the ceremony where we laid the... the first stone of this temple (1), that Freemasonry was the philosophy OF LIBERALISM, that is to say, the source, the reservoir where the opponents of all prejudices and all superstitions had to draw their higher principles of moral guidance and political reconstruction.

As long as it's simply a matter of overturning systems based on error, superstition, or imposture: a purely negative criticism It can suffice for the task. But you can't build anything on negations, no more than one devotes oneself at length and completely to truths tingents and relative which were not the truth of yesterday and which will be Perhaps tomorrow's lie. It is necessary, for parties as for individuals due, an ideal that serves as a beacon to guide them against the pitfalls of selfishness and passion. Now, this ideal, apart from conceptions (!) V. the essential parts of this first speech cited in the introduction, IV.

sectarians that it must precisely serve to combat and replace,
Is it not Freemasonry that offers us its highest expression?
happier?

An example will better illustrate my point. What is currently In Belgium, the big question that preoccupies the government and fascinates Public opinion? It's the reform of popular education, this lever with which a philosopher said would uplift humankind. It is to remove from the REVEALED REUGTONS THE TEACHING OF THE ORAL, which they have so far monopolized public schools. Well, if It was true that, for Liberalism, there was no moral compass.
positive and absolute principles, founded on reason and common to all
We could not, without infringing upon freedom of conscience, to charge the State with teaching some kind of morality. The State, in short, could teach reading, writing, arithmetic, and many other things again; he should give up what I consider to be the most beautiful and the most important part of his educational mission: to make men and citizens. Neurotically, these principles, and, if the liberals

Those who want to find them, they only have to come to our temples and decipher them.
ON THE WALLS OF OUR FORECOURSES, THE PRINCIPLES FORMULATED IN OUR WORKS.

Freemasonry teaches that there is, in the moral world as in the physical world, absolute, primordial, permanent laws, universal saddles, independent of time and place, like sects and schools, based on reason and therefore destined to become the foundation of any rationally organized society. Such is the principle, which we understand command to do good for good and not for profit that we we could derive from it... These are the principles that have been formulated by the Declaration of the Rights of Man in France, before taking place in the most beautiful chapter of the Belgian Constitution. – And these are not Not here are DOGMAS, which Freemasonry claims to impose on reason.
a supposed divine revelation! Freemasonry* neither teaches nor pro-no dogma in the narrow and arbitrary sense of the word. But this These are principles that were arrived at starting from the fact that Man is a free and responsible being, endowed with reason which... allows one to glimpse the law of things, and a consciousness which entails it agreed to comply with it, and she succeeded without any other guide than the E.*.
F.. (Eternal Hearth), that is to say, by the sole effort of Reason: "this light which, according to a famous expression, enlightens every man coming in this world." And in proclaiming them, she is only conforming to the goal of its institution, – for this goal – as all those among us know you who, having reached the 3rd gr., have discovered, beneath the superstitions bi-the idioms of our rituals, the common and primordial myth of all the naturalistic religions of antiquity – this goal is the study of nature ture, that is to say, the discovery of the laws that govern the moral world,
As well as the physical world...

Freemasonry shows that it is not just a philosophy.
philosophy of progress, but also a religion, the religion of the ideal.

Now, what need is there for a secret society for that, se building Egyptian-style sanctuaries to perform rituals Mysterious? This is not the time, my brothers, to defend appearances. and the SECRET of Freemasonry*, which, moreover, do not need to be revealed split here. However, to limit myself to saying a word about the usefulness social of Freemasonry.*. in an era like ours, where what I call merai utilitarianism is increasingly invading all levels of society society, where men seem to be judged exclusively by their success and doctrines according to their immediate utility, where our universities kids, these hotbeds of free science, seem to be becoming nothing more than machines for manufacturing doctors and lawyers, faced with such Given the situation, can we still contest the existence of a vast association?
like Freemasonry*, which, in the presence of collapsing theocracies
From all sides, they gather to dedicate temples, as we do sounds today, a cult that will outlive all cults, because it rests on a progressive conception of nature, on the worship of law living, in the worship of truth, justice and fraternity? (1) »

A neutral school, to use a euphemism, which they used ministers to deceive the public conscience and pass the law of misfortune, aims to carry out the program of fr.*.
Aviella's goblet.

We shall see.

In 1881, F.*. Van-Humbeck, Minister of Public Instruction
The republic published a General Regulation for Normal Schools and primary normal sections of the State^ in which is the curriculum for the morality and etiquette course for three years. The different duties towards oneself, towards men They reviewed my principles there, including kindness towards animals.
evils; but of duties towards God not a word is said, and Even God is not named, or rather he is named in a way derisory. Indeed, right at the end of the 3rd year course program Born, entitled: Theoretical Morality, there is one last question designed as follows:

Examination of the various sanctions of the moral law: physical sanction, moral sanction (satisfaction of conscience and remorse), sanction of public opinion; sanctions derived from the philosophy of religion gions: the future life and God (2).

(1) KeproduU by the Courrier de Bruxelles of March 7, 1879.

(2) This document is published in its entirety in the Journal de Bruxelles of the Zi July 1881.

460 THE SECT IN BELGIUM

That is to say, the future life, God's judgments, his Their very existence is presented as a hypothesis, as a of the various philosophical systems under examination which we will consider young teachers live to engage, in a theoretical way^ but while warning them that practical morality is entirely at independent of such questions.

A newspaper of the sect, La Flandre libérale, has perfectly indicated the goal that Ton wanted to achieve.

Anyone who sends their child to the local school is in fact enlisted in the ranks of the Liberals.

How many people came to us without even knowing it! We succeeded!
even in the smallest villages, thus creating a strong group of people are moving closer to freethinking. Some may resist, but their children imbued from their earliest years with contempt for the cuUCy will break fa-civilly with Catholicism. There is a seed there that will sprout and bear fruit.
tifiera (i).

S 2. – A second step forward

The lodges are seeking to consolidate the victory they have achieved.
by passing the law of July 1, 1879, which secularized education state education and excludes religion from the framework of elementary education silence (book II, chap. XII S '»).

We have been able to see how, in the works to which, since 1863,
The lodges have spoken on this issue, and their views have been summarized.
in memoirs and bills published in one volume in 1865, Compulsory education was intended to be a sanction for teaching secular. The text of the Belgian constitution guarantees a
In an absolute manner, the freedom of information presents itself to a legislature
The nature of the difficulties, which explain the efforts and the work of lodges. Therefore, to bring the draft laws into effect Through it, the lodges in 1882 imagined provoking a on the side of provincial meetings of official schoolteachers, then a council general assembly in Arlon, where, under the pretext of addressing peri- issues In terms of teaching methods, they simply reproduced the }rojeis of the Law printed in the volume of the lodges.

(t) CilR in the brochure iaailuléo: The Masonic School in tielyique) pir Imu <i'Aaver3, BruxQlIes 188%.

The teachers of the province of Liège held a meeting in June 1882, in which they declared it necessary to impose parents have an obligation to ensure their children attend school. children under penalty of a fine, or at the very least of being deprived of their right of custody, guardianship, and above all, the right to be excluded from assistance communal (1).

In September, a general congress took place in Arlon. Live coverage their general of Primary Education at the ministry^ the f.*. Germain came to lead the debates and opened his sessions through a speech, in which he appealed to both the interests and to the passions of the unfortunate that the necessities of their position or their bad principles have reduced them to being his collaborators (2)^

For a long time, we have been united by the same work, by the same struggles, driven by the same hopes and the same confidence unwavering in the future of our schools (2). It is therefore with joy that I can see you all again, full of enthusiasm, gathered in large numbers in the city of Arlon, to share your knowledge, your experience education; to study the serious questions of education and teaching grouping, to seek ways to raise the school even higher municipal, the only one that can ensure true national development tional (//)

(1) Qand's Le Bien public, in its issues of June 28 and 29, 1882, by comparing the text of the declarations of the teachers of the province of Liège of that of the ine> memoranda and draft laws of the lodges, demonstrated in a tangible way that the Official teachers had done nothing but copy these memoirs.

(2) The solidarity that F.*. Van Uumbeck and his agent established between the government- The relationship between Freemasons and official schoolteachers is the result of a particu to Belgium. After the law of July 1, 1879, the bishops declared that the pa Renls could not, under penalty of sin, send their children to schools, hence Religious information was banned. (Book II cbap. XII g 3 note). All the more so The teachers could not continue to teach under such conditions. except in particular circumstances, the assessment of which the bishops reserved for them. Consequently, the vast majority of official schoolteachers, who had principles Catholics have resigned and found positions in all the Christian schools that the admirable generosity of Belgian Catholics opened at the same t weather in almost all municipalities.

Since the number of private schools is infinitely smaller in France, the same line Driving practice could not be followed after the law of March 28, 1882. On the contrary The teachers were committed to keeping their positions, as long as they were not dismissed would not mandate positive acts contrary to the faith. A very large number of Three of them deplore the disastrous path the Republic has taken in education.

Meetings like the Arlon congress were attempted in France in 1881; but they did not produce the result expected by Father Jules Ferry. Go, which is said to be the text concerning Belgian schoolteachers cannot therefore be applied in any way to France.

4C2 THE CULT IN BELGIUM

We will all pursue our goal with fervor; the progress of the national education. We will redouble our efforts so that our children receive in our primary schools an education based on truth. la. jiiisliceJ la moralilé... and you will work more courageously than never, I am convinced, to definitively ensure the triumph of National education: you will not allow it, – and we will help you will be involved in the efforts you make to achieve this goal; – you will not will not allow qxion to take away your primary school, this fertile land where science, morality, and freedom germinate (Loud and long cheers) matations).

What the Belgian Freemason ministry was looking for there was A kind of pressure to take another step forward, to establish compulsory education as in France^ conforming ment to the Masonic program. We saw how, from the very next day hand of the vote on the law of misfortune, the lodges had put this question to be studied (Book II, Chapter XIII, § 3). The congress of the institutes the teurs was only a means to transmit the watchword to liberal opinion. Indeed, this is what the result of its de-releases.

The assembly adopted, firstly, absolute free access as a condition essential.

(A second proposal tends towards the establishment of a jury tasked with making students graduating from private schools as well as official schools will be subjected to an examination that will decide whether they can be issued a certificate knowledge. Various advantages will be attached to this certificate; among other things. tre, f admission into public administrations or establishments industrial matters, allocation of electoral rights, etc., etc.

A lively discussion ensued regarding what the elements, which will be included in the composition of the jury^ that the proposal aims to sition.

A schoolteacher in Liège and a schoolteacher in Saint-Gilles-lez-Bruxel- They develop a series of considerations for the purpose of establishing a jury composed of both official and independent teachers. invoke, in support of their system, the principle of tolerance and the idea that we must, as much as possible, avoid the criticisms to which the public education would obviously be exposed on the part of our administrations. academics, if private education were excluded from the training of juries.

who is protesting against the composition of the mixed juries. "The intervention of the "clergy in primary education," the speaker exclaimed, "was imposing possible, before 1879, because he is opposed to all progress, that he works in outside of nature and humanity (!!). Now, we know, outside In nature, there is nothing true or just (!!) outside of humanity. Nothing good. This intervention is even more impossible since the law of 1879; there is between him and us an abyss that we will not cross, nor will never fill the void.

A SECOND STEP FORWARD

463

The proposal under discussion is put to a vote. and the assembly rejects the intervention of Venseignement libre in Vorgu' Jury training.

The assembly then adopted a series of measures, the effect of which was to to enable all parents to provide primary education to their children; these measures consist of regulating the work children in industries, in the implementation of methods rilables (??), in the allocation of subsidies and allowances to parents needy.

The assembly admits, in addition, like French law, the application of penalties (1).

The concert that exists between Freemasonry in all countries is acc caused by the identity of the measures of persecution directed against the religion. The Freemasons of Belgium are determined not to let themselves to be surpassed by their French brothers. At the opening of the session of the Chamber, in December 1882, the central section had, by the or gane of his rapporteur, the f. *. Goblet d'Aviella, requested the suppression of 442 vicars, confiscation of the salaries of the cha- noines and episcopal secretaries. In the discussion, within the section, we have shown the intention of submitting more and more the administration of factories to government interference. From Moreover, Brother Goblet d'Aviella has just had the following brought to the order of a proposal in the House aimed at removing sea the exemption from military service enjoyed by students in theology, which is not comfortable. This is, as we can see, the copy of the laws passed in Paris (book II, chapter XII, § 6), which What aggravates the inequity of this project is that at the same time one wants to maintain military immunity for hundreds of schoolchildren normal and to the teachers of the official education system, who in Belgium is essentially anti-Christian.

(Tre XXII, S 4), the f.*. Gratry, Minister of War, prohibited strictly for officers to be part of the conferences St. Vincent de Paul and Catholic patronages, but contrary-relative to the regulations, he left them complete freedom to to become affiliated with Masonic lodges (i).

(1). See the Brussels Courier of September 14 and 15, 1882.

464

THE CULT IN BELGIUM

§3. -• Solidarity Societies

There are currently around twenty companies in Belgium, including The aim is to establish a pact between their members to remove to religion all the acts of life.

"They join forces," says one of their manifestos, "to obtain, after their dead, that their remains not be defiled by the antics of the charnel houses Latins, who swindle the public, who are foolish enough to resort to these ex-ploiteurs: priests, pastors, rabbis, popes and other mummers of all kinds sort of indispensable upholders of oppression... The light is Once it's done, we must follow it. Every citizen must be convinced. that evil is God, and that the exploiters of this must be struck down aberration (2).

Here are the recommended mandate and will forms Almanac of Freethought^ Liège section, for 1882.

MANDATE FORM

to remove from his death the religious obsessions of priests

AND OTHER PEOPLE

I, the undersigned, first name, last name, profession, residing at street

No. , declares he wants to die outside of any religion. sitive; I want no priest of any faith to come and find To fill my last moments.

Name, profession, residing at street number ®, and to M first name,

Name, profession, address of residence street n*, concurrently and separately, mandate and full power to ensure that my will, freely expressed herein,

(1) Le Françait of February 6, 1883.

(2) History of the Rationalist Societies of Belgium by Affranchissement, Druxellee, typograpliio de Brimée, ia-18, 1879) pp. 3, and 4).

SOLIDARITY SOCIETIES 465

be faithfully executed. To that end, when they believe me to be in danger of death and unable, through infirmity or illness, to save myself against the religious obsessions of priests or other people, they will move into my house, they will take such measures that the Circumstances will dictate; they will rule as masters over all this which concerns my person^ which I place under their absolute guardianship.

I want their will to be considered as the expression of the my own. I ask them to faithfully execute this mandate and to enforce, if necessary, through judicial authority.

Thus done at [location], in three originals, of which each of my agents received one, the 3 being between my hands. [Signature]

TESTAMENTARY FORMULA

I, the undersigned, declare that I wish to be buried, without any religious ceremony, by the Society The Free Thought Society of Liège, founded on June 20, 1878. This is my testament that I charge the citizen to execute punctually and which I place under the protection of the Civil God. Thus done of my own hand, in three originals, one of which is issued to

Mr. Other at the Free Thought Society of Liège, the third one remaining in my possession. Date and Signature:

And it is in the name of human freedom that a man puts himself thus under the absolute tutelage of one of his peers (1), abdi-
As for the advance, all will, all possibility of enlightenment!

According to the table of Belgian Free Games Societies that we have before our eyes, they exist in cities where there are already Masonic lodges.

The lodges are their propagators, and in reality they have all the principles.

Things have gone so far that the lodge Les Américains Philanthropes has put under consideration the question of whether she would declare Apostates and renegades are all the brothers who, being sick, accept would seek the help of religion (2). It has not been made public the decision was made because of the state of mind, even in the world

(1) In religious orders, the vow of obedience is never made except under the with the most express reservation of the rights of conscience, uhi peccatum non cerneretur says the Summa Constitutionum of St. Ignatius, regula 31. There is nothing similar there. to the absolute control of Masonic sects; individual responsibility and freedom judgment, the source of merit and demerit, are fully safeguarded.

(2) V. Journal of Freemasonry helgcy *26® day of the 10th month, 1880.

30

read

406 THE SECT IN BELGIUM AND THE NETHERLANDS

liberalism in Belgium has not yet reached the desired level for That said, the pressure from the lodges is nonetheless very intense. this meaning, and, some time later, the lodge Les Vrais amis de V Union and Proyres deposed its venerable, guilty of having allowed to his daughter to make her first communion (1).

The lodges believe they can banish God from the conscience with impunity. Human science: but the thaw is near. ^History of Rationalist societies in UcUjique, which we have already discussed cited several times, claims for the socialists the honor for having founded in 1854 the first solidarity society ap- Peleus VA Franchissement. The bourgeois, the capitalists have sought to gain access to it in order to exclude its demands socialists and restrict war to God alone; but "in destroying God, J said this brochure, rationalism affirmed the "Human fraternity. The organization of the dispossessed is in good shape." "enforcement proceedings against a company based on the most overwhelming

"following a new social life, the foundations of which would be the "Justice in solidarity!" The Paris Commune is in a continuation presented as the realization of law and justice (2)!

The freethinking bourgeoisie have been warned!

Besides, they have no right to complain. One of the high dignitaries of Freemasonry, Brother Jottrand did not feared, in the session of the Chamber of Deputies on May 31 1871, to heap insults upon Mr. Thiers and the government of Versailles, on the occasion of the legitimate repression of the Com mune (3).

4. -Fr. Goffin

Our work has often referred to Brother Goffin, to both the enfant terrible of the lodges and a precursor of their ideas. We will read with interest the notice that was devoted to him at the time of his death, the Courier from Bruxelles, no. 21 of September 1882:

(1) Fact cited by VUnion, of April 12, 1882.

(2) History of the rationalist societies of Belgium, by Affranchissement, jn-18, Bruxcllos, 1879, pp. 12 and 13.

(3) See Louis Piaux, Histoire île la guerre civile de i87i (i 0 - 8 *, Paris, 1879).

F. Goffin 4C7

The death – alas, a civil death – of Joseph Gof&o, a man of letters, died on the 15th of this month, in Lackeii, at the age of 42.

Joseph Goffin was a Freemason and an independent liberal. He never but wanted to bow down under the iron fist of Mr. Frère, and, in His newspaper, La Réforme, gave the doctrinaires a lot of trouble.
Verviers. He also removed, subjected to all persecutions, a free-imaginable female thinkers.

Pursued relentlessly and mercilessly by our great supporters of the tolerated
"france" and "free examination," he had to leave Verviers, and he was founded last, in Spa, the Memorial, which, after having made such a meager meal, has finished to eat at the trough of the Peltzer clique.

However, the old radical burgrave soon grew tired of this servitude, and he preferred to retire to Brussels, to live there in his hard and stoic life.
than isolation. In 1879, he wanted to try one last time, if the times were not mature enough to express their liberal opinions without reservation thought that Freemasonry should finally emerge from its shadow promising, and to stop being a bat and show oneself in full light.

He said in his program;

We are no longer, as we were six thousand years ago, under the influence has mysteries of Isis and Orisis. The time of riddles and meetings "Secrets have disappeared. The veils must be torn away in the interest of..." To ignorant masses.

No one was more suited to do this useful task than Brother Goffin. He who wrote the Popular History of Freemasonry. But immediately he an immense cry of terror arose from one end of the Grand-Orient of Belgium, especially as Goffin announced his intention to "to unmask those who have made order the stepping stone of their ambitions" tion. » How could we! We were going to tear off all the false noses, and the vulgar would initiated into the conspiracies that are being plotted behind the trappings of the Lodges! but all would be lost and the prestige of the secret society!

And the persecution of the partisans of liberal obscurantism versus the unwelcome Freemason "light-bearer" Goffin admits it in his issue of January 18, 1881:

"Some of our sisters," he writes, "blame us for putting ourselves in all opposition with the regulatory body, and daring to tell it truths that "No one, until now, had thought to formulate it publicly. "They even claim that the alleged author of our newspaper will be put in..." "accusation, for having revealed secrets, which must be ignored by the "vulgar,"

468 THE SECT IN BELGIUM AND THE NETHERLANDS

Goffin responds to these tremors with this terrible apostrophe;

"Hey! My brothers, what's the point of hiding if you're doing good?"

Goffin was nevertheless forced to cease publication. He was put on a accusation by the Grand Orient,

F. Goffin complicated his case with personal attacks—nelles, by rôvCdations which were to make his journal very d—agreeable to the Masonic luminaries.

Here are a few lines he wrote in February 1880, in response to self-serving attacks which later earned him the honor of Exclusion. They deserve to be regulated.

its ranks and to no longer receive followers, who not only respond tooth in an evasive and incomplete manner to the.\ questions forming the basis do their c.xamcn, but also hold in the profane world a con-

"An irregular edition likely to discredit the institution itself."

I'm being asked to clarify. So: Hey, my F.*., this isn't about search so hard to find among us the unfaithful husband who, surprised flagrante ileiicto, nearly getting knocked unconscious by his lawful wife; the merchant who gets rich a little too quickly; the agent of exchange dealing in fraudulent securities or acting as an intermediary for a Philippart, the infamous reveler who forgets to pay his debts and struts around the park in the company of a pretty stuntwoman; the bad son who cradles his hand against his father; the lover who abandons his mistress braid and her child after having lived with them for several years; the newborn A struggling businessman leaving his hometown to go to another city, to set up a magnificent business with his creditors' money; the son of a prominent figure placed under judicial supervision for having had too much often needs her laundress, despite the proverb that one must washing one's dirty laundry in public; the guardian, who seduces his ward and rejects his wife; the police alderman who neglects to fulfill his duty, when required; the lawyer who refuses to give an account of his management tion to an unhappy customer; then, certain lodges that let die their members in misery, and this mob of sycophants of power and aspiring paid employees, who cease to frequent the tem. magpies as soon as they have achieved the goal of their hopes.

It would not be very difficult for us to extend this rich repertoire even further. toire and to go into certain details that might lead one to guess the no one who hides behind these vile acts; we will not do it; we we believe we have said enough to attract the serious attention of the body re-regulator on the danger of staying longer, without taking energetic resolution to introduce the scalpel into this wound of Tlnsti* tuition.

The League of Education in Holland 469

"It's too natural," said the Courier of BmæelleSy for qnenous
 "Let's make some comments," and we can add that This is the best illustration of Masonic morality (1).

§5. – The League of Education in Holland

We have already pointed this out several times in this volume the action of Masonic sects in Holland (book III, chapter XII, § 3 and chap. XIV). For a long time she did not appear to have of repercussions on the country's domestic politics nor on relations denominational ports.

Since the Constitution of 1848, Catholics, who form two-fifths of the population enjoyed a freedom complete, and, although Protestant, the dynasty, which is sincere Christian faith loyally protected this freedom. Originally the orthodox Protestant party, the conservatives in politics, showed themselves quite willing to interpret the stipulations restrictively the provisions of the Constitution, to impose on the Catholic Church the outdated aspects of the Josephist regime that William Ist had purportedly restored from 1815 to 1830. The liberals, on the contrary, defended the rights of Catholics and sought their salvation. alliance in electoral struggles.

This situation has changed. Through an evolution that has occurred A complete reversal took place almost everywhere in the world. in the respective positions of the parties.

(1) On 22 September 1882. Two major trials have recently shown the Belgium, what was the morality of the Masonic world? The Pelizer brothers, condemned in December 1882 for the assassination of lawyer Bernays, following a situation & which it seems that F.-. Godefroid alluded to, the Peltzer brothers were the leaders of Antwerp Freemasonry: it was they who, in 1872, had organized a riot among the German populace of this city to force Mr. the Count of Chambord to leave the hotel where he was receiving his friends.

In the other fraction of sects, a member of the Free Thought Society, the f.*. Bogaerts betrayed his benefactor César de Paepe in a heinous manner and aroused public outrage by the manner in which, before the Assize Court of Brissolles of November 2, 1881, he affirmed the practices of independent morality. This wretch was one of the subjects who gave the most hope to the radical party.

470 THE SECT IN Belgium and the Netherlands

"In the blatant nature of the Roman question," says the author of a Excellent work on the religious question in the Netherlands[^] The liberal press applauded the Italian revolution without reservation. He praised Cavour and Garibaldi and had only insults for the Pope and his defenders. The antipathy of the liberals towards Napoleon minua from the moment that the sovereign Pontiff was the victim of the Napoleonic policy, and, as a result of the influence of the lodges, their newspapers took on a character of hostility and hatred against Catholics, their institutions and their clergy, and forced them, in a way, to separate themselves from the party, of which they had been the loyal and faithful allies (1).

The German Kulturkampf singularly aggravated this situation and soon almost all the so-called liberals declared the war on Catholicism. The rationalist Protestant party is, in elit, which had essentially become revolutionary. Pastors called belonging to this faction of Protestantism collaborate in current, the Arnehmsche current^ the Tydspiegel, the Vadcrland, the Noorden, and appeal to it and echo all the hatreds, which in The lodges pursue the men and things of Catholicism.

In June 1875, the Protestant assembly of Leuwaarde, capital from Friesland, a professor of philosophy at the University of Utrecht, The incredulous Mr. Opzoomer, shamelessly revealed the thought that... anime: "The laws of May will come," he said (2).

The debate focused primarily on the issue of education: A law of August 13, 1857 had introduced the principle of the new The practicality of public schools, but left a fairly large degree of titude to municipalities to subsidize private schools, where They were founded by the different faiths. The Catholics ques were content with this law, although it was not always applied towards them with sufficient impartiality by the Protestant civil servants. May, opposition against the law came from a group of liberals who, under the pretext of fa to improve national education, they founded an association in Holland a cation similar to the French League of Education.

"Mr. Moens, a modern (rationalist) pastor in Sneek, elected to appointed by this city, after he had obtained his emeritus status, and named

(1) General Archive of Belgium, July 1875.

(2) IbW.

The Law on Education in Holland 471

then primary intelligence inspector in the province of Utrecht by Mr. Geertsema, Minister of the Interior, and MA Kerdijk, a Maelite who became a Protestant (1), placed himself at the head of the movement [Vereeniging voor Volttsonderwigs]. There are what* In the 12th century, an association called Schoolverhondf was founded. or league of schools. The stated goal was to put an end to the students' neglect of attendance, especially among the children from middle-class families, to generalize private education* mayor, to increase the number of teachers as well as their salaries, etc. It was suspected that beneath these fine projects The underlying idea was to gradually move into teaching free, compulsory and secular, and to spread more and more rationalist doctrines.

"The founders of the League of Schools were Messrs. P. Har- D. Harting, a professor in Utrecht, and D. Harting, a Mennonite pastor in Enkhuysen, who received the Dutch Lion Cross as a reward dais from the hands of the Liberal minister, Mr. Fock.

"Their true tendencies soon became apparent."*

They wanted public education to be provided outside of any religion, in opposition to private (religious) education and that it could develop rapidly through the increase of number of schools and teachers. The costs that would be incurred From this point on, the municipalities were to be reimbursed for the four-fifths by the State. In addition, the instruction was to be made as obligatory and forced as possible; but we proceed This would gradually change because the Dutch nation supports eagerly awaiting any constraint. In short, the real goal of the The League aimed to eventually eliminate all life from private education. by burdening it with financial charges and paying the brand rationalist approach at the expense of the state.

4c hdl Schools League, which is now merged into Vasso^ donation for national education, created circles everywhere and received the warm support of modern pastors. Some Naive Catholics were taken in; the vast majority of these latter, or rather almost all of them, as well as the Protestants

(i) In Germany and even in France, a certain number of Jews, who want To better integrate into Christian society, they convert to Protestantism. We have noted that in general – with a few honorable exceptions of course – these eonvertù protatanU are the most bitter enemies of the Church and of all Christ positive tianism.

472 THE SECT IN BELGIUM AND THE NETHERLANDS

Orthodox Christians or Wolutiounaires refused to participate. tie (1).

A law of August 17, 1878, passed despite the opposition of Catholics liques and orthodox Protestant backs, has aggravated practically all the principles laid down in the law of 1857, by obliging each com common to maintain a public school, hence all teaching Religious institutions are excluded. State subsidies are increased to a a point that makes competition increasingly expensive for the free schools. However, the League of Schools was unable to prevail The principle of compulsory education was upheld: the law was limited to to a series of measures, "which should gradually prepare the mind public to the adoption of the coercive system" (2).

As in all Protestant countries, the princes of the house sovereign and many very honest people believed they could to be part of the lodges. We indicated how it should be done, in general thesis^ to appreciate these facts (see book III, preliminary chapter) naire, S 7). However, those Protestants, whose conscience is more delicate, understood the danger that Christ posed Christianity, Masonic affiliation. In 1819, Prince Frederick

At the Restoration, a great protector of the Order, he was frightened by the profound impiety of the rites of the high degrees and abandoned the Masonry, indicating the patterns in a circular address greetings to all Freemasons in the Netherlands above the grades of prenti and companion (3).

Currently, Prince Alexander of Orange, heir presumptive Head of the crown, is national grand master and goes quite often preside over lodge meetings. Orthodox Protestants have moved by this situation, they addressed him with reprimands that published in Dutch newspapers in December 1882.

After touching testimonials of loyalty and respect, this The address is expressed as follows:

Your people have the right and the duty to express their grief to you and his grievances. The lodge is a secret matter for your people and a secret without reason. Everything that comes in the light of its principles and of His actions contradict the religious principles of the most

(1) General Review of Belgium, July 1875.

(2) V. Yearbook of foreign legislation, published by the Society of Common Legislation adorned, t. VIII, 1879. pp. 516 to 548.

(3) See important document reproduced by Mr. Arnaud Neut, Freemasonry submitted to the light of publicity (2nd ed.) volume I, pp. 175 and following.

THE League of Education in Holland 473

a large number of citizens of the Netherlands. Among your subjects, the Catholics which cannot honorably or conscientiously support Freemasonry nonsense.

For all these reasons, your acceptance of the supposed dignity of Grand Master," and the visits that YAR makes to the lodges are a source of scandal and sorrow for your loyal subjects. They are wounded, not in their loyalty and obedience, but in their respect and their Love. They think they deserve better from the house by their remonstrances. of Orange" that the Prince of Orange himself does not do, when, fleeing "Advertising" is at work in secret assemblies, where initiates only are admitted.

The glory of the name of Orange was won in broad daylight: it must not not to be compromised or lost in a lodge!

CHAPTER TWENTY-EIGHTH

Freemasonry in the German Empire

§ 1 ", – A look at the composition of the lodges

GERMAN

We find the following indications in the Almanac of German lodges for 1880, published in Leipzig.

Brother Guillaume appears there as protector of the German lodges. orders.

According to this almanac, there are 8 Grand Lodges in Germany and 436 lodges, not counting the clubs, the vereine and the kraenz-
Dear.

These lodges have more than 42,000 active members.

Among the dignitaries of the grand lodges are:

2 Protestant preachers or pastors.

33 members of the public education system.

6 officials and employees.

6 judges or lawyers.

11 army officers.

16 councillors, mayors or deputy mayors.

14 bourgeois.

Among the venerable masters and assistant masters of the lodges one relief;

476 Freemasonry in the German Empire

0

22 Protestant preachers or pastors.

I, a Protestant deacon.

154 members of the public education system.

18 officials and employees.

87 judges or lawyers.

44 army officers,

113 councillors, mayors or deputy mayors.

446 bourgeois.

What is striking about this painting is the large number of Pastors and professors who run the lodges! What must it be the number of pastors and professors, who are simple members?

This contains a whole revelation about the German school, even on the Protestant pulpit.

We have before us a small piece of propaganda from the intended to present Freemasonry in the most softened light, the most suitable ones not to frighten religious men. Now, here is what it says:

"The Bible, not taken literally as the rule
"infallible of particular beliefs, but understood as the "concrete manifestation of the idea of faith in its most "Elevated, is the symbol of our convictions concerning the truth {!})."

Masonic hypocrisy is the same everywhere: consider Thus, the Bible is to be treated like Strauss and Renan, and those those who continue to include it on the table of the lodges are deceiving
This doctrine, moreover, produces its effects.

Statistics from the London Bible Society tell us whereas in all countries of the world the number of The number of printed and distributed copies of the Bible is increasing.
In Germany, since the Kulturkampf, it has decreased by 13 0/0(2)!

S 2. – Freemasonry and the Prussian administration

General F. Selazinski was able to say, in his work frei^

(1) Die Freimaurerei in zehn Fragen und Anlworte sur Auufklarung fur dnt Volk und denen freunde, St-Gallen, 1882. in-S* p. 25.

(2) Fact cited by Mr. Luzzati, in Social Reform, issue of November 19th 1882.

A COLLABORATOR OF MR. DE BISMARCK 477

maureri iind Christentlium, printed in Berlin, with Tautorisa-Lion of the Grand Lodge of Germany:

Of all the European powers that have been in contact with the Freemasonry, only two have always been consistent with herself: Prussia, which had always protected her, the Papacy, which had always days fought (1).

Two key facts reported in the new edition from the Allgemeines Handbuch der Freimaurerei (vol. IV, Ergänzwi'- gen^ v® Köln), show how the Prussian police and the Masonry identifies itself;

On May 4, 1867, the Landgericht (court of first instance) of Cologne, condemned Sebastian Scharfer, rector of the Church of Minorities and the general president of the Gesellverein (Society of Companions), at 25 thafines or 10 days in prison, because they had published in Les Meinístie Volksblceiter an article taken from the Sudliroler Volksblatt, in which were found the most dishonorable allegations and the more absurd attacks against Freemasonry, especially since many in places Freemasons were required to trample the crucifix or cr dear above, pledged to abstain from the sacraments, enshrined a crucifix in the parquet floor to step on when entering, etc.

On October 25 of the same year, the same person was sentenced Cologne animal control police spoke of a fine of 30 tha-1st and at the expense of, for having offended Doctor Zille, of Leipzig, as Freemason.

This was the prelude to the KtUtwkampf.

S 3. ■— A COLLABORATOR OF M* DE BiSMARCK

The German newspapers of January 1881 brought us this Obituary notice:

Arnold Buge, one of the first leaders of the revolution in Germany,
A former friend of Mazzini and Ledru-Rollin, has just died in Brighton.
Born in 1802 in Bergen (Rügen Island), he studied at the universities cities of Halle, Jena and Heidelberg. He was then sentenced to six years

(1) Quoted by Pachtler, Der StilleKrieg gegen Thron md Altarf 2nd ed., p. 370.

has detention as a member of a Tugendbund, a secret society of students* deans. In 1830, he became a professor at the University of Halle, and published successively a number of works of philosophy and criticism* that, in which he attacked the Church and the State. In fear of new* Following his convictions, he emigrated to France, then to Switzerland. Revolution of 1848, he founded first in Leipzig, then in Berlin, one day* a radical movement called the Reformation; he read, at that same time, part of the Frankfurt Assembly, where he sat on the far left. Having taken Having taken part in various insurrectionary movements, he was forced to flee and seeking refuge in England, in July 1850. Ruge had... converted, since 1866, to the policies of Mr. Bismarck. In 1870, he preached the annexation of Alsace and Lorraine. The Reichstag had voted in favor of the former conspirator an annual pension, which was served until her death.

§4. – Why the Kùlturkamp did not end

The Union of October 23, 1882 published an interesting correspondence dance that we are going to read;

The anniversary of the birth of the Imperial Prince of Germany, which took place on the 18th, is celebrated by Berliner Tageblatt in a very strange way. After recalling that the imperial prince was opposed to the movement antisemitic and that he had repeatedly described it as "shameful for Germany," the said newspaper congratulates the prince in his capacity as Franco Freemason. On this occasion, the sheet gives of the Freemason career A brief summary of the prince, which is not without interest. We learn* we know that the Imperial Prince was received as a Freemason on November 5, 1853. that is to say, at the age of twenty-two. The reception was conducted by his father, then Prince of Prussia and now Emperor of Germany, in presence of the grand masters of the three great Prussian lodges and of so that the new member spent the first three that very evening degrees in the "grand lodge of the country." The father, who since 1840 was Freemason (his brother, Frédéric-Guillaume LY, born had never been one), addressed the following speech to his son upon his admission:

"May you be and become a strong support for this order; then no Not only will your own future be secure, but above all you'll have the beautiful satisfaction in having always tried to spread around you what is "Good and true."

In the same year, the prince became Grand Master of the "Great Masonic lodge of Germany.

In 1861, the king entrusted him with the "ordinary affairs of protector of the lodges of Prussia, and the presidency in the sessions of the society of great masters of Berlin. » The "young grand master," says the Tagus-Blatt, in conclusion to his summary^ since his entry into the functions* lions, first of all, tried to inform himself well and then to contribute to the best of his ability to the realization of the "noble intentions of the order," The year 1870 arrived and with it the anniversary of the great lodge of the country. The speech then given by the imperial prince was for many members of Freemasonry, a historical fact, which ushered in a new era for Freemasonry. The "new "era" began, as is known, soon after 1870 at the same time than the "Eultürkampf." As for the internal affairs of France-Freemasonry, the imperial prince employed and still employs his influence to favor the admission of Jews, who are not considered as worthy by a portion of German Freemasons. 11 follows in This is the emperor's opinion, and we have no doubt that, sooner or later, this the question is not resolved everywhere in Germany in a favorable way to the Jews, as it has long been the case in French lodges, English, etc. Already, now, the number of Jewish Freemasons in Germany is quite considerable, because the admission of the Israelites is not not forbidden in German lodges, and lodges outside the Prussia generally admits Israelites.

The frank reporter probably also belongs to this group. mason of the Berliner Tageblatt, which, moreover, is for indiscretions sometimes committed in his reports on the lodges, has already had disputes with the Norddeutsche Allgemeine Zeitung, It is possible that the The desire to give "spicy" news has often been the driving force. responding to the Berliner Tageblatt further than he should have, but this "Brother" never published any real secrets.

At the heart of it all lies the Semitic and anti-Semitic question. and the Norddeutsche Allgemeine Zeitung also appears to be the organ of the Anti-Semite Freemasons. That certainly lacks logic, because, given the position held by Freemasons with regard to Christianity On the positive side, it's really not very reasonable to be so scrupulous. towards the Jews.

S. 5. – The question of Swiss schools

Since 1866, Switzerland has increasingly gravitated into the orbit of the German Empire. The Radical Party is working towards Germanization there. and to the de-Christianization of the country, and as everywhere he seeks

The tax was set by Dr. Schenk, former president of the committee. federation! It carries the prohibition of all Christian emblems, of All prayers, of any religious nature, are prohibited at school. But otherwise, the autonomy still enjoyed by the cantons is an obstacle to the implementation of this plan. The radicals sought to get rid of of this obstacle. Carefully leaving the pro- Dr. Schenk's gram, they had the chambers vote on it federal law establishing a federal secretary and ordering an inquiry into the state of public education. Fortunately, Catholics and conservatives have found a weapon in the Referendum. The Swiss people, consulted directly, rejected This law passed by a large majority in November 1882.

In Switzerland, as everywhere, the leaders of the Radical Party appeared hold to the lodges. The main organ of this party, the Bund of Bern is run by Freemasons and the Grand Master of the The Alpina Grand Lodge is headed by John Cuénoud, the police director. central in Geneva.

CHAPTER TWENTY-NINTH

The Franggombony in Spain Under

ALPHONSE Xn

We have already pointed out (Book II, Chapter XII, § 3) the role that the Mason his nerie had at the elevation of Alfonso XII to the throne. His ob The primary goal was to prevent, above all, the rise of Don Carlos, just as she had excluded her grandfather from the throne (book III, Chapter VI, Section 4). Whatever the Christian appearances of new regime, however personal sincerity it may have the young Alfonso XII, a latent work of disorganization social dechristianization of this noble country is not being accomplished. no less since its advent in considerable proportions rables.

The number of lodges is increasing every day. Before 1868, it there were only a small number who concealed their existence; Today, there are more than 360. The Grand Lodge of Spain has 154 lodges under his authority; the Marquis of Seoane is the Grand Master* The Grand Orient of Spain^ whose Grand Master Sagasta was there until his appointment to the ministry, number 162. plus 30 chapters. The Grand Orient of Portugal retains its jurisdiction dictionary on approximately 40 lodges. Finally, a dozen lodges relegated wind from foreign Masonic powers. One can assess from 25,000 to 30,000 is the number of active Spanish Freemasons and their The figure is increasing daily.

Freemasonry in Spain under Alfonso XII

The Bulletin of the Scottish Symbolic Grand Lodge, in its January 1882 issue published the following article, which said quite the official rank that Freemasonry has taken in this country :

In Spain, Freemasonry has suffered cruel vicissitudes in various eras; it has been alternately tolerated and proscribed, and fate of our Spanish F^.. has never been enviable. We were waiting with concern, to know how King Alfonso XII would act towards him, and we are pleased to see that his promises of complete freedom of conscience were held. liHl.. Gr.. Eraser. of Spain, the f.. Praxedns Mateo Sagasta has just been appointed Prime Minister. This ensures that Freemasonry has the freedom to carry out its mission. of charity and to spread its light. Its new functions have forced F. Sagasta to resign from G.. Gomm.'. , and our FF.. have appointed to replace him F.. Don Antonio Romero Ortiz, former Minister of State, Member of Parliament for Gortes, and currently Governor of the Bank of Spain.

I/Installation of the new elected official to the position of G.'. M.'. and Souv.'. G.. Gomm.'. took place in Madrid on May 10th, in the presence of a large part of the Masonic, Spanish world. The celebration would have been even more of brilliance, if Brother Sagasta had not been prevented from installing his own staff element sound .*< 00068860 ^

At 5 o'clock in the afternoon, the G*. L.'. was opened in the manner accustomed, and the G.*. Sec.'. , the f.'. Juan Utor Fernandez, read at the new vel éln the decision that allowed him to take the gavel and presi-der la T.'. .

The representative of f.'. Sagasta, ill.'. f.. Montejo Rohledo steps forward cit at the '0,.'. appointed a commission of seven members of the L.'. to to conduct the elected G.'. M.'. between the two G., by making him pass under the steel vault. The oath was taken and the installation of the other ILOs* began. ht in ordinary form.

Mr. Montejo Robledo presented in a very fine speech the pros sandstone of Freemasonry in Spain during the five years of the G.'. M.'. of the Sagasta family. Under the auspices of the Great Orient of Spain, There are currently 160 lodges, and many of these L.. can to have more than 100 members. He expressed his satisfaction at seeing the Mina, congratulating the Spanish government on this recognition official Itii had been granted by the Obed. of Italy, France, of the Mexico, Brazil, Buenos Aires, Uruguay, etc., etc., including A few representatives were present: "I myself," he said, "have the honor of representing the Grand Orient of France, whose insignia I wear with pride.

Freemasonry in Spain under Alfonso XII 483

Father Ortiz replied that he would do everything possible to maintain the Order in its present prosperity and good relations with the powerful masonic sessions from all over the world.

The ff. . Llan0'Persi, Sergio Martinez del Bosch^ General Qorona presented the congratulations of the FF. *. present.

A splendid banquet concluded this celebration, attended by all the Freemasons present. withdrew with the conviction that the interests of the F..>M.. would in good hands as long as they would smooth between those of the G.'.-O.. of Espa gne and its T.. III.. G.. M.. Romero Ortiz.

It is sometimes said that in Spain Freemasonry is first and foremost linked to political parties. That's true: but its divisions in Rival Easts, corresponding to diverse factions, do not do not prevent them from being united on the ground in the fight against E-church.

We have seen (volume I, Appendix A, and book III, chapter XV, 1) how anti-Christianity and even atheism reigned in the lodges in this country to the same degree as in France or Italy.

hQ Monde maç(yimique^ in its March 1881 issue, a published correspondence from Spain, which indicates the existing agreement* both French Freemasonry and Spanish Freemasonry gnole:

It would seem that very little effort would be needed to bring about today all the Spanish masons to group together around a single center. We have reported on the new trends that have emerged. in central as well as southern Spain. We have under the eyes an eloquent call for unity that the Asilo lodge of the Vcrud of the Ferrol has just sent a letter to all Spanish masons. Rightly alarmed of the recent invasion of monks expelled from France, the lodge of Ferrol deplores the anarchy in which Freemasonry finds itself today of his country. In Galicia, as in Catalonia, as everywhere, Enlightened and liberal minds know what Spain had become under the domination of the convents; they fear, with some reason, a a return to a dark and abhorrent past.

the Roman militias, but for that they must unite, and May petty squabbles not undermine so much effort. meritorious and paralyze the best intentions. Italian Freemasonry became powerful the day she understood that she absolutely needed the "unity of the government"; Spanish Freemasonry does not It will be no less, if she manages to have the same conviction. Above

484 Freemasonry in Spain under Alfonso Xth

(According to their personal preferences, the Spanish Freemasons will know how to put the interior of their homeland.

We have published in this very volume, concerning the abolition of the death penalty, an account of what happened recently in Spain on this subject (Book III, Chapter XVIII). There we saw the influence that the lodges had acquired over the government, thanks to the presence of the f •. Sagasta and numerous affiliates in the upper echelons of power.

This influence resulted in a draft law aimed at the goal of restoring civil marriage, which the government presented in the 1881 session. Civil marriage had been introduced mentally under the revolutionary regime of 1875, but he had been suppressed as a result of the reaction movement, which had The country was delivered from the Republicans. The F. Sagasta was supported. on this occasion by Mr. Montero Rios, a former minister of the Republic in 1870. During the discussion, which took place which took place in the Senate and was marked by eloquent protests following the bishops' statements, the Minister of Justice declared that if the rupt relations with Rome were taking place. The government of Don Alphonse was established. would be worse off from Charles' conduct ///, and would know how to give Ve.Tem- pious firmness against the Church (1). This is the universal program of Freemasonry, which is thus accomplished gradually, and if the The government of Alfonso XII is not progressing any faster, if he has The civil marriage project has been postponed; it must be awarded. only to the energy that Catholics deploy in the struggle, and especially to the fear inspired in him by the Carlists, around the which should be released sooner or later, the grouping of all forces conservatives of this noble l)ays.

A number of civil burials are beginning to take place to drive to Madrid with an advertisement that attests to the complicity of ministers. Mr. Figueras recently gave this sad spectacle key (2).

(1) (pure VASR0citiion calholUue on January 15, 1882.

(?) V. /rt Xaço (tíc Lisbon), 10'' December 1882.

CHAPTER THIRTIETH

THE SECT IN ITALY BT THE PAPAUTY

§ – Plans for Masonic Congresses in Rome

Oq has seen several times in the course of this work how the sect is relentlessly working to corrupt the Italian population. The overthrow of the temporal power of the popes did not please her that one step, as Father Deschamps has shown. It is to her spiritual authority which she attacks with fury.

A project for a universal Masonic congress in the eternal city she was put forward by Italian Freemasonry for the month September 1882. The Masonic World, November 1881 he announced it in these terms:

Taking advantage of the exhibition that has just taken place in their city, the lodges in Milan organized, under the patronage of the Grand Orient, a National Masonic Congress. This congress met from September 28th on October 3rd, under the presidency of Brother Petroni, Grand Master of the Order.

...The aim of the congress was to "prepare Italian Freemasonry for international Masonic congress, which is to meet in Rome, and of to provoke an exchange of ideas among the Freemasons of the obedience and studies on important subjects of a Masonic and secular nature.

The topics submitted for deliberation at the congress were as follows:

L. Of reconciliation and the necessity of reuniting, as far as possible.

486 THE SECTJI IN ITALY AND THE PAPATUATE

in Rome a universal congress of Freemasonry, without distinction of rites, with the aim of better defining international relations between the various Masonic families of the world; to establish, on the one hand by mutual agreement, the territorial jurisdiction of each of them; to determine In what cases and in what localities can the existence of Masonic colonies belonging to distant Grand Orients, in the interest of your Masonic propaganda; to settle the rights and the the attributions of these colonies in relation to indigenous Freemasonry and national; to establish the foundations of the legitimacy and regularity of various centers of Freemasonry, either in relation to the rite practiced, or in relation to the condition, morality and philosophical principles the most rational and appropriate means for the immortal princes* Cipes of the brotherhood to give to the Masonic apostolate a coordinated and effective impulse, which ensures its power, solidarity dignity, action, authority, and influence with regard to the profane world. (The The rapporteur on this matter is Brother Giuseppe Petroni, Grand-master.)

II. On the attitude of Freemasonry towards the social question.
(Reporter: Brother Bovio, Professor.)

III. Means of achieving the gradual unification of rites in Italy.
(Rapporteur, Brother F. Dobelli, Professor, member of the council)
(the Order.)

IV. What are the most urgent reforms demanded by the Ma^
Stupidity in Italy? (Reporter, Brother Doctor Louis Castcllazzo, Grand Secretary of the Grand Orient.)

V. Measures to be taken for the effective suppression of corporations religious activities in Italy. (Rapporteur, Brother G. Migliavacca, avo cat.)

VI. Possible proposals from the lodges and the brothers.

In 1882, the Congress of Freethought, meeting in Paris, decided for his part to have, in April 1883, a session at Home.

Brother Lepellelier thus gave the reason for this choice in his
The Word of Order newspaper

It is of the utmost importance that the congress convene.
in Rome, not only for free thought, but for the fatherland.
The Maleutcudus, who so sadly divided Italy and France,
These concerns will dissipate all the more easily when the democrats of both sides... countries will fraternize together in front of the Vatican.

The union of the two peoples was very strong when they marched against the fortress of Sevastopol. We are dealing with a fortress

THE PROJECTS OF THE MASONIC CONGRESS IN ROME 487

more formidable than the one that was considered impregnable boulevard do the Russian autocracy. Could we not find united Italians and French French, going to the same goal, fighting the same enemies, running the same perils and having to share fraternally the fruits of the great peaceful and moral victory that the future holds for the battalions of the li Bres-penseurs, the vanguard of the United States of Europe?

The Rivista Massonica said for her part:

The Revolution went to Rome to fight the Pope face to face; to assemble, under the dome of St. Peter's, the champions of the race; to give Freemasonry gigantic proportions in the very heart of Rome, the capital of the universe. She will attack there mercilessly all religions, which share the common point of belief in God and in the immortality of the soul.

This dual project, the execution of which was quite imminent for provoking repeated protests from SS Leo XIII (§ 2), a however, it was aborted.

English Freemasonry has stated that it does not wish to take part at the grand Masonic meeting, precisely because of his character of violent impiety (v. liv. III, chap. XXXI, «i 2»). The Mason German nerie, obeying pressure from Mr. Bismarck, has also refused (1). The Congress of Freethought was also abandoned. In vain did Mr. Lepellelier, at a meeting... a preliminary meeting in July 1882, which took place in Genoa for the erection of a statue to Mazzini, he promised, to calm sensitivities German government policies, which no Frenchman would accept the presidency of the congress. Despite the humiliations inflicted by the French brothers In this case, the government seems likely to hold firm, as with the Masonic congress (2). He has, in order to prevent these meetings, serious reasons for this. The free thinkers^ by bringing this together congresses in Rome, had as their primary objective to force the Holy-Father to leave the Vatican. One of the leaders of the Republican party, Alberto Mario, published in his newspaper La Legga della Democrazia^ in October 1881, an article in which he indicated very clearly this goal (3).

But there is nothing that the government installed at the Quirinal re-

(1) V. le ilonde maçonnique do jauvior-févrioi* 1881.

(2) See an article from the Journal de Rome, reproduced by the Rien public do Gand du July 20, 1882.

(3) V. this characteristic article reproduced in the rotnalno correspondence of the Gabelle du Midi of October 29, 1881.

488 THE SECT IN ITALY AND THE PAPALITY

No doubt more than the departure of the Holy Father. That would be the signal of its overthrow. In September 1870, Victor Emmanuel began, by Mr. Diamilia-Multer, a negotiation which is a masterpiece of intrigue, to prevent Pius IX from leaving of Rome (I).

Today, the incert of Humbert II is even more deeply involved in

But the sect, which specifically pushes for the restoration of the republic, act all the more vigorously.

At the time of the October 1882 elections, the Grand Orient of Italy has published the program imposed on candidates, who are seeking They sought the support of the lodges. Here it is:

Total abolition of papal guarantees and revision of the status.

No privileged, proprietary, salaried, or endowed cult.

The rectory houses converted into schools and housing for the masters.

Complete abolition of religious brotherhoods and conversion of their rents in income allocated to agriculture and industry (2).

2. – Acts of SS Leo XIII against the

Secret societies

The vigilance of the Sovereign Pontiff was not lacking in the Society is threatened no less than religion. The following acts of Leo XIII, although immediately provoked by the attacks which the Church is subjected to in Italy, do not contain serious lessons for all countries. As such, they must to take part in this story.

On October 17, 1882, he addressed a message to the Italian pilgrims. course in which we find the following passages:

Your attitude greatly comforts and consoles us, since We see that Italian Catholics understand that there is for their homeland a more formidable danger; these are the real plans back fierce sects.

(t) V. the curious account of this negotiation in the work Poluisa segreta Üaliana (Turin 1880) cbapllrc XII.

(?) See L'Union of September 27, 1882.

ACTS OF LiSoN XIII GONTBE THE SOGiIT^s seghètbs 489

And, in fact, these projects are now revealing themselves in every way, with Us more It's very obvious. The sects, always careful to fight the Church of Jesus. Christ, and, if they can, to make Catholicism disappear from all Us audacity, they specifically targeted Italy, where the Catholic faith had cast such strong and such deep roots, where, for many centuries, the seat of Supreme Pastor, and from whom the spirit of Jesus Christ and the Benefits of Redemption.

Thus, in the various congresses that the affiliates of these sects held this year in various cities of Europe, Catholic Italy was the subject of their aims. Lately, finally, they decided that a new and more an important congress was to bring together representatives of the sect from around the world / and so that there would be no doubt about its meaning, they have declared wanted to keep it in Rome, in the center of Catholicism, as a audacious challenge against the Church and with the plan to launch an assault on the cornerstone of the Christian edifice.

Meanwhile, to keep anger alive in people's minds, and in order to prepare new forces for this unholy war, in the agricultural shows recently held in Rome and in many cities of Italy, It was said and proclaimed, without mystery or hesitation, that we wanted the abolition and the suppression, forever, of the Papacy, against which, Insults were uttered against religious institutions as well as against religious institutions the most atrocious things, the most unworthy outrages and blasphemies.

And at that same time, new associations began to emerge. popular actions, which openly propose to fight to the bitter end Catholicism and the papacy in Rome.

Thus the specious promises and protests, made from the beginning and widespread to deceive the simple, to want to keep to save and preserve the Catholic religion in Italy, surrounded by security* dignity and respect for the person of the Roman Pontiff, to maintain freedom and independence depending on the exercise of his spiritual power, – in a short time these promises and these protests have received the most striking attention. denied and ended with declared hostility towards the Church and against his boss.

Now that we know the audacious plans of the sects, we feel tons, dearest sons, the need and the duty to denounce you, to you and To all Italian Catholics, the great peril that threatens you.

Let no one be deceived; let all be persuaded of the contrary. that they want to tear from you from the bosom of the most tender of mothers, the Church, to free you from the gentle yoke of Jesus Christ, to enslave you under the domination of those who are preparing calamities for the homeland and ruins.....

And as in the freedom and independence of the Pope, not disguised The good of the whole Church rests, but full and manifest.

of the Catholic world, as necessary things; that all the iids-they, and especially those from Italy, are showing concern and Jealous of this freedom and independence, it is necessary that she are guaranteed constantly and to the extent required by the good law and justice.

Always remember that the Supreme Shepherd of your souls is at amidst enemies who had already shown Borne, terrified, in this Eight forever disastrous, where one accompanied with such devoted piety to his final resting place the remains of Our revered predecessor, which They may harbor resentment and hatred.

Remember that the person and divine authority of the Pontiff are every day thrown into the mire by a frenzied press, which launches at full hands on Nous-môme the outrages and the filth.

8 Remember that in Italy and Rome there is a party which threatens to the occupation of Our Apostolic Palace itself, to con to force into harsher captivity or exile.

These sad memories, dearest sons, will serve as a stimulus for you.
powerful enough to always share with us the hardships and the dangers of the struggle, in which ultimately victory will remain flawless for the E-church.

On February 15, 1882, Leo XIII addressed a letter to all the bishops Italians, an encyclical, which begins as follows:

Although the authority and the scope of apostolic duty make Us to surround the entire Christian world and each of its provinces with everything love and all the vigilance that is within our power, Ilalia, at the present time, particularly attracts Our concern and Our thoughts.

A pernicious sect whose authors and leaders neither hide nor rot-slow their will^ has long since taken a position in Italy; after having declares war on Jesus Christ, it strives to strip the people of Christian institutions. How far have his audacity already gone? It is for us to know.
It is all the less necessary to say it. Venerable Brothers, that the grave at The colors and ruins that morals and religion have to deplore are displayed beneath your hands.

In the midst of the people of Italy, always so consistently faithful to the faith
From their fathers, the freedom of the Church is attacked on all sides; every day,
We are redoubling our efforts to erase from public institutions that form, that
,the Christian spirit which has always and rightly been the seal of glories
.of Italy. .The religious houses suppressed, the Church's property confiscated-t iués, marital unions formed outside of Catholic laws and traditions,
, '<c role of religious authority erased in the education of youth: it is endless and immeasurable, this cruel and deplorable war declared on Apostolic See, this war for which the Church is under the weight of its burdens! unimaginable suffering, and the Roman Pontiff finds himself reduced to the most extreme my anxieties. For, stripped of the Principal Civil, he had to fall to the bites from another power.

But Rome, the most august of Christian cities, is a place where green to all the enemies of the Church; profane novelties defile it; there And there, temples and schools are dedicated to heresy. It is even said that she will receive, this year, the members of parliament and the leaders of the most radical sect against Catholicism, who gathered there for a solemn assembly. The reasons that determined the choice of this theater are not a mystery: they want, through this outrageous provocation, to satisfy the the hatred they harbor against the Church, and to get closer to their incendiary torches of the Roman Pontificate, attacking it in its seat even.

The Church, without a doubt, finally victorious, will thwart the plots impious men; yet it is a given and a matter of experience that their These plots aim at nothing less than overthrowing the entire body of the Church with its leader, and, if possible, to extinguish Religion.

To dream of such projects, for supposed friends of Italian honor seems an incredible thing; for the ruin of the Catholic faith would dry up for the I* Italy, the source of the most precious goods.

So many lost blessings are followed by supreme evils; for the en based on Christian wisdom, whatever their claims may be milking, leads society to its ruin. Nothing is more effective than their doctrine to kindle violent flames in souls, and to fan the the most pernicious passions. In the field of science, they repudiate say the heavenly lights of faith; but, this torch extinguished, the spirit Humans are usually led astray, no longer see the truth, and easily sinks into the depths of an abject and shameful mate* Realism. – In matters of morality, they disdainfully reject the eternal and immutable reason, and despise God, the sovereign lawgiver and supreme avenger; but, these foundations torn away, there is nothing left for the laws of sufficient sanction*, the rule of life depends solely on the will and of man's will. In society, freedom without measure, that they advocate and pursue, generates the license, and the license is followed closely linked to the overturning of order, the most disastrous scourge of the matter public. In fact, we have never seen a more hideous and miserable society. than those where such men and such doctrines could have prevailed* Let's take a moment to appreciate it. If recent examples didn't attest to this, we would.. It would be tempting to believe that men, in the heat of a moment of audacity furious and criminal, could have rushed into such excesses, and, retaining, almost derisively, the name of liberty, to surrender to desatur*

We must first attribute such terrors to a singular

492

THE SECT IN ITALY AND THE PAPALITY

protection (God), but we must then recognize, to exploit this preservation, which the people of Italy, faithful to the immense majority loyal to the Catholic religion, could not be dominated by the vice of doctrine. shameful things that we have denounced. If the ramparts erected by the If religions crumble, Ilalia will also fall into the same trap. misfortunes, of which the greatest and most flourishing nations have been sometimes victims. The same doctrines must lead to the same Consequently, and since the germs are infected with the same poison, it They may not produce the same fruits.

Moreover, the ilalia might pay a higher price for its apostasy, because that in her case ingratitude would put the height of perfidy and impiety.

May God avert such a terrible misfortune! May all give a serious attention to the dangers that partly afflict us, and partly we are siding with those who, serving sectarian and not projects not in the public interest, they have vowed the Church to a war to the death.

Unhappy, if they were wise, if they brought to their country a true table love, far from holding the Church in distrust and from trying, sou* the empire of insulting suspicions, to deprive him of his necessary freedom, better inspired, they would use all their power to defend her, the pro. light and would first provide for restoring the Roman Pontiff to possession sion of his rights.

Indeed, the more the struggle waged against the Apostolic See harms the Church, the more it is detrimental to the cause of Italy.

We have discussed this topic elsewhere:

“Say that the public good in Italy will neither prosper nor take hold.” to have a sure and tranquil consistency, if one does not provide for the dā the dignity of the Roman See and the freedom of the Supreme Pontiff, as well as All rights are demanding it.

Just as We have nothing more at heart than the salvation of Christian interreligious figures, and deeply moved as We are by the peril in which they f At this present time, people of Italy, we exhort you. Venerable bles Flrêres, more ardently than ever, to unite your care and your love for finding the cure for so many ills.

And first, strive to make your people understand what
The price they pay is the Catholic faith, and how dearly it must be obtained.
to split. But, like the enemies and assailants of the Catholic name use a thousand practices and a thousand tricks to seduce more easily those who are not on their guard, it is of paramount importance to de to conceal, to translate to the great enjoy their secret advice, so that after Having opened their eyes to their designs, Catholics feel they are... to watch over the fervor of their souls, and decide to defend openly intrepidly the Church, the Roman Pontiff, that is to say their salvation.

So far, either through experience with the new stall of things, or for lack of having sufficiently realized the extent of the danger, the cou-
The rage of many, from whom much could be expected, did not appear to to deploy with all the activity and vigor that such a situation required
A great cause to support.

Acts of Leo XIII against the Secret Societies 498

But, now we have learned from experience in what times
Noos sommes, nothing would be more disastrous than to endure with a Acbe inertizes the malice of the wicked who never tire, and their to leave the field open to persecute the Church until fully satisfied of their hatred.

More cautious than the sons of light, they have already dared much;
Inferior in number, but more powerful through cunning and wealth, they have
It was a vile deed to ignite a vast fire of misfortunes in our midst.
May all friends of the Catholic name finally understand that it is time to dare to make some effort and to tear oneself away at all costs from a languor health and carelessness, for one is not more readily oppressed than in sleeping in cowardly security. Let them see how noble courage of their ancestors knew neither fear nor rest; how, through their tireless work and at the cost of their blood, the Catholic faith grew up in the world.

Finally, on February 25, 1882, the Holy Father addressed the predicates those observing Lent in these terms, which do not only aim the particular situation of Italy, but that of all countries where the work of cults is felt:

This year, to excite you to fill with eager care the
This is a very noble mission entrusted to you. We believe that it is sufficient to to put before your eyes and to remind you, although you know them fully understand the deplorable conditions of public affairs.^, consider Unfortunately, the situation is getting worse every day here in Rome.
as well as anywhere else.

are the primary sources of all civil and moral disorder, do not derive not only ignorance and the gratification of passions, but In reality, they are rather the product of this relentless war and the genocide that the sects have declared to Jesus Christ and his Church, in the unholy goal of annihilating and destroying it, if that were possible. Today Today, in fact, it is by premeditated design, with a resolution firm and deliberate, and by all sorts of means that they attack the truths of the faith, that the most criminal doctrines are propagated and that the most ardent appetites are stirred.

The press, science, history, politics, associations and kids The most beautiful inventions of the human mind change, in the The hands of the wicked, in instruments of corruption. We exaggerate by party human rights were invoked to overthrow all principles of authority; They vilify and insult all feelings of religion and virtue, they open free rein to depravity and vice. – What's surprising if all the good, rightly frightened by the excess of so many evils and by the very grave dangers to which young people in particular are exposed, they believe that it is now from the mercy and power of God that one can only hopes and awaits the effective remedy against such a great Perversion of ideas and things?

494 THE SECT IN ITALY AND THE PAPAUTIA

And, truly, this need for superhuman and all-special help This seems obvious to everyone. But we must not presume may this help come to us from Heaven in a completely prodigious. Divine Providence, which will know how to make him triumphant. the Church of the hardships it is now enduring, most often uses ordinary channels and pre-established means. That is why the greater the dangers, the more serious the evils. And the more pressing the need, the more duty compels us. forced to use these means to obtain help from God desired.

§3. – GALIBALDI AND UNIVERSAL FREEMASONRY

Garibaldi had been Grand Master of Italian Freemasonry since the month of June 1865. Upon his death (June 1882) the new grand-The master made this appeal to the Italian masons:

Italian Freemasonry turns to Italy and, in the name of its ancient institution, he said that the hero liberated a large part from the soil of Ilalikon, the defender of the freedom of all peoples, lives in the grateful memory of the peoples, in the true immortality of history

A free and powerful woman will erect a monument worthy of her. The Mason-[^]nerie, which is a universal institution, and which had it for its great-master for life, will erect an even greater monument to him, because he will be raised by the participation of all nations, which profess the only worship accepted by human reason, that of genius and truth.

For the assembly of Italian lodges,

The Grand Master, G. Petroni, 33.

Rome, June 3, 1882.

Everyone remembers the odious blasphemies of Garibaldi and his letters inciting regicide. (See Book II, Chapter XV,

4). This did not in any way prevent Universal Freemasonry

GariBALDI RT UNIVERSAL MASONRY 495

to make him a hero and to solemnly celebrate his memory in all countries and even in America (1).

French Freemasonry, to whom the memory of the demonstrations Garibaldi's Germanic influences should have imposed a certain reserve (2), was carried away by the hatred that drives her against the Church and of which the The famous condottiere was the embodiment of this. Many lodges have celebrated by the funeral services on the occasion of his death 3).

We read, among other things, in the minutes of the meeting of the June 22, 1882, of the Grand Symbolic Scottish Lodge:

A mourning battery is fired in honor of our brother Garibaldi, the model of the patriot and the French. The expression of the painful The sympathy of the G.'. L.. will be sent to the family of the general and to the G.. L/. of Italy.

(1) See in the ChaiM d*union, September 1882, the account of a funeral celebration brée at Baeuos*Ayres by the lodge tes Àmü of the shipwrecked. The Grand Orient of On this occasion, the Netherlands sent a message of condolence to the Grand Orient. from Italy {Chaim d'untou, July 1882, p. 21tt).

(2) Let us recall here only two letters addressed by Garibaldi, one to .Vf* Ghon, from Stockholm, in August 1870, and the other to a certain Viilani:

(It is pointless for me to betray my humanitarian principles. French, Scandinavian) Navas, Germans, all are my brothers. If I desired the triumph of Prussian arms his own, my sole motive was the burning desire to see the downfall of the most execrable part of the government of Klorenc, and, if I could escape from this place And if I had entered France, I would almost certainly have been arrested. You know, nature my ideas of universal union, but I think this is the right time for the to expose once again.

"The United States, England, the Scandinavian States, France, Germany, having Under their protection, all the secondary establishments would form a magnificent base for this universal union. The deputies of all monarchies and republics Politicians from all over the world would be summoned to an areopagus in Nice, a free city they would vote there, as the first foundation of a general constitution, on the articles following: 1. War between nations is impossible; 2. Any dispute that arises would see between them would be referred to the Areopagus to be judged peacefully. If my
If you think your ideas are good, spread the word.

f GAniBALDI, »

"My dearest Vilani,

You have painted a portrait of Bismarck imbued with grandeur and truth.
unparalleled rarity.

You truly understood this illustrious great man, to whom the world belongs.
indebted to these generous moral battles, which, more than material ones, crush will cast into the dust the priestly hydra of lies.

"For my part, I thank you from the bottom of my heart and I am for life,"
Your

c Gabihaldi. »

(3) V. Chain of union^ July 1882. pp. 211, 212.

496

THE SECT IN ITALY AND THE PAPAUTIA

4. The height of hatred for sects

Through a kind of moral law, which proportions the punishment from apostasies to their guilt, Italy, this center predestined destined to see sects arrive on its soil to a paroxysm of hatred, to a madness that baffles the

It is no longer within the temporal power of the popes, nor even within the Church. that their blasphemies are directed at. They go all the way to God, and Mazzini, ten years after his death, is strangely outdated. His disciple, Alberto Mario, the heir to his works and the director of the newspaper the Legga della Democrazia^ has publicly renounced the motto that Mazzini had inscribed on his flag: Dio e Popolo^ or rather the transformed by a hateful rabble. For this he posed an accent on the e, which in Italian changes the conjunction e (and) into the 3rd person of the verb to be (è), such that Dio e Popolo God and the people become/?/o è Popolo^ God is the people / (1) There is There's a little bit of infernal logic here. After having made the people an absolute sovereign freed from all respect for divine law and master of making the di-oit (see book I, chapter t, 2), there was no longer than to proclaim him God himself.

This is not an isolated incident: the Proletario, organ of the socialists Italian lists, printed in 1879 this horrible blasphemy: God is the greatest enemy of the people because he has cursed work! After atheism, was there one more step to take along the way Crime? The Italian sects have found it. Listen to these lyrics of a hymn sung in February 1882, in the middle of the theatre Alfieri, in Turin:

"Here he is passing by, O peoples, here is Satan the great. He is passing by!" traveling from place to place, on his chariot of fire. Hail, O Satan, hail again! Volté! May our sacred incense and vows rise to you! You have "Defeated the Jehovah of the priests!"

(1) Cited in the Roman correspondence of the Gazette du Midi of October 29 1851.

PEAK OF CULT HATRED 497

And the crowd, says the newspaper from which we borrow this account, applauded the infamous work of Br. -. Joshua Carducci (1)*

A little earlier, a newspaper, bearing the title VAtéo, had Founded in Livorno. "Satan is our leader," say its authors. in their profession of faith, he is the genius of res-^ human destruction, the vengeful force of reason (^). »

In Ancona, a socialist newspaper was also founded entitled: He Lucifero (3).

(1) V. YUnion of February 26, 1882.

(2) V. Vünivert of August 29, 1877.

(3) V, do Laveleye, Leltres d'Italie, in-12, Paris, 1880, p. 381.

These satanic maaires talioDS are taking on a more intense character at this moment. and are frequently repeated in Italy. That's why we're talking about them here. But they are not as isolated as one might think. The history of Freemasonry tells us shows that its most vigorous thinkers have been subject to a kind of fascination with the abyss, which led them to worship Satan. We know the famous passage from Proudhon: <Come Satan, come, the slandered one of the meadows> "I have many kings, that I may embrace you, that I may hold you close to my breast. 1 II 1 It is the time I have known you and you have known me too. Your works, O blessed one of In my heart, they are not always beautiful or good; but they alone give "gives meaning to the universe, and prevents it from being absurd. You alone animate and (work; you ennoble wealth, you serve as the essence of authority, you set the seal on That's virtue.

Father Renan published in the Journal des Débats on April 25, 1851 a rebab Satan's quote, which the illustrious Cardinal Pie did not hesitate to reproduce verbatim. ment in his first synodal instruction (see Selected Works, vol. I, pp. 86-87), because It wasn't just a display of imagination; it was a sign of the times. In 1869, M. de St-Albin, in his remarkable book, Les Libres penseuses, (chapter xxv), also reproduced a number of invocations to Satan, published in the progressive newspapers of that time. We will return the per • those who would like to have the philosophical explanation from this side of Freemasonry nothing to do with pages as profoundly and wisely thought out as they are soberly written P. Desebamps (see book I, chapter II, § 9). We will limit ourselves only to mentioning to ner here a book by Dr. Brownson, The Spirit Happer, the masterpiece of literature Catholic culture in America, where this question is addressed very thoroughly, but at This is too narrow a viewpoint, as the author has neglected the actions of secret societie politics in contemporary revolutions. We owe an excellent translation of it to U, Georges Gandy, VEsprit frappeur, in-12, Gaslerman, Tournai, 1878.

III

32

CHAPTER THIRTY-FIRST

FREEMASONRY IN ANALETERRE

– Organization of English lodges

The Grand Lodge of England has 1,649 lodges under its jurisdiction. obedience with 101,234 members. The Grand Lodge of Scotland has

English lodges practice a rite, which includes the three of* symbolic degrees of apprentice, journeyman, master, plus one of The Royal Arch, the highest degree of Red Masonry. Its members hold special chapters, which govern the symbolic lodges. leagues. Some lodges subdivide the master's degree into four and were given the name of because they give a name* distinct from each of their members: they number 223 in England, placed under the authority of a grand lodge tint.

Furthermore, the higher degrees are quite practiced: the Scottish rite I know. The ancient accepted has a supreme council in each of the three kingdoms. In Ireland there is a supreme council for the Irish rite Landais, which is a simplification of the Scottish Rite in 15 degrees. Scotland also preserves the old rite of 'Heredom', whose great-Mastery is attached to the royal crown. Finally, Great Britain Tagne counts Templar encampments.

500 Freemasonry in England

It is with the United States [the country in the world where Freemasonry is] the most widespread. It has more than 200,000 allies and members takes a significant portion of the upper classes.

The Prince of Wales is Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of An-England as well as the Supreme Council of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite accepted for England and Wales and the Grand Chapter of the Templar order; he is, moreover, protector of the great Scottish and Irish lodges.

The Deputy Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of England is the Count of Carnarvon. The Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Ireland is the Duke of Arbercon, currently Lord Lieutenant of Ireland. Many members of the aristocracy are part of it and occupy the positions of grand masters of the provincial grand lodges and chapters of Royal Arch^ which exist in almost every county.

Freemasonry has become a real force in the country. social institution. It is represented by its members in the ceremonies monies whose purpose is the erection and inauguration of the principal public monuments. The large budget at its disposal, – the contributions annual fees and airport taxes are very high, –per– put them in the grand lodge, the provincial lodges and the lo– lodges wedges to make significant contributions to various charities of public good. Although passwords, touching and While the rites are kept secret, great publicity is given to that of several members of the royal family at the head of the order, have completely erased the memory of the measures taken under the reign of George III (Book II, Chapter VIII, ^fl), and it is by Mr. Forsler responded to this argument on June 17, 1880, in the House of Commons, to Mr. O'Donnell, who asked him if the oath sworn by the constables of Ireland not to belong to The term "no secret society" also applied to Freemasonry.

Public opinion has come to perceive the ma- order conical as a filling for the upper and middle classes the goals of mutual aid and sociability that VOddfellowship, the Fore$terSy the TradeS'Unions satisfy in the lower classes laughter.

the spirit of English Freemasonry

501

S 2. – The spirit of English Freemasonry

"Freemasonry is a loyal society," said Mr. Forster, and It is generally regarded as not being anti-Christian. The ministers of the various sects and the clergymen of the Church established, they are part of it in large numbers (1). They frequently fill quickly in the lodges the functions of chaplain and reciter the prayers that open and close the meetings.

The rites for receiving the different grades in the Masonic Order The most widespread Royal Arch nonsense is in its subs- identical instances to those described by Father Des- Charaps: it's still the legend of Hiram and the same interpretations philosophical and humanitarian missions (2). However, one does to depict the Bible in a way that is designed to deceive the masses initiates. It is on the holy book that all the ser- ments. However, it is actually an object of derision for anyone who wants to seek the meaning of these allegories. Thus, in the Upon receiving the apprentice rank, there are three great lights^ which are the Bihle^ M set square and \q compasses. The Bible is absolutely put on the same level as Masonic traditions! And the initiate re- see these three great lights of the little lights, which are the sun, moon and the Worshipful Master of the lodge; that is to say, the Dogmatic and moral teaching derives directly from nature and Freemasonry. The letter G designates both God and geography. metry, the most important of the sciences (3).

Despite this sacrilegious and profane use that is made of the name

Many don't look at it so closely. Fantasy, naive elements touristists, aestheticism, as they say today in England*

(t) In 1757, in Scotland, the Synod of Stirling of the Presbyterian confession adopted a resolution depriving Freemasons of any participation in the coronations ments; but these provisions were not applied (see Mackay, Lexicon of Freemasonry, pp. 240-218).

(2) A very complete description can be found in the work entitled: Irish and English freemasons and their foreign brothers, by Michael di Gargano, in-4'', Dublin, 1878.

(3) See the work cited in the previous note, pp. 15, 41 and 43.

502 THE FRENCH KINGDOM IN ENGLAND

has

land (1), have taken such a large place in the worship of certain congregations, that the Masonic rites thus mixed with Christ Their beliefs appear to them to be very similar to those they practice.
in their temples. Moreover, the natural virtues of benevolence
The rituals of lance, charity, and probity are celebrated in the lodges.
with the sincerity and seriousness that characterize the English.
Freemasonry and Protestantism have thus come quite far one in front of the other, having almost met.

The vast majority of English Freemasons in England remain in good faith Christians in their lodges. Given the strange attitude of the ecclesiastical bodies that we have just described quer, they are not like the Catholics who become free-Freemasons, apostates, rebels against religious authority. That's it. in English Freemasonry a considerable factual element^ that one cannot be ignored. To equate it with Freemasonry in Catholic countries ques or even just to Freemasonry in Germany, it is to make a serious mistake.

The Grand Lodges of the United Kingdom have provided evidence brilliant reflection of the spirit that currently prevails in the majority of their members. They broke off all relations on March 6, 1878 with the Grand Orient of France, following the modification that it In relation to its constitution, by eliminating the belief in the immortal the nature of the soul and the existence of God, while Freemasonry of all the other countries adhered to it more or less explicitly (see Book I, Chapter II, §14, and Book III, Chapter XIV, §3). Since then the French brothers of the Grand Orient's Vobedience lodges are no longer admitted as visitors to the English boxes. Finally,
In 1881, English Freemasonry refused to join the project of based on the anti-social and anti-Christian character that its promoters announced their intention to give it to him.

When we recall the spirit of violent impiety, of atheism almost, who presided over the constitution, in its modern form, of Freemasonry in England (Book II, Chapter II, § 4), we are surprised by this major change.

The causes are numerous. First, we must consider this
The fact is that Freemasonry was primarily founded to fight

(i) On what is meant by the aesthetic phase in religion in the countries Protestants, we take the liberty of referring to our work; The United States contemporaries, 3rd ed., volume II, p. 288 et seq.

the spirit of English Freemasonry 503 against the true and living Church and against the See of Rome. Where Catholicism does not exist; the main fuel for his hatred is... default. That's what happened in England. After the advent With the fall of the Hanoverian dynasty, Catholicism almost disappeared completely from England and Scotland. The ideas of the Freemasonry was able to take a different direction. The end of the 18th century®

The century was marked by a remarkable revival of the Christian spirit.
John Wesley and the Evangelicals reacted against the deistic doctrines and the gross indifference with which a A significant portion of the established Church had fallen. The spectacle of horrors of the French Revolution, the eloquent voice of Burke, further developed this Christian reaction. At the same time, by a kind of screw mcdicatrix naturae, the principle of the Political legitimacy was gradually being restored in people's minds.
Social institutions have remained Catholic, one might say.
to say, in many respects, and Protestant England retains more Christianity in its laws than Catholic countries, on which has borne the great effort of the Revolution for a century.

Finally, add the eminently practical turn of the na- spirit national, the lack of generalizing skills, the absolute absence of cosmopolitanism, and we will understand the character that the Freemasonry in England. It has become primarily an institution mutual support; those of its members who belong to middle classes see it only as a way to do business trade with more advantages, and everyone scoffs at grand ambitions humanitarians for their brothers on the continent.

Does this mean that Freemasonry presents no dangers?
In England?

The Catholic Church does not judge it that way, and there, as in under penalty of excommunication.

His reasons are drawn both from the social order and from the religious order. From a religious point of view, a careful examination of the rites of Masonic lodges quickly discovered the naturalist spirit there. The denial of all revelation, which is the essence of Freemasonry. It requires the strange numbness of religious sense among the Protestant clergymen so as not to be shocked by the desecration. A constant that prevails in all these rites: a certain number among them, we shall see later (book III, chapter XXXIII, They exhibit in this regard a sensitivity that does them credit.

504 Freemasonry in England

Sound morality will always condemn such oaths. made to the unknown, these promises of secrecy, these pledges of absolute and unrestricted access to an unknown authority. No. An honest man cannot make such a commitment (1).

From a social point of view, the existence of a secret society, which exclusively favors its members regardless of family relationships, neighborhood ties, professional connections, national ties. This is contrary to the common good. There is in Freemasonry of Mark a degree called secret monitor which expresses with crudeness, which is what actually happens in all Masonic rites. By receiving it, one is bound by an oath worded as follows:

"I swear I will assist my brother, Secret Monitor, preferably at any other person, by facilitating their affairs, by sending them practical, and in all the ways I can make him win more than a penny. I swear to always have this oath present to my mother. I solemnly pledge to this, under penalty of having my heart pierced by an enemy's dagger and left friendless on the day of Danger. May God help me."

This oath has considerable effectiveness, especially when it comes to to allow a brother to benefit from public funds. The camera- Hidden radio broadcasting plays a role that distorts the competitive landscape. and that fair play so dear to British loyalty. The real ones Social relations are altered and corrupted as a result.

Finally, it should not be forgotten that the Masonic order is a Universal order. English Freemasons affirm it more than any others. others, the great advantage of affiliation being to make them find to have brothers in all countries. But in this way they make themselves solitary the forces of impiety and revolutionary spirit, which reign in the other branches of the Masonic tree. The lodges deliver to those of their members who travel, cards or letters from recommendation, which assures them everywhere of help and assistance country. The break in relations with the French Grand Orient is

(1) An eminent jurist, Lord Plunkett, condemned Masonry on his behalf
From this point of view: "I consider an association founded on a secret oath to be..."
(f me extremely dangerous) according to the principles of common law; because it separates the subjects of the State and interposes itself between them and the allegiance
"rain" s – Cited in the work entitled: Secret u arfaie of freemasonry against church andjtale^ Introduction, p. tvn.

England and the Cosmopolitan Revolution 505

a very recent event, provoked by the audacity of the outrage thrown through this body to the public conscience. But in reality, the lodges of the Supreme Council of France, those of Ilalia, Spain, and Al-Lemagne are no less impious; now the English masons receive sell their members as visitors and frequent them on the continent.

S 3. – England and the Cosmopolitan Revolution

We have repeatedly pointed out the immoral support that the English government, – often supported, it must be acknowledged on public opinion in the country, •– had given to the Revolution cosmopolitan.

These misplaced sympathies, this corruption of public opinion that, are largely the work of the lodges, which welcomed as brothers, the worst Italian, French, and Spanish revolutionaries. In 1875, on the occasion of the appointment of the Prince of Wales as Grand Master (1), the Grand Lodge of London and the Grand Orient from Italy exchanged expressions of fraternal solidarity. The death of Garibaldi was the subject of numerous tributes and addresses of condolence. grievances throughout English Freemasonry. For the brothers and Glas, as with the French and Italian brothers, was the type of the perfect mason!

High degrees are quite common in England; however
The rituals of the Rosicrucians and the Kadosh are almost the same.
that in France and instill in certain minds this blind hatred of the papacy, the monarchy, and especially the Bourbons, that Ton This is a common observation among many English people. It wouldn't take much to to awaken, memo in England, the spirit of antagonism which is the the foundation of Masonic doctrine. In 1874, the Marquis de Ripon, Grand Master of the Grand Lodge, had abandoned Freemasonry following his conversion to Catholicism. At the meeting of the Warrwickshire Provincial Grand Lodge under the presidency of the Grand Lodge of Middlesex, declared "that he regretted the "retirement of the Marquis de Ripon, but which he could not share"

(1) V. 1» Times of April 29, 1875.

506 Freemasonry in England

*»

"the naive astonishment of those who do not understand that a "Roman Catholic could not continue to occupy a position"
"In order. The system of the Roman Church and that of the "Freemasonry," he added, "is not only incompatible,
"but still radically opposed."

The following year, at the meeting of one of the most important lodges
From London, the Lord Mayor indulged in the most violent declamations against the papacy, he declared that Freemasonry would always on the side of light against obscurantism (1).

Was it Mr. Gladstone who was echoing the lodge in his pamma pleadings, published at that time against the Holy See, or the lodge who was throwing back at Mr. Gladstone his imprecations and calumnies?

Masonic hospitality enabled the founding of cosmic lodges Mopolites, which are hotbeds of conspiracy and impiety for the worldwide. This is the Phila- logo amidst many others.
declphius of the rite of Memphis (V. lib. III, chap XV).

The English believe they can maintain these things with impunity in their country.
outbreaks. They are, however, beginning to have a group impics and revolutionaries. Bradlaugh, the elected representative of Norlhampton,
He is a Freemason; he is linked with the entire continental revolution.
However vigorous the social consensus in England may be,
It is unwise to deliberately infect oneself with the disease.

4. – The secularist movement in the iscoles

An association was formed about twenty years ago.
bearing the title of National Education League, whose aim is to times of directly involving the State in the distribution of popular education, (uijus([uc-là was exclusively provided) by IcsditTérenlos religious confessions, and secondly of separ to completely review that intelligence instruction gion. There is a complete identity here with the program whose Freemasonry continues the realization.salion in all the Stalls of the continental ideas, which were produced by contagion in the air

(1) Quote from the included work: The secret influence of Freemasonry against the church and state, introduction, p. XXI, London, 1878, returns to Oates.

THE SECULARIST MOVEMENT IN SCHOOLS 507

Free? We will not decide the question; we will only quote...

"The assessment of a man who knows the Angle perfectly"
earth :

"The National Education League was largely formed"

"free thinkers, atheists and dissidents, who veil their

"Perfidious designs under the guise of secularism. They want security."

"To secularize the school, or, as we say in France, to laicize it. Basically."

"There were hardly any left except the Anglicans and Roman Catholics"

"who supported the denominational schools, and even among the Anglicans, members of the Large Church and the Lower Church

"They adapted to the new law (1)."

It was under Mr. Gladstone's ministry, in 1870, that...

voted the first act by which England deviated from its traditional principles for doing not follow the path indicated by the National Education League. This first step was moderate, and

The secularists had to reckon with the impartial spirit, which, unfortunately

Despite many prejudices, it still prevails among the English. In terms of the act of 1870, supplemented in 1873, 1876 and finally in 1880,

Under Mr. Gladstone's new ministry, the government did not

He no longer subsidizes religious education, he no longer counts the time which is dedicated to it as satisfying the requirements of the law, but he does not forbid this teaching in any way and he distributes subsidies to denominational schools as well as others, in proportion to the successes achieved by their students in the exams.

The most serious aspect of the new legislation was the creation in all municipalities of School boards which have the power to create their own schools, independent of the existing schools - nelles. In these schools funded by taxes levied on the taxpayers, religious education is completely prohibited.

"The school boards," they said, "before the implementation of the act of 1880, Mr. Martin, organized themselves on many levels points of the kingdom, particularly in the major cities, and thus

As was easy to predict, they quickly fell to hands of dissidents, freethinkers and secularists, who, at applying the law of 1870 in its spirit and sometimes even in its letter three, had only one goal: to ruin the denominational schools, supported through voluntary subscriptions, to replace the eco-non-sectarians, that is to say neutral and secular, as they say in (1). Public education in England, by M. Martia. Correspondent of the 10th July 1870.

508 Freemasonry in England

France at this time. The goal set by the 1870 law was to supplement the voluntary system, to fill its gaps, to reach where he could not go; but the School boards were much more concerned with supplanting than with supplement the volunteer schools. Thanks to the ability that these School boards have the power to collect taxes and contract through loans, they drew heavily from the coffers of taxpayers and clerks in many places involved in financial scandals, which closely resemble those of the United States. Public opinion The public is beginning to be alarmed by this squandering of funds. public, and she adjusted accordingly. The major newspapers of London have strongly censured the School board in recent weeks London on the occasion of the budget presented for the year 1881 and 1882 by Mr. Freeman (1). »

Many Protestants voted for the legislative acts that we we have indicated, without sharing the aims of the National Education League. The debates in the English Parliament on this occasion are singularly instructive, and show, when compared speeches of the first. Paul Bert and Ferry, the difference produced based on currents of public opinion in both countries. The hostility that most dissidents feel towards the established church and Catholicism contributed greatly to making desmesure acceptable, also contrary to the national genius of the English. The principle of the separation of religion and education is no less took place in the country, by virtue of the law, through the practice of many school boards, those established in cities where The radical party is the master (2). Another cause will aggravate it. the dangers of the struggle undertaken by the Science boards conive the denominational schools. The dissidents will join forces. with them. Now, as the Anglican Church will be defeated the day when It will be destabilized, and the Catholic Church will then be left alone to face it. school boards (3).

Even in England, the situation has some problem areas. and the English may well regret having allowed it to be introduced into

(1) V. compulsory education in England by Mr. Martiu, in the Contemporary (1) December 1881.

(il) See the facts cited in the London Nation's Correspondence of the 14th December 1882.

(3) See primary education among Catholics in England, by Mr. Martin, in The Correspondent of 1880.

Freemasonry in the English Colonies 509

them, by a roundabout way and even with a great deal of temperance ments, the principles whose logical application produces such great ills on the European continent.

§5. – Freemasonry in the English colonies

The English have established a very large number of lodges, not only element in their colonies, but also in all the cities of Asia and Africa, where there are groups of British subjects somewhat compact lodges. Thus, there are several English lodges.
in Constantinople, in Smyrna, in Cairo.

The character of these lodges, in British America and in Australia, is quite similar to that of the mother's lodges sorting. Although Catholic populations are numerous in
In these two countries, there reigns religious peace and loyal respect.
the rights of all British subjects, which exclude the hai-[^] born and the antagonisms of the European continent or of America of the South. Freemasonry, we repeat, is above all an ins mutual support structure.

In the countries of the Far East and Africa, it takes on a
The caiacière is much more antagonistic. The lodges there are composed of much lower social elements; one can say, in a general way general, that Protestant society loses the outward appearance that it in Europe. Also the lodges of India, those of Mozambique, Those from Shanghai show a thinly veiled hostility towards the Church Catholic and its missionaries. The Bishop of Bombay, Bishop Meu-Rin, in 1881, had to forcefully point out the dangers that pre-Freemasonry is present in these countries (1). A number of lodges rejected the Christian ritual in use in the motherland, for They wanted to receive Muslims and Parsis. They were

(1) See La Chaîne d'union, 1882, p. 11. Freemasonry was introduced into riadd, in 1728, by Sir Georges Ponfrely who founded the first lodge in Calcutta.
currently has 110 lodges in India[^] placed under the direction of provincial lodges* cialos established in Bombay, Madras, Punjab, etc., which themselves fall under the Grand Lodge of London* The number of Freemasons in India is estimated at 37,338*
(CAoine cTunicm, Ibid.)

%*

thus placed, in accordance with the true spirit of the Order, on a purely humanitarian basis (1).

Freemasonry in the Dutch East Indies is also a hotbed of impiety even more pronounced than in Holland itself (2).

Bishop Fava has repeatedly pointed out the impious nature that Freemasonry had in these countries; "In Masonic marriage nothing like what we saw celebrated twenty years ago on Mau-Rice," he recounts, "the venerable one asks the senior warden "In front of the spouses: – What do you think of indissolubility?" "Marriage? ^ It is contrary to the laws of nature and of the Reason. – What should be the remedy? – Divorce (3)." Masonic oaths, the terrible punishments to which one exposed the person lending them may pose a problem, but they are not always... vain simulacra, as is believed. We know several murders committed under these circumstances by English lodges of the West Indies. They have always remained absolutely impunished, for the reason that judicial and administrative functions are almost exclusively occupied by followers.

(1) See Allgemeines Handbuch der Preimaurerei, tom. IV, Ergänzungen, 1870, V. East Indian.

(2) See the facts cited in the Masonic World of January 1864. See also the Chain of union of December 1882.

(3) Second letter on Freemasonry, in the Catholic Review of the /ns Mutations and of the law, vol. XV, p. 265, 1880.

CHAPTER THIRTY-SECOND

SECRET SOCIETIES IN IRELAND

S 1®^ . – The origins of the Irish question

The Irish people have for centuries been victims of three great oppressions, which are still far from being remedied completely.

His religion has been odiously persecuted, and it is only at the cost rioux, which in 1829, the Catholics removed from the ostracism legal cynicism, which had weighed on them since the 16th century.

Alone in the world, along with Poland, Ireland is subject to a foreign power, which claims to govern it, without taking into account his particular interests and the manner which she herself understands.

This situation had finally provoked outrage even among the Protestants settled in the country, and at the end of the 18th century, a the national movement led by the illustrious Grattan had succeeded, in 1782, with the establishment of an Irish parliament in Dublin. the concession was far from complete, since only the Protestants could were supposed to be members. However, in the long run, this parliament would have at least taken into account the country's economic interests odiously sacrificed to British trade and industry. In 1800, William Pitt bought a majority in this parliament, at a price of money, and made him vote for union with England! The deputies The Irish are a tiny minority in Weslininsior, compared to in which the two major English parties always form a coalition when it comes to a particular interest in Ireland. The more the Angle the earth loudly proclaims the principle of self-government within its borders. The more the denial of their right to self-government appears Insulting to the Irish. Even the local government doesn't... does not belong, except in the vivles, which form corpo* rations. The principles according to which the stipen~ are named Magistral diarij, the existence of a special armed force, observation bulary, maintain under the yoke the largest extent of the country.

r»I 2 SECRET SOCIETIES IN IRELAND

Finally, there is a third [question concerning the interests] more intimate to the people. Under James I, under Cromwell, Under William 111, Irish landowners were expropriated en masse, transplanted arbitrarily from one part of the country to the other one.

The current landlords are mostly descendants usurpers, whether racial or religious differences, or the absence Senteism then prevented merging, despite two centuries elapsed, along with the mass of the population. In their relations with the rural classes, they completely ignored the law on the land, which the historical conditions of the country gave to the tenant cier, and with the help of English legal experts purported to trans- to form into temporary and revocable leases the tenures which, according to Celtic law, had to be perpetually preserved by the peasant as long as he paid a fair rent (1).

Such oppressions inevitably provoke unrest, conspiracies, secret societies, independently of the inter-convention of the universal sect. Freemasonry in particular has nothing to do with Irish affairs. She is in this country an essentially English institution, which, as such, has always aroused the repulsions of the indigenous population. It is to 1848, at the latest, is when we can trace the first communications between certain Irish people and revolutionary sects more advanced of Young Europe.

(1) Y.Sytem of tenure of laml in various countries, edited by CobdoD-Club Ire^land, by good. Loagfiolü. London, in 12, 187G. Sir Sumner Maine, Lectures on Early History of institutions, in-8*, London, 1880, Paul Fournier, The agrarian question in Ireland, in-12, Paria, Plon, 1882.

The Depenuehs and the Uniteû Irishmen 513

Even to this day, the secret societies of Ireland had a distinctly local and national character. But the revolution cosmopolitan tion only makes greater efforts to penetrate them and exploit for the benefit of its plans to destroy Christian society hold the legitimate grievances of the Irish people.

2. – The Defenders and the United Irishmen

FROM 1791 TO 1800

The rural struggle between Protestant English and Catholic Irish which had, in certain provinces, brought about as early as the 17th century the formation of popular secret societies, which engaged in Violence against people and property. The Peep of Day Boys were burning down Catholic homes, and the Defenders were reading about reprisals against Protestants. In 1791, a draper From Belfast, Samuel Neilson organized an association, which com* took Protestants as well as Catholics, with the aim of af to cross Ireland from the yoke of Augelerre. She took the name of ü-Nited Irishmen. Originally, this association was not secret. and had no republican aims. It was only in 1795, when the conflict had intensified due to provocations from the Orange-men, that the United Irishmen constituted themselves as a society secret, they adopted passwords and a ceremonial reception tion imitating Freemasonry, and forged an alliance with the France. We could see in Cadet Gassicourt's account (book III, Chapter II, § 3) some rather vague indications on these relations tions, He notably confuses the United Irishmen with the Defenders. The plans for the invasion of England, the execution of which a consequence of the Directory's inaction. The English historian of societies secret^ Mr. Thomas Frost even says that the government br tannique received people who were very close to the mem- the Directorate's intelligence services, which allowed him to thwart the efforts attempted in Ireland by the United Irishmen.

The ministry also had a large number of spies, among the affiliates, and O'Connell proved that Lord Casllereagh had excited by its agents provocateurs, the 1798 uprising, for to use this as an argument in favor of recalling the Union.

III

33

514 SECRET SOCIETIES IN IRELAND

In any case, it was more of a conspiracy than a so-secret society. After the recall of the Union and the execution of the misfortune In 1803, after the death of Robert Emmet, nothing remained of this ass association ^1).

.^3. – The Lodges of Üuangists

In 1794, at the time when unfortunate Ireland began to resume some semblance of national life, fanatical Protestants im they decided to form a secret association similar to Freemasonry nerie, to combat the emancipation of Catholics and maintain to enforce the rights of the House of Hanover, although no one, to this at that time, no longer considered contesting them. The founder of this association a ciation called Orangemen^ Thomas Wilson, was a frank-mason, and it is on the model of Freemasonry that he considers it titua. 11 in copying the ritual, the alBliation ceremonies, the words of passed, the oaths, and divided his association into lodges, raising from a Grand Orient, which gave them the impetus.

In Ireland, there were as many as 20 provincial grand lodges. and 1,510 Orangemen lodges with 200,000 members. That The organization was also extended to England; to London only, it had 50,000 members (2).

The Orangemen stirred up unrest in Ireland and in An England [on numerous occasions, and their violent opposition to all the liberal measures of the English government have not been without their consequences. contributed to keeping this country in a state of continuous unrest. Their

The decoration did not spare the crown itself.

In 1828, when the Catholic Emancipation Bill was discussed in the House of Commons, one of the leaders of the Orange men exclaimed, in a meeting, that they would not defend the dynasty tie that as long as she herself remained a firm supporter of the Protestantism (3).

(t) V* on the Defenders and the United Irishmen Th. Prost, The Secret Society of the European Revolution^ t. I, p. 55 to p. 142.

(2) Allgemeinee Handbuch der Freimaurereif Leipzig, 1865, (. Il, y Orange-men*

(3) Irishand Engtieh Freemaeeone, Dublin, 1878, in<4*.

The Lodges of Obanuists 515

These lodges have been a constant provocation for almost a century. aunt to the Irish people. At the same time they have up to a to a certain extent authorized by their example by secret societies, which have been and still are the dominant feature of this country's politics.

S 4. – Popular Secret Societies

The Irish peasant always retained the memory of his land rights and considered the English landlord as a usurper. Deprived of all legal protection, overwhelmed by courts that systematically disregarded the basics of history Torics of his demands, he naturally formed Secret agrarian societies for self-defense. Associations of this kind genres have always existed since the end of the 16th century; but, from From 1820 to 1880, they underwent significant expansion under the name of Ribbon-Men or Molly Maguire (1). They are organized In the lodges, they have passwords, signs of recognition. Upon joining the association, the affiliate swears an oath in the name of Christ and his Holy Mother, absolute obedience to Molly (the popular name of the Irish peasant, like Jacques Bonhomme in France in the past), that is to say, to the unknown leaders of the association, and this until the murder of one's own parents, if the honor or safety of Molly demands it.

The goal of these associations is simple; it is above all to de- to defend the rights of the Irish peasant against what constitutes – or what he considers – as legal oppressions of his rights, to prevent the eviction of landlords by terrorizing those who would replace them on their farms, to protect the Irish who witnesses and jurors. There are no membership fees in his associations. fixed and regular tions, but, when there is a helping hand to Attempting local leaders to collect contributions, which are not

(t) The name Ribbon-Men was not given to these associations until around 1826. We knew them previously, says 11. Sullivan, under the names of Irish Liberty Men, Mighion Liberty Men, Unionists of the Rock and other names of the same kind.

510 SECHKTES COMPANIES KN ICELAND

never refused; for those Irish peasants who resist the Molly's power, or betraying her interests, are even more inexorably struck by bailiffs, sergeants or the Irish landlords.

Murders, fires, destruction of livestock, that Molly Mayuire views these as wartime measures indispensable, have long ensured the authority of the association. The owners have often made deals with them to obtain to provide a level of security that the courts and the English Confiscation Authority could not assure them.

It is through this inexorable struggle pursued in the shadows that the Irish people prevented their rights from expiring; but a Such a social state has engendered habits of contempt for the law and of vengeance that made them a people to be plowed. Then it formed among the Lubbock-McN gang of scoundrels accustomed to all kinds of crimes, that the Fenians and the assassins of the Land League later found all prepared for their attacks.

The Ribbon-Men did not form an association with a center and a single direction.

I made sure of it myself, Mr. Sullivan, the eminent writer Vain Irish, that the ribbonism of a period was not the ribbonism. on the other hand, that the direction of his aspirations, and his dominant character The figures differed greatly between committees. In Ulster, the Ribbon-Men presented themselves as a defense association. or reprisals against the Orangemen,

In Munster, it was originally an association to resist the collection of tithes by the dignitaries of the Anglican Church In the Connaught, it was an organization against the arbitrary raising of the ferocious and evictions. In Leinster, it was often only a sort of dictating by its agents and making pre-masters, or even sometimes simple servants (1).

These various associations were far from being united with each other, and At certain times, organizations shared them. But il) iSeii' irHartii, polilical (hlches and pertonal remimicences of the Airly years of irix'i pnhlle. ./../V, hy A. he. Sullivan, sevoulli editioo, Glascow 188?, in I?, p. 34,

THE RIBBON'MEN 517

They all had this common trait, Mr. Sullivan added, of being exclusively composed of Catholics: they have never admitted put a Protestant in charge. From the beginning, the Catholic clergy de-declares an energy war as contrary to morality; but He was never able to uproot these societies from Irish soil, because of the character of defending agrarian rights that they had most of the time, and which justified them in the eyes of the peasant.

The English government was also powerless: with the
With the progress of education and temperance, they became less influential; but they have left behind organizational habits secret, which the Fenians and the land leajm took advantage of.

Ribbonism was transplanted early on into the nom-numerous groups of Irish emigrants in the manufacturing districts riders of England.

In major ports and large manufacturing cities of England and Scotland, in Manchester, Liverpool, and Birmingham In Sheffield, in Glasgow, Irish workers are usually regimented in charitable or relief societies which, under a philanthropic guise, often conceal political and national views. Among all these associations, one has emerged
The Vanquished Order of Hibernians, remarkable for the vigor of its organization. According to its regulations, this association aims to the defense of the Catholic religion (no Protestant can in (being a member), encouragement of brotherly love and mutual support protection and assistance to the Irish. The Flibernians lend themselves helping each other, not only against their employers or their English comrades, but if necessary against the police and the justice system British ICT. The association trains, in the cities where it has its seat, a kind of secret government, and serves as an arbiter and disputed among its members.

Structured in a more sophisticated way than agrarian societies
From Ireland, she has a regular income provided by contributions. and fines; it has periodically elected leaders, including the

We will find her again in America where she plays a significant role. derable; but the seat of hidden and highly concentrated power The person who runs it always seems to have been in England. It's a The question is whether the revolutionary elements do not have not seized this central power.

518 SECRET SOCIETIES IN IRELAND

§ 5. – Young Ireland from 1848 to 1857

O'Connell did not remain the undisputed leader of the Irish national movement. Around 1840, a group of players— young men, brilliant minds, sincere hearts for the most part part, but under the influence of the ideas of the Revolution French, thought it necessary to write alongside the movement ca— Catholicism, a movement based exclusively on the idea of race, uniting the native Irish Protestants with the Catholics, and for This completely disregards the religious aspect. Culture intellectual education, whatever its nature, should, according to them, be the great instrument of emancipation.

Charles GraffanDuflyll), Thomas Osborne Davis, John Blake, Dillon, who were soon joined by Darcy Mac-Gee (2), John Mitchell, William Smith O'Brien, the latter a Protestant, and former Tory, founded, on October 15, 1842, in Dublin, the The journal La Notion^ was intended to support this new policy. A new Ireland was formed in opposition to Old Ireland d'O'Connell, whom she criticized for identifying the cause of Ireland with that of Catholicism (3).

O'Connell had been dead for a year when the Revolution of 1848 erupted. The repercussions were keenly felt in Ireland. and a new split occurred within the Nation group. While some of its founders remained faithful to the pro— primitive gram, Emancipation of the country through intellectual culture reading and moral strength, a number of them wanted to resort to physical force. John Mitchell, a fanatic Presbyterian, founded the newspaper V United Irishman, then Virish Felon, who, under these significant titles, preached openly* the insurrection.

“This somber Unitarian of Ulster,” said Mr. Sullivan, “led a campaign pronounced in favor of what half a century earlier one would have would have called the French principles. He was a republican and revolutionary.

(2) Later minister of the Dominion of Canada in Ottawa.

(3) XSullivan, New Ireland, chap. VII.

THE Fenians

519

naire.... It was he who revived the separatist idea or the revolutionary party* born in Ireland. From 1803 until 1845 no such party had not existed or at least had not manifested itself outwardly (1). »

Under the influence of these stimuli, made more intense by the terrible calamities of the famine of 1847 and of the Exodus which followed As a consequence, the country became covered in secret societies, the murders Fires and agrarian crimes multiplied. At the end, This unrest culminated in the Ballin- insurrectionary movement Garry, which was immediately suppressed. Thomas Francis, Meagher, John Mitchell and some of their accomplices, including James Stephens, the future founder of Fenianism, was there. were sentenced to transportation. Most escaped and some of them went and spread the word among the emigrants in America the idea of the Irish Republic (2).

From that time onwards, the leaders of the movement demonstrated hostile sentiments towards the Church. One of them, Mitchell Doheney, in his book The Fairy Tale Tracks, published in 1849, accused the the clergy for having opposed the liberation of Ireland, because he had not approved of the uprising. "The priests," he said, "act This is how it feels, because above all, it is necessary for them to maintain certain absolute privileges of the Church." Another, Thomas-Francis Meagher added: "If the altar were to rise up as an obstacle between "Man and his freedom, I would throw down the altar (3)."

S 6. – The Fenians

After the abortion of Young Ireland, the country, during For a few years, it enjoyed relative calm. The companies of Ribbon-men persisted, it is true, in the lower strata of the population; but their action was essentially scattered and divided, as we have seen. A public and legitimate association, both in its means and in its purpose, the Tenant league, aimed to enforce the rights of the tenants and

(2) V. The American Irish and their influence on Irish politics, by Philip Bagenal, London, 1882, p. 110 to 120.

(5) Ibid., p. 136.

520 THE SEGGETIC SOGI^T^S IN IRELAND

to improve, as far as possible, the agrarian situation in the country. Later, a group of prominent patriots demanded for Ireland has the right to self-government (Home-rule)^ at Name of the principles of Self-management recognized in all subjects British and applied liberally during this period to English overseas colonies. But a completely new element Fenianism, which was going to intervene in the country's destiny, was going to intervene found its main support in the Irish* populations daises who emigrated to America.

"Two refugees," said Mr. Sullivan, "John O'Mahony and James Stephens," after their escape from Ireland, they had settled for some time in Paris in 1848. There they fell into the society of men who, pen during the year of the revolutions, they had personally played a role in The different parts of Europe, from Vienna to Rome. Coming soon in this environment, which could be called the normal school of the European revolution Pagan, they learned that the path by which they had to begin was a secret society. After a few years' residence in Paris, O'Mahony left for America. Stephens returned quietly. in Ireland, where he took a position as tutor with a resident gentleman near Kiilarney. Before parting ways, they had both arrived at the conclusion that, if ever their principles could still have a The chance of success in Ireland would be by following the skillful tactics which they had learned in Paris (1). »

Mr. Philip Bagenal confirms these indications and adds that Stephens himself enlisted in the Continental Secret Societies to obtain their help, when he was about to execute his plans revolution on Ireland (2).

In May 1858, James Stephens met Jeremiah in Ireland O'Donovan Rossa and together they laid the foundations of the organization of a secret society, which they formed under the guise of an association literary cation, and called themselves the Q. Phoenix Society. Their goal was to prepare an insurrection in Ireland, relying on the Irish Americans, who would supply the weapons and the instruction military men.

This was the first nucleus of Fenianism! The government Glais soon grasped the threads of the conspiracy. He arrested him in Ger-

(i) New Ireland, p. 198*

(î) The American Irith, p. 123,

THE Fenians 5Ji

I and a few accomplices were the only ones condemned to servitude penal (1).

Stephens sought refuge in America, and there, with the help of John O'Alahony, Michael Doheny, and Colonel Corcoran, he organized the association of the Fenians on its definitive bases.

This name comes from the old Gaelic language and means the companions of Fin or Fion, the famous hero of the Celtic race that.

It is essentially a secret society. Each member pledges by an oath of absolute obedience to the Republic* The Irish republic was virtually established. The organization was different in Ireland and America. In Ireland, all the powers belonged to the Supreme Center, that is to say to a dictator' who was Stephens. When an affiliate commissioned by He had gathered fifty followers, he was becoming central and direct. was leading his men. In America, the organization was modeled on that of the major political parties. It consisted of sub-cer Keys, circles, states, each having a center. Power the central body of the association was to be elected annually by a council sandstone composed of state centers with delegates elected by the circles, each circle having a delegate. The association was supposed to group* for all Irish people of origin in whatever country in the world they were. The supreme seat was to be in America (2). O'Mahony was the first center for the United States, while Stephens led the affiliates in Ireland, England, and Scotland. O'Dono- van Rossa, in concert with Luby, published in Dublin Vlrish peo- pie, which was to spread the ideas of the Fenians. In Paris, John Mitchell was for several years the accredited agent of the association association (3).

The goal pursued by the Fenians is the emancipation of the Irish land from the yoke of England and the establishment of a Republic that independent. To settle the agrarian question after the suc In this case, the property of the Landlords, supporters of England, and on these national assets, provisions would have been established landowners and farmers, who would have bought the land from the Republic that Irish at a price fixed by a commission and payable by annuities.

(1) New Irelandt p. 'i00 et seq.

(2) VO SulliTaD, New Ireland, p. 335 et seq., and v. Thomas Frost, The Secret Societies, t. II, p. 276 et seq.

(3) lBagenal, The American Irish, '^}. 116.

52S LXS SECRET SOCIETIES IN IRELAND

Unlike the nation of 1848, the Fenian made exclusively appealing to the lower strata of the population and intended to give the movement a distinctly democratic character.

Their hatred of the Catholic Church was the final act of betrayal. The founders of Fenianism had ties to the revolutionaries. cosmopolitan.

In the government plans of the future republic Bored by Stephens, all cults had to be placed on a on an equal footing, and the priests strictly confined to the exercise of their spiritual functions. Education was to be secularized. see^ \e& religious bodies deprived of their property^ Education of the clergy placed in the hands of the State; the priests were to be as many as possible state officials who would have paid from public treasury funds, in the instructions general general instructions he gave to his lieutenants, Stephens showed particularly bitter for the clergy: "Don't lose your "Time," it said, "to try to win over the priests. They have not They had only one idea: the good of their mother, the Church. That the revo- "May the solution succeed only; Holy Mother Church knows well" "How to come to terms with the facts. Moreover, a "A priest can never be a free agent of his own movements." "ments (1)."

The Fenian newspaper, Virish People, never ceased to excite the Irish people to detach themselves from the clergy:

Superstition, he said, is a yoke that crushes in our country.

common sense. Experience proves that submission to certain

Irish bishops' political power is tantamount to slavery. In this regard, Upon reflection, we arrive at the conclusion that the priest has a right to be obeyed. teaching his flock only in spiritual matters.

No one, except a fool or a servant, would deny the hostility per- resistant and mischievous member of the Irish clergy to the national cause since 1848?....

fatal. Hadn't John Mitchell been forced to declare that there was no had no hope for Ireland until all its people had
He was excommunicated along with the bells, the Gospel, and the torches. That's

(I) Philip Bagnall, American Irish Tea, p. 135-136.

LES Fenians 525

a very old story: but we would have liked to preserve the memory of it in our heart (i).

That was exactly the language used at the same time the Italian revolutionaries of the Mazzinist school the newspapers French Masonic publications, such as Le Siècle and L'Opinion nationale^

A committee of public safety was formed within the F.F.V.
the Fenian society, to single out for their vengeance all those who had tried to harm the association, and from that time that (1859), several official organs of the association in America^ who openly incited some owners to murder or of certain politicians as to a patriotic work that. The association was organizing a spying system in the the whole world, everywhere there were Irish people, and threatened those who would leave the association for a revenge of which a great number of murders committed in Australia, California or in The populous cities of England have shown the incapacity (2).

The association spread rapidly among the Irish from America, which had long since already brought into their new homeland of associations modeled after the Ribbonmen under the name of Alolly Maguire and of the Ancient Order of Hibernians. (D'Alton) O'Mahony, for several years, had been preparing the ground rain.

In Ireland, Fenianism initially spread with a large captivating promptness.

Mr. Sullivan notes that its spread was singularly aided by the English press. At that time, the newspapers of London
The courts continued to incite the Italian subjects of Pius IX to revolt. of the King of Naples or Austria. They proclaimed that a people can only be legitimately governed by itself, that the na-nationalities have an inalienable right to independence, which all The means are good for a people when they are dissatisfied with his government and wants to overthrow it. Members of the ministry they themselves made statements to that effect on several occasions

if the Irish people were gradually drawn into the ways of vio-

(1) Issues of May 14, June 1, September 24, 1864, cited by Bagoaal, 'rAe American/risA, p, 169-170.

(2) Sullivan, Km Ireland.. p. 238-239.

524 SECRET SOCIETIES IN IRELAND

slow and if the Fenians succeeded in supplanting the organizations wiser ones, like the Tenant Learjue or, to reiterate, the National Law^ gue founded in 1858 by Mr. O'Donoghue (I).

We know the story of the Fenians' attempts: they dreamed to secretly establish army corps in Ireland held by arms, gold, and leaders from America. In 1865, Stephens ordered an insurrection; as always, it failed.
severely. A large number of Fenians were condemned to the prison. In 1867, Stephens tried another move of the same kind.
genre- Everything failed and had to fail. The only thing to note
The point of view that concerns us is that, on that latter date, the American Fenians had chosen to command the operations in England Cluserel, the future general of the Commune in Mar-In Seille and Paris, Cluseret found that the organization was not suliisammcnt solid and preferred easier exploits (*2).

This is the time to note how wise the conduct had been of the Catholic Church. As early as 1848, the bishops had condemned any attempt at insurrection and later Pius IX declared applying cables to the Fenians the censures which strike Freemasonry (3).

The Church's conduct in these circumstances was dictated above all by the principles of natural law, of which it is an immutable guardian
ble. One cannot deny that the absence of any government is naive.
Irish national having historical rights, the English dynasty has not acquired by prescription a legitimate sovereignty over this fortunate country. Armed insurrection could therefore not be approved, especially given the goodwill of the English government, of the
The entire English nation, so to speak, needs improvement in the limit of what is possible, the fate of Ireland cannot be determined.
tested. The reminder of the laws against Catholics, the disestablishthe Anglican Church, the Land Act of 1870, that of 1881
These are irrefutable proofs of this.

But this conduct of the Church, dictated above all by the principle of justice, turned out to be the most political at the same time. The in-Uprisings can only lead to disasters, and societies Secrets only deliver this noble people into the hands of dangerous schemers.

commit the most abominable crimes.

(1) Sullivan, New Ireland, p. 248 following ot.

(2) Philip. Bagenal, The American Irish, p. 184-149.

(^) V. Decree of the Congregation of the Inquisition of January 12, 1870.

the intervention of sects

525

S. 7. – The intervention of sects in events

FROM 1879 TO 1882

After the failures of 1865 and 1867, the Fenians seemed have lost much of their importance. Their organization it continued, however; but the leadership was divided between several rival cliques, said Bagenal. They remained quite apart from the Home-Rule movement (1).

They gave no further outward sign of life except through a grotesque attempt to invade Canada. There was a tendency to view Fenianism as one of the many organizations which in America serve politicians to live at the expense of people. Certainly, this was a very important and practical aspect. that of Fenianism, but the leaders who directed it in the shadows They were nonetheless plotting their schemes, they were becoming more and more moreover, imbued with revolutionary ideas. The opportunity to return The stage was finally going to be provided to them.

In 1879, following a series of poor harvests, the question Agrarian tensions were once again becoming more acute in Ireland. It was then observed that a group of men, most former Fenians like Michael Davitt, O'Connor Power, who judged the time had come to resolutely place the debate on the social terrain.

They began by declaring war on the organization existing "the Tenant League" and at Home-Rule. Based on the Ribbon-Men's still existing associations, they supplanted completely the men who led these associations and in soon dragged along the active part of the population.

of the Home-Rule party^ hesitated for a long time to enter the new a new movement; but in June 1879, he threw himself into it resolutely ment (2). He would have done better to eco,'.ter scs first hesitations.

The National Land League ostensibly offered

{\} Th* AmerieaH Inih, p. 151.

(2) The American IrHh, p. 191.

"»26 SECRET SOCIETIES IN IRELAND

first, to obtain the abolition of excessive farm rents, secondly instead of facilitating land acquisition by those who cultivate it wind. Finally, its National League liter, wider than the word of Home Rule, hinted at a future emancipation complete complete of the country. The means to be employed had to be the refusal of to pay for exaggerated denials and resistance against evictions. The battle cry was "Abolition of Landlordism in Ireland."

Certainly, the Irish question should not be judged by point of view where similar facts would be judged in France or in Germany. We have spoken of the unjust origins of large estates in Ireland. There is more, in the presence of the famine, which occurred after three bad harvests successive landlords displayed ruthless harshness. In the English Parliament, Whiglis and Tories united to re- to push through all the requests for an inquiry from the Irish MPs and A member of Israel's ministry, Mr. Lowllier, responded ironically that there was more distress in certain parts of England and Scotland, as well as Ireland

Such denials of justice inevitably push people into the arms of the Revolution and it must be acknowledged that, without action violent of the Land League, the English Parliament would never have entered the path of redress, where the 1881 landact has marked that a first step (1).

Unfortunately, as in all revolutions, some elements singularly impure substances have been mixed in.

Michael Davitt supported the National Land League movement on the organization of the Fenians in America. In Ireland itself he achieved this great result of intimidation only by using Ribbon Men; these secret societies existed in several parts of the country. The judges completely dominated the movement from the beginning. Those most lenient towards the National Land League are forced to recognize it (2).

distinctly socialist programs emerged. These trends are ancient among the Fenians.

Mr. Philip Bagenal points out that the refusal procedures farm leases, the suspension of justice, and the entire functioning of

(1) VM Sullitan, New Ireland p. 429 to p, 440.

(2) See «D f MDi M. Sullivan New-Ireland, p. 440.

the intervention of sects 527

social life, to which the National Land League owes its successes had been recommended as early as 1848 by an extreme member of the Young Ireland^ James Fintan Lalor, the publisher of Virish Felon.

The English government, he wrote, will be forced into this dilemma: or abandon the landlords, or defend them with all the armed force of Pempire. If he refuses to incur this odious expense and to com promising England's security in a social war of extremism mination, then there will be no more landlords: the people will be the pro-owner of the land; a powerful revolution will have been accomplished, and The foundations of a national revolution will have been laid... It has been said that a war of the kind whose principles I am outlining would be re-guarded with horror by Europe. I assert the opposite and say that a Such a war would spread of its own accord throughout Europe. Listen to my prophecy and remember its words. The principle that I This question will one day raise the ire of all of Europe. Humanity must to be mistress of the land. The people's right to make laws caused the first major earthquake, the aftershocks of which were felt still feel. The people's right to own the land will produce the pro-chain of major revolution (1).

This is pure socialism and the Revolution in its essence.

A number of directors of the Land League^ those who were its true creators and hidden leaders, they pushed this movement in this direction. Michael Davitt, James Stephens, O'Donovan Rossa and their supporters rejected the undeniable benefit-the benefit that Mr. Gladstone's Land Act brought to the Irish people in 1881, and uttered the absolute cry of no rent (no farm leases) 1 They hired a socialist writer, Mr. Henri George, into their service. who in his writings supports the absolute illegitimacy of property landowner and who declared in London, at a meeting, that all the current landowners were to be expropriated without compensation. Finally, they are trying by all possible means to raise a agrarian question in Scotland and England, to excite the iron^* farmers and agricultural workers against the landowners, although The same injustices do not exist in these two countries.

Britain.

Finally, the leaders of the land league sought an alliance.

(1) said* from The American Msk, p. 117.

SECRET SOCIETIES IN IRELAND

m

the most advanced men of the Revolution. Mr. Parnell himself—meme, during a trip to Paris, did not hesitate to seek support of Rochefort and the Communards.

It should be noted that since James Stephens, the Fenians and the Land League always had an organizational center in Paris.
That's where the English government went, following the re-Carey's revelations before the Dublin grand jury, claiming the extradition of Mr. Byrn, secretary of the Land and Labour League Of Great Britain. The newspaper Le Citoyen et la Bataille of February 28th
February 1883, by protesting against his extradition, recalled this memory
The reason for this is that in 1870 Mr. Byrn was a sergeant in the company of Irishmen, who fought bravely for the French Republic cause.

The Irish episcopal body, while supporting the cause of the people and the owners, in what is legitimately their right, had to condemn the actions of the Z, anti/caj 7 ue. Especially he condemned agrarian crimes, to which, despite his official disavowals, his exiles did not give too many encouragements were given (1); finally, he never ceased to put The faithful warn against the liaison that the leaders of the movement sought to establish a link between the Irish cause and the cosmic revolution Mopolite. Cardinal MacCabe, Archbishop of Dublin, published at This subject was addressed in a pastoral letter in August 1881, in which we read the follow

We have often heard good people express surprise at the energizers
The condemnations issued by the popes against secret societies and their guilty members. These societies seemed to computer eyes such harmless and even beneficial things that they could not to discern the reason for their condemnation. But the sentry placed on the alarm tower has more than ordinary wisdom, for it holds the place

(1) Here, for example, is what Mr. Lalor, Member of Parliament, one of the lawyers A Moral Vinturrection, at a meeting held on October 10, 1880, at Atty, a few days after the murder of Lord Montmores:

The Archbishop of Dublin appears to be under the impression that the Land /eai7us, of which that accusation of the archbishop. Neither he nor anyone else has the right to make us pay responsible for the assassinations committed in the country. The archbishop is He died because an unfortunate man who bore the name of Mountmores was murdered. The other day, no doubt it was a bad deed. But who is it that is moved by it? What did a poor devil raise? In Anginterro, five murders are committed every day for one who is committed to Ireland, who is it that takes care of the men who have killed their wives, their children, and their mistresses. 7 But because he was found Since the assassin wore a noble title, his death was widely publicized. And the archbishop denounced her to the nation!

The crowd, which was spreading these perverse insinuations, applauded enthusiastically. It Moreover, this was a common practice among the speakers of the Land League. See various editions of this kind in the work of Mr. Bagenal.

the intervention of sects 529

of Peter. He is the vicar of Him who reads the secrets of souls, and this Sentinel has discovered the most bitter enemy of religion and freedom rational human being under the mask of the philanthropist and the philosopher.

The deplorable state of Europe today shows whether the popes have or not deceived. France, fallen under the grip of infidelity, makes the War against God and his Christ; Russia pales before the dreadful specter of nihilism; Italy groaned under the tyranny of the sects, which had promised freedom and prosperity, but brought him only poverty. Islam and dishonor. Germany, having become a permanent camp and who devoured, without profit for herself, the substance of a thrifty people, We learn what statesmen under the orders of Freemasonry can accomplish. England, hitherto victorious in its external enemies, is threatened internally by an enemy who has has infiltrated the very heart of authority and is preparing conflicts with it. which could end in a wild revolution.

But what will we say about Ireland, our beloved country? It has passed through very dark days, but a glorious blessing was bestowed upon him assured by a merciful Providence. Faith, honor, love These, for eternal justice, characterized her in her darkest days. Are principles now being set aside? God forbid! But You know what the Apostle says, that communication with evil corrupts good morals. What is true of individuals is also of a nation. You must therefore, dear cooperators, raise your voices, child, at the risk of being misunderstood by our friends and seeing our intentions slandered by our enemies, and to protect our people against a imminent danger.

A few months ago, when an alliance between Ireland and the representatives sensing the worst infidelity of the unfortunate Paris, she was sought out by agents without a warrant, our Catholic instincts shuddered with horror anger at this dishonorable union. A similar attempt is made was invited to receive delegates from an association, whose members directors are avowed infidels whose formal aim is to ren to all religions. Experience teaches us that in its march The monster of infidelity never discovers his true intentions and his character. Those on whom he casts, like a net, his first seductions, would flee in horror upon openly hearing the expression of his impiety. But words of sympathy assure their messengers Gers received a favorable reception. Trust followed their supposed zeal for the rectification of our ills Their deceitfulness attributes these real ills or Imaginary aspects of society, religion, or even God himself. The serpent

He thus charms his victim before pouncing on her.

Therefore, warn the faithful against the dangers to which loyalty

34

III

530 SECURE COMPANIES IN IRELAND

Even their very nature exposes them. Show that these societies, which must absolutely be proscribed by the Church; they are the worst.
enemies of domestic peace and national prosperity. Tell them that the man who lends his name to the lists of these malevolent associations ciations, places his freedom and honor in the hands of unknown agents who are ready to betray them. Perhaps our Irish will say that they are Strong enough in faith to take no risks. Alas! They were strong.
also in faith these thousands of our brothers who have lost this precious treasure skies in the cities of England and America I

The following year the Irish episcopate, meeting in Maj^noolh, He renewed these condemnations. The Holy Father confirmed them. in a brief dated August 1, 1882, in which he condemns especially "secret societies^ that seek to evade the law under "a pretext for avenging him, to disrupt the established order of things"
"public. >"

These warnings were heeded by the vast majority of Irish people, and it had been possible to report in the year 1882 a di* notable ammunition in agrarian crimes.

The sectarians only became more violent. They sought to to bring to this country the wild passions that drive the the most fanatical revolutionaries of both worlds.

The National Land League dissolved because the elements that The components were too disparate.

four different factions, and the same ones exist in the mother country.

One, represented by the Boston Pilot and by Mr. Collins the president of the American ISiLand League, is moderate; she would like to limit itself to constitutional agitation and aims for the Home ray. The second, whose organ is Vlrish World, is registered on its flag is "io-ren" and is socialist. The third, led by Mr. Devoy, editor of Vlrish natio7î., propagates the idea of an insurrection army (1). These various factions met in Chicago in August 1881 a major convention, where their divisions erupted; the the party of violence prevailed, and the representatives were seen rushing to it sentients of this cosmopolitan revolutionary spirit that the great American cities. (See book III, chapter XXXIII, § 6).

Finally, a fourth faction, which could be called the party of

(I) Philip BflgennI, Irüh in America, p. 220 et seq.

the intervention of sects 531

dynamite, has given itself the mission of organizing the assassination (i).

In 1881, this latter group created an Irish section, which aimed to assassinate the main officials* public officials and all citizens who would obstruct the actions of the Land League, including the jurors and witnesses, which fulfills* would do their duty before the courts. In November 1881, a emissary of the committee established in London, named Walsh, after having recognized as affiliated with the Fenians, announced to a name Mr. Carey, Alderman of Dublin and Fenian himself, whom he had was appointed to organize the Invincibles section in Ireland Irish. Carey, bound by his previous oaths, accepted and swore over a knife, promising to kill without asking for an explanation whoever might be designated to him, and by consenting to be himself killed if he refused to obey. The number of members was determined alone. 350 for Ireland. 11 was easy for Walsh and Carey to recruiting this staff from among the affiliates of Fenianism and the Ribbon-Men, already accustomed to similar crimes. Awaiting As long as victims were designated for them, they received allowances sufficient money to live in debauchery and peace* resse.

In May 1883, Le Révolté de Genève, organ of the anarchists chistes, gave in veiled terms some indications about the Feniane brotherhood—that's what he called them—and published This is an excerpt from a proclamation sent by a group of Fenians. From the United States to the Irish:

Awaken, rise up, solemn and mysterious conclave, continue to Increase your strength, exult! Sword, fire, broadsword, and you others considerable resources of civilization^ come to the aid of our hatred invincible against a hereditary, ruthless, tireless enemy, for the destruction of which we must employ, as long as we have one breath of life, all the means at the disposal of human energy (2).

Some time later, on May 13, 1883, the horrible tra- took place Phoenix Park, where Lord Cavendish and Mr. Burke fell in broad daylight, beaten by a gang of assassins. During For eighteen months the English police were powerless to discover them. However, little by little, proof was acquired that this crime and more Several others had been committed by a secret society. In no In November 1883, the murderers of the Joye family declared themselves guilty.

(1) Ibid. p. 220etsuiv.

(2) Cited (laos ÌUidon of May 24, 1882.

532

SECRET COMPANIES IN IRELAND

guilty of murder, but saying that they had been forced to do so under under penalty of being executed themselves by virtue of the commitments they had taken.

Finally, in January 1883, the assassins were apprehended. from Phoenix Park, and one of them, Garey, decided to do some full confession before the Dublin grand jury. He recounted the the way in which society had been formed, and then the order that it had received orders to assassinate Mr. Forsier, Secretary of State for Ireland, and Mr. Burke. Mr. Forsier's departure saved him from the fate that awaited him. tended. As for Lord Cavendish, he perished trying to defend his friend. Lord Cowpner and several other landowners had been condemned to death: their assassination failed only as a result of accidental circumstances.

Some details of Carey's deposition showed how how the Society of the Invincible Irish was itself led by a superior secret society (i). They received from time to time another is the visit of a person residing in London who is making himself He only knows them as number one. That's "A man with a good air about him," said Carey, "a gentleman. He's the one who..." supplied the knives to the twenty assassins; he had them carried by a woman.

Walsh, from whom the English government requested rexlradiioii secretary of a secret society of Irishmen *in Ilochdale in An-England, probably a section of Vancient Order of Hiber^ nians.

Carey, whose deposition completely corroborates the witness
The involvement of other people, concluded by saying that the checks sent to the prisoners while they were being held at Kil-Mainham, as suspects, came from the Land League.

Two witnesses swore, on oath, that two Prisoners stabbed special juror Field during the night where the murders committed in Dublin Park took place.

0) Note this characteristic detail of the debates before the Dublin grand jury:
when after the overwhelming deputies of Carey or proceeded to the intorrogatory of Patrice Uulaiiy, accused of a murder charge on the judge's behalf Lawson, accused of complicity in the Pliænix-Purk crime, this individual, consumed by the nialaüio, pdio, emaciated, looking more like a specter than a human creature-niaino, êlundit lu main un désignorant Caruy avec une douleur profonde plutôt qu'avec anger; fi/. Murphy, dÛ~U, voüà the man who is the source of all the misfortunes of "My life, my childhood, and everything up to this day."

the intervention of the sects 531

Parrel told Titistruction that he had been affiliated with Fenianism, Seven years ago. Since then, he has attended many Fenian meetings; he knew that the prisoners belonged to a group calling themselves: "Society of Assassins"; he said he had met at the meetings.

A police officer, called as a witness, stated that he had a large quantity was discovered at the home of the accused Whelan of weapons and ammunition. He added that the individual, who had supplied to the police the information that led to this discovery, had been assassinated shortly afterwards.

The main intermediary of Lani lea/jue with the Invin^
One of the Irish targets was a man named Slieridan, of whom Mr. Parncll has ob held the return to Ireland, after his release from Kilmainham and this agreement with Mr. Gladstone, which brought about precisely the retirement from Mr. Forster of the Ministry. Mr. Parnell told Parliament:
"Mr. Sheridan is one of the main leaders of the Land League" in the Gonnaught and, if he is allowed to return to Ireland, he will be able to use his influence effectively to stop the perpetration agrarian crimes." He came there, in effect, with authorization of the government. Carey saw him disguised as a priest, under the name of Father Murphy, and he received from him the money and weapons that the Land league sent zxxn Invincibles.

Certainly Mr. Parnell and many other members of the Land League. The league has not been informed of the formation of the Society assassins. But they are ashamed to have been the instruments of These wretches, for the sake of external agitation, for having accepted the responsibility of an organization, of which they were not the real directors.

Moreover, Mr. Parnell's attitude in Parliament, at the session of February 24, 1883, when Mr. Forster delivered his damning indictment against the Land League^ demonstrated how far had been pushed to compromise by the men of the movement lying with the leaders of secret organizations.

Finally, it emerges from this revelation that the Land League itself— even was a cralion of the Fenians, and that among the Fenians It is the most advanced fraction that has concentrated all the force of The action. It's the eternal story of the secret Suciclôs.

One last remark to make is that the leaders of that fraction— extreme Fenianism appears to be related to the Anarchists The Christians and the Nihilists.

534

SECRET SOCIETIES IN IRELAND

When, in January 1883, Prince Krapotkin was arrested at Evian, and brought before the Lyon criminal court, the following days Radical groups announced that the investigating judge had received from a Irish MP MacDonald offers bail of 5,000 1. ster. to obtain his provisional release. There is no deputy Irish of that name and there is probably some confusion in this indication, but the fact of the intervention of Irish people in favor* from the leader of the Anarchists^ from the director of Le Révolté, does not appear no less certain (1).

S 8. — Ireland and Parliamentary Government

In concluding this chapter, we must point out that, For a century, the English government has not maintained peace public in Ireland than by resorting from time to time to acts decoercion, that is to say, a set of measures analogous to those resulting from the state of siege in France. The privilege of Vhabeas corpus is periodically suspended, which allows the administration to arrest citizens without putting them through when the authorities deem them dangerous; seditious newspapers are suppressed, the circulation of foreign publications, such as Virish World in recent times, is forbidden, foreigners suspects are expelled by police order.

Certainly, these precautions are perfectly legitimate, and the English government would be failing in all its duties if it did not... It didn't work. But if we add to that the fact that at no time, Even in times of greater peace, Ireland is not governed by its elected and responsible representatives, one will ask what does the absolute cult professed by the English mean for the parliamentary government and the contempt they show they apply it to continental powers, which do not apply it at home they.

Parliamentary government is a form of government a very remarkable figure that is perfectly suited to the conditions present where the people of Great Britain find themselves; but it

(1) See Iq Progrès de Lyon cited by VINtransigeanl of January 8, 1883.

Irlânœ and the parliamentary government 535 does not have an absolute value: it assumes complete agreement in the nation on the principle of sovereignty as well as on the social issues and political struggles confined within the administrative domain. Where these conditions are lacking, Parliamentary government becomes unenforceable, and Mr. Glads tone, the author of the disgraceful pamphlets against the government Neapolitan in 1856, today employs much more violent not only to thwart the plots of the conspiratorial trous, but above all to dominate a general situation wheat, the demands of a people who are calling for their ancestors property titles after three centuries of usurpation. It is necessary It would therefore be good if enlightened Englishmen gave up once and for all to this prejudice of parliamentarism, a prejudice as ridiculous as the French chauvinism, which is why many honest people among them became the blind accomplices of all the societies secret territories of the continent.

CHAPTER THIRTY-THIRD

SECRET SOCIETIES BAN STATES-UNITED NORTH AMERICA

J. !•'. – ORtftine and organization of masonry in

UNITED STATES

Freemasonry was propagated very early on by the English in the North American colonies. In 1729, under the great master of the Duke of Norfolk, a certain Daniel Cox was appointed Grand Master of the Grand Provincial Lodge of New Jersey; In 1733, the Grand Lodge of St. John was established in Boston, at the request of the brothers established in this valley^ says the charter issued of the Grand Lodge of England. Soon lodges were established in Baltimore, Philadelphia, and other major cities. In 1792, The Order was already extremely widespread, and it celebrated in Boston a The solstice festival, which brings together all the masons from the colonies. Warren was appointed by the Grand Lodge of England as Grand Master of the Rite Scots for all of America. This same Warren, a few Years later, it was to fall at the Battle of Bunker Hill. Around the time of the War of Independence, many people influential sonages, either in the southern colonies or in New Old England, belonged to the lodges; Franklin, Jefferson, Thomas Payne were followers. They served, we believe, to the spread of egalitarian ideas, which at that time were erupting

538 SLICUET COMPANIES IN THE UNITED STATES in the newly emancipated states and brought to Virginia in particular a religious and destructive movement against customs my nationals, which the wisest men have regretted then (1).

The Grand Lodge of Boston declared itself independent in 1778.

After the disorder that followed the establishment of the new order things, a religious and conservative reaction occurred in The country, and Freemasonry itself, under these influences, saw its beginnings to reject the egalitarian spirit that the previous generation had introduced.

Under the influence of the same causes as in England and under other very particular to the country, Freemasonry has taken on very large proportions in the United States. Each of the 38 states of the Union American has a large regular lodge^ and sometimes two, at because of internal divisions. According to the latest statistics, in By 1880, they brought together approximately 10,000 lodges under their jurisdiction. including 545,000 active masons^ that is to say, regularly paying their wages The membership fee and lodge attendance. The number of Freemasons passives {v. Introduction V) must at least be tripled (2).

The most commonly practiced rite is the English York Rite.

III, chap. XXXI, § 1). Above rise the chapters of royal archy which has approximately 135,000 members. Finally, as by a reaction against the excesses of political democracy, Americans are very fond of ribbons and badges (regalia) and the parades, there is an order of Templars, divided into grand commanderies and encampments, which include nearly 110,000 members, divided into numerous ranks. This order it may derive from English Templar rites; it has no relation with the very dangerous sect of the same name, which existed in France at the end of the 18th century and during the Restoration period (v. liv. II, chap. V, § 2; Liv. III, chap. II, § 4).

Most major American lodges reject their among people of color. These have founded special lodges, organized like those of their white brothers. There is today

(1) See work I 03 Contemporary United States Introduction 2 7 and chapter XX
!!

(2) We extract these statistical indications from the Freemason's Chronicle of 1880 (cited by the Masonic journal of January 1880, in the Chain of Union of 1880) p. 23, from the Lntiinpililan ilasonic pocket book of 1880, the Masonic world^ May 1881, of Vallgemein'es Uandbueh der Freimaurerri t. IV. Ergaenziingen 1879.

the spirit of American Freemasonry 539

large color lodges in the main states of the Union.
They have several thousand members. A few major lodges they also admit white people and people of color; but they are considered irregular by others (1).

A host of other societies of Masonic origin exist in United States, because as we wrote in 1877, it is not a the least curious features of contemporary America, that this tendency to forge secret ties, while the laws of countries do not place any obstacles to meetings and associations tions of all kinds. One of the most widespread is the society of Odd-fellows, which is just a popular and lesser simplification costly of Freemasonry: it has all the characteristics. Origin born in England, where it was created in 1812 in Manchester, it was organized in the United States in 1819. In 1851, the Order of the Odd-Fellows was supplemented by a kind of adoption masonry for women, called the Rebbekah degree. In 1880, it had 6,975 lodges in both the United States and Canada and approximately 450,000 members (2).

Generally speaking, and with a few exceptions, one can to apply to Freemasonry in the United States everything that has been said about Freemasonry in England. The lodges in the United States are English by origin, by rites, by the spirit that dominates them. Let us read in the Masonic World of December 1871 the ritual of the ceremony for installing a lodge in the Massachusetts, and "we will see," said Brother Caubet, "how much the Ma-
"American stupidity differs in its forms from Freemasonry"
"French and how much religious sentiments still play a role in

(1) See the Masonic world of October 1581.

(2) V. Revised odd feumhip illiutrated by rev. Blanchard of Wbeaton College, Chicago, Ezra A. Cook 1881 ia-12.

The Odd*Feilows company is of English origin and was born from a transformation of old companionships. Despite its bizarre rites, it is at heart a great mutual aid society, which provides real services. Also in England, we don't... She is not condemned by the Catholic Church. In the United States, she has a certain chara-
Masonic influence is much more pronounced, and the censored terms are generally applied to which strike Freemasonry.

540 SECRET SOCIETIES IN THE UNITED STATES

€ on the other side of the Atlantic a considerable role in the cere-
"Monk of the lodges."

Many Americans mistake Freemasonry for a religion gion like any other; which led Bishop Spalding to say, archbishop of Baltimore, to a Freemason, who asked him Why the Catholic Church condemned it: "For many "for reasons, and among others because Freemasonry is the 4c best human and natural counterfeit, which extends "to take the place of our supernatural and divinely
"revealed,"

In 1878 the Grand Lodges of the United States and Canada had followed the example set by the Grand Lodges of Great Britain, and have severed all relations with the Grand Orient of France.

"Fortunately for the United States," said Father Thébaud, "the policy adopted by the founders of the constitution, and strict observed since then, keeps us out of the orbit of politics European... That's the real reason that made Freemasonry thievery in this country, at least as a whole, less suspicious in sincerely conservative men, who want to protect the so-society against the disastrous effects of the destructive principles of order social; in other words, it's the lack of connection with the European sects (1). »

In a new country, where social hierarchies and ties of Patronage does not exist and families disperse rapidly. Indeed, many individuals are drawn to the association by the lure of mutual protection, often very effective, which is sure to its members, "At least seventy percent of the masons are not affiliated with the institution, says the Freemason of St-Louis, that for personal gain and in no way for none of the principles professed by the lodges (2). » 11 there is no countries where resignations and dismissals for non-payment contributions are more substantial. It is per year of 6% or of the 7% of the number of active members.

Politicians are all part of lodges and they play a role Taxation is a factor in many elections. When they can, They only allow their own people to reach public office. bres. But this influence is exclusively local, because the two major parties that divide the United States, the Democrats and

(t) Fm/n«*(;ftry in VAmerican cathoUc qmrterhj review: d'octobre 1881.

(?) Cite p.ir lo Monde maçonnique do juin 1878.

the esphjt db la. American Masonic 541

Republicans are equally represented in the lodges. None of the deu.\ cannot be used exclusively. The exclusion is not than for laypeople.

"Although Freemasonry is not a party in this country political, says the Cutholic World, it is nonetheless a pou to see some importance in the world of politicians. One A Freemason is not typically considered for a public office. that his connection with the Order is notified to the brothers, so that to guide their vote, perhaps not in an official way, but the The result is nonetheless effective (1).

However, the situation is not quite the same in the United States United only in England. The Christian foundations of society there are much more shaken by general indifferentism and by the mixture of impious elements, which the growing flow of immigration European union brings it to bear. Thus the question of whether a The idea that atheists should be excluded from lodges is far from being so clearly re-solve than in England.

In 1870, the Mijstic Star, a Masonic newspaper from Chicago, published omitted an article in which he complained that the grandmaster from the Grand Lodge of Iowa would have spoken of the God who created the world and of Jesus Christ, redeemer of r/m)na>ii7^. These expressions do not They are not suitable in such a place, he said, because the lodges count

We must not hurt them with such expressions (2).
These are exactly the same arguments that were used in France.
put forward to obtain the amendment of the constitution of Grand Orient. The Mystic Star theory cannot yet prevail.
pher in the Freemasonry of the United States; but it has adherents rents in increasing numbers, as the following account proves that The Masonic World of July 1881 borrows from newspapers Americans:

In October 1880, the Ohio Grand Lodge was seized by the lodge of Bladensburg, complaining that one of its members was boasting
She was afraid of not believing in the Bible; she asked the grand master this that she had to do in that circumstance.

He replied that the regulations do indeed require belief in God, but none of them prescribes believing that the Bible is essentially

(1) Catholic World, February, 1881.

^i} Quoted by the ChrUlrian Cynosurat of 4 novambra 1870,

542 SECRET SOCIETIES IN THE UNITED STATES

divine. Although neophytes must swear an oath on the Bible, one never demanded that Jews, Muslims, and pagans renounce to their opinions, although it is known that they reject the revelation of the Bible. Moreover, apprentices are taught that Freemasonry unites men of all countries, of all sects and opinions, through all these After lengthy explanations, Mr. Lemmon concluded that, whatever Whatever disapproval the conduct of the accused brother deserves, he
There was nothing to be done.

The Grand Lodge commission, tasked with examining the message of The Grand Master did not share this opinion. In his view, it is indispensable to believe humbly and sincerely in the origin of the Holy Bible; for it is from this book alone that intelligent knowledge comes to us.
and satisfactory livinity.

Between the liberalism of his grand master – a very remarkable liberalism
It is possible if you dream that this concerns American Freemasons, – and the into Regarding the management of its commission, the Grand Lodge did not hesitate; it approved completely the report of this one.

§ 3. – the “Anti-Masonic Party” and the “National

Christian Pari y »

The Catholic Church has never ceased to condemn the States-United Freemasonry and generally all secret societies, where one swears an oath to an unknown authority. The two national conferences held in Baltimore in 1855 and 1869 had on this express provisions.

This is because the Church, as guardian of the principles of the mutables of morality, cannot vary its prescriptions according to local customs. Freemasonry, even in the most favorable assumptions, is always contrary to the order by establishing a mutual support society outside of the ties natural social norms; she is dangerous because of the oaths she demands, finally, that she be impious by the counterfeiting of religious ceremonies religious and irreverent use of the holy books to which she his book. Furthermore, as we look it further, some Masonic lodges, without overgeneralizing this assessment ciation, are in contact with other hostile secret societies not only to the Catholic Church, but also to all religions revealed.

The Anti-Masonic Party 543

Within Protestantism itself, Freemasonry has raised equally strong opposition.

In 1827, in the state of New York, a journalist named William Morgan, who had received the highest degrees, published a book where they were revealed (1). He was drawn into Rochester's lodge, embraced by the Freemasons in a boat, and he was never seen again. But more. His friends accused the Freemasons of having assassinated him. They claimed that he had drowned in Lake Ontario and they smelled a corpse like his, but it was proven that it was that of a certain Monroe. The legal proceedings were unsuccessful. No, because all the judges and police officers in the county were Freemasons themselves, as well as the state governor, Clinton. The outrage caused by this crime and the denial of justice The actions that followed caused a great deal of emotion in the State of New York, and a special party called the Anti-Masonic was formed. party to exclude all people from public functions belonging to secret societies. So far, so good: But in the United States, politics is a profession. The men who had organized the Anti-Masonic party in service, as electoral support for the Democrats who were fighting the White Party then in power. It ended up, like all the other parties, being more than an electoral machine exploited by politicians and as intolerant as the Freemasons themselves (2).

The events that gave rise to it were no less true. Fifty years after Mr. Thurlow Weed, who had known details about his assassination by Freemasons. His burial was discovered in July 1881 at Pembroke in Bata County via, New York State, and some debris of pa- were found pier bearing the name of a Freemason, Henry Brown, than to this at the time public rumor had considered it one of his murderers (3). A statue was erected to Morgan in 1882, at Batavia.

More recently, a large group of sincere Protestants Christians devoted to the Holy Scriptures founded in 1868

(1) Frematonry exposed and explained howing lhe origin history and nature of Masonry, is effeeU on the government and the Christian ReUgion^ ia-S» New>Yorck, 1826, ia-8*, Fitz Gerald publihser.

C?) V. Kzra the eonetitutions and laivs of American people, New York, 1850 in-8

(3) See the New York Herald, August 9 and 11, 1875: its articles have been summarized by Abbé Martin in Le Monde on September 17, 1875.

544 Secret Societies in the United States

uuo public good league entitled: h National Christian Association^ tion, which has given itself the special mission of fighting the Masonic media coverage, conferences, sermons and even by intervening in the elections. Certainly, in the publications from that league often shock us with the expression of some very strange ideas about Catholicism, and of pre-judged against his teachings; but the high honor, the perfect good faith, the very delicate religious sense of its members are above all dispute. By engaging in a struggle also unequal against a power stronger than anywhere else In matters of political and financial interests, they demonstrate a great Christian courage.

The National Christian Association criticizes Freemasonry for: 1* of antisocial behavior by substituting family ties with ties secrets, by vitiating the administration of justice by influences these hidden things, and by introducing a false camaraderie in financial matters; 2. to destroy the Christian faith through its ri- Your teachings and his teachings. Here is how he expresses himself on this subject Reverend J. Day Brownies:

Freemasonry is a religion. It claims to save man and the to perfect. It proclaims itself the true religion, the religion of humanity... Yet, she profanes the name of God, she profanes the Holy Scriptures... But it is above all Christ who is excluded from them Prayers... I analyzed all their prayers and there are many.*

and the conclusion of the lodge meetings, for the reception of their members bres and their advancement to new degrees^ for their burial.
 Well, firstly, there isn't a single one where Our Lord Jesus Christ is recognized as our savior and mediator?... But that is the radical reversal of Christianity. A Masonic speaker said:
 "The religion of Freemasonry is that which includes both the Jew and the kind one, the Muslim, and the Hindu." But then it's not the re-Christian religion, because the Jews do not recognize Jesus Christ. This
 It is not the religion of the Bible, because the Muslim does not recognize it.
 This is not the religion of the true God, because Hindus do not believe that the Lord is God. What religion is that then? It is pure deism.
 Freemasonry believes neither in the Son of God, our Savior, nor in the Holy Spirit, our sanctifier. She does not believe in the Bible, since it extracts from it the Gospel which is its crowning achievement.
 She doesn't believe in the true God either, because the God of the Bible is the
 The true God, and the God of the Bible, is the God in Jesus Christ. What

The Anti-Masonic Party

545

So what is his faith? It is nothing other than what pure nature reveals to us.
 disc. It asks us to believe in an incomprehensible architect of the universe, which can be anything we want, or the God of the pantheists^ or the great spirit of the American Indians. We can therefore con-to conclude that Freemasonry is a false religious system, that the the cult she establishes is a false cult, and the temples she erects are merely pagan temples, on whose dark door one can one could rightly write, as on the altar of the Athenians: To the God »n-eonnu.

The National Christian Association is headed by clergymen distinguished, among others the Reverend Blanchard, president of Whea-Tons College, in Illinois. She gives lectures, publishes treatises and books on Freemasonry. Its organ is a
 The Christian Cynosure, a very well-written weekly newspaper.
 Issue 11 appears in Chicago, where the association's center is located.

Following American customs, which serve the campaigns electoral propaganda of ideas, the National Christian i4ModaUo;t enters the arena. But, to avoid the pitfall against which gave rise to the Anli-Masonicparty, it does not ally itself with any of the parties existing tis, and at each presidential election, she proposes as two men are candidates for president and vice-president. of high honorability, which one certainly cannot, in
 In these circumstances, she is accused of ambition; at the same time she publishes \m%platform or program. We have before us the one launched in 1880, where she not only called for the prohibition of oaths

Unsectarians: Cultivating intelligence without improving ca-
"Moral character means creating only cunning and pre-"
"to attract followers; the Bible must therefore always be associated with "Science and education books in all our institutions"
"Of instruction."

Here are the names of the Protestant denominations that adhere as a body to the National Christian party, and consequently prevent their faithful and especially their ministers to be part of the lodges; –
The Adventists (of the day) – Baptists (primitive, of the day, Scandinavians) – the biblical Christians, – the {Bunkers or German Baptists), Church of God (only a part)
–• The Disciples (only a part), – The Friends, – The Lutherans

85

1X1

546 SECRET COMPANIES IN THE UNITED STATES

nothing (Swedes^ Danish^ Norwegians and the synodal conferences) the), – Mennonites, – Methodists (Free and Wesleyan), – the Protestant Methodists of Minnesota–the Moravians–the Omischf – the Plymouth Brethren, – Presbyterians (reformed) associated and united)^ – the Dutch branch of the reformed VPylyse^
– the Brothers united in Christ.

Furthermore, in other confessions a number of con gregations imposed on their members the obligation not to not part of any secret society.

Between Freemasonry and the National Christian Party
The struggle is very unequal. However, the efforts of these zealous Christians
And the actions of these sincere patriots may not be without results.

From 1876 to 1880, the number of Freemasons and odd-fel* lows, instead of increasing with the general movement of the
The population, as was natural, has instead decreased by several thousands.

S 4. – The more advanced sects

Secret societies are much more varied in the United States than in England and France. This extreme multiplicity attenuates it the negative effects, in the sense that they do not form a unified body that, powerfully branched, like French Freemasonry with its thought. But, in this large number of Masonic lodges, of Odd-Fellows, from the Templars, are recruited from fundamentally immoral groups Magpies. The purely humanitarian principle of Freemasonry creates between her and all the organizations of the evil of the allegations, which reveal them on occasion.

Thus, Spiritualism spread throughout New England. mainly through lodges; there are still currently so-Masonic societies of philosophers who practice the prestige of Cagliostroet des Saint-Martin (1).

(1) The Masonic World of January 1880 gives details on a society of Theosophet established in New York:

The first condition imposed on members of society is that they have

THE MORE ADVANCED SECTS 547

Ullgeineiaes Handbuch der Freimaurerei points out that the raçonni(lues out served as a model for the conceivable and the The cult of the founder of the Morions. The Latter-day Saints have lodges were organized among them, which are not, it is true, re-known by other lodges in the United States (1).

The Catholic World, of New York, in an article where the question the establishment of Freemasonry in the United States is being considered with Enough optimism, he expressed it thus:

11 However, it is important not to lose sight of the fact that the constant addition made to the American lodges of Freemason emigrants from Germany, of France, Switzerland, Italy is perhaps calculated with a view to inoculating American Freemasonry, a large part of the poison of Order European.

The influence of the Jews is something that must also be taken into account.

The Jews are a race full of talent. Many of them, who are rationalists, have secured an unassailable position in the European press, and acted powerfully for the destruction of the ins-Christian institutions by the zeal with which they propagated the alleged liberal movement. However, there are many Jews in American lodges caines (2).

European immigrants brought their organisations with them Masonic lodges. There are among the West German populations material groups, such as those found in Leipzig and in Saxony; they have turnvereine, gymnasium societies yours, quite similar in their tendencies to the societies of the free-a thorough knowledge of the laws of nature, in order to arrive thereat the coonaisa ice do la cause éternelle do toutes choses.

This society makes a peremptory opposition to materialism in the natural sciences. tiles; but also a decisive opposition to all positive religions. It is especially Christianity, which she views as dangerous... In order to be able to Having attained the highest rank, the theosophist must have come to not grant the he must have freed himself from any preference for any form of religion whatsoever. of all obligations towards society, the State, and family; he must be ready to give His life was dedicated to the honor of humanity and every brother, regardless of his race. his color or his belief. The members hope to see him gain even more experience. tension, to form a brotherhood of coiuproniut r/iumvahe'foui srtliàré. s
(1) T. IV (Erganxungeu), Leipzig 1879, vo i'ouiig ürighain et Jformons.

(2; No. of February 1881. Eu ltl74, the f E. Oppeiihoiin, very wise of the chapter of fstl Monlhgon in Paris was also a correspondent of the HutnanÜas lodge of New York. V. Cluiine d'Union, June 1874, p. 112.

. (3) V. L'Atlantie Montkly, October 1872.

548 SECRET SOCIETIES IN THE UNITED STATES

In a letter from the United States addressed to the Bauhütte
From Leipzig (issue no. 24 of March 1866) we read the following:

In our logos, as in other American lodges, one finds Wind of the brothers, who no longer belong to any church. These brothers bring their newborn children to our Saint-Jean celebrations, and there they call them brothers and sisters, instead of making them to sprinkle with water by one of the Christian sects and to strip them the first of original sin.

The Germans provide excellent clements to the United States United; but, since 1848, the radicals of Young Germany and, in recent years, the Social Democrats have been onxolQül a large number of representatives, who, as a result of a certain Their intellectual culture exerts an influence on their compatriots harmful influence (1).

The following account, attributed to a Passionist Father from Hoboken, recounts door to the year 1865:

One evening, I was called to administer medication to a dying man in Brooklyn.
He was a German, whom I had had the opportunity to meet several times.
times. His only daughter, an excellent Catholic, warned me that her father was a Freemason. After hearing his confession, I asked him if he had not belonged to some secret society.

– Yes, Father, I am a Freemason; but, as you know, in America, that's not bad.

"That's a mistake," I told him, "Freemasonry is doomed." wherever it exists; therefore you must retract everything you have I was able to promise and deliver your insignia.

The sick man was experiencing some difficulties, but he had kept his faith and He signed the retraction that I drafted; then I had to do new New instances to obtain his scarf, his square and his trowel of silver, his leather apron and his ritual, locked away in a cupboard near his bed. I had to explain to him the necessity of getting rid of All these objects if he wanted to show genuine remorse. I was going out carrying away the spoils, and overjoyed to have snatched a soul to the demon. The young girl was waiting for me under the vestibule:

"Well!" she said, "my father gave you everything, everything, didn't he?" Has he made peace with God?

– Look, rather, at my Gile; I showed her the objects I had to the hand.

(t) V. Hiitorteh polUùehê Blatter, of Munich, July 15 and 15 Mptomhro ItTC.

THE MORE ADVANCED SECTS 549

She takes them one after the other, and then, looking sad, she says:

– No, not everything is there; my father wore those insignia in his lodge, and in important circumstances; he had no trouble with you to hand them over; it cost him more for this book, which is particularly linked to his rank. But there's something else too.

– What is it?

– A document whose contents I don't know; my father advised me to To carry it, completely sealed, after his death, to the head of his lodge. This must be some important secret.

I go back to the sick man, and I say to him;

Why are you deceiving me? You are going to appear before the tribunal.* God's law; do you think you can escape his justice? You still have something to give me.

The patient appeared dismayed; I noticed the pallor of his face and the disturbance in his eyes.v: then, he said with some embarrassment;

– No. There is a written document, like all Freemasons have.

– That's a mistake, Father, I have nothing left.

I redoubled my efforts; it was all in vain, the demon was going to triumph.
I used all the means I believed to be effective on such an occasion.
I got nothing; the patient denied it or didn't answer. Then, his daughter
She opens the door and throws herself to her knees at the foot of the bed:

– Oh! Father, please, save your soul, your daughter would be too You're unhappy. You say you love me, now prove it.

The patient was not expecting this shock: the hugs and Her daughter's tears move her; she lavishes caresses on her.
more vivid; she spoke the most tender words to him, spoke to him of heaven that he loses, and the sick man wants to respond:

– You know I have nothing to hide.

His daughter, adopting an inspired tone;

– Don't lie, Father, you have always been honest; that I Do not be ashamed of your name. Give the Father the paper that you gave me.
It is recommended to bring this to the Worshipful Master of the lodge.

At these words, the sick man cried out, then, making an effort, he said (sighing)

"No, my daughter, you will not be ashamed of your father. Here, take this."
With the key around my neck, open the drawer and give Father the paper he returns.
farm.

Then he falls back, slumped. His daughter, quick as lightning, had executed cut his orders and handed me a sealed envelope, saying:

–Victory, my father is saved; he vomited up the poison.

That scene deeply moved me. The courage of that girl reminded me of a Christian woman from the early centuries. The sick man lived in
For a few hours, and his last words were an act of contempt.

550 SECRET SOCIETIES IN THE UNITED STATES

trition along with faith and hope. I opened in the presence
The sealed envelope from his daughter. It was an oath signed in English. I had I've heard of this kind of writing being used by the leaders of France*
Freemasonry; but when I read through this paper, I couldn't believe it my eyes. It was your oath of an endless, merciless war against if he broke his word. This paper, I placed it in your hands from the* "Chef, so that he could appreciate the malice of iifer as well as I did."

national of Freemasonry (1).

Political and socialist refugees from Europe found in America has an even broader hospitality than England.
Mazzini was able to organize the United Republican Alliance there in 1807.
Versailles; Karl Marx moved the Central Council there in 1873 of the International; the international brothers (see book III, Chapter XXXII) have ramifications there and they are generally attributed the fires that ravaged Chicago in 1874 and 1875.

Besides secret societies, America also has its freethinkers similar to those in London and to freethinking societies French and Belgian.

The freethinkers held a kind of congress in August 1882 in Watkins, New York.

The program they adopted is based on the most atheism absolute. The only point worth noting is a resolution by which they declare their alliance with the spiritualists, the nationalists lists, deists and agnostics, who, while differing from them, are, however, opposed to the influence of the Church and want to do to prevail an absolutely secular interpretation of the constitution tion of the United States (2).

The brutality of these statements has the advantage of provoking indifference.
The birth of the American people. In that form, evil cannot
It is unlikely to spread in a country which, despite its shortcomings, has at less the great merit of always recognizing God and his law as the foundation of political life and social institutions (3).

(1) Reproduced in the Uonde on November 23 and 34, 1874 by M. Abbé Martin.

(3) See the full report of this convention in the New York Weekly-Herald, August 30, 1883.

(3) V. Contemporary United States, 32nd ed., 2 vols. 1877, chap. XVIII and Chapter XXVI, page 11,

EARLY ORIGINS DBS NON-DEFESSIONAL SCHOOLS 551

5. – The early origins of non-public schools

CONFESSIOAL

The system of separate public (common) schools of any confessional, unsectarian task, is contrary to traditions of the American people and the true spirit of its constitution. It is, in fact, of foreign origin; and a work preparatoire, due to sects from Europe, sowed the first germs before he was enthroned in the great Northern states, between 1845 and 1850. He was a French refugee. Girard, who, in 1828, he founded the first educational institution in New York, at the condition that all religious teaching would be excluded; this are cosmopolitan revolutionaries of the World's Formers, who They first systematically propagated this harmful idea. The attempt is recounted by the illustrator Brownson, who was involved in it. This is the moment in his long journey towards the truth. A story that we read in his beautiful book The Convert or Leaves From My own experience:

Francess Wright was born in Scotland, around the end of the last century; she had inherited a considerable fortune and had received an education distinguished. She was a young woman gifted with rare and brilliant abilities, possessing a varied and extensive education. She had been raised in the principles of Jeremy Bentham's utilitarianism; she was often received at General Lafayette's home in La Grange, and this was at the request of general that she visited this country in 1821. On her return to England, in 1825, she published a work on the United States. This book was written in a boundless spirit of admiration for the American people and their institutions. She saw only one blemish in our character, only one thing? to censor or to deplore in our social order: that was the slavery of This slavery struck her, as it did most Europeans: she He lives there, like them, an anomaly with our theories on the rights of the man.

When, the following year, Mr. Owen came with his friends to begin his essay and create a new moral world in New Harmony, Frances Wright followed him, not as a convinced supporter of his system, but in order to experiment with an experiment conceived by Lafayette, Jefferson and others for the emancipation of black slaves.

This attempt having completely failed, Francess took her efforts further. views: she recognized that the people of the United States were not yet ready to seriously undertake the abolition of slavery; that Whites were as much slaves as blacks, and the slaves of negroes was but a branch of the immense tree whose fatal shadow... the whole country was affected.

552 LSS SECRET SOCIETIES IN THE UNITED STATES

It was unreasonable to waste time and resources on es*

end. We had to put the axe to the root, and rabuliiion de rosclavago could not be (|uc the result of a general emancipation and a re-radical form of the nrnoiicain people.

First, we had to awaken in Americans the feeling of their rights and dignity; to deliver them from their superstitions and fear from an invisible power; to emancipate them from the servitude of the clergy, to draw them of stargazing or an imaginary paradise after the death, cl fl\er their allcnion on that great and glorious work: the Pursuit of human well-being!

Secondly, it was necessary, through political action, to establish h the The first favorable opportunity, a system of Eial schools in which all children, aged two years and older, would be fed, clothed, maintained and educated at the expense of the public treasury.

To build on the success of the first, Francess Wright had prepared a series of lectures on "Science", which she proposed knows how to do things in the main cities and towns of the Union. The great the means on which Francess and her friends relied to achieve success Ultimately, it was the public school system. We had to provide in these schools, as I have already said, not only for instruction and the education of all children of the IStal, but also to their enirelien. These schools were founded with the aim of both teaching and learning. ger, the parents of the care and of the responsibility of the children, as soon as These children would have reached the age of one or two years.

It was assumed that parents were generally incapable of raising their children as they should be, to give them character, the temperament, the necessary instincts. That's why we wanted that the State should take full responsibility for the children, providing them with an establ: suitable, professors and insiliipurs until they had once they reach their majority. This will free the parliaments from their obligations. gations and we would thereby obtain the main advantages of commu- nature of goods.

The primary goal was to reduce the burdens of marriage and to remove the main reasons that make it indissoluble; and then to secure the future, by giving children a rational education in order to make them into reasonable men or women, that is to say men of lilircs of loulc superstition, of all belief in God and to immortality, the aspiration towards an invisible mummy, the bombs who knew how to consider this life as their only life, this earth as their sole home, the pursuit of their earthly interests and of their pleasures as their only end

The three great enemies of human happiness on earth were Therefore, religion, marriage or family, and private property:

Once rid of these three institutions, one could hope for realU to be the earthly paradise. Science had to replace religion, but only the science of this perceptible world which falls under the five meaning; to private property, the community of goods; to marriage, the community of women, or rather there should no longer be in the new a world without husbands or wives. There would only be men and women. women, free to live together, according to their mutual inclinations, only as long as they found it pleasant, no more and no less. less.

Our work was therefore entirely based on an education system.

in public schools, organized according to our plans or rather according to those of a Frenchman, William Phiquepal, who later married Frances Wrigbl. This William the biquepal has not been allowed to be prosecuted in the dom-magicians and interests for having neglected and mistreated some children he had brought them from France to America, and whose education he claimed to be providing tion....

The most pressing need was to see our school system adopted. To achieve this goal, it was proposed to secretly organize the entire Union after a plan that was roughly similar to that of the European Carbonari. ^ I I knew nothing about the Carbonari at that time.

The members of this secret society had to, first of all, each in their locality, taking advantage of all the means that were at their disposal to prepare public opinion in favor of state-sponsored education and at the expense of the public treasury; and then to have the legislatures elected bommes, which could probably help our projects. I don't know up to the extent of that secret organization; I know, however, that it had penetrated most of the state of New York, because I I was one of the agents. In any case, I grew tired of that work and I I abandoned it after a few months. This organization ex-sle-it And yet, did she exert any influence, yes or no? That's what I don't know. then say, and that's something I didn't bother to check.

Our second work, very closely linked to this one, was the formation of this which is known as "Woi kingmcn 's Parhj (party of the ou- (vriers). It was established in Philadelphia in 1828 and in New York the following year. vante. The idea for this party was conceived and put forward by Owen, Robert, L. Jennings, George II. Evans and a few others, who were all like them, of European origin.

Our aim in forming this party was to seize power. the politics of the State as well as using it to establish our system of schools. We hoped, by uniting our cause with the ultra-democratic sentiment oraliqiiedu pays (seniimeni who had, since Jefferson and Tum Payne, a (a rather pronounced Anfi-Cbrelian character), by presenting us with the known intrepid champions and Intransigeanls of equality, affecting a great we portrayed as deceived and oppressed by his boss; in denouncing all the (proprietors as local authorities, and leaving to as much as possible in the background the most unpopular points of our program, enlisting the majority of Americans under the ban-

554 SECRET SOCIETIES IN THE UNITED STATES

the end of the "Workingmen's Party". No doubt that, if we could
If we were to one day bring this party to power, we would not be able to use it.
to achieve the adoption of our education system.

Since then, the idea has gained traction. Several factors have contributed to this.
run; particularly the difficulty, in cantons where the population is very dispersed, to support schools too specific to each of the names numerous confessions that are found in the country; but this reason did not exist in the big cities, where the news precisely began. 11 It is essential to recognize above all, with the desire to prevent the development of Catholicism, the influence of the plan, which was conc Certainly, at that time, there were cosmopolitan secret societies.
Protestants, who became its passionate instruments, in re-they themselves pick the fruits; for, although the unsectarian school in the United States, it is generally not an atheist school like that of the brothers Jules Ferry, Paul III and Vau Ilurnbeck, she However, it is based on Christian beliefs and morality.
of youth, destructive effects recognized by all minds impartial. We will see, however, that a powerful party is stirring to give the principle of the unsectarian school its consecration constitutional which it lacks.

§6. – Attacks against Catholicism

UAmerican catholic quarterUj Uôviewy e.examining the question Freemasonry in the United States says it is bad less because of the harm it is currently doing, than because it is ca pable d'êlre employed for the worst purposes, the Day when she would fall into the hands of ill-intentioned people (1).

That day will inevitably come, we believe, and his coming it already manifests itself through some symptoms that cannot be ignored without a systemic optimum.

Catholicism is a much more important social factor
In the United States, as in England, it is growing in number, it has also Today, with nearly seven million followers, his organization becomes increasingly solid.

(t) N* of April 1878, p. 105.

ATTACKS ON CATHOLICISM 555

From this, a simmering hostility gradually accumulates. It reigns among zealous Protestants, but it also exists in many Masonic lodges, we do not say in all yours, because, in the former Southern states in particular, the lodges remain seem entirely similar to those of the former motherland. But in the North and the East, bigoted Protestants^ as they say, and Freemasons are always in perfect agreement to exclude functions public actions for practicing Catholics.

On several occasions, organizations have been seen forming in the United States specific arrangements, imitating the constitution, the secrets, the words do pas de la Maçonnerie et destines de combattre la catho- licism.

This is the aim of a large association founded in 1867, under the Name of the Order of American Union. Its members commit themselves by oath to fight the Roman Catholic Church, let us use the means to exclude it Catholics in all positions, never to raise their children children in their establishments, finally to support the eco-system the unsectarian public. To secure the support of the protesters So much in good faith, VOrder claims to want to maintain the Bible in the schools, but their leaders are people practically without religion gion, who don't care about the Bible at all. Meanwhile, their actions are very skillfully combined with those of the liberal league, which fights the Bible, to bring together all the forces of the radical Islam and Protestantism towards the ultimate goal: the destruction of Catholicism.

VOrder gathered at a certain point a considerable number of affiliates.

General Grant, who is a Freemason and has, on several occasions, expressed in a resounding way the thought of the lodges (see book. II, chap. XIV, §2), had made it an instrument.

In 1876, when he began his election campaign for a For his third presidential term, he thought it necessary to create a derivative. to the repulsion that Caesarism inspired in the vast majority of Americans.

Reiterating the thesis of his speech to the former army of the Tennessee, he recoinman Ja, in the message addressed to Congress on the 7th December 1876, the adoption of two new laws to the Constitution, from which Tun would remove the properties of the religious denominations

556 Secret Societies in the United States

quis in all the States of the Union, and of which the second would have done a duty for every state "to establish and maintain schools free public schools, providing general education to all children, without distinction of sex, color, origin, or religion, piobib intdans cis écoles l'enseigne nofjt de tous dogmas religious, atheistic or id-viscian support for the allocation by the States municipalities without any part of the land or taxes schoolchildren with no religious affiliation, to what degree that It was.

Beneath the hypocritical phrasing, it was a reproduction of the Order of American Union program. To better welcome it—to kill, the president dismissed, at the same time the cbief-juslice of the Arizona territory, Honorable Mr. Dunne, unifpiemmnt because that a few months earlier, using the freedom given by the customs of the country to the magistrates, he had pronounced, before a Catholic Union, a speech in favor of dividing the fund school-related distinctions between the different designations.

Many newspapers, obeying a directive, denounced loudly denounced the dangers that the ins- posed the country's institutions, the progress of Catholicism! ! In the same time, secret societies similar to the Order of Souls^ American Union, which had been organizing itself in the shadows since Grant's inauguration in 1868, began to give to public demonstrations against Catholics. We then saw to reveal the existence of the Vainerican Alliance, which, under the pretext to revive the old Know-Nothings program, to give Its aim was to exclude all Catholics from public office. questions. That was also the watchword of the Sentinels of Freedom.

These companies are nothing more than organizations special ones created to meet particular circumstances. But the most serious fact that emerged from the revelations to which Their demonstrations gave rise to the fact that many ass workers' associations, which, at first glance, appear exclusive occupied with professional interests, were often in the dark assignments to the management of VAmerican Alliance.

At the Chatnbro of the representatives, Mr. Blainc, the leader of the republicans, who was born Catholic, but has, like so many others, apostlasiôsa foi, presented a constitutional amendment defending dant aux Etals cl aux municipalités d'allocation aucun fonds à des Private schools affiliated with a religious denomination. A sad thing to

It should be noted that no serious objection has been raised to this fine. The Democrats unanimously stole it from the Uliainbrc. hastening to show that, if they accepted the thefts of Catholics, they did not intend to make any commitment towards—live off them.

Fortunately, in the Senate, the amendment did not obtain a majority. The required two-thirds majority in such cases. But it fell short. by a very small number of votes. This is a worrying omen. for the future, and which shows how delicate the situation is to Catholics (1).

In the United States, these organizations do not have the robustness they have in Europe. The politicians involved, above all electoral machines, and, once election time has come In the past, they engage in other exercises. However, some kernels always remain in the shadow: thus in In 1881, there was still a section in Cincinnati, Ohio. of the American-Alliance. Around the same time, we have discovered in the Pacific Ocean, a secret society is established tulant herself; Secret Society of the Knights Commanders of the Suuy, whose purpose is to combat by all means the the spread of Catholicism and for that reason to oppose everywhere the founding of denominational schools, to promote the principle school of thought unsectarianism. This society has grown considerably. so that Bishop Seghers, Apostolic Vicar of Oregon, had reported in a letter to the public opinion court (2).

S 7. – Irish Secret Societies in the United States

The particular social conditions of the American people, As we have said, they necessitate specific associations composed of men of the same race or having the same interests economic. Often these associations take the form of secret societies, without oaths of obedience being sworn to them unlimited. Such are, for example, the lodges of gigo-

(1) V. le$ États-Unis contemporain", 3rd ed. chap. XXVI.

(2) See CaUtoUe Univert" of CleTaUod (Ohio), August 12 iSS0.

In this situation, the twelve national council of Baltimore decreed (in the future no bishop would condemn by name) no secret society, unless it had already been convicted expressly by the Sl-Siéjje or that it manifestly did not fall under the general sentences set forth in papal acts and the councils.

This wise rule allows certain societies Irish communities to continue to exist in a sort of tolerance, on the part of the ecclesiastical authorities. Continued lived for a long time through a disdainful ostracism of the part of native Americans, targeted by immigrant hatred English Protestants, who had hastened to organize so- In the cities of Oran, the Irish also had to band together to to defend each other. From there, several organizations, more or less less secret.

The main one is the Ancient Order of Ilibernians, on which the Opinions are quite divided. Here, however, is what appears to be this society. It is composed of two main classes. In The first, the largest group, the members, lend no they swear an oath, but only give a contribution, which assures them sure the benefit of societal protection. But it exists in The order is a superior category of initiates, bound by oaths. formidable, who receive their passwords from a central committee called Board of Erin. This central committee meets sometimes in England, sometimes in Scotland, sometimes in Ireland, and sends every three months emissaries carried his passwords to New York, from where they then spread to all Irish centers.

The Hibernions only admit Catholics among their members. They have approximately 0,000 lodges in the United States. The Hibernions oni in reality frequently deviated from the honorable goal of protection national, which attracts so many members to them. It has been proven that their secret leaders had fomented a particular society say it. Maguire has long terrorized with his crimes the coal basins of Pennsylvania; it was they who have supplied the Ecinianism with ready-made frameworks. In Ireland and in the cities of England, where there is a large population or* behind the scenes, they are in communication with the companies Ug Ribbon-Men (see book III, chapter XXXII, to 4) and other dangerous sects.

THE MASONIC JEWS IN THE UNITED STATES 559

However, it is certain that the vast majority of Hibernians They are unaware of the guilty schemes in which they are complicit. unconscious. This explains the tolerance they are the object in several dioceses (I).

The Land Icaque had, like Fenianism, many ramifications in America and created considerable unrest among the populations of Irish origin. These branches have shown themselves generally hostile to the clergy and bear witness to the Sympathies to all European revolutionaries. One cannot be to conceal the fact that these more or less noisy companies are exploited by ringleaders, who are inspired by hateful designs of the European Masonic sect against the Church. There is a serious danger to the future of Catholicism in the United States: Therefore, the bishops continue to warn the faithful. against secret societies and Freemasonry, which tend to enter.

58. – Jewish Masonic Rites in the United States

Since the 18th century, Jews have settled in the United States United. Their emigration from Germany was quite considerable in lately, and their number is now estimated in this country at 300.00!). Although of German origin, they abandon quickly the Talmudic rites and tend to merge externally--laughter in the population. However, they organized two Masonic orders, which are specific to them, and which are not less recognized as a branch of universal brotherhood. They thus have both the benefit of cosmopolitan affiliation, and They retain their own national cohesion within the State.

The first of these orders is that of the Beni-Berith, founded in 1843. It has 206 lodges, with an average of 100 members.

In 1876, on the occasion of the Philadelphia Universal Exhibition phie, the Beni-Beritli had a church built in Fairmount-Park colossal statue to religious freedom.

(I) V. ilans VAmerican calholie quarterly Heview of April 1878, the Secret article Soeietiesin lhe ü. S. and Studuilmz, North Amerieanitcke arbeUerverheeUnisUy Leipaig ts;;), p. 289 to p. SU6.

560 SECRET SOCIETIES IN THE UNITED STATES

The second Jewish Masonic order is that of the Keshar Shel Barzcl. The date of its founding is unknown: but it already existed in 1874, and at that time comprised 4,934 men and 530 women (1).

Rich and influential, the Jews are beginning to make their presence felt. action on foreign policy as in England. In 1874.

which they have at their disposal, a diplomatic approach in favor of their coreligionists of Romania (2). Here, on the other hand, is what we Readings in the Washington newspapers, dated May 30, 1877:

"Mr. Evarls, the Minister of Foreign Affairs, has forwarded to United States minister, in Constantinople, the demands of American Israelites, with respect to how they are treated the Jews of the Turkish and Romanian provinces. Mr. Evarts gave instructions to the American minister to make decisions marches near the Gate, in order to ensure the Jews a safe passage loration in their situation (3). »

(1) Allgemeinet Handbueh der Freimaurerei^ t. IV, Ergänzungen, v "Juden Or-' len.

(2) See the article on this incident in Y Abeille de la nouvelle Orléans, dated May 23 1874.

(3) V. Contemporary United States, 3rd ed. cbap. XXIV, g 3, and cbap. XXVI | 10.

CHAPTER THIRTY-FOURTH

FRANCO-UAON BRIB IN CANADA

France's ancient and vast colonial domain in the 17th century* The century is today divided into seven provinces, including the reunion forms the Dominion of Canada, except in the province of Quebec Bec, the English and Protestant element is in the vast majority; in In the province of Quebec, Protestants make up one-sixth of the population, and occupy important positions in the com- commerce, in the liberal professions, in public functions ques.

These preliminary indications are necessary to assess the true reach of Freemasonry in Canada. It is very strong there widespread, as in all English colonies. In the In 1882, only the province of Ontario had 396 lodges. Rite of the Free and Accepted Masons, 87 chapters of the Royal Arch, nearly 200 CDD-Fellows lodges^ a few Rebecca lodges Degre0y not counting the Mark Masonry (1). In the In the province of Quebec, a grand lodge was founded in 1870, after the reminder of the union with Ontario. In 1878, it had 70 inhabitants. ges under his obedience (2).

(t) V. Canadian Tea Jltanae for tea Ytar^ 1882, Toronto.

In 1834, the Orangemen organization was introduced in Canada. a number of English Protestants, eager to prevent the development of the population French Canadian communities joined them, and in less than a year, there were 12,000

36

read

562 Freemasonry in Canada

But this Freemasonry is exclusively English, and all that that we have said about the specific characteristics of the insertion in England and the United States must apply to the large ma The Freemasons of Canada. English and Protestant, the lodge For the most devout, it is a kind of temple; for others, It is an institution of mutual support.

In this respect, Freemasonry is not without influence in the sphere of federal politics, headquartered in Ottawa and where The English element predominates. The influence of the coterie is very likely to be felt in the distribution of federal jobs.

So far, we believe there are only a rather limited number we, Freemasons among Canadians of origin and race French. But for them, Masonic affiliation must be... viewed from a completely different point of view. There are a few, no doubt, those who in their youth were trained in the lodges by English Protestants whose influence they had been subjected to, without them realize the implications of such an act. But the clergy has has long since energetically fulfilled its duty to warn the conscience of the faithful, and the French Canadians who have affiliated to the English lodges of their country, to those of the States United or those of Europe are apostates having the perfect They are aware of their actions. They are all the more dangerous because, except for one or two, who have the audacity to admit their allegiance, the majority part of it is carefully concealed.

Public opinion in Canada is, in fact, strongly Catholic. lique; the people do not accept that a Church to which they owe their preservation of his nationality, and thus he forces the wicked to surrender dre encore by their hypocrisy uii homage to true principles of social life.

However, the province of Quebec is experiencing a religious crisis who is not yet being violently accused, but whose minds are Perceptive people notice and never tire of denouncing. One A deep-seated spirit of distrust against the clergy is widespread. "Systematic-Orangemon onrégimontés dans leâ loges (Allgemeines Handbuch der Freimaurerei[^] 2nd ed., Leipzig, 1864, I• II, v* Orangemen,^ This information still persists, and at

On several occasions she has had the opportunity to attend Iroulles & Montréal. A remarkat quablomeut inoiiivô of the Court of Queen's Bench, dated November 18, 1881, declared that this society, binding its members by secret oaths, was illegal in the province of Quebec, in accordance with a law that protects secret societies,
The Legal Nain# of Montreal, t, IV, p. 393 et selv.

THE FRANG-MAGONNENiB IN CANADA 563 appeal to secular judges, English and Protestant, to suppress the interference, perhaps questionable, of certain priests in the elections. Bishops and pastors are openly denied souls the right to enlighten the conscience of the faithful through man-dementia or preaching, and one claims to subject these acts at the discretion of the civil judge. In Montreal, in 1869, these same men dared, in accordance with one of the articles of the program Masonic, to be destroyed by the authority of the Privy Council of the Queen of England, the sacred nature of the Catholic cemetery, by burying an excommunicated person there. The aim is to diminish the action. of the clergy in the education of youth, when it is he which, from the village school to the great University La-Val created it with her own money and supported it with her care. We want to establish a bureaucracy there, which strives to imitate those (Europe with a naive inexperience.

In short, it's the same situation as in Belgium.
1842 (V. liv. II, chap. XIII, § 2.)

In Canada, we also find the same differences of opinion.
debate among Catholics on the origin and scope of this work the same disastrous alliance of liberals that we want to believe sincere Catholics, with men whose violent hostility towards the Church is well known. Therefore, we cannot recommend too highly* ask our friends in Canada to study the history of Belgium and the evolution of his Liberal party; they would see it projected as in a mirror the peril that is advancing towards them.

Certainly, this should not be attributed solely to the Freemason.
negate these disastrous trends. The influence must be taken into account.
that contact with the United States exerts on the current of ideas of Canada, an even more demoralizing spectacle of the successes of the Revolution in Europe.

Despite the righteousness of his people and the high value of his clergy, this noble country will not always be able to remain, in the 19th century, an oasis impenetrable to these currents of error, which presents itself modern thought and progress.

This trend is even stronger in Canada, because this country still lives largely off French literature, and that our unfortunate homeland provides him with too many subjects in this respect of intellectual and moral corruption.

564 Freemasonry in Canada

We must still give considerable weight to the traces left by the Gallican jurisprudence and even theological teaching;
2 in contact with English jurists^ for whom the supremacy of the The crown is an undisputed constitutional principle.

Whatever the very complex causes of the political crisis—religious life in Canada, the existence of a small group of Freemasons among men devoted to the liberal professions, it is an undeniable fact deniable. They are both in communication with Freemasonry. English provinces and with that much more dangerous one of Europe. The existence of this core dates back to at least 1848; from At that time, some newspapers echoed the revolutions. founders of old Europe, and a party had formed, which was not afraid to assert its affinities by calling itself the party red.

A very precise testimony has established that, as early as 1853, a society literary work entitled: The Canadian Institute of Montreal^ was composed of a group of affiliates. However, it was this society that was excommunicated by the bishop. which in 1869 gave rise to the conflict known as the affair Guibord.

We are reproducing this testimony, as it was published in the Minerva of April 18, 1881:

The Canadian Institute of Montreal, created in 1844, and nurtured from its the origin, of Voltaire's spirit, was already, in 1853, not to say Previously, it was largely driven by the influence of secret societies. The proof is that in 1853–1854, a single lodge, designated by the name of the lodge of the Free Brothers and subject to the grand lodge of the Odd Fellows of Montreal, contained approximately two hundred members of the aforementioned Institute Canadian. It is worth noting in passing that these two hundred members included the leading liberal figures of the Canadian Institute; for, At that time, conservatives were not, in practice, admitted to the lodge of the Free Brothers.

Receptions in the lodge of the Freemasons were held as among the Freemasons. The new candidate was blindfolded for to undergo the initial trials, then he was led by a rope around the neck in a room draped in black, where there was a cer additional information. There, opposite a table on which lay a kind of Bible, and, in the presence of several Freemasons, armed with daggers, after having removed the blindfold that covered his eyes, they made him swear an oath. novice free brother, and this under threat of death, among other things the points following: 1* to keep absolute secrecy about everything he knew about the brotherhood of the Free Brothers; 2® to obey blindly the Grand Master of the lodge and to the orders of the higher lodges; 3® to always be de-Democrat, liberal in politics, and to fight him with all one's might another form of government, especially the monarchy; 4® finally of to propagate the doctrines of the Franks as much as he could. Brothers.

Freemasonry in Canada 565

We are therefore entitled to conclude that at the time indicated above, he There were at least two hundred French Catholic Canadians in Montreal. who had committed themselves to the service of Satan to fight the Church of God. It must be admitted that some of these two hundred Freemasons returned sincerely to the Church, their mother, by renouncing the doctrines perverse trines of hell; but the masses do not seem to have changed his ways of thinking and acting, not to mention all those who will continue to swell the ranks of secret societies since that date.

The secret society of the Odd-Fellows, like the Freemasons, was lessons and other secret societies, condemned and excommunicated by the E-Catholic Church, because of its anti-Christian aim, it follows from this that, in 1853, two hundred members of the active and liberal red majority of the Canadian Institute of Montreal, not to mention all those who could Those affiliated with other lodges were already excommunicated and rejected. of the Catholic Church by Popes Clement XII, Clement XIV, Pius VII, Leo XII, Gregory XVI, and Pius IX. This excommunication has since been confirmed by all the bishops of the Catholic world, at Vatican, in 1869.

Following the above-mentioned fact, one might ask, with that's why it wouldn't be useful to seriously study the degree of influence secret societies practiced by the Canadian Institute of Montreal in Ca- Nothing, and then the lineage of this child influences men who seem to pride themselves on their political kinship with the Leaders of the aforementioned institute. Secondly, one might ask whether several religious and political questions, since the origin of the Cana Institute Indians up to that point, had not been more or less directed by Indians The influence of secret societies? For those who know the trends and the principles of the Canadian Institute of Montreal – for having been there associated for several years, and who see and understand the op unions and the principles of a large number of public figures today Things haven't changed today, and the influence of secret societies is currently far more powerful than we seem to believe. We know servile elements of the Revolution and secret societies, to the great disharmony of religion and public morality.

A former member of the Institut C.\nadibn.

566 FAANC-MASONRY IN CANADA

Prominent Catholics, in a document submitted at the feet
The Holy See expressed the following views on this subject:

In Canada as in Europe, schools have formed which, under different forms and in various ways, have not ceased, in concert with the Freemasonry, to combat Catholic doctrine and works ques.

On the other hand, almost the entire clergy and a very large number of A number of enlightened laypeople enlisted under the leadership of the members the most illustrious and saintly of the Canadian episcopate, to com always and everywhere to fight against these pernicious doctrines and to work to make to love the Pope and the Church, and to make the spirit of the Holy Spirit triumph everywh Headquarters. Those in Canada who are followers of secret societies are all the more dangerous because they never openly display their colors, but on the contrary, they proclaim themselves devoted Catholics, while constantly working to undermine and ruin everywhere sound doctrines and the spirit of the Church.

This war against the Church of Christ is manifested above all in the work constant, though hidden, to which they resort in order to destroy the influence of the clergy in all social matters and to depopulate, ruin or to discourage the institutions and works most dear to the heart of the Church; that is why they constantly cry out against various religious orders devout people whom they despise, seek to discourage by all means and even ridicule the congregations of the Holy Virgin, the ca- circles Catholics, devotion to the Sacred Heart of Jesus, etc. That is how they constantly persecute devout Catholics who, following the con-seal of the holy pontiff Pius IX, your predecessor, consecrate their watch over the writing of books and newspapers for the propagation of the good doctrine, and that they raise prejudices and hatreds and employ all means to discredit and ruin them ner (1).

Once again, we must not exaggerate the importance of the acc Masonic association in Canada; but we must, enlightened by experience what the history of secret societies in the world reveals, is remember that they excel at taking on the most diverse masks, to exploit all national and local issues through which She can attack the Catholic constitution of a people, and to to forge alliances for this purpose, where honest people will all be days of his dupes.

(1) Petition from the citizens of Montreal to His Holiness Leo XIII, published in the Minerva of July 27, 1881.

FaANG'MASONRY IN GaNADA 567

Joseph de Maistre used to say, "There is no that it is a sect: this is something no statesman should ignore, nor forget. This dreadful sect, which calls itself the Legion, has never was more to be feared than it is now, especially because of its alliances (1). »

May our brothers in French Canada not forget this warning.
sowing!

(I) Four unpublished eAapüre* on Russia, p. 175 ei 185.

CHAPTER THIRTY-FIFTH

FREEMASONRY IN AMERICA

6

SOUTH

S 1". – Particular characteristics of Freemasonry in the former Spanish and Portuguese colonies

Freemasonry, from the mid-18th century onwards, had become very active. especially prevalent among the wealthy Creole class, who came to enjoy in Madrid or Lisbon, enormous fortunes are often acquired rather inhonorable circumstances in the colonies (Book III, Chapter VI, § 1). Lodges multiplied in these countries during the period of wars of the First Empire. The backlash of revolutionary principles The resolutions issued by the Cortes of Cadiz were felt beyond the seas and determined the insurrections, which from 1815 to 1830 brought granting independence to the colonies. Mr. de Haugwitz, in his a letter to the sovereigns assembled in Verona, declaring that the souls The movements of the American colonies were the execution of a plan arrested in the higher councils of the sects. The troops that the The Spanish government sent troops to fight them who were under winds commanded by Freemason officers who made pacts with the insurgents. Thus the capitulation of the Spanish army at

570 Freemasonry in South America

His generals with the lodges of Quito and Lima (1). The support that England gave them, it must also be noted. After the Iriomphe colonies, independent Masonic obediences are conscious They held titles everywhere. What the Masonic World says about the Peru can be applied to other Spanish-American republics caines.

Before 1821, there were 99 lo^es, which were neither well organized nor truly Masonic. They were composed of Spaniards, and the The doors of the temple of peace and fraternity were closed to creeds. The spirit of the peninsula reeked of exclusivism.

In 1821, along with independence, there arose, as if in a A fertile ground for the love of light and freedom. Freemasonry Peruvian was constituted.

In 1824, the masons of the colony gave it a new impetus sion. In 1830, the Supreme Council of 33* was created. In 1831, the Grand-Orient peruvien se former (n® of March 1875).

Since then, the lodges have been actively involved in the revolutions. incessant rites that have devastated this unfortunate country. Masonic rites niques develop conspiracy tendencies among the allies and the sharing of lodges between rival obediences provided the factions of new ways to consult and perpetuate themselves (2)*

Freemasonry, throughout South America, is deeply impious, and she drew her rites and doctrines from the Order recent consequences. We have already cited several examples. ves (book, I, chapter II, Ji 3). It is to be noted that none of the Hispanic-American Masonic powers have not broken their ties tions with the Grand Orient of France following the expulsion of the the name of God and the immortality of the soul of his constitution.

In all the states where they dominate, the lodges seek they seek to oppress the Church or at least to subordinate it completely under civilian control. That particular tactic, on which we have already given some glimpses (book. (read, preliminary chapter, 3), was commanded to the sect by the deep faith of the people and the religious habits of all the classes of the population. Freemasonry in America. that of the South is therefore hypocritical; that is its particular character—to bind. While thoroughly removing the impious, she seeks to retain as much as possible the outward forms of Catholic worship: the sacramentalism is an institution for her!

(1) H. firuck Die geheimen Gesellehaften in Spanien, Mainz 1879, p. 313 and the Spanish works to which he refers.

Finnic.

ITS CHARACTERISTICS PARTTGULnSRS 571

In Colombia, Mexico, and Peru, the violence of the persecutions. The actions directed against the Church had at least the advantage of making to the clergy the fullness of its moral independence; he struggled with courage, although with varying degrees of success over time, against the latent infiltration of Masonic venom among the Catholics.

In Brazil, the situation was more difficult. The revolution there... made by the dynasty itself, which had taken refuge in Rio de Janeiro following the invasion of Portugal by Napoleon I. When, in 1814, the old sovereign, John VI, returned to Lisbon; his son Don Pedro, who remained in America, threw himself into Freemasonry and... had her proclaim him an independent emperor (1). In a letter which he addressed to his father on July 15, 1822, to justify his conviction led and committed to putting himself at the head of the movement. As a revolutionary in Portugal, he explicitly stated:

"For my part, I became a Freemason. I know that the nobles in 1806 they made advances to the Freemasons and when the latter refused. Not adhering to their proposals was the cause of Gomez's disgrace... To avenge Gomez's death, the Porto revolution broke out on August 24th, 1820. The Freemasons had to fight against the nobles after having been so cruelly persecuted by them; for the Portuguese had the wrong to look with horror upon such a philanthropic institution" (2).

Indeed, as early as 1822, we see this prince appearing as Grand Master of the Grand Orient in Brazil (3).

Whatever his faults may have been, Don Pedro was nonetheless legitimate sovereign. This country, having had the good fortune to retain the monarchy in its monarchical form, it escaped the upheavals of republics. Spanish. Religion has never been the object of persecution there. brutal as in Peru and Mexico; but there it was exposed to more dangerous challenges.

(1) Cuvel, Picturesque History of Freemasonry^ 2- part chap. IIII.

(2) Ceiaa lettre is published in full in the Stémorie documentât» per la

(3) ÀUgew^nes HafuUtueh der Freitnaurereit L IV, ErganeungeUf Braeüien,

572 Freemasonry in South America

However, only a certain number of members can be concealed of the Portuguese clergy were, after the destruction of the Jesuits, engaged in Freemasonry (book III, chap. XIII, ^ 1 and 2). The Brazilian clergy, which was originally recruited from the ranks of that of the motherland^ naturally received into its bosom less pure elements; hence the weakness, the complicity times of some of its members.

As in the old Catholic countries, the confraternities are numerous and wealthy. Therefore, the Freemasons sought to... It's good to be part of it as a way to acquire influence and having financial resources.

This is how Freemasonry became a powerful force. session in Brazil. She is in everything everywhere. When a young man asks to join a brotherhood like that of the Carmel or St. Francis, he is not admitted before he he had himself baptized in some lodge.

Brazilian Freemasonry is in close contact with that of continental Europe. We will, in the paragraph next, recount the persecution it provoked in 1872 between the Catholic Church. It should be noted that it coincided with the German KuUwrkampf. The stoppage that occurred in Brazil, in 1880 also coincided with the awakening of his impotence, which was wrested from the iron chancellor.

The murder of Garcia Moreno is also, it seems, not without any connection to the activities of European sects.

During the period of the German Kürkampf, the republics countries in the South, particularly Argentina, have been often stirred by liberal movements against the Jesuits suites.

In 1874, in Buenos Aires, a wretch, driven by the press impious man of the country, deliberately set fire to the church in El Salvador. which belongs to their college. The following year, the archbishop of This city, having wished to entrust one of its parishes to the Fathers of the Society of Jesus, the liberal press organized an agitation artificial tion, which resulted, on the day of February 28, 1875, in a riot in which the Jesuit house was ransacked. The millers had inscribed on their flag: Long live Clé-

Franciscan friars.

Masonic Persecution in Brazil from 1872 to 1879 573

In Buenos Aires, as in Montevideo (1), there are, in addition to the boxes local lodges, a number of French, English, and Italian lodges, Germanes, dependent on the Grand Orient of those countries. They are very advanced and are carrying out impious propaganda. They influence public opinion through newspapers they inspire. worsen. In July 1882, they organized, in all these cities, large demonstrations in honor of Garibaldi (2).

§2. – Masonic persecution in Brazil in 1872

In 1879

Freemasonry in Brazil is officially recognized (3), and the number of its members is considerable in relation to the population of the country. In 1882, the Grand Orient, known as the Benedictines, to because of the place where it sits, whose grand master is the f.*. Saldanha Marine, a member of parliament and former prime minister, had under her obedience 213 lodges and 182 chapters.

The Lavradio, another Masonic power, whose grand-mayor was the Viscount of Rio Branco (4), who was also

(t) The grand-master of Grand-Orient and supreme council of the Republic of Uruguay in Montevideo is the f.'. Carlos de Castro, head of the superior court of justice.

(•.) See the Chain of Union of July and August 1882.

(3) [i.e. Brazilian penal code expressly permits secret societies, to the condition that a signed statement be made to the police indicating the general purpose of the association and the formalization that it is not contrary to public order I II has been specifically designed to authorize the practice of vaquerie. In 1877, a proposal was submitted to the Senate, through Mr. Figueria de Milio, incriminated the sole fact of the meeting of more than ten people, secrecy was required of the partners, with or without an oath, and aggravated the penalty if the meeting's purpose was to propagate doctrines likely to... to directly destroy the fundamental truths of the existence of God and of immortality the nature of the soul, or to overthrow the religion of the State. Political or religious groups, in which the secrecy of the partners would not be required, were not, according to the project, secret, but they had to, under penalty of fine, publish their statutes and their activities; they were to be deposited with the authorities within fifteen days of their installation. «This The proposal, its author said, tends to defend all secret societies, whether of gold or political action, whether of a religious or charitable nature, whatever their name,

The proposal was rejected by the Senate (August 31) {Foreign Legislation Yearbook} t, VII, 1878 p. 847).

(4) The Viscount of Rio Branco died in 1880. The Masonic World of December In 1880, by announcing his death, he celebrated him as an illustrious Freemason and the praised for having been one of the instigators of the persecution against the Eteques.

574 FREEMASONRY IN SOUTH AMERICA

President of the Council of Ministers during this period, in comp was about half. In 1875, the Masonic world was estimated the number of active masons at nearly 18,000; this figure has due to wax well outdated, because from 1875 to 1882 the number of lodges considerably increased (t).

Despite this almost official character, Brazilian Freemasonry he had no less hostility towards the Church.

The following is an excerpt from the Bulletin of the United Grand Orient of Brazil (n* VII, May 1872) will give an idea of the plans that are being prepared would be in the councils of Freemasonry and the impetus that it gave to his followers:

We are striving to accomplish the great humanitarian and social mission, which is reserved for our Dream, in the universal homeland worked and mi* born from millennia-old errors, far be it from us to fear annihilation- the mind corrupted by ignorance and fanaticism; our intelligence In our wisdom, our reason tells us that we are moving towards perfection. The key issue is to regulate this upward trend. In the most serene way. What is needed to achieve that goal? Well to understand society, to study its elements and the forces that shape it to move.

While awaiting the future of wisdom and moderation, we must to work to ensure the triumph of law, and of liberty and for to save the new generation from lies, imposture and hypocrisy crisis. What's most important is that we know by uncovering the machinations of our enemies, who are not lacking to maintain the spirit of servitude and abrulis.scment which suits them, for the people, whose happiness seems to consist in not thinking Hidden behind the curtain of so-called religious beliefs, men blacks eagerly propagate the faial principle of enforced ignorance, in order to as to perpetuate their sovereign authority. They have too much interest to concentrate their all-powerful influence, and for that they need to blind the people instead of enlightening them.

The press, schools, and public conferences will educate each The people are reminded of their duties and rights so that they may understand the desire to know the origin and price of the happiness that reality is preparing for him-will tear off the band of servility that the oppressors have given him of human consciousness. Education will spread more and more there, despite the immense cohort of black robes; society will not add no faith in his superstitions; religion will be the rule of consciences and

(t) V. Le Monde maponnUfue^ year 1875, p. 397, year 1876, p. 230, December 1880, and the Grand-OrietU Calendar for the year 1882.

Masonic Persecution in Brazil from 1872 to 1879 575

The advantages of modern civilization will succeed the routines centuries old!

This is the phraseology of lodges in all countries; but the Events soon demonstrated the power enjoyed by the Ma- Brazilian nonsense.

We are reproducing here a notice that was provided to us. from Rio de Janeiro and which details the events up to the end of 1875:

1* Origin of the question or its causes

Until March 3, 1872, the Church enjoyed perfect peace, and there was no There was no religious question in Brazil. The perpetrators of the evil that did not Milk didn't have to be produced, but Freemasons certainly existed. but they did not show themselves, did not provoke, and speaking had not in no way did the intervention of the bishops require

At that time there were two factions within Freemasonry, or better two lodges with different political opinions: one, with mo- tendencies narchic, a friend of the government; the other, a supporter of the opposition, ra- The first is called Livra Üio (field la- (bouré), the other (lienedictinos, Benedictines), from the name of the places or lodges are hiUics.

At the time of the events we are about to recount, the grand master of the Lavra Dio was Rio Branco, president of the ministry.

On March 3, 1872, the Lavra Dio held a solemn celebration to which as the entire ministry rallied to congratulate its grand master Rio Branco of the law he had passed in Parliament concerning slavery. This woman was assisting a priest, who not only delivered a speech there, but he also had this speech printed, adding his own name and titles. in one of the most widely circulated newspapers: the Commercio.

Was it a provocation? Everything suggests so; but what is not

Father I. U therefore sought to bring the prevaricator back to Pohéissance at Saint-Siege, who has condemned Freemasonry several times. But It was in vain, and he had to suspend him from his duties.

After this act of episcopal authority, that is to say after the suspension of the The Lavra Dio, a priest who had committed corruption, gathered on April 16th in session. solemn and resolved to attack the episcopate through the press.

The effect followed the threat. In eliel, from that day forward, they attacked, with one spoke in agreement and of the most indescribable intemperance of language, the Church, the bishops, the dogmas, the hierarchy, everything related to related to religion, whether directly or indirectly

From Rio de Janeiro, these provocations "spread throughout the empire: the The order was given and from North to South, from East to West, everything was destroyed suddenly, as if by magic, Masonic sheets appeared in which, as in the cells of the capital, everything that looks the Church "hail odiously outraged.

576 Freemasonry in South America

To act with more force, the two major lodges felt the need to meet, and in that session of April 16, the Grand Orient of Lavra Dio sent letters (planches) to the Grand Orient of the Benedictines tins to encourage him to enter the fight (he was going to be handed over to the Episcopate

Such a proposal could not be refused: the pact was therefore concluded. and the political differences disappeared, leaving no room than to the most perfect agreement against religion.

But Rio Branco wanted to dominate, and for its part the Grand Orient of The Benedictines shared the same ambition. The hatred that united them was However, the bond was too strong for the union to be broken, so they made the things like gentlemen. Two months after the agreement, it was agreed that each that the lodge would regain the independence of its political action, but that Both would unite their forces against the Church. Herod and Pilate they had become friends.

To inaugurate their union, the lodges wanted to challenge the bishop. from Rio.

At that time, in Tel, they announced in all the newspapers, that on a certain day at a certain hour the Freemasons would have a mass said for a deceased Freemason.

It must be acknowledged: the Bishop of Rio has weakened. He has not not opposed to this sacrilegious demonstration, and the mass took place; brother How many similar ones are still celebrated. The bishop did not fight far.

At that time, the Bishop of Olinda, Monsignor Vital Maria Gonçalves of Ouveiro, coming from Saint-Paul, a Brazilian province where he was teaching at a seminary, was still in Rio and was preparing to go to Pernambuco. This is to say quite clearly that he had not yet entered in the struggle, that he was not known as a bishop and that none of his acts (he had not performed any as bishop, since he was not in (core entered into his diocese) could not have been provocative. However, in a book entitled The Black Spot (ponto negro), published in Rio, a book which is nothing more than an attack on the Church and the glorification of Freemasonry, he was presented as an ultramontane, a combatant, against whom he felt compelled to issue a warning. It is worth noting that he had only written one pastoral play so far, in his circumstances had led him to charity.

The bishop, having arrived in Pernambuco on May 24, 1872, took possession in the cathedral of that city. With exquisite tact, he had understood all the delicacy, all the prudence that the circumstances demanded, in order to prevent all difficulties, to avoid causing them any key to keeping them as far away as possible, he had chosen to secretary and vicar general of gentle, calm and good men.

Did Freemasonry want to wait for a provocation from the bishop? What, or was she preparing her weapons? I don't know. In any case, the

Masonic Persecution in Brazil from 1872 to 1879 577

The twenty days following the bishop's arrival passed in peace. the most complete. The Freemasons would soon emerge from it.

In fact, after these twenty days, a Masonic leaf (the first which appeared in Pernambuco), The Universal Family, was published with a en-tête: "Organ of Freemasonry", which left no doubt about the nature of her opinions and her goal. She would not, moreover, their steps allowed her to persist for long, for in its four In the first issues, the only ones that were published, she had found the way to attack five dogmas.

So many efforts exhausted him, and the Universal Family gave way to a sister and friend, who replaced her under the name of Truth.

This is CP, which I would call the first provocation of the sect in the Diocese of Olinda. The second was expected to happen soon.

In it, a lodge announced, on June 27, in the newspapers, that it would celebrate the day of Saint Peter (June 29th), in the church of Saint Peter and an hour before the parish mass, a mass to celebrate the anniversary anniversary of its foundation.

However direct this provocation may have been, the bishop wished to avoid entering struggling with the sect; but on the other hand, he could not tolerate that a scandal was caused in his church and by some of his priests diocese, he secretly wrote a letter to each of his parish priests, letter personal, in which he reminded them that neither they nor any priests under their orders could not and should not attend at a religious function, let alone celebrate it, when it would be announced as a Masonic festival and that the petitioners would attend were to return with their insignia.

The bishop's prudent foresight was not disappointed, for, by virtue of This defense, the mass announced for June 29th was not said. But the Masons don't get discouraged by so little.

So they tried again, on July 3rd, to wrest something from the bishop an act that would give them a semblance of reason: they wanted to put it in a position such that he became provocative or disloyal to his duties. They They did not succeed, thank God, in any of these desires.

On July 3rd, they wanted to have a mass celebrated for the repose of The Soul of a Freemason, a Masonic mass, of course, to which the brothers and friends would attend in body and with their insignia.

By virtue of the defense I mentioned earlier, this attempt failed. and the mass was not celebrated.

Hence, a feigned indignation from Masonic piety. Goment! on refuses to pray for their dead!... The good apostles care so much about prayers of the Church, that we have difficulty taking these cries seriously. However, the priests to whom they presented them gave themselves it is worth the trouble to explain to them that Freemasonry, being con damned by the Church, could not have a share in the honors of the Church; that the Church could not condemn with one hand and bless with the other; There was no need for so much fuss, but only to ask for a or several masses for that person, without entering into this

III

37

578 Freemasonry in South America

aflaire la Franc-maçonnerie, of which we saw absolutely no sign, in such a circumstance consistency, suitability, or necessity.

Having learned this point, the Freemasons, continuing their system of out of provocation, they turned to the bishop's side and told him that < his times... that one had to be frank and loyal (!), and show oneself to be either a Jesuit or Silian, or as an agent of the Roman Curia or as an employee of the

In this country, people everywhere have the same expressions, having everywhere the same mistakes.

Using a prudence that cannot be too admired, the bishop did not go out not at all reserved and didn't answer a word: which didn't make it any easier. It is difficult, even for Freemasons, to blame a sect.
the actions and words of a man who neither says nor does anything.

So they tried another approach. But before following them into
To this new maneuver, I must say a word about what are called here the brotherhoods.

From the beginning, founded by Pombal with the secret intention of diminishing
The curial authority, the confraternities, in Brazil, are gatherings of men my, who have absolute power in the administration of the parishes.

They are more than just manufacturing advice in France, because not only
They have access to the resources of the churches, but they also organize the They invite whomever they please to celebrate services on Sundays.
lennities, and enjoy powers which cannot be, in France^ to form an idea, however imperfect. These brotherhoods have costumes with whose members attend the celebrations, the funerals, the meetings religious and religious leaders at civil meetings. Their power means that People from all over the world seek to be part of it. These brotherhoods have so nothing resembling the congregations referred to as the same name in the parishes of France.

Seeing that the Bishop of Olinda did not respond to their provocations,
The Freemasons, determined to break his silence, attacked him directly and said: "Why does the bishop despise Franc-ma-does he oppose her appearing en corps in the churches?
Religious ceremonies? It's a sacred institution; the proof is... that there are many Freemasons in his clergy, in his chapter even within brotherhoods. Freemasons are excellent Catholics. questions; the proof of this is that the same hand which, in the lodges, carries the hammer, carries the banner and the images of the saints in the churches and the processions..."

The episcopal silence remains unchanged.

Furious at being unable to extract a word or an act that lent itself to In response to their attacks, the Freemasons tried a third provocation.
cation.

Their newspapers therefore launched their campaign, and in one series, I...
To tell the truth, an orqic of articles, they attacked the Holy Virgin, grace, the Eucharist, the Trinity with such impiety of language and feeling comments that it would have been difficult to utter more abominable blasphemies.

Masonic Persecution in Brazil from 1872 to 1879 579

The bishop set aside what was personal to him, but not what concerned the sacraments and the mysteries, which he could not be indifferent to. So many abominations demanding redress, he knew how to announce and procure it, without again directly dealing with the sect and without breaking the silence he had chosen to keep to his clergy. Regarding this. -- Consequently, only on September 21st did he address his clergy issued a circular urging them to pay a fine honorable to God and to the Most Holy Virgin, especially outraged by the monstrosities I just mentioned.

However simple it may have been, this circular, in which the bishop had not named no newspaper, enraged the brothers and friends, because the course of the faithful whom she brought to the foot of the altars to pay this fine The honor was immense. They sent some of their own to the churches, to see how things would go, to hear the sermons, and their fury increased all the more as they could only to witness the horror inspired by their blasphemies, without finding in all anything said or done in churches is the slightest pretext for recrimination.

They had to resort to a fourth provocation.

The bishop, they said, "doesn't seem to believe what we're telling him." formerly, it was known that there were Freemasons in its clergy and in The brotherhoods! Well, we'll convince him, and so that he doesn't Don't ignore it, we're going to publish all the names of our members.

And they did it with the greatest detail. We see, in fact, in the list, that such a priest in such a parish belongs to such a lodge; that the Venerable X. is also the president of such-and-such confraternity or a member of such another, etc., etc. This publication was made not only in the Masonic newspapers of Pernambuco, but in all the others sheets, so that no one could henceforth ignore it.

Their goal was easy to understand, as they informed the bishop of the presence of Freemasons in his clergy and in his brotherhoods, they put him They were faced with the choice of doing their duty by cracking down or violating it. By not acting, if he took the first course, they hoped that Strengthened by government support, they would triumph through imprisonment. exile or resignation. If, on the contrary, he were to follow the example of the bishop that from Rio, the second party, he would be demoralized, somewhat demoralized; it would be a triumph for the sect.

Finally, to be more certain of not missing their opportunity, the French-- The masons resorted to a fifth provocation. So that the bishop He had no doubt, which was no longer possible anyway, that there were Freemasons in the brotherhoods, they appointed, with great fanfare, 4 blicilé, president of a brotherhood located fifty steps from his palace episcopal, a Freemason, Worshipful Master of a lodge and editor of a

Up to this point, I must point out, the bishop had neither said nor whatever it was done with regard to the sect.

"Here ends the first phase of the monkfish which took place simultaneously" in Para under almost identical circumstances. This first phase had the result of making known the bishop who was in the clergy and in the Freemasons' brotherhoods, which until then he had ignored, or at least what he could ignore. But after the pu- Given the imposition of frameworks, he was obligated to act.

580 Freemasonry in South America

2" Acts of the bishops towards the Freemasons.

Towards those priests convicted of being affiliated with the lodges, the council The bishop's conduct was by no means doubtful; but it contained many A series of difficulties. I say many difficulties, because unfortunately- reusomenl l'influence des évô<|ues brésiliens sur leur clergé est presque none, and that there was reason to fear that in wanting to oppose evil, the harm and the scandal no longer became significant.

However, the bishop did not hesitate: he summoned his priests to him. Freemasons and told them that he would suspend from their functions those who would refuse to recant.

With regard to the brotherhoods, he endeavored to expel the members of the sect affiliated brothers by all means of gentleness that can suggest to the heart of a bishop, the care of souls. He employed, for this purpose, the parents, the friends, influences, but all these charitable and secret measures The employees remained without success.

If there is a time to be silent, there is also a time to speak, and this The last one had arrived for Monsignor d'Olanda. For the first He used official language and an act of authority. It was on December 28th. In December 1872, he sent a circular to the parish priests of Pernambuco. to order them to act with the Freemason members of the con- confraternities with the aim of persuading them to abjure or leave said confraternities ries. This circular was accompanied by a list including the names of the members who were the subject of it in each parish.

In response to the invitations to abjure issued by the priests of Pernambuco, The Freemasons responded, as expected, with a refusal unanimous. Some of these brotherhoods responded immediately, Others made us wait several months. This delay is necessary to men to function to explain why the brotherhoods were not banned h the same period, as we will have occasion to say.

Official circular sent in the same direction. Same negative responses. given to the priests: there was even progress, for several answers were addressed to the bishop with the vulgarities and insults to which the Our brothers and friends have spoiled us too much.

Patient and peaceful as much as one could be, the bishop sent an Iroi sixth circular, which achieved no other result. From then on, it was necessary to act, as prolonged condescension can be dangerous and be interpreted as either approval or a culpable weakness:

It was then that the Bishop of Olinda banned the brotherhoods from one another. after the others, as their replies reached him- Not all of them put him in this sad predicament. There were, in fact, some in which there were no Freemasons; those were natural. were not inlrodile. Others pointed out to him that at the pro In the elections, they would choose non-Freemason leaders; what about... then it would be easier to abjure, the dignities being handed over to better res mains; consequently, they begged the bishop not to act im- mediately.

Masonic Persecution in Brazil from 1872 to 1879 581

He granted all the time requested. Thus, a The brotherhood obtained a one-year reprieve, after which it kept its word, and all its Members submitted as they had promised. Another also gave the little consolation in the bishop's heart.

The prelate gave further proof of his condescension. In certain certain chapels where there were two confraternities, one of which abjured, he did not ree not to close the chapel, although the second persisted in remaining in France masonry. Similarly, the parish churches remained open, although all their brotherhoods refused to abjure.

In Para, things happened in a much the same way, and It is striking that in all the words and deeds of the two bishops the ques were of a perfect resemblance, although there had been no difference between them no interview, no prior agreement, despite the contrary assumptions of the government and lodges. The answers that they later addressed to the president and various authorities also exhibit this character astonishingly similar. - Truth is one, and that's how it is. that those who rely on the Holy See present everywhere, in their Their words and their actions, a wonderful unity.

However, the clergy of Pernambuco, remaining faithful to the recommendations episcopal tions, and, on the other hand, the confraternities not having accepted the terdit, there were what one might call dry cracks^ that is to say offices, religious acts, worship ceremonies performed without prostration very much so, and the confraternities bore all the costs, some of their

to appear in costume at funerals and other religious events.

These revolts, these provocative and reprehensible maneuvers, are not enough for them. At this point, the members of the confraternities held the priests of the parishes account the following language:

"The current state of affairs cannot continue and we cannot I would like you to keep us in suspicion any longer. Two things one of them; or disregard the bishop's orders and prohibitions, celebrate the offices before us as Masonic corporations, ad-melte/.-nous en corps at all the ceremonies and honors of the Church; or Well, do nothing more in the churches, because we will oppose this. that you perform any act whatsoever of the priestly ministry." If we want to recall what I said about the power of brotherhoods, It will be easy to understand that this was not a threat of little consequence. lift. They kept their word.

From that moment on, they removed the ornaments from the churches, the sacred vessels, enclosed all the objects of worship and even pushed the audacity to lock away the Eucharistic species, in so that the parish priests, when they had to bring to the sick the holy viaticum, were in Tobligalion to ask for the key to the tabernacle nacle.

582 Freemasonry in Southern Italy

It was not possible to stop in such a direction, and these messages The gentlemen did not stop: "We will give you the key to the tabernacle," they told the priests, but only on the condition that we accompany you. "We will wear our costumes and, as members of Freemasonry, will be present." Naturally, this proposal could not be accepted, and it was not. not. – Then the bishop tried to avert the harm that was being caused to sick people, the oJieuse pretension of the lodges, cl 11 the bed still without hurting in Whatever the brothers and friends, they were content to send their priests permission to go and receive the Blessed Sacrament in other parishes his, in the convents and in the chapel of his episcopal palace.

But the confraternities, wanting to push the bishop to his last resorts... cbéménls, stripped the altars of the parish church, sent away the chaplains that until then they had had to tell the nieces ordained born in favor of their deceased, they refused to have the masses paid for. said of (foundation, crnplojèrenl to raise several billiments the sum- my left by the liberality of the faithful to the invocation of masses for the May their souls rest in peace.

Liberals of all countries and all times like to address To Caesar when Caesar is necessary to stifle their opponents!?! The Ours did not fail to do so, and the brotherhoods were quick to write

However, this complaint addressed directly to the members of parliament was not without clumsiness, because if the deputies could take action, they could also approve the Bishop's conduct: the brothers and friends do not had not considered, Hcuicusemct, the ministry warned of the danger, and the The minister of ecclesiastical affairs responded to the complainants by asking them to add scr to the crown, because thus launched the complaint would pass through its hands, and that, in this way, it would not fail to produce the results as expected.

Having received this advice, the confraternities approached the ministry, which was entirely Freemason; so that in that case Freemasonry The stupidity was going to be all about the judge and party.

3* Government actions towards bishops

The government responds to the confraternities' recourse against the bishops. said by ordering the bishops, by a decree of June 12, 1873, to raise Vinterdit with which they had struck the brotherhoods, adding that they had makes a mistake in acting in the .sorle, and that moreover the bubbles of Homo Condemning Freemasonry means accepting no values, having no Vexequatur received from the Brazilian government.

Here I must place a few remarks necessary for the understanding of facts that will continue.

An ancient custom, long accepted by the bishops,

Masonic Persecution in Brazil from 1872 to 1879 583

grants the government the right to inspect the property belonging to the brother ries, a practice under which the government can request these latter nières, whenever he pleases, their account books, in order to examine the ploi do their property. This is what I will call the temporal side of the confraternities: money, use of this money for good works, examination of this employment by the government, etc.

The bishop refrained from interfering in this temporal matter, because his inter said a portal only on the reli;jintx side, that is to say on the admission to sacraments, church holidays, etc. It was essentially a punishment spiritual matters concerning only ecclesiastical authority, both in application tion than in the revocation. The decree of June 12, 1873 ordering the Therefore, the prohibition was abusive.

Therefore, the Bishop of Olinda replied, on July 6th, that he could not He was going to obey the government, an assertion he based on the following considerations which have just been presented. As for Vexequatur, which is mentioned earlier high, if we mean that, in order for the bubbles to have civil effects, they must have the imperial petition, it can be accepted; but, if one pre-

That is a mistake, as the Holy See is the sole judge of matters of faith and morality.

Moreover, in this eminently religious matter, the Holy See Monsignor d'Oinda approved. He, in fact, after having forbidden The first brotherhood wrote to the Holy Father to inform him that he had done and ask if he had acted rightly or wrongly; cl Pic IX, speaks briefly quanquam doloreSf, on May 29th, had responded with the most complete approval of all your episcopal acts, approval renewed since then on several repeated in documents that the Catholic world is not unaware of, and by the granting of the necessary powers to dissolve even the councils confraternities, if the bishop deemed it appropriate. Furthermore, in this same brief, the Holy Father allowed every priest to be able to do so for an entire year. to absolve Freemasons who would renounce their errors, which an Once the birth has passed, the common law would resume its effect. The sectarians, no. only did not benefit from the ease of return that was granted to them deed, but also welcomed this proof of papal indulgence by insults and vulgarities.

The brief was delivered to the bishop on the same day and at the same time as the imperial decree ordering the lifting of the interdict, the bishop squinted by this By a singular coincidence, he replied to the emperor: "Sire, I have at this moment in one hand the letter by which you order me to lift the restrictions said, and in the other a brief from the Holy Father approving what I have done. Judge for yourself whether I am permitted to comply with your request.

The Holy Father's brief was also to be communicated every bishops, and the one from Ilinda sent it to them. So that the Franks lessons were not unaware of the ease of return offered to them, nor of this that we were thinking of Home from their society, he would publish in his diocese the even briefly without asking for the equalizer; col excqualur, as I said higher up, being necessary only so that the letters of Rome obtain

584 Freemasonry in South America

(the civil forces. Despite this, the government is putting the bishop on trial.) of Olinda, for having been able to [illegible] in his diocese the brief (the Rome without loralisation préalal)lc, hoping that he would be condemned, that the other eve- Those intimidated by that conviction would not dare to make the same public statement.* cation, and that the an'airc would remain bed It would have been a victory, and of pines t end of a struggle in which the government was beginning to get bogged down that he had been wrong to get involved. That was a poor understanding of bishops, because all, during this time, published in their dioceses the brief pontificate tificial.

Seeing that the main effect he anticipated was the condemnation of the bishop d'Oinda, the limitation of his colleagues in the episcopal body, escaped him, and above all, not wanting to prosecute all the bishops, which he should have to do so since everyone had published the brief, and was frightened by that opposition

However, feeling too committed to back down, he turned the question around, returned to the prohibition and reasoned as follows: "The bishop has disobeyed a decree by not lifting the prohibitions placed on the fraternity lies; therefore, I am pursuing him." So a second trial ensued, which was to take place culminating in the arrest of the bishop on January 2, 1874.

This trial took place in Rio, from September to February 21st. During this time, the bishop was in Pernambuco.

According to Brazilian law, there are causes during the debate during which the accused remains free; others, on the contrary, during which He must be deprived of his freedom. That of the bishop was regarded as being among the latter. Consequently, in the course of In December, a commissioner appeared at his palace, informing him of the sad mission that fell to him. The bishop replied that he did not recognize the government's right to imprison him was in no way established, nor was it that he would only yield to force. At the commissioner's urging, he asked After a few moments, he went up to his room and wrote a protest. He then read the protest I just mentioned,

The man tasked with arresting him and those whose help he had requested they trembled like a leaf, to such an extent that he had great difficulty giving a reading of the document that ordered him to stop. From that moment The bishop was a prisoner; he was put aboard a Brazilian aviso, the liéci/ié, on board which he found none of the errors due to a bishopric even as a prisoner, he remained three days in the harbor of Pernambuco and, after UDO, after a nine-day crossing, arrived off Rio on January 2nd. He disembarked. The Bishop of Olinda was placed in the armory of the house of this city.

He had been there for a few days when the justice system sent him the body. of the accusation or documents of the trial, so that he might be aware of them, made the remarks and the answers he deemed necessary in rinlérêl do sa cause. To comply with the laws of the Church which forbids recognizing as competent in religious matters, the bishop, who had already rejected the jurisdiction of that tribunal in Pernambuco, abstained tint of any response or annotation on the sheet that was presented to him: His reply was short, consisting of these three words: Jesus to-tem tacebat.

Masonic Persecution in Brazil from 1872 to 1879 585

As before, he had given rather lengthy answers to the pieces to know what he would do upon communication of the corpus delicti. Large So was the general expectation when, in the middle of the session, the person in charge CO care announced that it had to make known the bishop's response of Olinda. The seal is broken, and what astonishment must there be, In the margin, these simple words: Jesus autem lacebat/

During the proceedings, the bishop was forcibly taken twice. in a wing, in court. Finally, the sentence was handed down on February 21st: the bishop was sentenced to four years of hard labor, commuted by the emperor in four years of simple detention, in a fortress.

The Para attacks closely followed those of Olinda: at very little In very close terms, they gave rise to the same procedures and to Same details.

Before concluding this notice, I want to answer a question that we must have addressed himself inwardly: And the other bishops, did they follow the What happened to those from Para and Olinda? What became of them? Are they not Are they not also exposed to persecution?

In truth, every day in Brazil, the bishops are even more or less directly caused; however, none have yet been found in the same alternative as those who are currently in the islands of Cobras and San Jaô. Here is the link: in their dioceses, or the Freemasons present themselves as a body, and demand to participate as such at the ceremonies of worship, at the sacraments; in short, they either show themselves openly, or not. In the latter case, the bishops They can say nothing, and all difficulty is eliminated. In the first In this case, on the contrary, here is what happens: the bishops call the interested parties They manipulate the people they consider most influential towards them, And so either they abjure, or they withdraw from the brotherhoods. In In either case, therefore, there are no possible difficulties. Hence the absence of conflicts like those in the two aforementioned dioceses. Celtic Submission in solidarity from brothers and friends is not spontaneous: It is a watchword they obey, which comes to them from the Grand Master. between, the latter not wanting to find himself in conflict with the episcopate while third. In order to avoid any further dispute until further notice, he wrote to the ministry, entirely devoted to it since it is composed of sectarians, to not accept or take into consideration the complaints which could be directed against the bishops (1).

(1) Before concluding this authentic and unassailable account, from the perspective of do- titudo, beyond the religious question in Brazil, especially in the province of Ter- Nambuc, I will recount a fact that no longer has the memo character hUlorifju» and the san

586 Freemasonry in South America

After two years of detention, the bishops of Olinda and Para were pardoned by the emperor.

Monsignor Vital d'Oliveira went to Rome to report to the Holy Father of the situation of the Church in Brazil and received the highest approbation.

He soon had to make a second trip to Europe, and it was there that death came to find him, in the Capuchin monastery of Versailles.

As for the Bishop of Para, Bishop Macedo, upon his return to his In the diocese, new trials awaited him. Here is the story. published by V Univers on November 10, 1879;

For a long time, a confraternity, bearing the name of Our Lady of Nazareth existed in Para. This brotherhood met once a year. in the Church of Nazareth, and celebrated a feast, under the direction of a A committee was responsible for arranging the ceremony and covering the expenses. The brot In 1842, it no longer observed its regulations for the admission of its new members and for the election of the committee of the calves since the year 1852 approximately. However, no conflict has ever occurred with the authority. ecclesiastical in the celebration of these religious heads, the bishop of Para allowed the brotherhood to act freely. But, in October 1877, at the time- where the solemnity takes place, His Grace having approved the program of the crack, was about to embark on a short voyage, when she was on captivated by reading the Üiariode lielem^ where an article revealing scandalous events had just occurred in the Naza suburb reth.

After the procession with the image of Christ and the Virgin Mary, and Oxaclitudo guarantee: however, I link it to a source to which it would be reckless. not to grant the most complete conflauco.

When Emperor Pedro II made his trip to Europe in 1860, he went to Rome and was received by the Saiauper.

Through an intention of conciliation, the agreement of which it would be difficult to exp Inance, the emperor, who was then traveling under the name of Count X..., felt obliged to pormeliro do parler au Saint-Père des aflatros italiennes, de lui prôclior la tolérance and a reprimand on Viulor-Eminuuuel's side. The approach was inconsiderate, and the Holy Father apparently judged it so incoherent that he could not help but do it to feel for the imprudent visitor, to whom he addressed himself in these terms: My dear l "Count, you understand nothing about these things; let's not talk about them then."

Pius IX's reply apparently deeply offended him, and from that day forward he vowed to to make him regret persecuting the Church.

One thing is certain. Before the emperor's return from Europe, people were already saying. Brazil, which he returned to, was judged against the Church, animated by ill intentions to Regarding him, Oltju'ollo should have expected bad days ahead. These rumors, I repeat, rumors circulated in Brazil before the emperor's return, and the facts should not have as if deliberately confusing what is most sacred with what is There are also more secular items, such as the emblems of Catholic worship and objects hideous in their depravity and sin, they had publicly exhibited abominable paintings; first a group of three naked women who they kissed, and then, standing up, in front of several thousand people of all ages and conditions, a woman in the display of nudity more complete.

Outraged by these events, Bishop Macedo, before embarking, gave to The parish priest of Nazareth ordered the immediate suspension of religious services.
night-time revelers (a novena to the Virgin Mary was being celebrated), just in case
These scandalous scenes would continue to occur.

Father Pinto, the parish priest of Nazareth, obeyed and fully confirmed the account from Behm's Diary.

But the colleagues refused to take into account the suspension of the novena and the closing of the church. Also, resorting to the with violence, they forced open the church doors and rang the bells.
A large crowd gathered, and they began to desecrate the temple, singing litanies, as if in derision, and above all in response to the bishop's action. The
The principal perpetrators of this violence were Messrs. Hricio and Bacclari, who Moreover, they boasted about it in the sect's newspapers.

But what seems most revolting to us in all of this is the stupidity*
The authority. Mr. Bandeira de Mello was then administering the province.
Far from cracking down on foul-mouthed libertines who outraged conscience public by abominable aliens, the complacent president limited himself To give them advice. It is true that by this advice he... were betting on giving guarantees to Bishop Macedo, declaring that he would side with the bishop, in case the steering committee did not would not hold up to the conditions imposed by it. But the weakness of This summons could not deceive the Freemasons, who, moreover, know What should we expect regarding the camaraderie of government officials?
ment t.

The agreement between the bishop and the committee seemed for a moment to have been reached
It was nothing, however, or rather it was a feint by the sect. A few
The committee delegates having gone to speak with Bishop Macedo, they declared they accepted the conditions dictated by His Excellency for the reopening church maintenance and the continuation of religious ceremonies.

However, a few hours after leaving Bishop Macedo, these gentlemen published a false account of their interview with His Grace. In this document, it was stated that it was the bishop who had wanted to reach an agreement with the committee. It read the^luelle-

"That the reason for his decision stemmed from the rumor that had circulated that immoral displays had taken place in Nazareth;

f That by handing over the keys to the church, His Grace would go to per* his son attends religious ceremonies to expose to the public the reasons for his conduct.

"Here are the facts: it is well established that the aforementioned exhibitions, which had nothing immoral about them, were removed from public view, at the re- the police chief's quest, which, he said, is for the honor of truth, demonstrated great wisdom and moderation in these events. ration.

588 Freemasonry in South America

"Things unfolded in this way, the committee believes it has not missed to its dignity by allowing religious ceremonies to continue to be done with the assistance of priests.

This document contains the signatures of the committee members who had attended the conference with the bishop. Father Mourao, secretary of the bishopric, having gone to communicate this document to Mr. Bandeira de Mello, To find out what to expect, the provincial president declared to him, that he considered it apocryphal. This official even went so far as to say until... call the police chief, apparently to give him... orders on this matter, but the police chief was not in the city.

Meanwhile, the bishop summoned Mr. Uchoa, an excellent Catholic, under whose patronage the committee had presented itself to him, and questioned him on raulhcnlicité of the story that we have just reproduced and of which he was the first signatory. Mr. Uchoa vehemently denied it, while admitting that he had consulted M-Lucio, his friend, whose wisdom had instructed him* He had gained a great deal of confidence. He added, in front of forty people, in the sacristy of the church, where this explanation took place, that the story of The link with the bishop was false, that he authorized the prelate to declare him rer in the pulpit.

This is what Bishop Macedo, in full terms, calls "moderation." He exposed the painful and sacrilegious events that had just taken place.

The bishop noted that the committee, yielding to the advice of the first the provincial authority, had presented himself to him and had accepted meekly scs conditions. He added that these conditions can be summarized as follows: 1® in the immediate handover of the church keys, which, guarding the tabernacle, could remain in the power of the laity; 2" in the cessation of representation indecent sensations and the promise not to repeat them; 3® in church. The committee having formally accepted them, the prelate had also authorized the continuation of the ceremonies, reserving the right to operate further he would implement the reforms he deemed necessary for the good of religion.

Challenging this noble attitude of the bishop, the radical newspaper The Liberal insolently proclaimed, almost immediately, that the authors of The authors of the false document were Messrs. Iricio and Baceilar, notorious Freemasons. who had played an important role in the scenes of debauchery sacrilege, and who, taking the title of directors of the festival committee, reli- The nuns were in reality the leaders of the rebellion against the bishop of diocese.

Here begins a new phase of the Nazareth question. generally believed that the enemies of religion would not push further on, their indescribable altitude in relation to Bishop Macedo, and that the conDit would take (in speaking of the nomination of honorable people such as members of the new committee of 1878. It was precisely the moment of the election of this committee. The act of creation of the brotherhood, recognized in 1842 by the civil power, specifies precisely the manner of proceeding in this election. After a meeting of the general assembly, including the priest must be part of it, as a member of the brotherhood, a list was formed which was announced from the pulpit by the preacher, after having obtained the app probation of the priest of Nazareth.

Masonic Persecution in Brazil from 1872 to 1879 589

However, for many years, the brotherhood had not been functioning according to its rules. It did not admit members, or it admitted some without the priest's consent, which rendered these admissions null and void.

Because of this, the ecclesiastical authority considered the committee as an assembly of people who contributed every year to celebrate a religious ceremony, and not like a duly canonical brotherhood organized.

These details were necessary to explain this second part of the conflict, which brought things to the acute state in which they now find themselves Nant. At the top of the list for 1878 were precisely the names of Messrs. Bacellar and Bricio. It was all-out war. After the marches useless things on the part of the preacher, Father Mourao, and the priest, for to persuade the colleagues to modify the list, the ecclesiastical authority Siastic refused to give his approval, and the list was not proclaimed in pulpit, as is the custom. The colleagues had it published by the revolutionary newspapers of the place.

Moreover, some of the committee members had made statements public rations of irreligion and impiety. Others confessed that they did not were only part of it to better wage war against the bishop.

This is where the unjust bias of the authority becomes glaringly apparent. Judge de Capell A close friend of Mr. Bricio, approved the election of the committee by means of a telegram from 1878, without even inquiring about the irregular and anarchic conditions in which he had been trained, without heeding ecclesiastical authority and without fearing the consequences of this reckless and heinous act.

The judge then asked the priest of Nazareth for his submission to the committee or his resignation!!

With this support, the committee, on November 28, 1877, addressed a summons to the priest, signed by Mr. Bacellar, ordering him to find the next day in the church, "to proceed with the general inventory" of all the places, ornaments and furnishings belonging to the confraternity" The committee agreed to leave some ornaments on loan for the parish service, provided that the priest signs a receipt As a rule, to avoid confusion,

The priest of Nazareth did not respond to this monstrous summons. But the comilé obtained a warrant from Judge de Capellas to seize The keys to the church from the priest. Father Mourao and the lawyer Mr. Mac Dowel wanted to accompany the priest to witness the violence he was going to be the subject. The bailiff, Mr. Lima, accompanied by other people of the same Tice, presented himself to the priest, who, while protesting the violence that law Once the work was done, he handed over the keys. We regret that we cannot provide the text of the mandate C'osl a piece as curious as it is unjust. The priest refused to hold no ceremony in the church: the sacristan fled and was dismissed by the coniled.

590 Freemasonry in South America

Bishop Macedo was obliged to "ask the Royal Portuguese Society of kindness in lending him the chapel of the hospital of Louis I, so that he could to transfer the parish of Nazareth, pending the outcome of the conflict.

The Freemasons' committee triumphed; it swayed the judge of Nazareth. to ask the prefect if the committee's list should be posted in the church of Nazareth, or in the hospital chapel. They also surrendered to a new desecration of the church of Nazareth, by singing there a burlesque litany.

This, in summary, is the story of the conflict that arose between the French and the Let her, courageous Bishop of Para Venos, now get to the facts, thanks events that have occurred this year and which are simply a continuation of this that we have just described.

A new committee having addressed the bishop on August 16, 1879, requesting that the religious ceremonies to be celebrated be specified which the committee should agree to in order to carry out His orders

Your Grace, Monsignor responded with a communication dated the 19th August, which can be summarized in the following provisions:

The communicators will have to attest, first and foremost, before the prelate dion-Césain, that they form a regularly established brotherhood and canonically in this diocese, according to the book of its foundation, equipped of the approval of ecclesiastical authority, or at least establish the identity the identity of the current brotherhood with any other ancient brotherhood constituted killed regularly, this (|which must bring out documents from its archives.

The bishop is ready to deal with the communicators immediately, a ti-three of the Didegués who were part of a commission tasked with organizing a religious ceremony, provided that the members who signed the draws, as well as those who did not sign it (Messrs. Bricio and Ba-cellar), will declare themselves Catholic, Apostolic, Roman, ready to fill the prelate's intentions, with regard to the decorum of the solemnities religious—that they will submit their program to ecclesiastical approval that, as regulated by a diocesan resolution; that they will obey the the prelate himself, if he deemed it necessary to suspend or modify any act of the worship, except for recourse to higher religious authority, and finally that they do not will never see the lamentable scenes of the ciml which have so scandalized read the Catholic people of this diocese and of loull'crnplre.

The bishop's protests prevented nothing; for the Mac
The president of the province, the f. •.
Goma y Abreu: "The procession of the brotherhood, says la5oa nova "in Para, took place at night. While parading in front of the palace of
"She insulted Tévéque with her jeers; on the other hand, the Ii0tel of the
"The box was completely lit up. Fireworks were set off."

Masonic Persecution in Brazil DB 1872 to 1879 591

€ which reproduced Masonic symbols. The people who did-"were part of the procession (they were mostly men-
"those who marched in two rows, hats on their heads and "Cigars in their mouths. They were making loud jokes."
€ votes against the bishop (1). »

While these events were taking place, the masons
Brazilians felt that these persecutions were drawing the bishops' attention.
sympathies from all honest people and made it closer the union of all members of the hierarchy. Therefore, they have com realized that, to go safely, it was necessary to go slower and, as in Europe, first take control of the family and education youth cation. In his inaugural address as Grand Master of the United Grand Orient of Brazil, Brother Joaquim Saldanha Marinho, who was then prime minister, explained as follows his program:

I assume before you and before Brazil the very serious responsibility of to ardently uphold all the great social ideas, including their realization is the desideratum of all free peoples.

I claim before you and before Brazil, the responsibility of to fight, by moral means, to restrict the power of the E-Roman Church at the limits of its spiritual jurisdiction, so that freedom so that humanity can assert itself on a solid foundation in our country.

I opposed the logic of truth to the sophistry of Jesuitism, the se-renunciation of my conscience to the sophisms of hypocrisy, the rights of the rai. on libre aux excès de fanatisme, la diffusion de l'enseignement et from sound doctrines to the propaganda of error and obedience ism.

However incomplete the work to which we refer may seem
We are dedicated, and results have already been achieved.

"This result should be attributed to you more than to me.

A man alone, whatever power an innate will gives him shaky. However strong it may be by truth, by justice, by law of which he makes himself the organ, cannot, with the sole resources of his strength tune, to take up the gigantic task of such propaganda and put to be at the service of this generous idea the most considerable publicity.

This is where the power of association is revealed; this is where you have proven your enthusiasm and determination by generously contributing the resources necessary for the success of the mission that I have

(1) GUÉ by VUnivtTi of SI dated 1879.

592 LA Frang-maçonnerik in South America

inij»us<'e. Pt thanks to niixquelles I was able, during S(*pt years, to publish everything what we published, and j)ortor in the most remote corners of the country, and even to foreign shores, the echo of our voices, of our complaints, of our associations, and the demand for our rights stifled by the sad militias that make up the armies of fanaticism and supertition.

Request the institution of civil marriage in order to inform our councils toys to the tyranny which is exercised in the name of an exclusive church and into* depressing; to obtain, through the secularization of cemeteries, respect for the depressed deadly lice against the insults of a religious sect that claims to extend its power into the realm of infinity... such has been the work we have undertaken, not in the name of Magonnerie, its own existence and integrity (1).

Brazilian Freemasonry did not stop there:

The Scottish Aurora of Rio de Janeiro, known as the Chain of Union, contains, in its May issue, an interesting presentation of the needs in-intellectuals of the Brazilian population, and an overview of the means pro-laid down by Freemasonry to spread light among the illiterate of this immense empire.

The author of the article poses the following two questions:

1® Can and should Brazilian Freemasonry remain indifferent?
rent to this state of affairs?

2® Doesn't she assume her share of responsibility by sticking to the cart of the public affairs department?

Six compact columns are devoted to elucidating these two points, whose importance is self-evident.

Our Brazilian brother cites the example of French masons in the past different aspects of our history: he also recalls what operated wonders the masons of the United States (2).

However, Freemasonry had to moderate its persecutory actions.
She had thought it wise to concentrate her attacks against the two bishops of Para and Olinda, to present them as liomexalted. It so happened that the entire Brazilian episcopate was last-

(1) Reproduced in the Journal de la Maçonnerie belge of the 1st and 8th of the 12th month,

(2) La Chatne ttUnion, October 1882) p. 315.

The Frangg-biaçonnerie in Chile 393 behind them with a unanimity that the sect did not suspect.

The prosecution coming from the legitimate power itself, the protests
The activities of the Eveepipies remained discreet, but they did not
They moved the sovereign no less.

In 1880, Father Saldanha Marinho left power. The new
The ministry has, in some respects, entered a path of repair and provided evidence of it, notably by calling the Capuchins in charge of missions to the savages. The venerable
The Bishop of Olinda was able to resume full exercise of his duties in his diocese.
from his ministry and he had the consolation of receiving Tabjuratiou

S 3. – Freemasonry in Chile

Chile is the most catholic of all the countries in South America Catholic; it has an admirable clergy. It is also of all of these republics, the one with the most political stability is the more advanced from a scientific point of view. Striking military successes Their silences testified to his superiority.

Freemasonry seeks to disorganize it. We only have to to recall here the work program of the Grand Lodge of Chile in 1875, which we published (Introduction, IV). It shows what Freemasonry means by modern and civilized freedoms tion.

More favorable circumstances for her seem to be preparing rer. The Chain of Union of 1881 informs us that "the f.*. José "Vergara, the Minister of the Interior, has just been elected Grand Master" "of the Grand Lodge of Chile. We have no doubt," she adds, "that "under the direction of this eminent brother the Chilean lodges do not re- "cover all their activity, today largely com-

(f) See Catholic Association of June 1881, p. 835. There is only one nuance between the new ministry and the old one. Ai0i^i the new ministers declared the IG July 1880, in response to an interpollalion do U. Saldanlia Marine, that they do not would not tolerate the establishment of Jesuit novitiates in the kingdom and Maiutian* always upholds the principle of state ease. See Yearbook of Legislation foreign, t. X, p. 731.

nor 38

594 LA FhànG'Masonry in South America

"y)rim6e by the clerical party. The lodges (|who work reclus- "How are the English, French and German lodges (I)/"

The latest news received from this country, only one conflict erupted between the government and the apostolic nuncio. The action of Freemasonry was nothing but Irop elTicace.

Among the qucslioiii (pie cos loges seek to grow in Popinion, it is necessary to note that of the cremation of the corpses. This is one of the theses that Universal Freemasonry propagates (Book I, (cliap. IV, § 3). She believes she sees in it a way to change morals. and Christian customs.

active and works to discredit national institutions.

S 4. – Freemasonry in Ecuador and the Neighboring republics

The assassination of Garcia Moreno, the illustrious and Christian president of the Republic of Ecuador, is one of the crimes where the hand of Freemasonry was the most overtly displayed.

Garcia Moreno had governed Ecuador for fifteen years: first as dictator, then sweetly once as president, and Shortly before the day he was assassinated, he had ('tô re-elected by the unanimous vote of Lu Nuliou. Just like Rossi, he had been warned of the plans formed against him, we find proof of this in a letter to Pius IX, written shortly before his death. He he hastened to ask for his blessing even before the inauguration official of August 30, 1875. "At this moment," he told him, "the lodges Your countries, inflamed by Germany, are spewing hatred against me. of atrocious libels and horrible calumnies; even during that they were secretly plotting my assassination, I have more than "Never needing divine protection."

A letter, written from Guayaquil to the Bien Public of Ghent, has The following information was provided regarding the crime:

The main assassin, named Rajo, was born in New Granada; q

U) Chain of Union of 1881, p. 437.

Freemasonry in Ecuador 595

had received many benefits from the president, he had held the office of the governor of the Indian province of Napo, The other two assassins sins, one of whom belonged to a good family, and the other to the lower classes classes of society, were both citizens of Ecuador.

The president was on his way to the Ministry of Finance in Quito when Rajo struck him behind the neck with his dagger. Garcia Moreno was wearing the with his revolvers in hand, when the two other assassins, positioned at the entrance Virons, having their saddled horses with them, unloaded their revolts worms upon him. He fell immediately and expired shortly afterwards: the skull had been broken by the handle of the heavy dagger. The two Ecuadorians They escaped immediately; they have not yet been captured; but one An unarmed soldier passing by called to the sentry who found Rajo de before his victim, and pierced his body. He was then torn to pieces by the

One of the assassins' accomplices, a civil servant, was arrested after the murder and brought before a court-martial. Before the trial, the president The court's representative assured the prisoner that his life would be spared if he... denounced his accomplices. "It is useless to spare my life," he replied, "for if you were to give it to me, it would be taken from me by "My comrades; I would rather be shot than stabbed."

The correspondent for the film was writing from Paris on October 5, 1875;

According to reliable sources, it appears that Garcia Moreno, The president of the Republic of Ecuador was assassinated by society. secret, which has ramifications throughout South America, too although in Europe. We drew lots to determine who would be the murderers. The men upon whom fate fell have made their way a path through the presidential palace in Quito.

We found out about the assassins of the checks on the Bank of Peru. that the Universe of September 28th called a notorious den of francs-' masons.

An assassination attempt had already taken place in 1869; it had failed; but it proves at least that the last Masonic murder The crime was conceived in cold blood, and planned from the In that same year, 1839, a young scholar presented himself appeared to be leaving Berlin to go to Ecuador. He was supposed to... to obtain a chair of science at the University of Quito, which was vacant cante, and to which Garcia Moreno had applied it. On the eve of After his departure, he went to Berlin to pay a farewell visit to one of his professors. He was a learned mathematician holding a He held an important rank within Freemasonry. He was affectionate.

596 Freemasonry in South America

for this young man and expressed his deep regrets to him. seeing him leave for such a distant country and also subject to balls periodic payments. He added that he should no longer be lathered to serve Garcia Moreno, because it was more than likely that Moreno would no longer be president upon his arrival. This young man, no fit then he paid no attention to these words, but he had scarcely... landed in Guayaqui! What did he mean by a conspiracy? The President's life had just been ruined. The assassins had were arrested and their lives were generously spared by Moreno (1).

We can better grasp the threads of the plot woven over so long. Moreno, after reading the following article published by QiMonde ma- conical under this signature: a Kqualorian, in June 1875, that is- that is, shortly before the crime, and as if to prepare for it the opinion:

It was in the face of the wars of independence that Freemasonry penetrated into Ecuador. In 1821, a year before the Battle of Pichincha, which sealed the independence of this republic, there was in Quito a well-organised lodge, the Ley Natural.

In Guayaquil, there was a lodge and a chapter for a long time. These groups disappeared for about ten years, until... In 1856, the Philanthropy Lodge of the Guyayas was organized. There was at this time, in Guayaquil, there was an extraordinary Masonic fervor.

Ecuador was then following a liberal path. The Guayaquil lodge was a democratic lodge. The Freemasons of Quito claimed to the contrary, to maintain the aristocratic character of the old, or for To put it better, false Freemasonry and to make it a political weapon. Unable to implement this system in a liberal country, they preferred not to raise the columns of their temple.

The Guayaquil lodge had to fight against tensions within its own ranks. similar dances supported by two of its members who possessed the higher degrees; but the democratic or Masonic element remained victor in the struggle.

In 1860, following the Civil War, the Conservative Party triumphed, the leader of this party, Mr. Garcia Moreno, requested initiation from the lodge of Guayaquil (2).

The lodge in Guayaquil had serious reasons to distrust Mr. Garcia Moreno. The violent and aggressive nature of this man was not

(1) We compare these delays to the Clviltà eatlolka of 1875«

(2) We do not, of course, guarantee the veracity of the allegations on this point. gations of the EqMtorUn of the Masonic World.

Freemasonry in Ecuador 597

a Masonic quality. Mr. Garcia Moreno had, moreover, outlawed many members of the Guayaquil lodge; he claimed to be entering in the lodge like a master.

In response to the conditions demanded by the lodge, he authorized the Jesuits to return to the country. Finally, in 1869, when, with the help of the ultramontanes He managed to seize complete power, Mr. Garcia Moreno pursued a large number of Ecuadorians, and issued a decree by the* which he ordered that any individual denounced as a Freemason be tried in court-martial. Today, there are no more lodges in the Equa- author.

In his letter to the Holy Father dated August 30, 1875, Garcia Moreno was alluding to the threats made against him by Freemasonry neighboring countries.

The previous year, on March 29, 1874, the Grand Lodge Venezuela had sent to all the lodges in its vicinity the following circular, which indicates its power in this republic and at the same time his connection with the Freemasonry of the continent European:

Masonic Chamber

The R.\ M,\ L.'. of Yenesuela aiix RR.\ LL.*, within its jurisdiction

S.'. F.*.

CH.. FF..

It is in solemn circumstances that the Grand Lodge pays you taking into account a function, the most important one that has been celebrated until now Today, the Masonic* in Venezuela; important because of its significance direct, indirect, by the circumstances in which it took place.

Called upon by the country to lay the foundations for the regeneration of the Venetian Suela, Brother Gusman Blanco, full of faith in Masonic principles, resolved to take on the Venezuelan Freemasonry as a partner, and prepared* felt as its declared and determined protector, in order to give to the association the appropriate representation and basis for its existence with dignity that which is befitting the stature of his mandate.

The Gr.. Lodge, understanding the full importance (the transcendence) of the a new era, to which this institution is associated, marked this day happy by a gr.. ten.'. extraordinary, ety a presented at the ch., fr.. Guzman Blanco, with great solemnity, the resolution by which He is recognized as protector, and receives the significant title of Mr.. Resp.. and Ch.. Fr.. Protector of the Order*. F.. Mason.. of Venezuela, in him delivering a speech praising the efforts of Brother Guzman for all that is holy and great in the eyes of the Mac.*, namely: the peace, public education, the material progress of the country.<!,]e.\tinction of fanaticism and superstition. In his reply, Mr.. Resp.. and Ch.. Fn., Protector made known how much he regarded this demonstration as important, and he urged Mac., to occupy the a position that suits him in the struggle of light against darkness bres.

598 The Franco-Masonic Kebie in South America

not gained much if that alone reduced the demonstration* lion of IT.*., because it would have been nothing but a cry, a cry that must resound in all parts of the Republic. Therefore, the blow of the mallet must strikes all ears and the cry of "Let us arm ourselves" is repeated
"All of us, with our swords, to defend the principles of the institution!"

The war is over in our country; with it disappears the motif who silenced the masons* when they met in the temples to deal with public affairs prof... The questions that the protector of the Masons, inscribed on a high column, that all They see them as: the dignity and prosperity of the homeland through the means of peace, freedom, and equality. These questions are essential.
masons, and the masons who wish to be worthy of such a glorious name.
must lend their full cooperation and support to resolve them decided.

By urging his brothers to embrace these sentiments, the Grand Lodge does not fail to comply with the constitutional precept of avoiding controversies on politics and religion, an eminently necessary precept so that the logs*. may be the meeting point for those who could not not meet on another field; however, we cannot avoid addressing these issues raised by our enemies.

The Great Lodge calls enemies of Freemasonry those who have sworn and who wage war on the Masonic corporations*, those who do not respect the dignity of the nation, those who seek to disturb the public peace, those who want to stifle human reason, those who want to do to undermine, through ignorance, those who foment fanaticism and superstition, and finally, all those who hate principles and tendencies these masons.*

Addressing the dignity of the nation is not addressing a question politics: if that were the case, Freemasonry* would contradict itself, and then that she recognizes that love of country is the first duty of maç.', ; hence the necessity of taking sides when the enemy of the fatherland is the declared enemy of Freemasonry*, against which he has always launched his curses, which he still hurls every day and incessantly.

And why? Because the M.*. recognizes the existence of a Being Super first, father of all men; because she maintains that all Men are equal and capable of improvement; because it teaches that truth

THERE FRA.NG-MASONRY IN ECUADOR 599

rests on science, and only on science; because it absolutely pushes fanaticism and superstition, by making them a relentless warfare through education; because it con popular education is considered indispensable for humanity on a basis that is also suitable for all religious beliefs concerns them at their respective temples and by denying them the right to give no other; because she wants the country to be subdued verain and not dependent on any other sovereign.

If these are the principles of Mac.*., as they are of the liberalism, and if they are the basis of the conduct of the government of the country, directed today by our protector, it is clear, and the G . Log.. the e- definitively established, that one is not a true mason.*, who does not {range not on the side of the government that represents the Venezuelan people, [for combating the [Vatican's claims to a sovereignty superior to that of the Venezuelan people on Venezuelan soil. The question that arose The question is whether Venezuela will be free and able to progress. by his own generous and liberal efforts, or if he will have to receive his inspirations from the Vatican, which recently ordered its representative to Paris to have prayers addressed to the Supreme Being in all churches Catholics for the fall of the Republic and the restoration of the Monarchy shit, and who has always proclaimed ignorance as the main support of his seat and of all thrones. Hence the recent encyclicals of the Pope condemning modern civilization; hence his famous non possumus, which would set us back to the Middle Ages, if it were to prevail but; hence his absolute domination over his priests, who cannot, in their ecclesiastical conscience, to defend principles other than those of their leader, who thus has as many votes in our corporations. public, that there are priests sitting among them; hence the contradiction tion which exists in consciences, because the doctrine which presents itself felt as religious is different from political and patriotic doctrine that, the former wanting to retreat, the latter rushing impatiently towards the continuation of progress, – the former seeking obscurity, the latter the brilliance of the light–the former holding back the national momentum, the latter claiming to elevate the nation at the level of the most advanced.

You see how pernicious the Vatican's influence is on its employees, an influence that leads them to the most criminal perjury. The archbishops and bishops elected, before being presented to His Holiness by the the nation's executive power, take the oath to "support and to break the constitution of the Republic, not to usurp its sovereignty negativity, to obey the laws, to carry out the laws, orders and decrees of the government government." And before they were issued the official documents of their institution, They take this other oath: "I swear that I will never consider as cancelled, directly or indirectly, nor diminished in any way part, the oath of obedience to the Constitution, the laws and the government of the Republic, oath which I took before my pre* seignation to the Holy See, by that of obedience to the Apostolic See that which I must lend at the time of my consecration, nor by any act "Not later, under any circumstances. – So help me God."

600 LÂ Frang-magonnbrib in South America

obedience to national authority, obedience demanded of all at the same time the nations that hold the Catholic religion as re-religion of the state. This obedience has never since been considered as anti-religious, and there is only bad faith, there is only the guilty desire to sow discord again, who could have claimed to raise the political flag. The vast majority of Freemasons appear adheres faithfully to the Christian religion and fulfills the duties that the Church imposes this on him, without thereby renouncing the exercise of his reason) which is sacred to him, as being an emanation of the Supreme Being first.

Reasoned principles cannot be substituted for those of fanaticism. ism and superstition that gradually and by means of enlightenment, because for centuries the Church of Rome prevented the dissemination of knowledge and punishing men as heretics to whom nature revealed its secrets, and who unveiled them to their turn to all of humanity. For centuries, the education of masses was denounced as detrimental to ecclesiastical tyranny and to civil tyranny, and the See of Rome appealed to the thrones, to The very name of their existence, against liberal principles, which have not could only, through heroic struggles, open a passage to make his dignity to the vast majority of men who, under the name of the masses, were condemned to remain ignorant and to patiently consume their yie in work for the greater enjoyment of the privileged classes giées. It is against this blatant injustice that the Mac.' has worked since the early days of its existence, and the hour has struck again in which all FP.*. must contribute to working so that the The truth may be known in all its parts, and so that the true interests that the voices of the nation and its citizens be heard.

The Gr.*. L. . has confidence that this pruning. will be done actively and decision, according to the guidelines set out in this circular, by disseminating the principles both among foreigners and among the Freemasons, because that Mac.', works not for itself, but for all humanity whole. The light must not be hidden; it must be placed in a high place, as Jesus Christ said, so that it may illuminate the way min of all.

Given unanimously in the Extraordinary General Meeting of March 29th from 1874 (E.-. VM)

THERE. Franc-kaçonnrsxs AV Mbxiqui 601

Lb Gr.. Matt.,, J.-C* Hustado, 33. – The Dep., G., Matt.,, Jesus» Mr. BlancOf 33. – The 1st G.. Vie.,, José-Raph(ai Paeheco, 33. – The 2 Gr.'. Vie.,, José dsl R. Ponte, 33. – Le Gr.-. Orat..', Is.-J. Pardo, 38. –Le Gr., Secréi.,, Eduardo^A. Machado, 32. – The G.. Very.,, A.-Eyzaguirre, 33. – The Gr.. Gard., des Sc.,, Ramon Yâpes^ 33.

After the assassination of Garcia Moreno, Freemasonry is return to power in Ecuador. At the same time, she triumphed she was in the neighboring state of Colombia. She was officially there recognized in December 1875.

The decree published by El Registro del Estaclo, the official journal of the government, is based on what "Freemasonry has for the purpose, according to its proposal submitted to the executive branch, the practice of charity, the practice of morality, the study of science and the arts, and the defense of civilization based on a universal tolerance (1)!

S 5. – Freemasonry in Mexico

The influence of Freemasonry in the revolutions of this unfortunate country was noted by a document of the most high authority and which was also reproduced by the Moniteur Universal^ official journal of the French Empire, no. of 13 September December 1863. This is the report on the form of government that Merigue should adopt, chaired by the commission special, appointed on July 8, 1863 by the assembly of notables. Here are the salient passages;

If Mexico, shaking with all the ardor of an inexperienced youth Having freed herself from the yoke of her former metropolis, she had not forgotten her for institutions, there is no doubt that he would have reached the height of prose perity.

But he did not know how to use his emancipation and abused his independence. The adoption of the 1824 constitution, which succeeded

(1) See Le Monde of January 1, 1876. The Grand Master of the Grand Orient of Colombia Bogota, in 1882, is the f.*. Thomas de Mosquera, former president of the republic^ His deputy grand master is Brother Manuel Ancizar, former secretary of relations eztérieurss.

the French masonry in South America

The Iturbide monarchy established the people's and federal republic already proclaimed in December 1882 during a military riot in Vera-Gruz, fpt the source of all our woes, the cause of our ruin. At this point* imitating the United States, they joined the establishment of lodges. Masonic lodges are divided into the Scottish Rite and the York Rite. These shadowy clubs decided, through their conspiracies, through poison and through the dagger, to it is about the country and the lives of its citizens. It was then, in 1828, that we saw for the first time, during the looting of the Grand Bazaar in Mexico City, the cars

It was from these lodges that the unjust laws of expulsion against the originated. European Spaniards, laws that struck innocent people, that ruined trade drove out capital and gave rise to shameful trafficking in which items are put up for sale, as if at public auctions, the exceptions to the decree of exile that some people eventually managed to obtain sounds ..

This is how we saw Santa Anna and Mon- rise and fall tano, Labato, Zavala, Bustamante, Conalizo, Baredez, Urrea, Faviar, Uruga, Zuloaga, Echegaray, and so many others, dragging them down with them their government plans, the 1824 election, the seven laws constitutional, organic, and reform acts, and finally the the famous charter of 1857 which dealt the final blow to the dignity and to the remaining life of the nation...

After that, it's not surprising to have seen thieves of the highest caliber. The path to occupying the highest positions, having witnessed the squandering of the treasury's assets, that of the clergy's assets unjustly confiscated and without benefit to the country.

This document continues with a description of the anarchy of the Mexico. Clavel says, for his part, in his 'picturesque' History of Freemasonry, that the overthrow of Ilurbide was the work lodges.

Everything that the Assembly of Notables said in 1863 is completely confirmed by a detailed first correspondence published by the Freimaurer-Zeitung of Leipzig in 1867, which was translated in the newspaper Le Monde, on July 14th of that year.

Since the fall of the unfortunate Maximilian, Freemasonry has reigned without question in this country and subjects the Church to oppression systematic, worthy of the revolutionaries of the old world.

CHAPTER THIRTY-SIX

SECRET SOCIETIES AND THE EVENTS OF ORLEANS

On 14th July 1877, Cardinal Manning pointed out the importance of The role of secret societies in events in the East. This The action dates back a century.

absolute denial of societies which, like the Philomuscs, Vllétairie^ The Omladina^ had to resort to secrecy to prepare the Tranchis- liberation of their country from the odious yoke of the Turks: adversus hostem aeterna auctoritas, one might say, of this age-old struggle engaged against the Crescent by the Clirollian populations. We want only to show how Western Freemasonry has infiltrated these societies, thanks to the secretive form that they had adopted, how the sect sought to do to divert the national movement from its Christian character and to to create in the future a foothold for the Cosmo-Revolution polite.

– The Hetairib

The UHétairie was founded in 1815 in Vienna, during the congress sovereigns. Russia, the Protestant powers and the Freemasonry, says Mr. Faligan, who has studied this very well

604 SECRET SOCIETIES AND EVENTS OF ORIENX

question (I), pushed towards its foundation, each with the thought to advance SCS's specific designs.

Mr. Thomas Frost describes its organization as follows:

The organization of the Iletairia was admirably suited to the purpose it proposed itself; less simple than that of the Carbonari, it resembled rather to that of the Illuminati, with regard to the number of degrees the reports of the various sections of the company, some with Ifi others.

Each member had the right to initiate others, but, before dfle to do so, he was obliged, under severe penalties, to do the strictest n- quête sur le caractère et de la ante de la personne qui initié. 0' 1® held responsible for those he brought into society.

The number of grades was five, namely; 1* Los .dda/p/iot who, On the day of their initiation, they only committed themselves through a solemn oath. General to keep VJletairia's secret and to be loyal to him, samsavoir the means employed by the company to achieve its goal; 2*^8 temenoi^ to whom it was learned that the liberation of Greece would be obtained by a revolution; 3" the Priests of Elettis, who were being informed of the progress of the movement; 4 the Prelates, who were initiated every secrets of the company and who were responsible for monitoring its various aspects sections; 5® the Grand Arch (the Grand Council), which exercised power supreme and sovereignly ruled society; he was composed of twelve, or, according to some writers, sixteen members who according to all

The initiation oath, pronounced on his knees by the candidate, "obligatory" He was determined to be loyal to his country, to work towards its regeneration with all his physical and intellectual strength, to keep inviolate the the secret of society, and to put to death even its closest confidants, if they betrayed the cause of Greece. Each member paid, aimo. the process of his initiation, a contribution to the foundation of society; the the amount of this contribution was left to his discretion, but it to be proportionate to his financial situation. At the same time, he a document written in the following format:

"I, a native of, practicing the profession of

Although I have reached the age of [age missing], I have not yet received the WPS [Wagen F

it's about making a donation for a worthwhile purpose; that's why I entrust to (c the sum of piastres, payable to the monastery ^ school)

" of ".

(1) Greek question, French influence and traditional politics of the France in the Orient, in-80, Angers, 1881.

the Hetairie

605

A number was attached to the signature, which was subsequently used to check the letters addressed to the steering committee. This committee kept a List of names with attached figures and supporting documents. newly initiated member was also fleeing a particular sign on the paper. This sign was unknown to the initiator, and it was the Great One Arch, who subsequently used it to authenticate all the comments communications he would have to deal with the new initiate. The money, the document and the supporting document was sent to the Grand Arch' via the intermediary Diary of the Prelate of the district.

Mr. Faligan cites some contemporary testimonies, which establish a link between Rilctary and Freemasonry. The The most important is that of Poucqueville, who was the French consul. in Janina, at the time of the Hellenic uprising.

"In his history of the regeneration of Greece written and published in 1824, that is to say in the midst of the Greek insurrection, then that we were trying to draw the Western powers to the aid of Greece, ready to succumb, he does not hesitate to say that, from In 1814, the Russian government and Freemasons took part in Greek affiliations, he said, "that the congress gathered at Troppau, acting on behalf of the Sainte-Alliance, established in the interest of Peoples, concerned with improving the housing systems of the homeland" of Thémiscloche; that the society of the Hetairists founded in Vienna in 1814... But I stop there, like that writer from antiquity,

"WARNED BY CB QÉNIH, WHO DEPENDED ON HIM TO REVEAL THE

"SACRED MYSTERIES of Eleusis (1)." Even more explicit in In another passage from his book, he had written: "Its statutes (of the Society of the Hetairists), if we are to believe the Greeks, had written under the auspices of a great monarch (Alexander-drel"); several kings of the Holy Alliance had adhered in •"providing considerable sums; his cash box was in Munich. "Her aim was to come and spread among the Christians" 4C of the East the benefits of the biblical society, condemned by the "TIIÉOLÜGIS.ME of ignorance, and admitted by the puilanturo-PHEs, who see in the propagation of the Gospel the most A powerful way to unite all the children of redemption "under the august sign of the cross {2j. }"

(1) The secret Societies of Iheenropetn RecoluUoa, London, 1876, t. He, p. 47el8uiv.

(2) T II, pp. 309-310. History of the Regeneration of Greece including the summary events from 1820 to 1821, by FGTS PoucqaeviUe, 1824, 4 flight. in-8*, Published, Fkmin Didot, 1. 1, p. 424,

60fi THE SECRET SOCIETIES AND EVENTS OF THE EAST

The attentive reader will be struck by the role that the spread of the Bible played in that organization. J. de Maistre had already... engraved in 1811, the biblical mantle, from which the revolutions were drawn tionaries in Russia, Union of the Illuminati and Calvinists Protestants (1). (Book II, chapter XV, .C2j. We have shown it to the work after 1815, in the underground work of the sects alongside of Alexander II (see volume II, document annexé K, § I), and finally one has not forgotten the very pointed letters from Mr. de Metlernicli to this subject in 1817 (book III, chapter IV, § 4). ha. propagation of the Bi- At that moment, ble removed the mask used by the sects more skilled.

Mr. Thomas Frost, after recounting the various episodes of the Hellenic uprising, signals the subsequent role of certain per English songs that were mixed in there:

In concluding this account, it may be interesting, from the point of view of Given the current state of the Eastern Question, it is worth recalling that Jeremy Bentham Sir Francis Burdett, Lord Erskine, Lord Ebrington, Sir John Camillo- kouse, which later became lor<l Broughton. Joseph Hume, sir Philhellenic society of London. Among the Philhellenes, less generally Dr. Taylor and Major Beniowski were known to be among them.

Dr. John Taylor, a few years before the Charisma movement, had inherited a fortune of thirty thousand pounds and a business with considerable commercial success. In a short time he had squandered his fortune and ruined his business. He was excessively vain and had a habit to imitate Lord Byron. He spent the last remnants of his fortune in the acquisition of a small armed vessel, with which he went to find the Greeks. He later went to France and became involved in the conspiracy to which led to the two Beaumonts being put on trial.

Beniowski was a Pole who came to London, where he lived some time ago. several years in Bow Street, teaching a memory system artificial and inventing logotypes, which, according to him, should be adopted one day as a way to simplify and reduce costs printing.

In 1839, he allied himself with the leaders of the Charist faction who hoped to achieve his goals through an insurrection; he was probably introduced there by Dr. Taylor. In a private letter from a convention member Chariiste rie 1839, he is referred to in these terms: "I saw Beniowski and I have heard of him; I think he would be a good fit"

(1) Four unpublished ekapüres on Russia, appendix, in-8*. Part 185.

L^OMLàDINA BT LES SOCIÉTÉS SBGRÂTBS 607

"to exert influence and acquire authority over men" "who are not very capable of thinking for themselves. It's a
"a handsome, tall man with an aristocratic air, speaking with a good "Dance and ease, endowed with much audacity. He came to us in the "last days of the convention to ask us to contribute"
"through our funds to help the movement of a society, a society composed "mainly foreigners, of whom he was one, but for which "We had no sympathy."

This association appears to have been the London section of the committee democratic for the regeneration of Poland, some of whose leaders Chartists were members, or the Polish section of the association Fraternal Democrats, a society largely composed of political refugees, and who held their meetings in White Hart Drury Lane (1).

S 2. – THE OMLÂBINA AND SECRET SOCIETIES AMONG THE South Slavs

In the account of Mazzini's relationship with Victor Emmanuel (Book 111, Chapter VII, § 5) we have seen the close relations of the party Italian action with what they call the national party of the Serbia, Montenegro, and Romania. As early as 1863, there was in these countries a secret revolutionary organization, linked with the Polish, Hungarian, and Italian action centers. Serbia This was to be Mazzini's main base of operations.

Mr. Thomas Frost informs us that this secret society has Her name is Voinladina and she is the heir of the united Slavonians, who already under Alexander I*' proposed to raise all the Slavic populations (see volume II, attached document JT, § 2). What? that the Russian government favored it out of ambition, however

(I) c Georges Julian Harney, editor of the North Star, adds Mr. Prosi, was leader of the first of these societies and secretary of the English section of the association of the fraternal Uemocrats. Ernest Jones and Samuel Kyd<l were members of cotieossocialun, I believe, for the first, on the authority of the origin and for the sei-ond. on the authority of 1.63, the fraternal Democrats were divided into six sections: the English, the French, the Germans, the Scandinavians, the Poles and Hungarians. Their motto: "All men, brothers" was written on Membership cards in twelve languages, in French, English, German, etc. Dutch, Danish, Swedish, Italian, Spanish, Romague, Russian in Polish and Hungarian. Colonel Oborski was the air force commander of the polo section. nnise in t847-t848. »

608 SECRET SOCIETIES AND EVENTS IN THE EAST

Y0mladina nonetheless has its own unique, revolving goal, and son vrriluhio objeclifcst, après la deslriicliun de l'empire turc et to rem|)ire another, reestablishment of a confederation or of rep U b I i (j U es s I u ves (1).

(Jette orgaiiisaliou s'est manifestée en 1<S7G par rinsurreclion against the 'rurgy, which has opened in the 'Iterzô^»^ovine, and by the innovation-mciit national which propelled Serbia to the forefront. According to the report on the Bulgarian Revolution in 1870, by Mr. Bariug, the Bucliarest committee, which had organized it, intended to extend the movement to Austria (2).

Among the emissaries traveling through Bulgaria, we find Simon Deutschb, this Jew whose trace can be seen in all the revolutionary activities of the time, Deutsch, both the friend of Gambetta, the agent of international relations and of Young Turkey (book. II, cliap. XI, ^5 2, noie).

The Austrian government was concerned about the actions of

Mr. Miletich, member of the Hungarian Diet and head of the association* tioii in the lands of the Crown of St. Stephen. They were found among
Mr. Krosi said he had a long correspondence with Mr. Rislicli, Prime Minister of Serbia and head of the national party in this country, correspondence which established the preponderant role played in the insurrection by Omladina. (Book II, Chapter XV, §4.)

Other experts contributed to the solution, which was provisional at the less, events in the East, and the armies of Russia have activated the work that his secret societies had prepared.

The princes of Serbia, Montenegro, and Romania played vis-à-vis YOmladina the same role as Victor-Emmanue^ with regard to the Italian revolution. They placed themselves at the head of the movement to avoid being overwhelmed. But secret societies
They still threaten them, and Omladina still has, as in 1803, links with Italian secret societies.

Here, for example, is the telegram sent from Celtigne on the 10th February 1882 'at ISew-Wicncr-Taghlalt:

The unrest against the prince is taking on an increasingly... threatening; there is open talk of driving him out. Viemercick, back

(1) The secret Societies of the European evolution, t. II, p. 317 et seq.

(?) Cited by M. Froat, t, II.

LA. Young Türkiye 609

from Naples, enthusiastically and successfully oversees the election of Mé notti Garihaldi, as perpetual president of the federation of the Bal-Western kans! (1).

Such actions would be utterly unintelligible, if one only remembered that in 1863 Garihaldi, driven by both Victor-Emmanuel, through Mazzini and Palmerston, was preparing a landing quickly in the vicinity of Montenegro, to start a war universal revolutionary.

At precisely the same time, newspapers reported a conspiracy organized in Galicia by the Russian Pan-Slavist party to destroy Austrian domination (2).

Mr. Thomas Frost, who wrote his History of Societies in 1876 secret^ concludes his chapter on Omladina by saying that the so-
The final solution to the Eastern Question was even more so in Berlin.
than in St. Petersburg, and that the possible annexation of Herzegovina at that time Govine and Bosnia to Austria would be a first step for the periodic schemes would be fomented in these provinces until the day when the German states and Hungary, tired of spending on the repressions sea, would cause the disintegration of the monarchy. God av&rtat omen!

^ Sé – Young Turkey

Freemasonry also sought to penetrate the Muslim populations and to form a secret organization there which she calls Young Turkey.

This is how the late Mr. David Urquhart described his composition and his aims in a letter published in the newspaper Rome, on the 7th July 1876:

Turkey had the misfortune of producing a Catiline within its borders. Born into the upper echelons of society, enjoying immense wealth, consumed by an unbridled vanity, knowing neither faith nor law and immersed in all the

(t) Reproduced in L'Union of February 13, 1882.

(2) V. dispatches from Vienna in Le Temps, of February 11, 1882, reproduced in the Union of the 13th.

IXL

39

610 The Socrétis SecnèTEâ and the events of the East

vices of Europe, this man, himself an instrument of a revolutionary Vainque, s'esl pourlail created a party known as the island of Jrtme Tur^ quie. ('el hoiune, inoil aujounl'hui, appi'lail Mouslaplia Fazvl-l'aclia, and he aimed both at the succession in Egypt and at the graml-viziial to Conslanlinopl.

The ideas put forward by "Young Türkiye" were emancipation the union of Muslims, Christians, and the Ottoman Empire – emancipation pation which was to be fulfilled)tar raholilion dii Koran and of the authority religious [and civil] of the sultan, and by the separation of Turkey from non-Muslim populations. All of this will be exposed in extracts from the Prof/ramme do l'association ci-inclu, as well as in a letter from me at the time of its publication.

t>li> following an intercepted and published correspondence between Mus-Tapha Fazyl-Pacha cl Russian ramhassadeur, in which the latter pledged to obtain for him the fiosh^ of the Grand Vizier. But it matters to return to this topic, because it demonstrates the necessity for the the new Sultan to guard against everything coming from Europe, and to to make it clear how far the embassy's interference can go Russia

There is also another reason: It is that KhalilPacha, today mi.
nislrc des affiaires étrangères, s'esl trouvé mêlées à tout cela.

Shortly after this publication I received the city of one of the same
I sent him back from the association, ashamed and full of remorse, after to clearly commit to returning to his associates the service that I had rendered him to himself. Gel Homme had filled a ministerial post at the Sublime-Door.

This circumstance reminds me of another. In 18ii, I was passing through Paris to travel to the Orient, and a delegation composed of the princes French and Polish revolutionary leaders presented themselves, and asked me during my cooperation for the re-emancipation of Turkey (it's always through emancipation, which begins the game of "out of law from there, that I in'y put."). I asked them what they wanted me to say on their behalf to the Turks. The explanation that followed revolved around the words, "liberty, equality" "Lity, fraternity," and led me to speak to them as a Turk would if one managed to make him understand those words.

YOUNG TURKEY PROGRAMME (I)

Establishment of the Young Turk Chancery founded in Constantinople Tantinople, Paris and London in 1867.

Art. >- The JuuQe-'rurqiiic party is founded with the aim of: i of

(1) This program was first shown in 4t6 pulilid on the Tablets (TV Spectator, etc.) Tablets, he said. Urqutiart, are uuo correspoiidaneo apparlenaut to Mr. Gaiesco, a Wallachian; he was hired by Fazyl-Pasha to be featured in the newspapers in his favor) and against the Sultan and the Khedive.

Young Türkiye 611

to implement the reform program (1) of Prince Mustapha Fazyl-paeha, contained in his letter to the Sultan, and consequently to effect the reversal the regime and the men who oppress and exhaust the Ottoman empire man; '2° to destroy Russian influence in the East through the emancipation of Christian populations in Türkiye.

Article 2. - Young Türkiye has its leader, its steering committee, its civilian and military agents at its main headquarters.

Article 3. – Its head is His Excellency Mustapha Fazyi-Pacha, president of the co director mite.

Article 4. – The members of the steering committee in Paris and London are SB Zia-Bey, Agbia-Biiendi, Count L... P..., (2;, Kemal>Bey and Simon Dculsch.

Article 5. – The members of the steering committee, responsible for the affairs of within the Ottoman Empire, are: 8 B. Zia-Bey and Aghia-Effendi.

Article 6. – The members of the steering committee, specifically responsible for International and diplomatic affairs are handled by Count L... P... and S*. D... (3). They appoint agents in all countries.

Art. 7. – The steering committee shall have its seats in Paris and Zurich.

He will promptly begin studying the drafting of a constitution and the army reorganization.

Article 10. – The principal agent of the committee in Constantinople is MJ BB (4).

If the interest of Young Türkiye required the presence of Prince M.– F.–Pasha in Constantinople, he would arrange things so as to obtain from the Sultan • his return to Constantinople, to give by his presence in the ca-hospital of the empire a very great impetus to the affairs of the Young-Türkiye.

Article 12. – In the event that Prince Mustafa were to die before that the large enterprise had succeeded, M., K., Z.(5) and the members of the co-The mite of Constantinople would continue the work according to the plan drawn up. until the day when the cause of Ottoman regeneration would have triumphed its internal and external enemies.

(1) The program. This letter from Fazyl-Pasha to the Sultan was drafted and written by Mr. Ganesco, and Fazyl-Pacha Ta signed, kid, without having read it again. We're in ti thousands of copies in French, and Zta-Bey had a Turkish translation, which was First printed in five thousand copies and distributed in Gustaotinople. This was the first which ZLa-Bey compromised himself in the eyes of the Sultan.

(2) L... P... : Count Plater, Polish, editor in Zurich.

(3) S... 0 .. : Simon Oeu'.scli, a revolutionary exiled from Aulriche, then from Constantinople.

(4) JBB: he. B. Bonnal, a French banker in Péra (Gons(aniinople).

(5) M.: Hereditary Prince Mubrad-ElTendi, now Mubrad V*

son-in-law of Musiapha-Kazyl-Pacba.

Z.: Zia-Bey.

All these notes are from M. Urquhart.

612 SECRET SOCIETIES AND EVENTS IN THE EAST

Below this document are the apostille and the signature following:

Approved :

JU ustapha-Pacha.

Paris, August 30, 1867.

There is a thirteenth article that Mr. Ganesco has not published. Here it is:

Article 13. – The undersigned, chairman of the steering committee, undertakes to to pay annually into the fund of the said committee the sum of one month's rent

A THOUSAND FRANKS.

The party of Jeune-Turrjuie is merely the external manifestation the lineage of Western Freemasonry transported to Constantinople. This will be judged by the following pages of the Chain of Union. from 1882:

Masonic life is asserting itself more and more prominently in Türkiye every day. The rite is observed there with that rigorous 'Iélilé' which the Ottomans ap- they are carried in every ceremony. As for the spirit, it is in no way inferior to this- he who reigns in the best lodges of Western countries.

In this regard, we believe it is worthwhile to reproduce, according to the Z/r/cr/, the main passages «'sdps proU'ssiuns of faith of two repr.'ienlanls éilii- nenis of Young Turkey, Mustapiia-Fazyl and Kbmäl-Bey, members of the Grand Lodge of (.oiislantlnoplç.

"I don't know," Mustapha-Fazyl said, in essence, "what the will Mlah will grant hours to my destiny. What will my situation be? Will I be barren on the last day of my life? Will I possess riches? Will I have... Shared happiness? In any case, I declare, by virtue of my my deepest convictions, which, throughout my entire past life, I have not I wanted to, and I only did good as much as was in my power. Therefore, remain true to my principles and steadfastly maintain my firm intention to do only good, to have only good as a goal.

On the day I take over the leadership of a people, I will treat each to my subjects as a "brother"; my sole concern would be to work to public happiness. May my destinies be fulfilled.

This profession of madman is, in truth, strongly marked by fatalism, nevertheless it is an expression of feelings, the realization of which would open a new era among the Ottoman populations.

Kemal-Hky has risen to higher considerations. A celté question: The ritual's focus: Why are you here? he replied simply. ment: I came to request Masonic initiation. – El dans What specific purpose do you seek in this initiation? –I intend to to spread, to the best of my ability, the doctrine of brotherhood among men they are Masonic doctrines, if they are in Reality as I imagine it. – And what idea do you have of it? –I believe they tend towards the reciprocity of good between men, to general, universal well-being; finally, I am convinced that the signs syni« boliques cl the language which the Mas^onnerio uses, nonl d'anlre but que to give Tassociation a great power of Ci)hd.sion, which per-Roello to act effectively for the good, while projecting branches throughout the world. France makes no distinction of race and beliefs; for her, there are neither great nor small; she of commands each one the same virtues, the same courage for good, the unalterable, fragile child. For my part, I attribute to him yet another three missions; that of dismantling and eliminating the prejudices that persist among my compatriots and to cement the union between the various nationalities of the Ottoman Empire.

LA. Young Turkey 613

When Prince Mounn.ao was initiated in 1873, he declared, in his profession of faith, that the motive for his determination was the desire to find the path that leads to brotherhood. He promised himself, if ever he were called to be in power, to draw inspiration in all its actions from the principles of equity, which are the foundation of societies.

It was not without difficulty that the future Sultan managed to leave the palace of Tseberagan, where he was the object of the most active surveillance, and that he He returned, at the end of his initiation, without anything having betrayed his incognito.

We know the lamentable circumstances in which Prince Mouhrad, of Having become the later sovereign of the Ottoman Empire, he was deposed after three months of a troubled reign. If he was unable to realize the projects he had for* However, the fault lay less in the brand's lack of sincerity than in the pernicious the actions of his entourage and the brevity of his reign.

Eq 1877, Midhat-Paclia, who is one of the principal persons The Young Turk delegation, located in Paris, received deputies how the Havas agency's correspondence reported on it as of *27 August:

A delegation from the Positivist Society presented, yesterday, in Midhqt-Pasha, an address expressing his sympathy—for Turkey and for Midhat-Pacha.

In his response, Midhat Pasha refuted the existing prejudices in Europe against the spirit of the Muslim religion, which, he asserts, is as compatible with modern civilization as Christianity. protests against the statesmen of Europe, whose sentiments relate gieux have obscured reason and which, in relation to everything that Russia For the past two years, they have only found words of indignation. against Turkey. What good is religion if it doesn't lead to justice ?

Responding to the speech of the president of the Hungarian parliament Midhat Pasha, residing in Paris, called his compatriots "tes llongrois" of the Ottomans. The two nations love each other today.

A few years later, Midhat Pasha was convinced that he had

614 SECRET SOCIETIES AND THE EVENTS OF THE Orient

assassinated Sultan Abclul-Azis. This is how Young Turko intends to regenerate the Ottoman Empire.

A similar movement occurred in Egypt. The Europeans They introduced Masonic lodges of all rites there; but the The English removed the major propagators and sought to... affiliated a number of the country's dignitaries. They organized even a number of Arab lodges. Arahi~Pacha tidXiUM The number of affiliates, and this fact explains the strange role he played, the double game of the English ministry, the betrayal by which it ended the national movement and the farce of the trial that crowned it nee.

From the very beginning of the war, the correspondent for the newspaper Xunion pointed out the Arab lodges^ as an instrument in the hands of English (1). But it is very curious to note an assessment that the correspondent for the newspaper Le Temps sent him as early as the month from April 1882;

When the news that Mr. de Blignières' resignation was accepted* The news became known in Cairo, and Arabi-Bey went to see our consul. general to ask him to congratulate the French ministry on this decision Zion.

The colonel, who had been promoted to the rank of Pasha the previous day, spoke at length nitaires. He also included—I am told—the most bizarre insights into the constitution of the terrestrial and celestial universe. He listed in detail the seven heavens, which rise above the earth and lead to infinity. He then glorified the "great Architect" of this immeasurable a vast universe, and he finished the painting with a portrait of man "King of creation." He gave the assurance to one of our compatriots that he would never experience the intoxication of power. "The peacock of pride, he said, will never hover over my head 1" (Verbatim.)

The kind of illuminism that Arabi-Bey seems to be experiencing every day The increasing possession of certain substances would offer an interesting subject for psychological. It is the product of the purest doctrines of the Quran grafted on the poorly learned lessons of Christian Freemasonry The education The development of this unbalanced brain occurred through reading the book Muslim; it developed through attendance at Muslim lodges Italian conics of Egypt; and it is being completed by the study of "the life of Napoleon I*''.

(I) V, in particular the Union of 18 June and 15 September 1882.

THE EUROPEAN LODGES IN THE LEVANT COUNTRIES 615

§ 4. – European lodges in the countries of the Levant

The Europeans, who will settle in the cities of the East and which today form very large urban areas, have created a large number of lodges. These lodges are generally attached to the Grand Orients of the mother country. Through this they serve to establish particular political influences. We we have just described the use that the English had made of it in Egypt. In Tunisia, the Italians had also organized everything a network of lodges, which received the impetus from Fiorencé and Palermo.

This is one aspect of Masonic action, of which statesmen should be concerned.

We were simply drawing attention to another aspect of this action. Some people often compare with bitterness the moral laxity of European Christians in virtues triarchal structures of the old Turkish lineage. Isn't that the explanation? not – also taking into account the very mixed origin of these colonies – in the influence that Freemasonry exerts based on their still poorly coordinated elements? Real hotspots immorality and impiety are hidden in some of these lodges and equal them to the worst dens of European sects.

Europeans. What good can possibly come from such a mixture of populations based on rationalist and humanitarian data, when She's not exactly anti-Christian, is she? Certainly not. not to generalize too much, and among these numerous lodges several few winds are actually quite harmless, but that's no less It is a serious matter to see Western civilization taking root. in this country with Informe maçonnicu. The benefits of education Christian union, which at least there do not encounter governments persecutory elements will, hopefully, be neutralized in the new generation, these disastrous seeds.

CHAPTER THIRTY-SEVENTH

THE ANARCHISTS

§ 1. – Succession of the International

"When Dante," said M. de Laveleye, "descends the circles of hell, having arrived at the deepest point of the "city without hope", he "There he finds himself face to face with the terrifying ruler of the angels" "revolted."

Uimperator of the doloroso regno.

"Thus, when one penetrates to the lowest layers of the so-"Revolutionary socialism, one encounters Bakunin there. One does not "cannot go further, for he is the apostle of unified destruction-"verselle, of absolute anarchism, or, as he himself named-
"His doctrine, of amorphism. It is he who, borrowing
"The name and organization of the International, spread the "Anarchic socialism in all Latin countries. These are its "Ideas that dominated the Paris Commune. These are the "which now form the basis of the programs adopted
"most socialist associations in Italy, Switzerland, in "Belgium, Spain and even France (1)."

We have already mentioned (Book II, Chapter XIV, 58) the split which, after

(1) LeSocialime contemporain, Oeaève, Marqabart, ia-8, 1881.

the failure of the Paris Commune, which had occurred between the parties without Karl Marx, the collectivists^ and those of Bakounine, the anarchists.

"The International Workingmen's Association appears, under its primitive form, no longer functional. Its primitive form is loudly proclaimed. Finally, in November 1852, a group of MPs submitted a proposal for abolishing the law of March 11, 1872 on the International, by based on the fact that the formidable association had ceased to exist (1).

Regardless of personal rivalries and hatreds that Following this failure, Karl Marx's attempt to create a state universal, whose supreme powers would reside in the annual meetings and the general council of the International, was premature. The degree of advancement of the evolution and ideas Socialism is not the norm in different countries. France—Freemasonry has not yet sufficiently elevated national sentiment and The idea of the homeland among workers. On the other hand, the plenty Karl Marx's plan to abolish the apparatus of secret societies, gradations, oaths, passwords to act exclusively through advertising, was also ahead of the movement of the times. Bakounine, on the contrary, makes extensive use of it, as we will see this in the Aryan Democratic Alliance organization. universal.

the International, even in the branches that remained loyal to The direction of Karl Marx, therefore, had to transform itself and enter into a new phase.

Proscription measures against the socialist democrats, which is entirely within the order of ideas of Karl Marx, measures introduced in Germany by the law of October 21, 1878, forced the socialists to confine themselves to propaganda in the Crete, in that which takes place at home and in the workshop. The triumphs electoral which he had in the Reichstag elections in 1881 proved that its strength had not been affected in any way (1).

(1) Here are the names of the deputies who signed this proposal: Messrs. Lafont, Clemenceau, Clovis Hugues, Uonnet-Duverdier, Ernest Lefèvre, Georges Périn, Grand, Henry, Muret, Ü. Barodu), Girodd, Raspail, Roseily>Mollet, Hoques de Filbol, Tony Uovillon, Camille Pelletan, Vernlies, Marius Poulet, Gaston Laporte, Leydet, Courmeaux, MenarJ* Doriaü, Uuiailly, Boauquier, Gaillard, do Lanessan, Talandier, Laisani, Datas, Belloi, Louis Blanc, üanlagrel, Delaltro, Jules Roche, Gatineau, Oesmons, A. Ouportal, D'^ Turiguy, Oaumas, Emile Brousse, Marias Chavanne, Ferrary, Bouchet, Gambon, O' Villeueave, Gervilie-Réacbe and Brelay.

In France, Italy, and Belgium, seizures are still common at the socialists of the cards of the International^ of the stats tuts of this society It is by evoking the memory of the International propaganda they use. The collectivists have France, an organization that manifests itself through a press, including the The organs are Equality, the Proletarian, the Citizen, and the Battle. separated only by certain nuances, by annual congresses, which were held in Marseille (1879), Le Havre (1880), and Reims (1881), in Saint-Étienne and in Roanne (1882).

But the scene is nonetheless undeniably occupied at the forefront today by the anarchists.

We have seen what their doctrines are. Let us simply recall that they disdain electoral political action and want to organize to be a socialist party independent of bourgeois political parties, and which, once it is sufficiently strong, will act through violence and exclusively for his own account.

Mr. Winterer, in his scholarly research, established that the Anarchist propaganda has been particularly successful in spreading in Switzerland, Italy, Spain, and France. Mr. de Lave-Leye, in his work on contemporary Socialism^ confirms these indications. Bakunin died in Bern in 1878; but the association he founded continued nonetheless.

His doctrines are summarized in the following manifesto, which has been written by Bordât, from Lyon, and Élysée Reclus at the congress of Geneva in 1881:

The revolutionary anarchists gathered in Geneva found themselves agreed on the following program:

Our enemy is our master.

Our enemy is the landlord, it's the state, it's the boss, that he It is called monarchy or democracy.

Our enemy is all authority, whether it calls itself the devil or good God.

We want to take over the factory.

We want to reclaim common property, whatever the government to be overthrown.

(1) V. Trot» years of the history of SoeiaXism, by Tabbé Winleror, deputy to the Raiebstag, Paria, Palmé, 11-12, 1882, pp. C to 20. We will do in this chapter frequent borrowings from this volume, which complements the masterful work on Socialism the identity of our brothers from Alsace-Lorraine.

m

THE ANARCHISTS

The debates of the trial of the Lyon anarchists in the month of January 1883 established that the Jura federation (\o l'International, which in 1873 had separated from the central council and from Karl Marx, in 1878, after the theft of the laws on freedom from the press and public meetings, the initiative of the constitution in France of the anarchist party. This is the result of a report read by Prince Krapolkine, under the name of Levanof, at the Jura federation. The various workers' congresses that have been held in recent years have served as a means of propagation Grande; and everywhere she made use of the old Independence cadres international, which, after the repression of the Commune and the state of the headquarters had been dispersed.

In 1881, a congress of revolutionaries took place in London. cosmopolitans, where Prince Krapolkine was delegated by the groups Lyon anarchists and where the constitution of a new international workers' association with a character a more distinctly revolutionary one than the first.

If the International, with its former public organization and centralized, has not been reconstituted, as argued by accused in Lyon, it is nonetheless true that this conference of the main revolutionary leaders from around the world, gave the signal of a resurgence of the socialist movement in the various country, no longer just through theoretical propaganda, but through practical action.

The new association claims not to be a secret society and act solely either through public propaganda or through the violence. The following facts and documents will allow us to judge to determine what is true in this claim.

S 2. – International Finances

The German newspapers Reichshote of Berlin, and Vater-land, of Vienna, published in March 1880 the statutes of the association The anarchists' cation, found at the home of a nihilist. Here is the Content:

International Brothers Alliance Organization.

Three grades:

1. International Brothers.
2. National brothers.
3. Brothers of the semi-public organization of international democracy national.

International Brothers' Regulations

§ 1. – The brothers know no other homeland than the Revolution general tion, no other foreign! no other enemy than reaction.

§ 2. – The brothers reject any conciliation or compromise. They view any movement as reactionary, from the moment that its direct or indirect aim is not the triumph of revolutionary principles revolutionaries.

"

§ 3. – Brothers may never attack or resort to one another to the courts. They know no other court than the jury of honor. jury, chosen equally by both parties. This jury decides raining.

§ 4. – Each brother must be sacred to the other. Each brother has the the right to rely on the akle and the assistance of the brothers, who are bound to to do everything for him up to the limit of what is possible.

§ 5. – Only those who accept they are implementing the revolutionary program in all its theoretical consequences questions and practices and who have the intelligence, energy, honor and the desired firmness.

I 6. – The service of the Revolution must be regarded by every brother as the first and most sacred of duties and interests.

§ 7. – The brother always has the right to refuse the services required by the local committee or committees. But if these refusals seem to be cons Therefore, he can be suspended from his rights as a brother.

•; 3. – No proud person could manage a public function without the au-Special authorization from the local committee. He cannot participate in any hostile demonstration against our cause. Every time there is a meeting of more than two of our brothers, they are required to take care of the cases

P 9. – All international brothers must know each other, and they do not must have no political secrets between them. They will not be able to appear to be held by no other company, without special authorization from the local committee. and at the same time they are required to disclose to the central committee all the secrets of the other company, which may be of direct or indirect interest recently the international society.

The second section is made up of designated national brothers.

62?

THE ANARCHISTS

to prepare for the K-evolution in each country in a way iodc'p(Uidanlc. They must not suspect the existence of\ine international organization. — The Iroisine section comprises ordinary members, who join social associations local lists appear in the congés and constitute the large year of the insurrection (1).

The existence of this higher order of international brothers, having below him a second order, national brothers, is modeled on the order of the Regents of Weishaupl and on the High-Roman sale. He explains the sect's direction on all the points around the globe and the complicity it encounters in these areas higher social groups (§ 5).

Below these two orders are the national federations national, which SC present as party or frier.

“The French National Federation was subdivided into six regions:

The central region, capital: Paris.

—• from the East, — Saint-Etienne.

— from the North, — Roubaix.

— from Algeria, — Algiers.

— from the West, — Le Havre.

— Marseillaise, — Marseille.

"In the capitals of these six regions, there is a committee regional or federal centralizing socialist action in the region.

"The federal committees are composed of as many delegates as there are delegates." that there are trade union chambers in the region. Thus the union The federation of the center has its headquarters in Paris; it has approximately 20 members, delegates each by trade union chamber.

"The delegates to the regional committees are usually chosen in the region's capital city. As far as possible, these delegations These are single people who do not have family concerns and therefore able to devote all their time to propaganda which they are responsible for. The resources of the regional committees pro come from subscriptions from their members, but especially from shipments from the trade associations, which must pay to the federation* tion half of their cash reserves.

(1) Co dneumont was published in VÜniver$ on March 25, 1880. M. de Laveleye, Contemporary Socialism, p. 311, the lepioduit. Its aubbooticilé has never been disputed.

THE INTERNATIONAL BROTHERS 623

"Above the regional federations crowning the glued edifice*" tiviste, is the national committee of the workers' party.

The committee was only formed last November. It was created at National congress of Reims, on the proposal of citizens Brousse, Gilliet, Labusquière, Malon.

"The patioaal committee consists of five delegates from each region, usually residing in Paris; it thus has 30 members bres, appointed for one year.

"Its current composition is as follows:

"Messrs. Brousse, Chabeit, Bazin, Cibol, Desvilliers,

– Deynaud, – J.-B. Clément, – Aveline, – Bouty, – Prudent, – Deville, – Gardat, – Guesde, ~ Joffrin, – La Busquière. – Le Prieur, – Paillot, – Fourrière, – Maés, – Andrégely, – Citizen Floret, – Harry, – Josselin, •– Adhémar Leclerc, – B. Malon, – Audejean, – Valdy, – Teulon,

– Germany, – citizen Rouzade. The delegates of the federation The citizens of Paris are Bouty, Jodrin, and Desvilliers. Allemane, – Citizen Floret. – The trade union chambers, The regional committees and the national committee do not have presidents. twos. At each meeting, one of the members present is responsible for

This is something to add to this organization, because the proposal has just come from to be leaked: that is, in case the national committee were to be Decreed by the government, the regions must each nominate immediately a member to reconstitute it.

"The functioning of these different mechanisms is not certain" not with perfect regularity, but the force that has gradually... The current state of affairs is already such that manufacturers sometimes feel It is important for people to resist, and for the government, if it dared to intervene To choose to enter directly into a struggle would have a high chance of being carried away (1).

Whatever the actual importance of this national committee, which The constitution is very recent, the French National Federation appears to have had its headquarters in Lyon and at bdU3 lea (leruiera jours do feviier 1883, lo Couteau, journal suisse, published la oole suivanlo, dostiuéo peut-éiru à douner lo cliauge sur le jour et le lieu de la meeting ;

(1) The Catholic Association of November 15, 188?.

c The delegates from the provincial anarchist committees are summoned to an important- this general meeting, which will take place in Paris on March 9 at the headquarters of the (tral: B: 4. D: L. 2. - All our friends will make it their duty to sempolena; to not I couldn't miss this important event.

624

THE ANARCHISTS

Geneva. It's always the point where the conspiracy brings us back. gambellisle of 1873 (v. liv, III, cliap. XXI, .Ç 1) and the crimes which took place in August, September, and October 1882. In 1870, this organisalien exisluil already, and it is very important to note that the 4 In the fall of that year, the Republic (which was) proclaimed by the riot from the city of Lyon at noon, with the red flag, then that it was only 4 o'clock in Paris. September 28 Bakunin was in that city at the dawn of a new insurrection. tion directed against Brother Andrieux and the other Jacobins, who they had installed themselves in power in the first moment.

The strength of national federations lies in the fact that they rely on organic groups, on pro groups^ professional bodies, on trade associations: they thus lead under their leadership the socialist reopening, which arose spontaneously among manufacturing populations for religious reasons, secrets.

Bakunin and his sect capitalized on the experience gained by VInternationale and which in 1872 led to the substitution of the group corporate contribution to the organization into sections (see book II, chapter 1). XIV, § 8) (1). The workers regimented in these innom- local associations are unaware of the existence of the two superior orders; they nonetheless obey them blindly. the accused from Montceau - the • Mines, almost all of very young men declared that they had obeyed the orders given by their donor were born men with long beards, whom they refused to name. The debates of the trial of the anarchists of Lj'on have left it suspected that among these were the chiefs cults that had sparked this initial explosion. In e0et, it's Dynamite depots were established in Lyon and Vienna.

The organization of these local groups is not the same everywhere, we believe; where it is most advanced, the partners are not received only after an initiation similar to that of Freemasonry Nonsense.

(1) Although the trade union chamber is the absence of reorganization of the new so- revolutionary societies, including the UNARCIists or the new International Dalón, have not given up on having distinct groups of corporations. Thus the debates of the pro The people of Lyon reported the presence in Vione of a group calling themselves the indig In Villefranche, there was a group called Le Glaive. In Lyon, some women called themselves Marie Ferré group, etc.

the international brothers 625

In Montceau-les-Mines there were two groups called Tua la Thought^ the other the Santa-Maria^ constituted in the form of trade unions. A similar group existed in Tusine de Gueugnon. Both groups were in contact with the groups from Le Creuzot, and branched out into the Federation. From a besides the booklets seized from the defendants, the purpose of these associations was simply to give the workers the means to do so to uphold their rights in court, and to provide assistance to sick. In reality, no help was ever given. and these companies were merely groups formed for the purpose of Social war. The accused themselves recounted the ceremony. monastic ceremony that surrounded their reception. They blindfolded themselves of the judiciary, which must shoot at a mannequin representing a traitor three; they walk him, at night, in the woods; finally, they make him swear allegiance on a revolver, and signs are communicated to him and physical contact used for recognition. Another pre- came to declare that the mannequin on which the insider was to shoot represented a traitor. Mr. Campionnet, ironmaster at trade unions. One of their clauses stipulated that members rents had to renounce all religious practice.

The newspaper Le Paris—a mouthpiece of Gambetta, which took its information to the police headquarters – published on October 25 1882, the following indications on how the groups forming the various federations are attached to the centers of the higher order*.

In all the cities and industrial villages of France, and even in small towns surrounding large farms working-class revolutionary groups, composed of a small number Secure affiliates have been organized for several months.

They are all composed, for the most part, of very young people.
People aged eighteen to twenty-five. They accept the slogan that... is transmitted, as far as possible, verbally by delegates

One of the letters seized in the recent searches recommends to members of local groups to conceal the revolutionary organization the company to which they work under the legal label of a syndicate chamber wedge.

All groups in the same region are linked to each other by a federation which bears the name of the department where they are located, unless that their small number in the same department did not lead to the ehfii

40

m

626

THE ANARCHISTS

to group them differently. 11 there is the Saône-et-Loire federation, that from the South, from the Southeast, from the Loire, etc.

Each of these federations has its own stamps and seals, bearing its name, the name of the place where its leaders sit, and sometimes also some symbol.
Those from Saône-et-Loire have a lion as their emblem.

The federation serves as an intermediary between the operational groups, dis-sown in the municipalities, and the steering committee of which we will
The operation will be explained further below.

intimate, supreme leader of the league, and which meets at least once per month in Geneva. We only know five names of delegates. They are not all French. At least the committee deliberates with the Prince Krapotkin's competition, several letters of which do not allow not to deny intervention in all of this. It also includes former pardoned, including one illustrious figure who promises to "astonish Russia" by the explosion which will take place here.

All the seized dynamite cartridges were of Swiss manufacture. and come from Saint-Sauveur. This is a most important fact. He proves that the starting point of revolutionary action is at the foreigner.

Other indications from different sources have also gnalé at the same time the federation of the Bernese Jura^ as serving as a base of operations for the anarchists' attempts in France (1). The name of Pindy and that of Élisée Reclus, the an-Former members of the Commune, have a key often pronounced as those of the movement's leaders. The latter himself threw a A bold challenge to French justice (2), and the Attorney General Fabreguettes declared before the Court of Lyon that his stay abroad alone had prevented him from understanding it in the... suites.

None of the wretches who committed the crimes of Montceau-les-Mines, does not appear to be part of the higher committees, of the order of national brothers. Thus, for example, Dumay, who, in 1873, had played a role in the Republican plot, and whose lectures excited the workers of Monlceau, did not put his hand to the execution.

Our personal studies allow us to confirm the indicators cations given by Paris. In a very large number of factories,

(1) La Fanfutia, cited by L'Union on November 30, 1882.

(2) See letter in the Union of December 27, 1882.

THE INTEKN\TIONÂEX BROTHERS 627

From Miao, from factories, the workers are at each payday obliged to pay a contribution of 0.50, 0.75, or 1 franc per semiino, depending on the size of their salary, for the fund of the company. They have absolutely no idea what this company is, but if they did not comply with this requirement (such as voting for the candidates designated by the sect to appear at funerals civilians), they are ruthlessly driven out of the workshops, either by the master craftsmen, who in reality have complete control of the silent persecution of their comrades. These minimal contributions, regularly perceived over large masses^ constitute considerable funds and give the anarchist party resources that VInternationale never had,

The existence of the two higher orders is completely addressed to members of local groups, trade unions, by the following process: the regional and national committees are the product of multi-stage elections which are carried out by means of successive eliminations. Those who stole in the first degree did not. They never know who the second-degree elected members were. by their delegates, and so on.

This organization extends across Europe and as far as the United States. United. If in the latter country, as well as in England, the anarchists yours do not engage in physical acts of violence against the people and property, it's so as not to compromise asylum safe and the base of operations they find there.

After a period devoted to organizing the groups, then to propaganda through the press and meetings, the committee did. The rector deemed it appropriate to make a strong impact on working-class opinion. through a series of enforcement actions. It was then that we saw the following mining in the Saône-et-Loire coal basin, in August 1882 this unrest which has since continued to grow.

Following the events in Montceau-les-Mines in October, a number of dynamite explosions, onar- meetings slurs, placards, and threatening letters have occurred at Paris, Lyon, Arles, Marseille and the surrounding areas; then, the central committee of the Federation, judging that one had "as.'sez did for propaganda, gave the order to arrest these mas demonstrations, and they ceased immediately. It's a word c^'ordre who commands them as he stops them, and there is absolutely. There is nothing spontaneous about these so-called outbursts of anger from the people. against the clerics and the capitalists.

628

THE ANARCHISTS

In March 1883, at the time when the radical party was organizing Tagita-revisionist tion and where a crisis is affecting the building industry leaves a large number of workers without work, a new word. Orders are given; and immediately in the vicinity of Le Creusot the. The breaking of the cross, the dynamite explosions began again. The. The government of the Republic is absolutely powerless to the Federation of the center, declared it the day after the verdict Riom with great brutality.

At the same time, an accidental dynamite explosion occurred between the hands of two accused in the Lyon conspiracy, which took place in Belgium, drew attention to the comings and goings of anarchists schists, and on the existence of several organized sections in this country. One of the causes of their power, which compensates for their small number, resides in this ease of operating in the world entire and to shift their base of action from one day to the next, thanks to rapid communication routes and scattered high-altitude areas in small groups in all parts of the world.

There has long been a center in London where the mazzi-Nihilists and anarchists meet and find every ease to conspire. The Philadelphes lodge, of the rite from Memphis, receives them and provides them with all the resources that the Freemasonry, in its highest degrees, can provide the cons pirates (see Book III, Chapter XV). The anarchists publish there a newspaper, Frcilicit, which published its apologies for the assassination the Tsar had, a rare thing in England, condemned by a jury; but the group nonetheless continued to exist in peace. It was there that Hartmann was solemnly received after that France had refused his extradition to Russia.

In the United States, there is a similar facility. Hartmann was received in triumph in New York in August 1881, where he went dait, as he himself said, aRn to organize a double propaganda: one for humanitarian purposes, to help the few The Russian people sought to conquer their freedom, the other to support the workers with the aim of liberating Russian workers by means of strikes (1). After the meeting. "The inauguration of Alexander II, several meetings took p are held in New York and Chicago to condone crime and

(1) See the Ntv-York Weekly Herald da August 3, 188V.

The Black Hand in Spain 629

to protest against the execution of a woman who had taken part in it, Jessa Helfmann (1).

"The revolutionary socialists of America," said Mr. Win-terer, sent a delegate to the congress who sat secretly at London, from July 13 to 20, 1881, for the purpose of studying and to gather the chemical and physical resources that may be useful to the revolutionary work.

Finally, an assembly that cynically took the name of Council publicly on the means of blowing up cities and ships tes (2). On December 29, 1882, Most, the German socialist, the editor

The leader of Freedom presided over a meeting in Chicago in which The murder of all property owners and capitalists was cheered.
by a band of fanatics (3).

At the end of February 1883, American newspapers reported yet another meeting held in Philadelphia, under the direction d'Hartmann and de Mo.-t, with the support of established anarchists in that city. They reportedly conspired there for a corn action.
common ground between German socialists and Russian nihilists.

The Democratic Alliance took advantage of the situation agitated Ireland to establish a secret society which has systematically subjected to assassination. The Rebel of Geneva, organ of the anarchist party, published on this last May company details that indicate the relationships existing between the two revolutionary centers (4) (see book III, chapter XXXII, §).

§ 3. – The Black Hand in Spain

The Alliance of Socialist Democracy, we said, has extended with powerful ramifications in all European countries Latin (5). It was Bakunin who, in 1873, had stirred up the movement–

(1) New York Weekly Herald, May 24, 1882.

(2) Three years of Thisloire of socialism, p. 73.

(3) V. the Nation, January 4, 1883.

(4) V. do!> extract» do ce» informaiioQS in YUaion da 24 mai 1882.

(.0) The tendencies of Italian socialism led them to the anarchists. In November and in December 1882, a group of Italian socialists was reported in Marseille, intending tulant Cireolo reooluzionario, di ifarsiglia who were in contact with the anar-French schists. V. YLnion of December 3, 1882.

C30

THE ANARCHISTS

ment of Barcelona and Carlhagcne. We saw (!iv.
n, chap. XII, §7) rarticle si remarquable de I7:.7a///d de Genève, his organ, regarding this movement following May 24, 1873.

After a few years of reflection, that is to say, of pro-Secret pagan, the attacks have started again.

On October 25, Oliva Monnasi, who declared herself internationalist, fired a pistol shot at King Alfonso XII. In 1881, When the workers' congress of the CNT was being prepared, one of the miners The Spanish wrote, in a letter read at the congress, that they could not were going to be represented there, "because we are very busy with the "The work of the Revolution."

It is in southern Spain, in the kingdom of Valencia, but especially in Andalusia, which is where the main party strength. As a result of the agrarian system of this last Province, socialism is especially widespread among agricultural workers fires. Since the 1878 decree, fires had occurred frequently. lying in this part of the country, and it had been noted once eighteen fires on the same day in fairly distant districts. The Madrid correspondent for the Journal des Débats (no. 22) August 1881) did not hesitate to attribute them to the International. at the same time signaled the incitement to strikes by the socialist agents, who were concealing their instructions from London and from Switzerland,

In February 1882, new fires led to the discovery of the Spanish anarchist organization.

It takes the name Black Hand Society. According to the The Imparcial newspaper of Madrid, it has its center of operations in Xérès, Grazaleuza, Ubrique, Arcos and other localities of the Andalusie: but the committees from which the impetus originates are established at Madrid and other major cities, and count among their members persons of people belonging to the upper classes of society. They themselves receive the top management from Geneva.

Several dynamite deposits, found at various points in the Andalusie, clearly indicate the foreign origin of this association. although local circumstances have contributed to its dilution.

It is divided into provincial federations and local sections:

The organizers of the Black Hand state in their statutes that The company aims to defend the poor and oppressed against those who exploit and tyrannize them, against their thieves and their executioners.

The Black Hand in Spain 631

"The earth," they add, "exists for the common well-being of humankind." my people, who all have an equal right to possess it; it was created by the ac*

surly and criminal; it is the workers who produce and the rich lazy people hold them in their clutches; therefore, one cannot be animated of an excessively deep hatred against all political parties, because all are equally contemptible; all property acquired through labor any inheritance from another is illegitimate, whether it comes from rent or interest; The only legitimate form of recognition is that which results from personal, direct work and useful. Consequently, the Society declares the rich exempt from the rights of people; she proclaims that to fight them as they all deserve The means are good and necessary, without excluding iron, fire and even slander.

The association affirms that it is in agreement with all those of the same characteristics established in the various countries.

The organic statutes are short and categorical. The sanction general The association's general decision is the death penalty.

The association is essentially secret. Anyone who reveals, by im- Whether due to prudence or bad faith, the acts of which he is aware are put into suspicion for an unlimited time or sentenced to death, depending on the severity of the secret speed of the revelation.

Any mission assigned to an affiliate is mandatory. The one who submits to it... trait is regarded as treacherous.

The affiliate must make it a rule to conceal their relationships in public with the association or his sympathies for it.

Every affiliate is subject to a novitiate; he must provide positive evidence tests of his sincerity, and it is only after this test that he is admitted to to present himself before the initiates of the group to which he is to belong. In this circumstance, those in the know take every precaution to to avoid being caught off guard. After hearing the recipient, we proceeds to the vote. No one is admitted except by unanimous vote.

The Statutes of the People's Court or Secret Court are reminiscent of those of nihilism. They carry at the head the following declaration:

"Whereas bourgeois governments, by outlawing The International, prevent a peaceful solution to the social question, A revolutionary organization must be established in secret. Triumph is still a long way off. The bourgeois continue to commit Their crimes must be punished; and since all the federates are Once this plan was completed, a people's tribunal was tasked with... to condemn and punish the crimes of the bourgeoisie. The members of revolutionary tribunals must belong to the International; they must They must be capable of carrying out the mission they accept. The bourgeois will be punished by all possible means, by iron, fire, poison, or any other way.

THE ANARCHISTS

The court's regular meetings take place on the first of every... months. Their purpose is to report on the reprisals carried out. by each of the members against the bourgeoisie, advantages offered by each of the implementation methods j to examine the reforms some things that would be useful to introduce into the association and to give instructions to affiliates.

Every member of a group is required to submit to that same group his ideas and views on the best methods of arson and assassination" poisoning, and generally any means of causing harm to the bourgeoisie.

Each member pays a membership fee of five cents per week for correspondence costs. For high out-of-pocket expenses, recovery- This is truly achieved through repetition; in the case of extraordinary expenses, one resorts to federation.

Punishments should only be applied at the opportune moment. The affiliate must know how to take advantage of favorable opportunities.

Whenever it is necessary to compromise and expose one's life, the affiliate must demonstrate energy and not hesitate in the choice of weapons.

Reprisals must be carried out against property wherever they cannot reach people.

No one is obliged to act in the event of material impossibility or inca-* personal peace. But anyone who has accepted a specific mission must fulfill it under penalty of death. Anyone who fails to act in a permanently declared null and void and expelled from the association; he is placed under the close supervision of the court and faces the death penalty at the first revelation. No consideration of friendship or kinship. cannot stop the execution of the traitor. No one should be respected. the price of a brother's or father's life which endangers a considerable number* demandable number of people. Every time a group from a locality can carry out the death sentence pronounced against a traitor, the aff Links from other localities are responsible for this execution. They surprise They condemned him and killed him without mercy.

Various means are indicated to the members of the people's court to ensure the secrecy of their deliberations, their resolutions and of their actions. They must change their name often; they have a number for their correspondence and a code of precautions where everything is planned with meticulous care, down to the smallest details (1).

Among the causes that must be invoked, several will have a great repercussions. The assassinations of Blanco and Benaçoaz were committed in atrocious circumstances. Thirty-six individuals have already been involved in both cases. The assassination of Negro and his wife, in execution of a sentence rendered by the people's court, the death Don Antonio Enciso's attack in broad daylight on several masters sons of Arcos, all crimes for which the principal perpetrators have been arrested, se will, in all likelihood, be the first facts on which the tribu Nationals will have to vote. It is already estimated that there will be more than 200 cases to be judged.

(I) VJtnparcial of Madrid, cited in the Union of March 0, 1883.

THE NIHILISTS: RUSSIA AND WESTERN EUROPE 633

Among the leaders of the Black Hand* is said to be a master of a school named Juan Ruiz, on whom the most serious charges are brought and who is suspected of having participated in the assassination of an affiliate, Barto-Lomé Gago, condemned by the people's court. Juan Ruiz is on the run. But justice is on his trail.

It should be noted that these statutes of the Black Hand^ seized by the Spanish justice, are like a paraphrase of the statutes of international brothers (see above, S 2). The origin of the movement The Spanish psyche is once again betrayed by this fact brought to light during the invest that the leaders of the Black Hand consecrated several marriages said to be emancipatory, attested only by the presence of some such witnesses, like those of the daughters of the F.-. Reclus. (Book III. Chapter XVII, Section 4).

VImparcial provided figures on the number of members which seem very exaggerated to us. They are undoubtedly being confused with the men of secret societies the masses of workers who are terrified controlled by the sect and do not dare to resist its injunctions.

The police had barely apprehended the local group Jerez, which the committee, far from being intimidated, took the offensive. By his orders, a large number of vines were cut down in the In the province of Malaga, new fires have broken out, the bour Geois, owners of rural properties, have received death threats.

S 4. - Relations of the anarchists of Western Europe WITH the Russian nihilists

After Bakunin, it was a Russian, Prince Krapotkin, who Anarchism in France by reconstructing the debris of the international. One of the defendants in the Lyon trial wrote to one of his accomplices after the nihilist attacks in Russia: "All this

634

LKS ANARCHISTS

"which belonged to the Churches, the Jews, the bourgeoisie has been
"Shines thanks to our nihilist friends."

As early as 1881, a special journal, Polybiblinn, reported the strange propaganda that was taking place in France and Belgium:

Among the signs of the times, we must include the apparatus in France of The nihilistic press is still only in its early stages, but rest assured that before long she will produce, certain of impunity, with audacity ever-increasing. Meanwhile, various booksellers are announcing: Alexandra* Letters from a nun, with a portrait of the author; the Heligion and the Heeo* social lution^ by Michel Bakunin, annotated by Arthur Arnould (member of the Commune). He is an amnestied man, Mr. E'isée Uecltis, whose opinions ultra-radical groups are well known; who is responsible for reviewing and classifying then the writings of the Russian socialist.

Brussels is a very active center for revolutionary publications;
In fact, the depot, in Paris, is at the booksellers whose names we are given.
and the addresses; among other writings, one sees: social indication^ ton-reference made by Mr. Fleury, of the Or., of Paris (on the frontispiece) vignette depicting a triangle surmounted by a liberty cap, with a motto whose meaning is easily guessed: No duties without rights).
Let us also mention The Priest's Novel, a title which dispenses with commentary, they Tablt tles du libre-penseur. Le Journal de la Librairie takes the trouble,
It is quite superfluous to announce to us that the sale of these works is self-funded.
Ridiculed in France; the matter goes without saying. He previously informed us than other Belgian productions (a heap of ignoble impétés, watered with ti-ultra-radical groups) obtained from the Minister of the Interior the lifting of the prohibition that once afflicted them. As for the vile productions of the Belgian bookstore, as for the disgusting garbage it spawns without relaxes, they are very easy to obtain in Paris; the government closes our eyes. We have before our eyes vile catalogues; we are told will think of citing no title

Nihilistic publications continue in Italy; a novel by one of the leaders of the sect; How did Jàite? appear in Milan; another, written very violent, originated in Italy; its French translation has been announced.
Mazzinian party, still formidable, strongly organized into secret societies tes, fully aligns himself with the doctrines of the Russian revolutionaries (1).

Dynamite opened the eyes of liberals who observed tended to see in Russian Nihilism a liberal reaction a somewhat violent and complex mysticism specific to the Slavic race. The Journal of Economists^ in its November 15th issue 188*2, contains a very interesting article by Mr. Edmond de Molinari, French consul in Kiev, (intended to prove that the French anarchists and Russian nihilists are two branches from the same association. We reproduce here the main ones passages:

!\) The Polybiblion of April and May tSSL.

THE NIHILISTS OF RUSSIA AND WESTERN EUROPE 635

The events that have just taken place in Moniceau-les-Mines and in two major French cities we are committed to publishing some Unpublished details on VUnlon ouorière nihilmté (la midi de la Hiissie Cette) a secret society sought to provoke anarchy in the provinces southern parts of the Russian Empire, in the years 1880 and 1881, by employing the same violent means used today by anarchists French.

The analogy we find in the actions of the leaders of this revolutionary movement, shrouded in mystery, in the recruitment of very young people for the accomplishment of blows senseless, in the issuing of numerous subversive proclamations near the workshops, in the vat of threatening letters, written with the same crude style, applied to the directors of industrial establishments, to the jurors, the prefects, etc., stamped with the seal of the "Committee of the dyna~ "mite" like the letters of the nihilists stamped with the "Executive Committee" in the use of the same terrorist methods, with the aim of terrorizing the masses and to make them believe in their omnipotence, in their signs of convention, in the disguises they use, and finally in their theories in which they proclaim themselves enemies "of the laws, of religion, of the property and bosses." all this insane means, similar to those which we have seen practiced closely by the nihilists, not ncus This leaves no room for doubt that these latter, after having failed in Italy, had not employed their exuberant activity in France, by cooperating in the movement socialist anarchist movement, or even by leading it.

Until 1880, the nihilists of the so-called "terrorist" group had not terror spread only in the highest governmental circles, by their attacks on the sovereign and government officials. owners, merchants, industrialists, the "intelligent classes" had been spared. It was only around this time that a fraction News of ultra-terrorists attacking them, excising, in the provinces from the Southwest of the Empire, all elements hostile to the state of affairs current. They tried to incite the peasants against the landowners, the to bring about, as they proclaimed, peri-urbanizations economic changes, which would in turn lead to political changes culminating in "the Revolution." The arrest of the main members of This workers' union fortunately destroyed the evil still in its ra-cinema

During searches of the defendants' homes, state police found revolutionary pamphlets, the statutes of V.4 asocial international workers, submersible proclamations, encrypted letters including We were unable to discover the meaning of the letters written in chemical ink. poems, programs of revolutionary groups from various parties nihilists, manuscripts detailing the organization of the groups, quits cash deposits, subscription tickets to offices of reading, excerpts from works on political economy, social works lists, a flying printing press, printing type, missteps sports, postmarks, factory stamps, that of the police chief of

636

THE ANARCHISTS

Karkow, Engraving Instruments, Mug ink for the stamp Ruion, corrosive materials, arnie.s, revolvers, knives, axes, boxes of crumpled shells, wigs, false beards blue lines, dowdy clothes, etc., etc.

The second part of the program outlines your following demands of the Workers' Union in the name of the working classes:

1 The land, the factories, the workshops, the industrial establishments will have the exclusive property of the people;

2 The work will be carried out by association;

S» The future governmental organization will assign a share of party equal participation for each, in the direction of the government;

4° Individual liberty, privacy, freedom of speech, freedom of assembly, of association, and freedom of the press;

5 Organization of a national militia, replacing the year current permanent.

The means advocated by the "people's socialists" (socialistow narodnikow) to achieve this social l^den are:

1® The terror that will be provoked by inciting the peasants, the in the southwest provinces) against landowners, by pushing them seizing land and woods by burning crops; by murdering nant, as in Ireland, the owners here are the lords; '

2* Industrial or factory terror, by setting fire to factories, the workshops, the industrial establishments; by assassinating the directors and the bosses;

3® T<a military terror by inciting discontented soldiers to revolt against the ornciers, having advised them to assassinate the leaders who use a excessive severity, mistreat or punish them; in short, in raising the troops against the senior officers;

4® Political terror by discrediting the government by all means current situation; diminishing its prestige in the eyes of the people; weakening strengthening its force; by overexciting the revolutionary spirit of the classes exploited female workers; by inciting the people against the authorities, the officials tionaires, the police; taking advantage of the hostility of the population towards the Jews and Poles, to create conflicts leading to disorder and finally provoke revolutionary riots.

Since it is through secret agitation that they must prepare the great fighting against exploiters, they will work under the banner of the organization. trade union whose aim is the education of workers and improvement of their condition.

The members of the society were tasked with spreading out into the countryside. loincloths, to gain entry into factories, into workshops, by searching to hire influential men, enjoying a certain authority over their companions, more capable than others of hastening the movement re-revolutionary. In the villages they had to strive to seduce the starostas, the bailiwick greltikrs; in the factories or workshops, the foremen, the former workers; in the army, the junior officers. "The party's new recruits," they said in their proclamations

THE NIHILISTS OF RUSSIA AND WESTERN EUROPE 637

They will act on the minds of the men under their authority in order to win them over to the great common cause.

The propaganda of "revolutionary ideas" was carried out in two ways. nières: verbally, through slovoini speech, in cabarets, at fairs, in markets (bazaars), in places frequented by the people; by written, that is to say by proclamations that society disseminated profusely sion in towns and in the countryside, on roads, on bridges, on railway trains, etc. Their propaganda was skillfully practiced. Thus, the proclamations were usually thrown there on the eve of the Days holidays, at night, in villages and around factories. These appeals to the people, printed on a single sheet, sometimes in letters the Union, were collected by the peasants and workers, who read them on a festive day at the cabaret or in some secluded place.

The new converts used their most specious reasoning. to convince the unbelievers.

These proclamations are too original in their kind for us to We hesitated to reproduce some of them. We chose the main ones. They are addressed in the name of the Union Terre et l'Aberlé, or in that of The Workers' Union of the South^ or simply the Secret Union.

1. Proclamation to the peasants, in the little Russian dialect.

"Recommendation of the Secret Union Earth and Liberty to honest people. "

She recommends that they: "act together, as friends; abolish the re^ advances to the owners, to no longer pay the rents, to cut the forests, no longer respecting property boundaries, seizing the land, which belongs to them since they work it, to share it among themselves distributing in such a way that each of them receives the portion that he is entitled to "I cultivate."

The epistle ends as follows: "If the Tsar sends his army, this will prove to you that he is the enemy of the people and the friend of the lords; then he should no longer reign, for he is no longer the father of the few ple. »

All these manifestos or proclamations were stamped with the seal of the Union, printed in red ink, with the words "Land and Liberty*, surmounted by an intertwined axe, pickaxe and revolver.

2° Notice addressed to Colonel Karobkine, head of the workshops of the arsenal mi-Klew's literate.

The Workers' Union ordered him: "to increase the daily wage and the first 'munérationment per piece after agreement with the workers, to consider the worker as a man not working only for himself, but for the common good; to no longer dare to fine the workers following "Before his whim, a fine was only permitted in cases of theft."

Some time after the sending of this first acis, a second, closer one... reminding him of the same requirements, he added: "that the Union present- the Colonel said that in the event of non-execution of the demands already made mules, she will find herself obliged to carry out the sentence to death warrant issued against him, head of the arsenal." The notice addressed to Messrs. Ja

THE ANARCHISTS

Brothers, is it not a perfect imitation? If we have found no part in the bare programs in the proclamation of the nihilists, the demand for information. It is by reason, which they explain, moreover their, in other writings, "what would not proliferate (|u'a,n\ cabarctiers, to employees, etc., who would freely steal from the people without danger."

This is according to a manuscript of the "statutes of the Society" divided into twenty-four articles, found at Koscbintow, which we are publishing the following the following information relating to ruralization, administration and research sources of this secret society.

The Union piéridionale des Iramîlleurs comprised several groups separate, whose number was neither fixed nor limited. The relationships between them were regular or irregular: regular and official with the cen* committee tral of Saint Petersburg; irregulars with the Kharkow groups, Odessa, Moscow, whose members, through their personal relationships, communicating matters, of whatever importance they might be. The secret of the cipher used in correspondence with the executive committee n'était cpiiiu que des eonjnrés most anciens.

The Union circles were organized on the model of all the Nihilistic associations. They consisted of 10, 20, 30 members, including one present, a secretary and a cashier. To avoid denunciations or detection The police easily, your revolutionaries used false names or so-called lighters. The president, elected by the members of a group, became its, Official delegate to the Executive Committee of Saint Petersburg. Often This Committee admits him into its ranks, and the right to fund new groups were allocated to him. Membership was granted by election. The new candidate presented by three nihilists was expected to win, in the runoff two-thirds of the votes; but, if only one person opposed or if he raised a serious objection against his opponent, it was rejected, unfortunately despite the vote cast in his favor. Accepted, the neophyte had to pledge his swornness the conspirators, "to faithfully observe the prescriptions of the Society, not to "reveal his secrets or decisions to anyone."

A member suspected of treason and found guilty faced the death penalty. Not only were members required to keep the se the most rigorous credo on the association, to work assiduously for its prosperity, to make the sacrifice of their lives when the cause of the party demanded it, but they were obliged to "uphold the honor of the group to which they belonged, (iliac member retained the freedom to withdraw from the association, provided that the payments made remain in the the fund of the society The resigning member became subject to a surcharge meticulous vigilance on the part of his companions. The resignations, moreover Theirs were very rare.

The Society's resources came from private donations, from secret lotteries, membership fees, etc. In the papers of a in the following manner the last verspinents: 3-na é rubles, of N. p- 1 ruble, from M y 13 rubles, NN 2 rubles.

Correspondence between members of different groups was not to be written, when it concerned matters of interest to the Society or relating to the party than with chemical ink. Between the lines of an ordinary letter, one finds* had the important missive (0.

THE NIHILISTS OF RUSSIB AND WESTERN EUROPE 639

According to the "statutes", each circle was supposed to have its own local, its own bi- A library and a clandestine printing press. The Bratstco (the Brotherhood), The Union's projected newspaper would have had the mission of indicating to the people "it needs" and to paralyze the influence of the "bourgeoisie". The creation of This journal remained a project. It is to be assumed that there were obstacles serious issues hindered its publication.

Around 1873 (2'), students and young women founded at Kiew, a society which they named after the Commune of Kiew (Kiefskaïa kouminouna). The membics, the "communards," were assembling Every evening at the association's premises. In the meetings, they talked about government affairs, its policies, desirable reforms, and various changes that the government had to make in its administration administration. We smoked a lot, we drank (even more, we got drunk so much wind, and almost always these secret meetings ended in scenes of... gie. To provide for the upkeep of society, the Communards contributed, But the main income came from theft. One member stole 30 rubles. and a fur coat: he put the 300 rubles in the till and kept the fur coat; Another became a postilion and delivered the mail he was carrying; a woman- A member of the group was in the service of a landowner whom she murdered and then escaped carrying with it its values, which shaped the Commune.

As the actions of this circle became disturbing in every respect ports, numerous arrests took place among the members, almost all young men. Some were pardoned, others sent away by direct means ministerial staff in the northern provinces or exiled to Siberia. This matter It is known as the Trial of the 770.

From 1874 to 1876, a new secret society was discovered. 193 per 103 were arrested, 103 sentenced to different terms and 90 pardoned (trial of the 193).

Fragments broke away from the Commune and scattered into all parts of Russia and around which the revolutions gravitated lutionaries scattered throughout the land where these debris fell. Then, these "fas" of the Commune, those pardoned in the trial of the 193 and the revolutions traveling merchants gathered and founded new groups, including the The program and its operation were better studied. It was at this time the active phase, from speech, as the nihilists say, to action, that is—that is to say, to assassination.

From 1876 to 1879, Stepanovich, an ardent, passionate, determined and convinced nihilist damned ever since, he organized a revolutionary group in Kiev whose mission The special aspect was "to take advantage of the people's miserable state, with the aim of to create discontented people whose spirit of revolt the party would incite.

(1) Letters from the brother of the accused Prirelski, residing in Montpellier in 1881, were found at her home written using this method.

(2) .8'elaieot constituted before this time; in 1861, the first circle revolved tionnaire said Penzenth: in 1862, the Society of Land and Liberty; in 1889, the group of Netehaeff.

610

THE ANARCHISTS

This very organized, blue-collar group sent to the Minister of Justice, under form of address, energetic protests against the harshness of the police in the name of the Pntifh/ue party of southern Russia. It is by members from this group, in 1877 or 1878, that perjured vilililists were murdered.

In 1876, another group, called flrowpc ffe Kiev (Kiefski Kroujok) appeared; its organization, more competent than those of the previous ones, had direct links with Saint Petersburg and other cities in the country. He owned an underground printing press. The members distributed a profusion of revolutionary pamphlets as well as proclamations, and their activity was prodigious. It was at a meeting of this group, composed of men my determined and violent, that he Jut decimated for the first time in April 1879, to use dynamite as a destructive device in the revolutionary attacks. It was through ignorance or error that Golden-Berg revealed that the use of cdte liiaiiére cyplosil)le fui decided the first "fools at the Congress of IJpcIz," "Lc.s nihilists who attended it, in July 1871), that is to say three months after the decision taken by the Kiev group, He did not ignore it. Dynamite is destined to play too important a role. carrying on in the socialist agitations so that we let them ignore where It was, for the first time, proposed as an instrument of so-called destruction. Ciale, it is from this Kiefski Kroujok that the workers' union of the South descends directly, (as we have seen, its members have • gone into the, people," and God knows what terrible catastrophes would have been unleashed upon the country the union of peasants and anarchists, if the Russian government had acted with as much energy as skill.

This was the first time that nihilists interfered in business agricultural, it was also your first time receiving death threats.

to workshop managers, bosses, and owners.

Mr. Anatole Tjoroy-Bcauliou cites, regarding the disturbances raised In their attacks against the Jews, a characteristic phrase: "We are having lunch with the Jews, said a common man in 1881, during the three Days of looting at Kicf; we will dine with the owners.
we sup with the Popes (1). » In a national form Russian Nihilism, being very particular, is nothing other than something else entirely.
the first analysis that universal evolution pushed to its limit extreme ro.vysme.

Galicia and Bohemia have recently been the scene of attacks.
which indicate the same leadership thinking.

In January 1883, the sor/a/w/cÿ threatened to blow up with the dynamite the Jesuit church in Lemberg, and their com
The plots appeared so serious that, as a precaution, the police

(1) The Empire of the Russian Tertelles (Paris, Hachelle, 1882, vol. II, p. 548),

AND THE OTHER SOCIALIST FRACTIONS 641 for a few days the church was closed. The Jesuit Fathers of Galicia were targeted for their hatred, because* they had just been charged by the Holy See with reconstituting the Eastern order of Saint Basil. This is not the first time that nihilists have

They are the instruments of Russian Pan-Slavism.

The same organization exists in Bohemia;

The sect's secret council, according to the Vienna newspapers of February 11th 1883, had recently outlawed the police prefect of Prague, and It had been decided, in a night session, that lots would be drawn to to know, who would be responsible for carrying out the proscription sentence.

Merciless fate chose a glove maker named Dressler, who Repentance came a little too late, and he just committed suicide to avoid being no victim of the sect or its executioner, that is to say
He will likely be hanged tomorrow like a common murderer.

But the suicide of this poor devil had quite serious consequences.
unexpected. A letter, written by Dressler to his parents, revealed the conspiracy of the prescribers (1).

5. – Relations of anarchists with others Socialist factions

One of the biggest practical mistakes one can make, is to believe that the divisions of secret societies or social Lists, they render them powerless. They always meet. to attack the social order.

Thus, whatever rivalry there may be between the supporters of Bakunin and those of Karl Marx, among the various revolutionary groups Naires, Jacobins and socialists alike, all applauded nonetheless everywhere at the assassination of Alexander II, as they had done after Hartmann's translation (v. lib. II, chap. XV, § 4).

Members of the German Social Democratic Party, could not Before meeting in Germany, they moved their conference to Switzerland. They gathered from April 20th to 23rd in the ruins of the ancient Wyden Castle, Canton of Zurich. There, although they excluded from the party organization two anarchists, Hasselman and Most, They cast a vote of sympathy for the Russian nihilists. his. The following passage from their manifesto indicates that between them

(1) See L'Union of February 15, 1883.

m

41

042 THE ANARCHISTS

and the anarchists share an identity on the goal to be achieved, if not on all means to be employed.

The socialist democracy of Germany is convinced that the Revolution, To be victorious, it must be prepared in advance. She considers it as the first duty of any good revolutionary is to contribute to spreading Increasingly, through active propaganda, socialist ideas among the few ple, – to make those who must more capable of defending themselves and acting I fight to lead, – to organize an inflexible discipline, – to weaken the opponent and parry his blows. We must be ready with all our forces for the universal shock that will overthrow the organization current state of the world. When the irresistible march of events will have When the moment of truth arrives, the socialists will know how to show that they understand their duty; they will leave nothing to chance; they will be ready; they will go into battle with the well-founded hope of victory.

The congress declares first and foremost that the emancipation of the class or The revolution must be the common work of the proletariat of all countries. Opposite of the international alliance of reaction and capitalism, it is absolutely necessary the international alliance of the proletariat to fight the old

Mr. de Pulkammer, Minister of the Empire, declared in the Reichstag, in December 1887, that the Leipzig police had proof of the existing relations between the socialists of this city and the nihilist foreign lists.

In his response, Socialist MP Von Vollmar, while denying the material fact of Paffiliation, he highly expressed his sympathy for Veneryie and the spirit of sacrifice of the Russian nihilists.

Equality, organ of the relatively moderate fracture of the colonial French lecionists, expresses himself thus:

We will begin with political power. It is the Parliament which one will have to be taken away first, with or without dynamite, the how we will dislodge the bourgeoisie from the dependent government no Men, but circumstances.

And by proceeding in this way, by first removing the fortress, government, which controls all of bourgeois society, we will not be not innovators. We will only benefit from the immortal lesson that was given to us at the end of the last century by the men of the Third Estate and follow their example.

Power first,

Next, the property.

As we can see, there is a complete identity in the doctrines born and within moral principles.

BT LBS OTHER SOCIALIST FRACTIONS 643

Attempts have been made to engage in trades. English unions to give at least moral support to French anarchists. A solemn visit by eleven delegates English in Paris, under the pretext of consulting about the tunnel under the English Channel, was organized for this purpose.

They were offered a banquet in a hall decorated with flags. reds, and the following day a meeting was held under the chairmanship of the Citizen Joffrin, municipal councilor, heard the cries of "Long live the Commune! Long live the social revolution! They have been constantly engaged in tender. It began with the reading of an address by Félix Pyat to the English workers, of whom the following is the most characteristic passage:

Force and faith separate men. Science and law unite them.

Science? Press, steam, electricity! One is the end, the other the means of... unity. The law of rights and science is a national variety within unity human. This law of order is the corporation in the commune, the common in the nation, the nation in humanity. (Burst of applause) (dissements.) Thanks to law and science, no more barriers neither physical nor social relations between men, no more kings, no more priests, of masters (1)! Each his own master, his own priest, his own pro pre-king, having all the sovereign attributes, the weapon, the vote and the land; more of water, mountains, and seas! (Prolonged applause. Five the Interna-National! Five the Social Revolution!\ vaulted or decked seas, the Mountains pierced or leveled, islands linked, the globe cabled; air, water, fire, the earth, all the elements enslaved, subjects of the one master, of the one sovereign* rain, of the one and true king by right and soon in fact, His Majesty Labor. (More applause.) The worker, whom the English master calls a machine mechanic, or simply main, hand, is the crowned head, the Majesty of the future. Every other sovereign, warrior, priest, or bourgeois, is king of the past. Why? Only work thrives on peace, creation, and rights. Everything Another sovereign lives by war, plunder, and force. The sovereignty of the The people alone can and will universal peace, because it is universal. itself, because the people have no other subject than itself, because his reign is a contract and his income is produced. Any other The monarchy can only, and wants only, war. Its reign is constrained, its re Having come with plunder, his subject is all that is weak, all that is poor, the vile The multitude, the cannon fodder, the mob, the people at last. (Frenzied cheers.)

A delegate from the Trades-Unio7is, from Bristol, responded with a speech, the meaning of which was translated by the interpreter as follows:

The English approve of the heroic struggles in which he is embroiled In France, the Socialist Workers' Party. The union between French workers

(1) Note in passing the phraseology of the ritual of the knight Eadosch.

644

THE ANARCHISTS

And Aoglais is made from today, a new sun will rise to allow workers from both nations to get to know each other better, and A day will come when these united workers will rise up to break the chains slavery prevents them from progressing. Workers are the foundation of The company, let us be careful, these foundations could well be lacking. day and crush those who cannot bear anything. (1)

The assembly adjourned after several rounds of applause. the honor of the fighters of Montlceau-les-Mines. Certainly, We shouldn't exaggerate the practical results of this federation* moral support from the Trades Unions to encourage their French members. The meeting's chairman had to acknowledge to be at the beginning that the French workers and the English workers differed on the means to be employed, if not on the goal to be achieved.

Unfortunately, there is a common hatred that unites the Socialists of all countries: it is anti-religious fanaticism, the hatred of God.

Bebel told the Reichstag, astonished by his audacity:

We want the Republic in politics, and the economy in economics.
"Cialism, in religion atheism (2)."

Hartmann, in a letter written from London, stated that for For him, as for all nihilists, all religions were equal. element to be destroyed (3).

It was through violence against churches and religious figures that... began the crimes of Montceau-les-Mines as well as the Commune from Paris.

We wrote it in 1880, "if native French common sense re- instinctively pushes what is unrealizable in the collectivist For him, and for anarchism, socialist passion found an access all the more formidable because she doesn't bother with a plan of reconstruction, and immediately seeks to destroy. The elements Jacobins and socialists are inseparable in our country.

The day when the violence of the anarchists would have overthrown the organization government station, we would see the emergence, in an attempt to to give form to this chaos, the formidable authoritarian collectivism to silence Karl Marx, and it is perhaps for this eventuality that

(1) We borrow these quotations from the complete report published in the FrançaU of November 38, 1882.

(2) Winterer, Three Years of the History of Socialism, p. 14.

(3) Reproduced psaV Union of April 13, 1880.

THE ACCOMPLICES OF THE ANARCHISTS 645

The founder of VInternationale is keeping a low profile at this time. moment.

Anarchists in Western Europe, like nihilists
In Russia, they are, after all, only a handful of sectarians.
This audacity is explained by the shortcomings they encounter in the holders of power and by old alliances. France-Freemasonry, whose bourgeois followers they are now threatening,
He prepared the way for them.

"We have supporters," Bebel told the Reichstag, "where You wouldn't even suspect it, in a place where the police won't go.
Never. "

ME de Molinari, in the curious article we have cited, reports an example of these complicities.

In the year 1876, a secret union was established between the young people of Granada Ukrainian sympathizers and revolutionaries. The Ukrainian sympathizers represent a little Russian party, whose political theories are in opposition to absolue with those of the Slavophiles; they desire the autonomy of the provinces of the south (of Ukraine), while remaining under the rule of the emperor from Russia. The Granada^ "literary" circles are composed of fifteen or twenty members, intelligent, educated, well-off, whose contributions amply cover the club's expenses. The old Granadas date back to 1848 and they remained outside of the X Union we are talking about.

Moreover, this alliance was limited, on the part of the pro-Ukrainians, to providing money to the revolutionaries, in order to facilitate their propaganda revolutionary in the region. The agreement did not last, for it could not to coexist among people of such different opinions and aspirations.

In France, the leaders of the great republican conspiracy of 1873 had sought the support of the anarchist hordes (Book II, Chapter XI, § 3, and Appendix I). In 1882, we saw the Masonic lodges of Paris to cover with their sympathy and their protection the accused of Monlceau-les-Mines (book II, chapter 1).
XXI, § 1).

Russian nihilist committees have been operating in Paris for several years.
several years. In March 1880, at the time of the request for extra Hartmann's administration, they sent threatening letters to the am-Russian ambassador, Prince Orlov, to Attorney General Mura-

The newspaper Le Gaulois took the opportunity to recall the scandalous protection which all of Mr. Grévy's ministries covered the pro-nihilistic paganism and even the preparation of its plots (^l.

The number of nihilists residing outside the territory of the Russian Empire can be approximately estimated at three thousand.

In France, there are two thousand of them, spread between Paris, its surroundings and the province.

In each of the countries where they have established their residence, the nihilists have formed a committee composed of the association's principal members. committee has high command of all subcommittees or groups; it is of It is through him that the orders for delays originate! ; it is also through him that the He carries out the orders of the supreme committee; he oversees and directs within his sphere the printing, chemical, peddling and financial services, which constitute lay the foundations of the nihilistic organization.

Funds from fundraising or other financial operations The association sends them to him, and he is the one who arranges their distribution.

Each of the three committees of England, Switzerland and France, possesses a printing press which he runs and employs staff in its operation refugees designated by him.

A chemistry laboratory, which has an attached manufacturing workshop bombs, is also installed by the committee in his residence or not Far from it.

The nihilists also include among them a number of peddlers, disguised as street vendors, with a trinket of trinkets and coarse fabrics," they come to the printing shop to find the newspapers documents, brochures or proclamations which they conceal with a sur-captivating in the folds of the stars they peddle.

While selling their stars and distributing their printed materials, these people cross Germany, cross the Russian customs lines to try to send them, without making it known, to Poland, where they would be poorly received.

It was only in Russia that the nihilistic peddlers began to act to complete their task. We then see the merchant furtively emerge from between the folds of the fabric he sells, the printed materials he leaves in cottages,

A large number of staff are needed to meet the requirements of the project. nihilistic pagan, given that a skilled peddler takes several months to distribute a few thousand printed copies.

An individual who calls himself Ta'^Kini, who trades in fabrics and resides in Paris, on Avenue Reille, in the Observatory district, is the main nihilistic peddler between France, Switzerland and Russia.

Besides the laboratories mentioned above, the nihilists also have

(1) See a very characteristic account in the 6nii'cr of March 7, 1880.

(7) Reproduced by the Union of the U.S.I. November 1882.

THE ACCOMPLICES OF THE ANARCHISTS 647

at their service a number of "office workers" who They are involved in the manufacture of weapons and bombs.

The famous watch spring boxes, which were used for assassinations Siner Alexandre 11, were manufactured in Paris and tested in wood du Vésinet.

Regarding finances, such as funds from bequests, Donations or collections would be utterly insufficient, the nihilists of London have set up a counterfeit paper ruble workshop in this city, of which the
The conversion into cash is done for the most part by means of the traffic of peddlers.

It is still in London that all the destructive devices are brought.
of nihilistic manufacture, which would suggest that the Lon- committee Dres has real connections among shipowners.

Prince Krapotkin, based in London at two addresses: Willmington.
Square 6, and Riwer-Street 44, and currently passing through Geneva, is the supreme leader of nihilism.

11 to the supervision of the committees of France, England and Switzerland.
He is the one who orders proclamations and specifies their destination.
nation to the peddlers.

He has three secretaries or aides-de-camp who are: JasIokoiT, editor of the former Tbcs/r", Dr. Roussel and Goldemberg, cliimist, whose family resides in Paris.

Although actually based in London, he travels constantly, sometimes to Paris, sometimes in Geneva. But it can be said that it is in Paris that he practices most specifically* his command.

11 There are nihilists in every neighborhood of Paris, but it's in the
It is in the vicinity of the Pantheon and the Glacière that one finds the most compact.

The head of the Paris committee is a man named Krukoff, known as Petruski, leader typesetter at the Reiff printing works, Place des Écoles, 9; he replaces the colonel Sokoloff, expelled by the French police and currently a refugee in Genoa nève.

Krukoff owns an apartment in Asnières in which are located
A dozen peddlers were gathered together, awaiting his orders.

The lieutenants of the head of the Paris committees, themselves exercising a command over one or more groups of nihilists, are: Mok-Rowitchz (who escaped from the Siberian mines in 1881), Colonel I. Yavroff, KadchefI, said Bouche, Victor Ivanowitcz and Daninhcwski.

Three women hold high-ranking positions in the Paris hierarchy.
The members of the association are: Katcha, Olga and Friedutchina.

The nihilists of Paris are almost all in more than adequate situations.
modest.

They stay in groups of four or five in rooms that they mov blend in the most primitive way.

One or two iron beds, a stove, and in one corner the bundles form, along with some chemistry instruments and books, the furniture of the fake stallholders.

THE ANARCHISTS

648

Until two in the morning, they work, either on the editorial staff of proclamations intended for Russian peasants, or the selection of formulas of chemistry, or finally to experiments of the same kind. At that hour, they They go to sleep; one of them keeps watch, relieved in this role by one of the sleepers.
whose place he takes.

It is only around noon that they are awakened by the last watchman; they they then share a simple meal.

Work then resumes until nightfall.

We'll get dinner from a friend's house; the nihilists will go there.
separately, so as to attract as little attention as possible from their neighbors sins.

The subsidies arrive by registered mail addressed to the one of the nihilists in whose name the room was rented. Because there is never more than one tenant in name, while in reality five or six individuals are gathered in a room.

When a nihilist comes on a mission, from London or Geneva, we defrays all his expenses at the hub of quests among the residents of Paris.

We met some of these refugees at the Soufflet café and at the Dréber brasserie, rue Saint-Denis. They are trying to connect with the students of our Faculties to gradually gain the ground they deem necessary to own in France.

On average, there are two nihilistic meetings per week in Paris; the Thursday and Saturday, between nine o'clock in the evening and midnight.

On Sunday, a meeting takes place in Sèvres, on rue des Guinguettes, at the home of nihilistic Askiiiasi, or, when time permits, in the upper part of the park of Saint-Cloud.

These are the most important meetings; only the leaders attend them. are admitted, because that is where the most effective measures are discussed and decided. caces to be proposed to the supreme committee.

These meetings only begin when night falls.

Those who attend receive a travel allowance.

As for the meetings held during the week in Paris, the questions that were discussed there cute have a much less powerful appeal; their main purpose is to connections between affiliates scattered throughout the big city.

These meetings consist of approximately one hundred and twenty people and take place 19 rue Pascal, or 83 rue du Cardinal-Lemoine.

Every month, at the Brasserie Suisse, 28 rue Coquillière, one... large gathering of five to six hundred nihilists. There, so to speak, the summary of previous meetings, and the leaders give speeches whose peroration, always the same, shows the tsar lying in the grave by sectarians.

The Sèvres meetings are temporarily replaced by meetings We are less numerous, but perhaps more decisive, in the events that take place on the street fiertholet, in Paris.

This is where the nihilistic center of Paris is currently located, and we It is assumed, it seems, at the Russian embassy, that Prince Krapotkin, whom one said in Switzerland, is there in person or is expected there from day to day.

THE ACCOMPLICES OF THE ANARCHISTS 649

The nihilist press was established not so long ago, in Alolières, a small village near Litiours, on a property belonging to Messrs., former member of the Commune, married to the deportation by a court-martial in Versailles.

He offered hospitality to the nihilistic printing press and lodged there for some time. At the time, several of the refugees who worked there were among the refugees. About twenty had settled in the village and in Boulay-les-Trous.

But soon, following fairly active surveillance by the gendarmerie, the nihilists of Mulières moved out, and the press was... It was located on Avenue Belle; but it was moved there a few days ago. and it is believed that it is on Berthoel Street.

M.... has sold his property, which he will leave at the beginning of November to return to Paris; 'Taskini, the chief peddler, has just left Boulay-les-Trous to come and live on Reille Avenue.

Before the dissolution of the Molières colony, the printing works was managed by a nihilist nicknamed Lyon, who lives in Paris, on rue de la Glacière.

In Asnières and Clichy there is also a small nihilist colony, of which the most of the members are employed as typesetters at the printing shop Paul Dupont.

The man named Kruko, known as Petruski, former head typesetter of this imprimerie, currently at the Petit printing works, Place des Ecoles, and the head committees in Paris, a large part of them lodge.

In Meudon-Sèvres there is a group that includes some of the most influential members of the Paris committee. That is where they reside. Mokrowitez, escaped from Siberia in 1881.

Russian police are monitoring him very closely, as he is considered 'an of those held in reserve for the accomplishment of regicide, and we know he is very capable of facing anything to accomplish his terrible assignment.

Mokrowitez is a friend of Prince Krapotkin and Colonel Lavroff.

Some of the nihilists live on Rue des Sablons, near the castle of Meudon, in a deserted place.

The strikes, which are increasing in duration and in dangerous demonstrations, and this unemployment of more than forty thousand cabinetmakers, of which we are threatened, they appear likely to provide the Russian revolutionaries with a playing field most favorable, and certainly they are not the kind of people to let this pass an opportunity to create a secure place of refuge here.

It's all hands on deck; the leaders, Krapotkin at the head, are going to and come from all directions, giving orders, massing their troops." casting a final glance at the preparations for the attack, and this horde who would stop at nothing, this band of foreigners will Gabons, is preparing in the shadows to deliver the final blow to a government whose blind weakness gives free rein to these vulgarizations dynamite makers.

The farcical expulsion of Lavroff had already been pointed out; what-

650

LBS ANARCHISTS

A few days later, he was back in Paris and walking around the room (the ('iit!'S, provided with a verbal authorization from Mr. de Freycinet, to this (the Va!taire said)

In Germany and Austria, the anarchists found other instruments.

One circumstance to note, says Mr. Winterer, is that this pro The pagan sect often recruits its agents from among the Jews. We have seized among the papers of the Jewish agitator Aaron Libermann, who was the im of these agents, a letter worded as follows:

I have frequently been in contact with Jews, and I have noticed that Their thirst for wealth is such that, for the love of money, they are ready to give everything up to their honor and God. I wonder if he It is worthwhile to spread socialist ideas among them. In Germany, We still see them getting involved in politics; but in Ilus, where it is a matter of By sacrificing one's fortune and life to an idea, one cannot make use of them. Jews can be useful for clandestine operations and for the com communications. They can also provide passports. These are the services* which they can return to us, for a fee.

The anarchists, in the trials recently brought against them They have often spoken with tn0[])ris of Freemasonry, which In their eyes, this is precisely what is in(arnalion), or opportunism. either bourgeois Jacobinism. But one of the pitis iiilelligenls, Bordât, in the sense that he appeared in the criminal court nel (Lyon, ittditpied the hair by U'cptcl Freemasonry and anarhus; "We agree on a "Only one point: abolition of religion; but we follow "the example of the one who said: and Clericalism, that's it~ "nemif"

The insurgents of Montceau-les-Mines, when they ransacked the Church, have given themselves over to ho.-lies consecrated to odious profanations, which systematically recall those practices in certain groups, where sacrilege is combined with debauchery as the extreme manifestation of Satanism, this common fund of all secret societies.

This is the characteristic trait of Italian socialism. Its organs Scamiccato (the [Shirtless Ones] of Reggio, are above all

(1) cited by Franpaû on May 27, 1882.

THE ACCOMPLICES OF THE ANARCHISTS 651

blasphemous newspapers. But they do not echo the leaves government newspapers, such as Corriere della Sera, for example, which In an issue dated January 24, 1883, he wrote: "The papacy is "Our eternal enemy. Destroying it is to consolidate the edifice of "our homeland (i)."

Having reached this point, we can conclude in no better way than with these Profound words from Mr. Winterer: "Nothing is more inexplicable that the blindness of impious liberalism, which blasphemes with the socialism, which, through its press, continues the ruin of faith in the soul of the people, and who imagine that on the day of revolutionary fury
The godless people will pass before the liberated collaborators.
raux, because the tabernacles will have been handed over to him. We permit your
It is not uncommon for workers' congresses to demand and vote for schools without God, provided that the resolutions of these congresses do not speak
No collectivism. A calculation as odious as it is senseless! This proletarian silence that which denies God, that which no longer has hope for a future life,
Will someone who believes only in material things and pleasure be satisfied?
At the sight of the ruins of the tabernacle? Ah! What an idea you have!
you of the man who has neither home nor a fixed share of property of the earth, nor eternal hopes? We have often had the My heart aches to see how everything that binds men to Society has little influence over the irreligious proletarian; how he is insensitive to the consideration of those around him, how He emigrates without regret and renounces his homeland; how, finally, he abandons his family to give himself up to vagrancy.

"Irreligion has had necessary antisocial consequences" in all ranks of society. At the top, she removed everything a restraint on the thirst for pleasure and covetousness; it was the cause first of the abuses and inhumane exploitations of capital.
Down below, she was the main source of all the hatreds which Socialism is the expression. Remove God and the afterlife.
The man without God finds himself, with his passions, facing mortal life, with the inequality of conditions and the inequality of enjoyment. This man will ask at the banquet of life for a part that his passions demand. He will encounter barriers.
what does current society, based on flight, oppose to these passions?
God and in the life to come; he will stop against the obstacle, and the hatred

(1) V. a series of very characteristic quotations taken from the fuis aux jour-in Le Français of March 9, 1883.

652

LB8 ANARCHISTS

social, with the hatreds that accompany it, will enter into its soul (1). »

(1) Three years of the History of socialism.

APPENDICES

Attached document A.

Lbs Sources of the History of Freemasonry IN THE 18TH CENTURY

During the printing of this volume, we had to... birth, thanks to kind communication, of a little
A very well-made book, entitled: Adumbratio liberorum muratorum WW Freemasons, vi cujus eoruni societasy origoyvitusy moreSf etc., deteguntur aulhore P. F Johane a Maire Dei Cæsaraugustano, Tauriniac Salmantkæsacræ Theologiæ ^5ro/more, Maflrid, 1751, 12mo, 135 pp. The author, in the preface, states that he used, among other sources, a pastoral instruction from the Bishop of Ventimiglia condemning the Freemasons, by a mandate the Bishop of Toulon's letter, for the same purpose, of a small booklet by Valerio Angioleri Alticozzi, title: Relatio societatis libero-- ram muratoruMy printed in Naples in 1747.

11 describes the rites exactly and reproduces the oaths used.
In the first three degrees, oaths are sworn on the gospel of St. John, the system of signs, passwords, and symbols, but seems to know nothing of the higher ranks, which moreover com were only just beginning to spread at that time. Franc-ma-
"Nonsense," he said, "was created in England during the 17th century."
century (p. 87) and from there it spread to all countries of the world
(p. 2). It had 129 in Great Britain and Ireland

Founded three times in Livorno in 1748 (p. 22). Freemasonry it was also introduced into the kingdom of Naples, where Ton had 656

ANNEXED DOCUMENT A

discovered, in 1750, that several noble figures and even a bishop had joined it, in defiance of the bulls of Clement XII (p. 110). It was beginning to spread in its time in Madrid, by gentlemen who traveled abroad
(p. 37).

Freemasons from all countries still recognized at that time the Grand Master of London, under whose authority in each kingdom were the great provincial lodges the (p. 88).

Father Jean of the Mother of God shows with great sa-how the principles of Freemasonry overturned everything the principles of religion. Indeed, from the moment of entering the order,
The adept was told that he was passing from darkness to light;
The body of Christians was treated as profane. Furthermore, the Franks-Freemasons admit men of all sects into their lodges.
yours, even the apostate monks (p. 45); they give pleasure their purpose in life (p. 27); they systematically despise the abstinences and fasts prescribed by the Church (pp. 29, 30); they have they condone suicide and fornication (p. 24, 97). This is recognizable.
all the maxims of the so-called philosophy of the 18th century.
According to this very precise testimony, which is based on a great deal of evidence For ten years prior, Freemasonry had been the schoolteacher philosophers and not a fruit of the movement imprinted on the es taken by them.

The author points out the identity of the doctrines of Freemasonry.
nery with those of the Socinians (p. 61), of the Rosicrucian brothers
(p. 27), and the analogy of their secret organization with the tempipliers, the Albigensians and the Manichaeans (p. 17, 64, 65, 73).

Although Freemasons claim to be a republican society Father Jean de la Mère de Dieu, with his benevolent spirit, quotes several times several highly authoritative testimonies attest that in various places, no particularly in Florence, Germany, and Holland, some lodges had degenerated into debauchery. This confirms completely the indications that we have published (book III, Chapter I, § 10).

Secrecy is dangerous for the state. The main reason that had condemned by the States General of Holland in 1735 was, he said, an article in its statutes worded as follows: If who confrater res forte novas adversus principlem aut rempublicam

HISTORY OF FREEMASONRY IN THE 18TH CENTURY 657

U

moliretury eum reliqui sodales deberent non quidem imitari neque e societate eapropter exturbaroy sed illius vicem do-1st (1).

The Masonic lodges, with this discreet article, were already schools of conspiracy, as Pérau indicated in 1747 (Book III, Chapter I, §2).

The book ends with a reproduction of the speech bubble of Benedict XIV and the edict of Ferdinand VI, of 1751, defending Freemasonry throughout the extent of its domination gnole.

(1) A similar article was found from the beginning of the century in lescon* Institutions of English Freemasonry. V. General History of Ceremonies and Customs nuns of all peoples, by Banier (Paris, 1741, folio). It contains, Volume IV, pages 334 to 342, a notice on the Freemasons, taken largely from Anderson's Book of Constitutions and the English work Masony dineeUd, This The most interesting thing is a letter from Ulrecht, recounting the circumstances which had led to the proscription of lodges in 1735 by the Estates-General.

Attached document S

The Role of Jews in the Universal Revolution

We reproduce, to confirm the views stated in chapter Preliminary section of this volume, § 9, the document below, which is kept in the archives of Fribourg?*g in Switzerland.

Copy of a letter that I, Augustin Barruel, honorary canon of Notre-Dame, received in Paris, August 20, 1806. N.B. I am even copying the grammar mistakes.

J f M. Florence, August 1806.

Sir, it has been a few months since I was fortunate enough to be...

"Memoir of the Jacobins. • I read it, or rather devoured it, with a unspeakable pleasure, and I derived the greatest benefits and the greater insights for my own conduct, especially since I found an infinite number of things depicted exactly, which I have I have been an eyewitness in the course of my life, without, however, being very much involved To understand them. So, sir, receive this from an ignorant soldier. As I am, I offer my sincerest congratulations on your work. which can rightly be called the quintessential work of the last century. Oh, how well you have unmasked these infernal sects who They prepare the voices for the Antichrist and feel implacable enemies not only of the Christian religion, but of all worship, of every society, of every kind! There is, however, one that you have not You were only slightly touched. Perhaps you did it intentionally. because it is the best known and therefore, the least to fear. But, in my opinion, it is today the most powerful formidable, considering its great wealth and protection

THE ROLE OF THE JEWS IN THE UNIVERSAL REVOLUTION 65d

which it enjoys in almost all European states. You com Please understand, sir, that I am speaking of the Jewish sect Bile pa- She was an enemy in every way and separated from others; but truly she Don't test it. In fact, it would be enough for one of these to become an enemy. of the Christian name so that she would favor her, bribe her and protect her. And have we not seen it, and do we not yet see it? to dam up its gold and silver to support and moderate the moderates So-called theologians, the Freemasons, the Jacobins, the Illuminati? Jews, therefore, along with all other sectarians, form only one a fraction to annihilate, if possible, the Christian name. And not Don't believe, sir, that all this is an exaggeration of my I am not saying anything other than what the Jews told me. themselves, and here's how:

While Piedmont, where I was born, was in revolution, I had occasion to associate with them and to deal confidentially with them. Yet they were the first to look for me; and I, like So I wasn't scrupulous; I pretended to form a bond with them. close friendship and I managed to tell them, begging them with the utmost rigor a secret I kept, that I was born in Livorno, into a family of Hebrews; but that, as a very young boy, I had been raised by I don't know who, that I didn't even know if I had been baptized, and that, whatever that outside I lived and smooth like the Catholics, in my interim (Mir, however, I thought like those of my nation for to which I had always kept a tender and secret love Then they made me the biggest offers and gave me everything Their trust, they promised to make me a general if I wanted to join the Freemasons sect; they showed me They took sums of gold and silver which they distributed, I was told did they, for those who embraced their party, and wanted to absolutely Freemasonry, which I accepted so as not to disgust them and to encourage them to tell me their secrets. So here's what the principal and wealthiest Jews communicated with me in various ways its circumstances.

t* That Manes and the intoxicating Old Man or old man of the Mountain had left their nation;

2*' That the Freemasons and the Illuminati had been founded by two Jews whose names they told me, who, through disgrace, are escaped from memory;

3" That, in short, all sects would trace their origins back to them anti-Christian, <|who are now so numerous in the world that they affected several million people of all genders, of every stall, of every rank and of every condition;

4® That in our Italy alone, they had more supporters than eight hundred ecclesiastics, both royal and secular, among the how many priests, public professors, prelates, how many bishops and some cardinals; that soon they would not despair would not have a pope of their own (and assuming that it was (a schismatic, the thing becomes possible);

660

ANNEXED DOCUMENT B

5* That apparently in Spain they had a large number of supporters, even in the clergy, although in this kingdom was still in force the cursed Iiii|uisilion;

6. That the Bourbon family was their greatest enemy, that in a few years they hoped to annihilate it;

7® That in order to better deceive the Clirollians they themselves feigned my being Christians, travelling and passing from one country to another with fake baptismal certificates that they bought from certain stingy and corrupt priests;

8» That they hoped, through intrigue and money, to obtain from all governments a civil registry, as was already the case for them arrived in several countries;

9® That, possessing the rights of citizens like everyone else, they bought as many houses and as much land as they could, and that, through trickery, they would quickly succeed in – this is starting to become apparent in Tuscany, where the Jews are exercising with impunity the most exorbitant and damned buildings and continuous acquisitions both in the countryside (in the cities;

10® That by co-sequerit they promised themselves in less than one century to be masters of the world, to abolish all other sects to make their rule prevail, to make as many synagogues as churches. Christians, and to reduce the rest of them to a true slavery wave.

These, sir, are the terrible plans of the Jewish nation, which I have... Heard with my own ears. Undoubtedly, it's impossible that they can all carry them out, because they are coilraies at infallible promises of Jesus Christ, to his Church, and to the pro* phetias which clearly announce that this ungrateful and obstinate people must remain a wanderer and vagabond in contempt and slavery, until that he may know the true Messiah whom he crucified, and do in lately, the consolation of the Church has been found in embracing the faith. However, they can do a lot of harm if the governments ments continue to favor them, as they have done since number of years. It would therefore be desirable for a pen energetic and superior like yours, opened the eyes of the aforementioned governments and instructed them to turn this people in the objection that is due to him, and in which our fathers, more politicians, and wiser than us, always took care to... tenii-. That is what, sir, I invite you to in particular and asking you to forgive an Italian, a soldier, the errors you will find in this letter all sorts of things. I will desires from the hand of God the most beautiful reward for all |the luminous writings with which you have enriched his Church and which he ins- worse for you, to whomever reads them the highest elimine and the most pro- With deep respect, in which I am honored to be, Sir, your very-bumble and very-obedient servant.

Jean-Baptiste Bimoninz.

THE ROLE OF THE JEWS IN THE UNIVERSAL REVOLUTION 661

P. 8. – If in this country I can be of any help to you in any way, and if you need new insights into the content of That letter, let me know; you will be obeyed.

Following the copy of this letter are the annotations the following, written by Father Barruel at three successive periods:

NB l. – On reflection, the purpose of this letter would seem in- believable, and how much, at least in terms of sound criticism, it would require Impossible proofs! I was careful not to publish them.

to Cardinal Fescli, so that he might make use of it with the emperor that he would deem appropriate. I read as much from Mr. üesraarcts, so that he could speak to the chief of police, if he deemed it necessary.

I believe I would have been better off not publishing anything of the sort. – In By sharing this letter with all those people, my purpose was to prevent the effect that the Sanhedrin convened in Paris could have by the emperor. It made an even greater impression on Mr. Dosma-rets, that he was then occupied with research on the conduct of the Jews which, he told me, were worse in Alsace than in Tuscany. He would have He wanted to keep the original: I refused, reserving some for myself. to send to the Pope, as I did with the request to do on Mr. Simo-nini the appropriate information to know the degree of con- The fidelity that his letter deserved. A few months later, His Holiness I had Father Teifa, his secretary, write to me that /they announced the the truthfulness and integrity of Celai who had revealed to me everything he knew claimed to have been a witness.

Subsequently, circumstances did not allow me to com- Having consulted with Mr. Simonini, I felt I should remain silent on the matter of His letter was met with profound silence, firmly convinced that, if I were believed, I could cause a massacre of Jews, and if we no If you didn't believe me, it would have been better to have said nothing.

NB 2. – Upon the King's arrival, I sent him a copy of the letter. – To understand this hatred of the Jews against the kings of In France, we have to go back to Philip the Fair, who, in the year In 1306, he had expelled all the Jews from France and had seized their property. Hence, in the future, a common cause with the Tem-pliers. – Origin of the grade of Kadoch.

NB 3. – I learned through an Iranian-Mason initiated into great mysteries of the sect, that there were many Jews, on everything in the higher ranks.

The specific information we received does not... leave no doubt that the above document originates from the Father Barruel himself. La Civiltà cattolica published it in its issue of October 21, 185', and said that the original of the letter from Simonini, as well as Barruel's letter of dispatch to the Pope, are found in the Vatican archives. The three notes that complete it are very interesting and indicate the conclusion that received, but also from all the political events he had observed.

As for Simonini's communication itself, the indications
The actions it contains are highly plausible. It would make in reality the core of which dates back to the early years of the 19th century this Roman High Vendée, oh the Jews had such a great in fluence, and whose activity Cardinal Gonsalvi si[^]nalail began in 1818.
(See Secret Societies and Society, book n, chapter 9, § 2.)

Note also the lively sympathy that your Jews inanifoslaicnt for Napoleon's government! • and for the destruction of ecclesiastical principalities and the temporal government which he operated. (Book II, Chapter VII, Section G.)

In Germany, said Mr. Janssens, they acclaimed him like the Messiah. that is to say, as the destroyer of the Church. Already in England, at the time of the Reformation, they had flocked under the reign of Edward VI, then under that of Elizabeth, and had surrounded one and the other of their Ilaiteries (1). A little later they tied a close alliance with Cromwell, (who protected them in particular) ment and establishes them definitively in England (2)

In 1806, circumstances seemed even more favorable to them.
bles.

It was at this time that the great Sanhedrin met in Paris.
drin, following which the Jews entered as equals of Christians in modern society and were admitted for the first first time to the fullness of civil and political rights.

Finally, at roughly the same time, in 1811, Joseph de Maistre pointed out to the King of Sardinia the role of the Jews in the {evolution and he returned to it in 1816, in a memorandum addressed to the emperor from Russia. (V. Book ii, chap. v, § 6.)

All these indications corroborate each other, and the Simonini's letter, we believe, can take a place among the documents that shed light on the actions of secret societies in the work of the Revolution.

(1) V. The history of the Jews in Great Britain by (ho rov. Mosos Margolioult (Loudon 1801, 3 vol, iii-8°, t J, pp. 3()3 etsuiv.}. A reformer, Ilugliuos Brotiglitoo, se fil sous bliaabotb le prolocteur ilus Juifs ot lui irausinit dos loUres vraies ou suppo sessions of a rabbi do (lonstaitiuple, Abraliani Iteubou.

(2) Los Juifs so sontaiont lollonoul les in;>i(rd3 sous Cromwell, qn'ila demandôront to aebotor the church of Sdal-Paul to make a synugoguo. VM Margolioulli, History of the Jcu's, l. II, p. 1 to 20. Tovey, .-(Mplm Jutluicü, (O.xford, 1738, iu-4').
Bariett, Révolution d'Anglelerrtf (edition of La llayo l. I, p. 7!*,) raconio (juo les Portugal. "He had seen," he said, "at first glance all the advantages he could gain from

"To shoot in order to secure his dominance."

Attached document C

GEOGRAPHICAL AND STATISTICAL STATE OF FREEMASONRY FRENCH IN DECEMBER 1882

As we saw in Introduction^ 111, Freemasonry French religion is divided into four groups or obediences, depending on of the Grand Orient of France^ of the Supreme Council of the Scottish Rite-I know an ancient accepted, of the Grand Symbolic Scottish Lodge of the Grand General Council of the Eastern Masonic Order of Misraïm or Egypt.

According to various statistical documents relating to the end of In 1882, the Grand Orient of France counted among its obedience, at that time, 273 symbolic lodges (the three pre (first grades) and 46 workshops of the higher grades, the Supreme Council*
The lodge comprises 76 symbolic lodges and 25 high-degree workshops.
Grand Symbolic Lodge, 23 lodges, and the Order of Misraïm, 6 boxes.

The workshops for the higher degrees exist alongside the symbolic lodges.
they are religious; but they have a separate government.

"Since 1872," said Le Monde maçonnique of December 1881, the separation of symbolic workshops and so-called superior workshops laughter is a fait accompli within the Grand Orient of France. Since that time, the general assembly has not dealt with plus the high ranks which fall exclusively under the jurisdiction of the Grand Colonel Council of Rites Supreme Council for France and the colonies; and on the other hand, only the lodges are represented at the assemblies general.

ATTACHED DOCUMENT C

G(ii

These lodges and workshops comprise between 25,000 and 28,000 members.
active. We have seen (Introduction V, and Book III, Chapter XXII, §1) this what should be understood by active members and how few of these figures give an accurate idea of the Mason's real reflection nonsense.

However, we still believe it is useful to publish a geographical table of the symbolic lodges; it will give an idea of the distribution of Masonic forces across the territory.

The letters G.-O. designate the lodges of the Grand Lodge obedience Orient, SC those dependent on the Supreme Council, GLSE those of the Grand Symbolic Scottish Lodge, Mr. those of the Rite of Misraïm.

L

Paris and the Seine department

PARIS

Lodge of the Admirers of the Universe. Venerable: Father Barré, member of the council of the Order, doctor of medicine, rue de Seine, 34. GO

Alsace-Lorraine Lodge. Venerable Master: Brother Diisacq, head of lodge. reau f'i the Seine prefecture, 18 Boulevard Voltaire. GO

Lodge the Beneficent Friends and Immortals of Osiris united. Venerable ble: F.*. Petitfrère, Jules, member of the municipal council of Neuilly-sur-Seine, rentier, Avenue de Neuilly, 94, in Neuilly-on the Seine. GO

Rosicrucian Chapter. The Beneficent and Imitating Friends dOsiris reunited. T.' S.' the F.*. Alôpôe Félin, maker of devices gas station, Boursault Street, 71-73. GO

Lodge of the Friends of the Fatherland. Venerable: Brother Edgar Bordier, lawyer, rue du Vieux-Colombier, '21. G. Ü.

Lodge of the Friends of Progress. Venerable: Brother Léon Rouquier, manufacturer of colors and varnishes, in Dugny near Le Bourget (Seine). G. Ü.

Lodge of the yim/s of Tolerance. Venerable: Brother Murat André mechanic, rue de Sanibre et Meuse, 28. GO

Logo of the Triumphant Friends. Venerable: Brother Jules Matignon. owner, rue Cadet, 18. G. Ü.

Lodge of Friendship. Venerable Master: Brother Oolmas, merchant rie, rue Chapon, 2(1. GO

Lodge Vateher. Venerable Master: Brother Alfred (owner) rentier, boulevard des Batignolles, S2. GO

Masonic Observance 665

V'Avenir Lodge. Venerable Master: Father Jean-Pierre Barbe, dentist, 34 rue Mont'nartre. G0

Lodge of United Benefactors. Venerable Master: Brother Château, Accountant
ble, rue de Villiers, 60, in Levallois-Perret (Seine). 00

Lodge Chapter and Areop.*. The Clement Friendship. Venerable: the

F. *. Rémond, Divisional Inspector of Customs, rue Ursuline convent, 16, in St-üenis. G0

Chapter of Rose Croix. Clement Friendship. T.. S.\leF.. Tho-
Rin Jules, accountant, 18 rue des Trois-Bornes. G0

Council of Knights Kadosh. Clement Friendship. President; Brother Du Hamel, 32nd member of the council of the Order and of the Grand College of Rites, lawyer at the Paris Court of Appeal, head of the cabinet of President of the Republic, member of the General Council of Pas-de-Calais, rue des Martyrs, 41. G. 0,

Clement Lodge Cosmopolitan Friendship. Venerable; Brother Tessier, Armand, sales representative, Richard Lenoir Boulevard
28. G0

Lodge of United Hearts. Venerable; Fr.*. Bazin François, professed Geography department, 98 Boulevard Voltaire. G0

Lodge the Reüoir (previously under the title of /fenri Vénérable: Brother Martin, member of the Council of the Order, member of the General Council of the Seine and the Paris Municipal Council, former notary, rue du Faubonrg-poi.ssonnièr»*, 129. G 0.

Lodge of the Disciples of the Crof/rès. Venerable: Brother Dreyfus, member member of the ONLRO council, former head of the sons-se-State office at the Ministry of Education, rue d'Université, 25.

G0

Lodge of Human Rights. Venerable: Brother Lepellelier
Edouard, man of letters, 19 rue Bergère. G0

Lodge of the School. Venerable Master: Brother Edouard Vorséjoux, employee, Lepic passage, 6. G. 0.

Mutual School Lodge. Venerable; Brother Dréo, member of the Chamber of Deputies, rue de Savoie, 5, G. 0.

meter, rue des Boulangers, 25. G. 0.

Mutual Education. Venerable: 1st Brother Ernest Rousselle wine commissioner, member of the municipal council of Paris, Place des Vosges, 9. G. 0.

Lodge YKquity. Venerable Master: Fr.*. Marchai Gharies-Just, negotiator ciant, i'ue d'Aboukir, 21. G. 0.

Logo VEsprit Mokrne. Venerable: Fr.-. Philipon, pharmacist
30 Rue des Ecoles. G0

Masonic Lodge France. YônévAhU: Brother Laurent, merchant iron, boulevard Richard Lenoir, 82.

Lodge of the Fraternity of Peoples. Venerable; Fr.-. Zypressom-Baum, head of accounting, rue de Malte, 17. G. 0.

666

ANNEX C

Lodge Chapter and Areop.*. the United Inseparable Brothers, Venerable ble: Fr. Daridan, commercial employee, rue Soubise, 5.
(A St-Ouen, 5), (Seine).

Chapter of the Rosicrucians, the United and Inseparable Brothers. T.*. S.', Fr. Léon Masse, member of the council of the Order, solicitor near the Civil Court of First Instance of the Seine, 12, rue Gaillon. G0

Council of Knights Kadosh, the United and Inseparable Brothers. President tooth: Brother Ferdeuil, a member of the Grand College of Rites, had cat at the Court of Appeal, former vice-president of the prefectural council ture of Loir-et-Cher, former sub-prefect, rue des Sts Pères, il.
G. 0.

Lodge of Free Men. Worshipful Master: Brother Anatole Danel, representative of commerce, rue de Belleville, 33. G. 0.

Lodge IsisMontyon. Venerable: Brother Canis, jeweller, assistant to the Mayor of the 3rd arrondissement, Me du Temple, 101. G0

Chapter of the Rose-Croix, His Alontyon. T.-. S.*, the Brother Lemaire, owner, Brolcuil Avenue, G0. G. 0-

Jerusalem Lodge of the Egyptian YalUes. Venerable: the Brother Level

levard de Courcelles, 11. G. ü.

Lodge of Justine. Venerable: Brother Opportun, merchant-tailor, 40 rue de riivoli. G: 0.

Lodge of Freedom of Conscience. Venerable Master: Brother Sanzel. Eilix, sta-tuaire, quai du Château. 10-G0

Logo: The Link of Peoples. Venerable: Brother*, Gassmann, Édouard.
cartoonist, 23 rue des Trois-Frères. G0

Lodge Perfect Equality. Venerable: Brother Herpin, member of Medical Council, Doctor of Medicine, Pachot Street, Livry (Seine-et-Oise). Address: Mr. Simon, 217 rue de Charenton.
Paris. G0.

Lodge of Progress. Venerable: Brother Émile Trélat, architect, director of the special school of architecture^ rue Deufert-Roche-reau, 17. G0

Renaissance Lodge. Venerable Master: Brother François Elloy, printer typographer, 28 rue de Sambre-et-Meuse. G0

Rose Lodge of Perfect Silence. Venerable: Father Wyroutboff, member bre and Isecrélaire of the Council of the Order, man of letters, bou-Leviard St-Germain, 127. G0

Free Hive logo. Venerable: Brother Gouvenot, representative of commerce, boulevard Voltaire, 280. G0

Saint Peter's Lodge of True Experts. Venerable Master: Brother Duplai.v, building inspector for the Pa- company
Ris, Avenue de Ségur, 6. G0

Lodge the Temple of the /4mis of French Honor. Venerable: the F.'.
Lemaire, owner, 60 Avenue de Breteuil. G0

Lodge of the United Workers. Venerable: Brother Crespiu de la Jean-

FRENCH MASONIC GEOGRAPHY 067

Dominique, owner, St-Dominique St-Germain Street,
95. G 0.

Lodge of the Venerable Trinoiop/ia: Brother Édouard Chevalon,
Professor, 72 Avenue St-Ouen. G0

Lo^^eUnion FraUrneUe, Venerable: Br.-. Richel, Clément-Félix,

French Rescue Company, 41 Avenue de Rüpera, G0

Masonic Union Lodge. Worshipful Master: Brother Alphonse Delacroix, commission agent, rue Montmartre, law. G0

Lodge Union and Perseverance. Venerable Master: Brother Charles Fontainas. lawyer, rue de la Victoire- 10. G0 (1)

Lodge of True Friends. Venerable: Brother*. Bonnel, Hippolyte, mar-Tailor's shop, rue du Commerce, 00. G0

Lodge the Friends of Humanity. T.', rue du Champ d'Asile, 03, (14* district). Venerable: Brother Jacques Édouard, merchant Vice-President of the Paris City Council, rue du Château 133. Address: Mr. Taltard, St-Antoino Street, 170, G0

Lodge of Law and Justice. Formerly The Indivisible Hearts of Ba-gneux.T.'. rue du Champ d'Asile, 03. Venerable: the F *. Cin-qualbre, Arthur, bookseller-publisher, rue Monsieur le Prince, 48. G0

Lodge of Free Thought. T.', rue du Champ-d'Asile, 63, (14'' rounded (seeding). Venerable: Brother Fillion, civil registry employee, rue Vercingetorix, 37. G. ü.

Chapter Lodge. The North Star. T.*., rue de la Condamine, 77, bis. Venerable: the Brother S. of the Iérédia, member of the Chamber Members of Parliament, former president of the Paris City Council, 147 Boulevard Péreire G0

Chapter of Hose-Croi.v U Polar Star. T.'.S.'. Clément Joseph, accountant, avenue Peroiro, in Asnières (Seine). G. ü.

Lodge of United Freemasons. T.*, rue des Sablons, 77 (16th arrondissement) (ment). Venerable: Brother Henri Thulié, member of the Council of the Order, member and former president of the City Council from Paris, Doctor of Medicine, Boulevard Beauséjour, 31. Address: M. Ricliard, rue de Passy, 00. G0

Lodge L'Union de Belleville. 'l'*. rue de la Mare, 22- Venerable: the F.'. Voisin, Alexis, member of the Paris Municipal Council, engineer Electrician, 41 St-Fargeau Street. G0

\i0go The Zealous Philanthropists. V.'. rue Croix-Nivert, 1.54. Venerable ble: F.'. December Alonnier, publicist and printer, rue de Vaugirard, 320. G0

Lodge L'A//tance, n° 170 T,*, rue Jean-Jacques Rousseau. 35. Veneration Address: F.-. Saunier, rue des Bernardins, 7. SC

Lodge Les Amis Inséparables y 150. T.-, rue Jean-Jacques Rousbucket, 35, Venerable: Brother Morin, rue du Quatre-Septembro,

2. SC

(1) All the logos above meet at the Temple of the Grand Orient, rue Cadet_

668 ATTACHED DOCUMENT C

Scottish Rite Lodge, No. 240. T.-. me Jean-Jacques Rousseau,
.34. Venerable: Brother Messner, 15 rue de Marseille. S C.

Lodge Les Écossais Inséparables, No. 58, T.-, rue Jean-Jacques Rousseau bucket, 35. Venerable: Brother Laurent, St. Denis Street, 8, h Good-dy, (Seine) SC

Lodge the [Iospilalie>'s of the Pay!im, n* 107. T.', rue Jean Jacqties Rousseau, 35. Venerable: Brother Bernard, Achille, rue de Breta gne, 39. SC

Lodge of the lîospilnliers of Sl-Oïien, n® 1.35. T.'. me Jean-Jacques Rousseau, 35. Venerable: Brother Mongnon, rue des Vertus, 22.
SC

Lodge of the Indivisible Scots, No. 65. T.', me Joan-Jacqties Rous-Bucket, 35. Venerable: Brother Dulernez, 35 rue de Lyon. SC

Lodge {^Masonic Liberty, n« 188. T.* rue Jean-Jacques Rousseau, 35. Venerable: Brother Decliosal, Quai Valmy, 51. 8. G.

Lodge Le Libre Examen, n» 217, T.*, rue Jean Jacques Rousseau, 35.
Venerable: Brother Leblanc, Place L'Ereire, 5. S C.

Lodge Mont-Sindi, n* 6. T.', rue Jean-Jacques Rousseau. 35.
Venerable: Father Foucault, 27 rue Richelieu. SC

Osiris Lodge, No. 150, 35 rue Jean-Jacques Rousseau. Venerable ble: F.*. Dacosta, rue Gay-Lussac, 48. 8. G.

Lodge of the United Philanthropists, «®G6. T.*, rue Jean-Jacques Rousseau bucket, 35. Venerable: Brother Fleury, rue du Dragon, 38. C.

Logo la Prévoyance, 7i® 88. T.', rue Jean-Jac(iues Rousseau, 35.
Venerable: ie F.*. Leullier, rue de l'Intrepôl, 26 SG

Lodge La Rose Ecossaise, jv* 140. T.*, rue Jean-Jacques Rousseau, 3.5.
Venerable: Brother Bastion, 33 Rue du Roi de Sicile. 8. G.

Lodge the United Scottish Rite, u" 138. T,', rue Jean-Jacques Roussé bucket, 35 Venerable: the F'*. Filassier, boulevard Magenta, 1.36.

Lodge Les Trinilnirrs, n° 3. T.*, rue Jean-Tarques Rousseau, 35. Venerable: F. *. Clerc, Jules, cited Gaillard, 7. SC

Lodge of the Peoples, «® 131. T.*, rue Jean-Jacques Rousseau, 35. Venerable; the Father. *. Besnard, rue d'Argout, 16. 8. C.

Lodge of the True Hunchbacks of Poix, No. 110. T.'. Jean-Jacques Street Rousseau, 35. Venerable: Brother G.

Lodge of the True Brothers united inseparable, no. 2.35. T.', rue Jean-Jacques Rousseau. .35 Venerable: F.*. Maigret, me des Daughter.s-8t-Thornas. 9 SG

Lodge of the United Indivisible Hearts, No. 197, T.-, rue de Vanves, at Paris Montrouge. Venerable: Brother Guillou, city of Plans tes, 17, in Paris. 8, C.

Lodge of the Masonic Federation, No. 23. T.-, Avenue de la Motte-Piquet, 23. GL 8. lil.

Lodge La Franche Union No. 10. T.', me Payonne, 5. Venerable: the F.-. Froger, 49 rue Condorcet. GLS F

Lodge of the Heroes of Humanity, No. 7, T.', 5 Payeime Street. Venerable: leF.*. Perrotet, rue Gay-Lussac, 37. GLS É.

FRENCH MASONIC GEOGRAPHY 669

Lodge of Independence, No. 17. T.*, 5 rue Payenne. Venerable Master; the F. *. Cuenot, rue Fauvet, 7. GL 8. É.

Lodge the Scottish Jerusalem, No. 2, 5 rue Payenne. Venerable: the F. *. Bertaux, at the Ministry of Finance, rue de Rivoli, door A. 6. LSL

Lodge of Justice, 7th arrondissement, 3rd arrondissement. T. *. rue Payenne, 5th arrondissement Miss, rue du Cherche-Midi, 14 G. L, S. 15.

Lodge of Liberty, Masonic Lodge 15. T., 5 rue Payenne. Venerable: F.*. Caltieux, rue de Glaire, 4. Address: Mr. Mollard, rue Beaubourg, 54. GL S É.

Lodge the Liyiie aroile, n® G" T. *. rue Payenne, 5. Venerable: the F.'. Pichenot, rue Hippolyte-Ijebas, 2. GL 8. É.

Osiris Lodge, 14. T., Payenne Street, 5. Venerable; Brother. Da-Costa, 48 rue Gay-Lussac. Address: Mr. Bouriof, rue de Jouy, 12 GLS É.

Lodge of the Seven United Scots, No. 18 T.', 5 rue Payenne. Venerable Master: F.*. Filassier, Boulevard Magenta, 136. GL 8. É.

Loge la Sociale, n'^ 22. T., rue de la Fontanelle, 27. Venerable: the F.. Co.'îtor, rue du Poteau, 6. GLS É.

Lodge of Work No. 21. T •. 5 rue Payenne. Venerable: Brother*, Chassaing, rue Vieille-du-Temple. GLS É.

Union and Benevolence Lodge. T.*, 73 Avenue d'Italie. Worshipful Master: the F •. Friquet, rue Lesdiguières, 7. GL 8. B.

Lodge of the True Faithful Friends, No. 5. T., 5 rue Payenne. Venerable: F.. Haissôlin, Cour des Miracles. GLSB

Lodge of the Rainbow. T.-, rue Jean-Jacques Rousseau, 35. Venerable ble: F.*. Morel, Paul, rue de Bretagne, 54. M.

Lodge the Burning Bush. T.«. 35 rue Jean-Jacques Rousseau. Vé-î: arable: the F.-. Osseliili fils, rue Commiues, 13. M.

DEPARTMENT OF THE SEINE

Vincennes. – Lodge Le Globe. T.'. Avenue des Charmes, 5. Venetian rable: F. G. Villeneuve, retired officer, rue de l'Uôtel-City, 23. G0

Saint-Ouen. – Lodge of the Hospitallers of Saint-Ouen, No. 4. T, '. street of the Chapel, 1. Venerable: Brother Cardyvet, rue Beryéluis, 46. GL 8 E.

Boulosne. – Lodge of Charity and Progress. T.*, rue d'Aguesseau, Venerable: Fr. A. Janvier, retired special receiver, 1 rue des Dames, Batignolles, Paris. G0

Clichy-la-Garenne.–Loge les/î^noüotcur^. R.\ rue de Paris, 62. Venerable: Father Roche, employee of the State Railways, National Boulevard, 81. G0

Issy. – Loge la Solidarité. T,, Place des Marronniers, 3. Venerable Address: F.. Leborgne, rentier, rue Gaston St-Paul, 6, Paris. Address: Mr. Auguste Hude, rue de Vanves (in Issy). 6. 0.

Levallois-Perret. – Loge les Travailleurs. T.*, rue de Gourcel-

670 ATTACHED DOCUMENT C

the, 85. Venerable: Father Trôbois, owner and mayor, rue des Herbert Brothers, 02. (J0

Nouilly-sur-Seine. – Loge la Lumière. T.–, rue de l'Eglise, 15 (bis). Venerable: Fr. Vacca, Edinontl, Professor, avenue of Neuilly, 175. G0

Nogent-sur-Seine. – Loge la Nognitaise. T *. avenue (le Ferreux, 71. Venerable: Father Louis Mullex, representing commerce, boulevard de Slnisbourg, 0'.l, in Nogeil-snr-Seine. G0 Pantin. – Lodge of Democracy, Masonic. Venerable: the Brother. Péan, member of the council of ('(Jrdre, member of the council municipal and mayor dos Lilas, district councilor for the Pantin canton, rubber manufacturer, carpet avenue-Green, 1.3, in Les Lilas (Seine). G0

St-Denis. – Lodge of the Humanistic Society. T.–, rue de Paris, 147 bis. Venerable: Brother II. Leroy, transport entrepreneur by water, member of the municipal council, rue Denferl Rocliereau, in St-Deuis (Seine). G0

II

Neinc-et-Marne, Seinc-el-Oise, Oise, Aisne

SEINE-ET-MARNE

Melun. – Lodge for the Children of Iliram. T.*, rue du Ghûteau, 18. Venerable: F.'. Lagache, Gustave, director of the Fon factory taine-Ronde in Cesson (Seine-el-Marne). Address: Mr. .Mosny. Wine merchant, from La Vannerie, 18, in Melun. G0

SEINE-ET-OISE

Versailles. – Lodge of the Reunited Philanthropic and Discreet Friends. T.*, former watch shop, 52 Avenue de St-Cloud. Venerable. F.\ Lasne, owner, Impasse des Cheveau-Légers, 2. G 0.

Mantes. – Lodge Liberty through work. T.–, rue de la Gabelle, 19. Venerable: F. Üesgranges, Victor, owner, in Liinay (Seine-et-Oise) G0

Maule. – Logo Order and Progress. T.*, rue Quincami)oix, 1. Venerable: F.'. Piton, Alexandre, doctor of medicine, suburb des Moussets. G0

Meulan. – Friends of PUumanUè logo. T.*, ciuai de l'Arquebuse, 2. Venerable; Brother Monnereau, wine merchant, rue de City Hall. G0

Montmorency. –Jean-Jacques Housseau Lodge. T.–, Market Street, 3. Venerable: 1st F.–.Maricot, Edouard, owner, rue de la Châ-

FRENCH MASONIC AEOGRAM Q71

Nenluy-sar-Marne. – Star of Future Lodge. T.*, avenue la Station, 67. Venerable: Brother Garaudé, retired, rue de la Pe-louse, 13. 6. 0.

Pontoise. – Lodge of the Friends of the People. T.*, rue Neuve-Saint-Jacques, 2. Venerable: Brother Arthur, iron and char merchant Okay, 2 rue de l'Hôtel-Dieu. G0

Rambottillet. – VamiiU Discreet Lodge. T.*, rue d'Angivilliers, 23. (Formerly at Neauphie-le-Gudteau.) Venerable: Brother Joly, Charles, architect of the Palace, 30 rue de l'Hôpital. Address: Mr. Laigneau, baker, 61 rue Nationale – G0

Reneil. – The Faithful of Hiram. T.'. Boulevard des Ormes, 28. Vé-nerable: F. Mantion, Jules, arcbitecte, rue des Hautes-Eaux, 23, in Bougival (Seine-et-Oise). G0

Argenteuil. – Lodge VEspérance fraternelle n'^175. T.\ rue du Port. Venerable: F. Desbleumortiers, Montmorency Boulevard, SG

Montlhery. – Lodge of the Friends of Progress, no. 161. T.*, Place du Market, Venerable: Brother Prou, pension master, SG

Tholry (Seine-et-Oise). – Lodge of Work and Peace, no. 233. T.'. Main Street. Venerable: Brother Pellegrini, of Antouillet, by Thoiry (Seine-et-Oise). 8. G.

Le Pecq (Seine-et-Oise). – Lodge of the Freethinkers. T.*.Vénérable.... GLSE

St-Germikin-en-Laye. ~ Lodge Good Faith. F.*, rue d'Ayen, 9: Venerable: Brother Dambrino, member of the municipal council, Wine merchant, 4 rue de Mantes. G0

OISE

Beonvals. – Lodge VEloile de l'Espérance. T.*, rue du Théâtre, 1. Venerable: Brother Gérard Ernest, Doctor of Medicine, con General bailiff of the Oise, Place St-Michel, 3. G0

Greii. – Lodge of the United Masons of Oise. T.*, rue du Pré-St-Mé-dard, 7. Venerable: Brother Lance Louis, merchant, rue Monge, 8t, in Paris. G0

Château-Thierry. – Jean la Fontaine Lodge. T.*, rue Jean-la-Fountain, 7. Venerable: Brother Fleury, architect, avenue de the Republic. G0

La)n.– The Brothers of Mont Laonnais. T.*, St-Just rampart Vé-Inable: F.-Crépy, Emile, merchant. G0

St-Quentia. – Lo^i Justice and Truth. T.\ boulevard du 8 october. Venerable: Brother Lecertisseur, landowner, deputy mayor at La Fôre (Aisne). G0

672

ATTACHED DOCUMENT C

III

Northern Region (Nord, Pas-de-Calais, Ardennes, Soiiime)

Lille. – Fidelity Lodge. W* T', rne Neve-des-Meuniers, 53. Venerable: Br*. Desinoiis, rne natisbonne, l,!. SC

Lille. -- Lodge the Itéorü of the North^ n* ?5i T.– nie Vanbaili, 2. Véné-maple: the F.–. Ilirily, pinc, riieSl-Finniil, 6. SC

Cambrai. – Themis Lodge. T.'. |iGtite rue Vauderbnrck. Venerable: F.–. Depreux, TJiéopliile.avocaf, rue des Anges, l. G0

Cambrai. – Lodge La Solidavilé traUrnelle .Véné–

rally.SC

Dunkirk. – Lodge of Virtue. T.–, rne David IV-Viigers, 30. Venô-rablü: F.*. Foulon, merchant on rue «les Vieux-Quartiers, 22. G0

PAS-DE-CALAIS

Bonlogne-snr-Mer. – l..oge Wamity. T.'. of the polite shore, Boulevard Dailnou. Venerable: Br*, Lagage Saint-Gesl, member . of the Bar Council, lawyer, former sub-prefect, general councillor General, 48 Siblequin Street. G0

Charleville. – Lodge of the Fraternity. T.*, rue do Tivoli. Venerable Master: F.'. Dévies, grain merchant, Forest Street. G. 0.

Sedan. – Equality, Justice, Progress Lodge. T.'. guardhouse of The old fort of La Rochette. Venerable: Father Louis Guittard, dyer, Cassino suburb, 20. G. 0.

SUM

Amiens. – Loge la Rénovation. T.', rue Sire-Firmin-le-Roux. Vén-Manager: F.*. Poulie, olficicr of the academy, member of the council of the Order and of the Grand Council of the Hiles, Councillor to the Court Douai appeals court and municipal councillor in Amiens, rue d'Es-quercUin, 10, in Douai. G 0.

FRENCH MASONIC GEOGRAPHY

673

IV

Normandy (Seine-Maritime, Calvados, Eure, Orne, Manche)

LOWER SEINE

Rouen. – Lodge of the United Arts. Carmelite Monastery, 20. Venerable rable; F.*. Godefroy, Jules, owner, rue St-Maur, 79. G. 0, Gliapilre of Rose-Croix. T.-. S.-, the F.'. Godefroy, Jules.
Council of Kadosli Knights. President: Brother Viénot, 33 member of the Council of the Order and of the Grand College of Rites lawyer admitted to the commercial court, 37, rue de la Vicomté/
G0

Rouen. – Lodge of the Tested Constancy, 20 rue des Carmes.
Venerable; Father Georges Dubreuil, Doctor of Medicine, rue of the Savonnerie, 20. G0

Rouen. – La Persévérance Couronnée. T.', rue des Carmes, 20. Vé-Nerable: F.*. Lesueiir, Jules, merchant, 39 rue St-Éloi. G0
Rouen. – 20 Rue des Carmes. Venerable: F.'. Lher-Mitte, merchant, rue aux Ours, 40. G0

Address: F.'. Lefebvre, master shoemaker, Grande Rue du Follet, 120.
G0

Le Harre. – Logo VAménité. T.–, rue Caroline, 10. Venerable:

F.–. Sénécart, geologist and archivist, 77 rue Thiers. G0

Le Havre. – Scottish Volier Lodge, l. T.*, rue Caroline, 10.
Venerable: Brother Leclerc, Cours de la République, 174. GL SE

Le Havre. – The Three UTs, 10 rue Caroline. Venerable: the

F. '. Fleury, Léon, merchandise broker, 70, rue d'Orléans.

G0 '

Chapter of the Rosicrucians. T.–. S. . the F.. Reinhart, knight ka-dosh, merchant, 19 rue Corneille.

Fécamp. – Lodge of the Triple Unity, rue des Près. Venerable: Brother*.
Biot, annuitant, mayor in Elretat. G0

CALVADOS

Caen. – Lodge of Themis. T.', rue Neuve Saint-Jean, 44. Venerable:
F.–. Dufour, Gustave, landowner, retired, rue Caponnière,
20. G0

Chapter of the Rosicrucians. T.. S.–, the F.. Laflctay, Adolphe, born gociant, rue Neuve-St-Jean, 3.7. G0

Lisieux. – Lodge of Humanity. T.*, rue Petite Couture. Venerable:
Lechevallier, Bernard, retired, rue de Launay, in Pont-l'Évêque,
G0

neither

43

674 ATTACHED DOCUMENT G

Tronville. – Star of the Two Poles. T., rue d'Isly, 15. Vé* nerable: F.–Barhier, Louis, house painter, rue Édouard Larue, in Le Havre. G0

ORNE

i*.

EURE

Evreux. – Lodge of Sincerity of the Eure. T.*. Impasse Panelte. Venerable: F. *. Lapeyruque, Henri-Édouard, rentier. G0

Pacy-sur-Eure. – Lodge of Union and Progress. T.–, rno of Point-dii-Venerable Brother: Brother Ambrose Pnlly, member of the Council General of Eure, owner, in Houlbeo-Coclierel. G. 0.

Vernon-sstr-Seine. – Lodge VEtoile Neustriennc. T.–, rno Rignier. Venerable: Brother Georges-Constant Bourguignon, merchant in Grains, Gabelle rates. G. 0.

V

Brittany (Northern Côtes-d'Armor, Ille-et-Vilaine) Finistère, Morbihan, Loire-Inférieure)

COTES-DU-NORD

ILE-ET-VILAINE

Rennes. – Lodge La Parfaite Union. T.*, rue du Mail-d'Onge, 13. Venerable: Phelipot, merchant, rue St-Louis, .30. Address: to Mr. Paifon, 13 rue du Mail-d'üriges. G0

Chapter of Pose-Croix. TS the F.'. Louveau, professor Medical school. G. 0.

Saint-Malo. – Lodge La Triple-Essence, rue Mahé de la Bourdon-Venerable: Brother Edward Leooutcux, agent of the com South-Western company. G.0.

FINISTÈRE

Brest. – Lodge of the Friends of Sully^ T., 4 rue Gual. Venerable: the F.. Cormier du Médic, Place de la Liberté, 8. SC

FRENCH MASONIC GEOGRAPHY 675

MORBIHAN

Lorient. – Nature and Philanthropy Lodge. – T.\ Maury house, Place Alsace-Lorraine, 1. Venerable: Brother Rondeaux, Mayor, Former sub-prefect, property owner, 26 rue de la Comédie. G0

Chapter of Rose Croix, TS the F. Esmiol, Jean-Antoine, born gociant. G0

LOIRE-INFÉRIEURE

Nantes. – Lodge Peace and Unity. T.', Place de la Bourse, 23. Vé Manager: F. *. Ebstcin, Henri, merchant, 3, rue Suffren. Address: to Mr. Pontuxi, Place de la Bourse, 23. G0

Chapter of the Rosicrucians. T.–. S.–, the F.–. William Sebire, knight Lier Kadosh, stationer, 1 rue Boileau. G0

Council of Knight Kadosh. President: Brother Paul Bayon. Hardware store, 15 rue d'Orléans. G0

Nantes. – Lodge of the Liberated Conscience, No. 212. T.–, Quai de la Fosse, 36. Venerable: Brother Eugène Legal, shipowner. SG

VI

Loiret, Loir-et-Cher, Sarthe, Eure-et-Loir

Mayenne

LOIRET

Orléans. – Lodge of the Emules of Montijon, T.*, rue des Turcies, 22. Venerable: Brother Gavot, brewer, 18 rue du Héron. Address: Mr. Rachet, Place du Grand Marché, 17. G0

LOIR-ET-CHER

Montrichard. – Lodges the Children of the Cher Valley. T. *. place of the Great Market. Venerable: the F. Supligeon, Silvain, painter in buildings. G0

SARTHE

EURE-ET-LOIRE

Chartres. – Lodge of the Beauceron Franchise. SC

MAYENNE

676

ANNEX DOCUMENT C

VII

Vendée, Deux-Sèvres, Vienne, Maine-et-Loire,

Indre-et-Loire

Vendée

La Roche-flur-Toii. •– Lodge Vendée Fraternity, T., rue des Gardens. Venerable: 1st F.. Motbeaii, owner, member of the City council. GO

DEUX-SÈVRES

Niort. – Lodge Les Amis de l'Ordre n° 78. T.*, rue de la Juiverie.
Venerable Brother Pellevoisin, Mayor of Niort. SC

VIENNA

Poitiers. – Logo Les Amis Liétmis. T., 22 rue du Trottoir. Venerable rable: leF.. Guimbaud J.-B.-lippolyte, member of the Council of the Order, merchant, deputy mayor, rue des Carmélites, IG, GO

Chatellerault. – riivmtV.'T.–. Impasse de la Guadeloupe. Venerable ble: the F.–. Girard, Edouard, founder, rue d'Autrau, 41. GO

MAINE-ET-LOIRE

Angers. – Logo Work and Perfection. 1.–. rue Cordelle, 1, near
From the Place du Ralliement. Venerable Brother Robert Anatole, Lawyer at the Court of Appeal, Borough Councillor, 3 rue Boisine. GO

Saintinttr.— Lodge of Perseverance. T.*, rue Baillé. Venerable: the F. Piéron, accountant, rue Porte-Neuve. G0

INDRE-ET-LOIRE

Toars. — Lodge the Demophites. T. Jerusalem Street II. Venerable: F.*. Menou, Constant, member of the Municipal Council, born gociant, rue Ste-Martiie 4. G0

Tours. — Lodge of the Scottish Perseverings 177. T.*, Broten- Street Venerable: Brother Beaugin, rue du Commerce, 7U. SC

Tours. Lodge of the Children of Truth. T.*, 4 rue de la Paix. Venerable saddle; the F.'. Rcboulloan, rue d'Kntraigues, 04. M.

Ghlnon. — Lodges the Children of Illabclais. T. *. rue 8l-Maurice, 02. Venerable: Brother Faucillon-Bouclier, farmer in Haute-Olive (Chinon). G0

FRENCH MASONIC GEOGRAPHY

677

VIII

Eher, Indre, Creuse, Haute-Vienne, Corrèze, Cantal, Haute-Loire, Puy-de-Dôme, Allier, Nièvre,

GBER

INDRE

Issoudun. — Lodge La Gauloise, T.*, 8 rue Surrerie. Worshipful Master: the F.'. Lecherbonnier, Alexandre, owner and mayor. G0

GREUZE

La Souterraine. — Lodge of the United Brothers of the Creuse, T., at the Rou» Venerable: Brother. Gagnadre, Ernest, rentier, rue du Fau- Lavaui town. Address: Mr. Jules Sallet, cabinetmaker, suburb [of Limoges, 24 (in La Souterraine). G0

HAUTE-VIENNE

Limoges. — Lodge of the United Artists. T.—, 20 rue Gaignol. Venerable rable: F.'. Thuillat, Louis, insurance director, old

Limoges. – Loge VEtoile Limousine^ 211. T.*, rue Gaignol. Vene-
Address: F.-Soumy, Faubourg Montmaillé, 4. SC

GORRÈZE

Tulle. – Lodge of the Intimate Fraternity. T.*. 4. rue des Portes Glianac.
Venerable: Brother J.-B. Vauzanges, bailiff, rue de la Barrière, 19. GO

Brive. – Lodge & Fraternity. T.-, rue de Lestangi Boulangerie coopérative). Venerable: Brother Auguste Lecherbonnier, lawyer, Members of the Chamber of Deputies. GO

GANTAL

Anrillac. – Lodge of Free Thought, No. 222. T.', rue des Carmes. Vé-Manageable: the F.*. Casse, rue des Forgerons. SC

HAUTE-LOIRE

678

ATTACHED DOCUMENT C

PUY-DE-POME

Clermont-Ferrand. –■ Lodge of the Children of Gergovia. T.\ street Neuve Ste-Claire, :?8.Vônéable:lo I'*. Fournier, Louis-Casimir, accounting officer (retired military ministerial officer).
Address: Mr. Oomini (jue, Picrre, hommc do lettres, rue du Dois de Gros, 72. GO

ALLIER

Vichy. – The Cosmopolite Lodge of Vichy. T.', former chapel
Celestines, Victoria Avenue. Venerable: Brother Péliissian Joanny, avenue de la Gare, :l GO

NIÈVRE

Nevers. Lodge of Humanity. T.-, rue du Carrefour, «i. Venerable* ble: F.*. Conitct, landlord, rue St-Martin. GO

IX

Gironde, Dordogne, (:liareiiite*Inférieure, Lot-et-Garonne, Charente, Gers, Landes, Basses-Pyrenees.

GIRONDE

Bordeaux. – Lodge the .^mis united. 1'*. rue Ségalier, N. Venerable: F.'. Louis Carrère, lemonade seller, rue Ste-Calherine, 11)2. G0

Bordeaux. – Loge r//ng'/ü/,çc. T. *. rue Ségalier, 8. Venerable • F.'. Abadie, civil engineer, rue des Angustins, 14. G. 0.
Bordeaux. – Lodge La Candeur. T., rue Nauville, 8. Venerable rable: F.. Edouard Laroque, painting contractor, rue of the Stock Exchange, 12. G0

Chapter of Rose-Croix, Candor. T.*, rue Nauville, 8. T.–.

S. *. : F.'. Tourné, owner, rue Gratelomp, 7.3. G. ü.
Council of the Knight of Kadosli, Candor. T., rue Nau- town, 8. President; F.. Lanusse, retired, rue du Temple, 13. G0

Bordeaux. – Lodge of the Knights of the Fraternity. T.*, rue Ségalier, 8. Venerable; Brother Alfred Soulié, director of the school municipal, rue St-Cbarics, 15. G. 0.

Bordeaux. – Lodge l'Etoile du Progrès (formed from the merger of lodges 'Essence of Peace, the Star of the Gironde and the Triangle).

T. *, rue Ségalier, 8. Venerable: Brother François de la Mare, owner, Orléans alleys, ?' ». 0. 0.

FRENCH MASONIC GIORAPY 679

Bordèauz. – Lof^e Français» (FAquitain », T.–, rue Ségalier, 8. Venerable: Brother Baril, finance employee, in Candéron (Gironde). G0

Chapter of the Rose-Croix. French of Aquitaine, T.. rue Séga- to link, 8. T.. S.. : F.. Moulmier, chief controller of Direct taxes, 149 rue Sainte-Catherine. G0

Bordeaux. – French Lodge elected, Scottish and friendship united, T. *. rue Ségalier, 8. Venerable: Brother Camille Fouaud, doctor

Bgol, rue Ségalier, 8. G. 0

Bordeaux. – Lodge of the Free Knights of Saint Andrew of E-Cosse. T. *. rue Ségalier, 8. Venerable: Brother Ernest Oelcourt, Entrepreneur, 7 rue d'Anjou. Address: ML St-André, rue Ségalier, 8. G0

Bordeaux. – Lodge of the Sisters. T., rue Ségalier, 8. Vé-Manageable: F.. Théodore Moulmier, tax collector. G0

Bordeaux. – Lodge of Sincerity. T, '. 8 rue Nauville. Venerable ble; Father Cabaret, merchant, Brienne quay. G0

Bordeaux. – Lodge the KJritJ. T.*, rue Ségalier, 8. Venerable:
Mr. *. Albert Lacoste, employee, rue du Pas Saint-Georges, 35.
G0

Bordeaux. –Loge l'Avenir, n° 237. T.*, 22 rue Mouneyra.
Venerable; F.*. Bontoux, rue Porte*Dijeaux, 64. S, G.

MonsAgur. – Lodge of Hope. T.*, Grande Street. Venerable: the F.'. Joly, Armand, merchant, in Taillecarat (Gironde). G0

Lormont. Lodge of the Future. Venerable: Brother Louis Chassain.
Pharmacist. – Address: Mr. Dacosta, Place Richelieu, 9, Bor-waters. G0

DORDOGNE

Périguenx. – Lodge La Tolérance, n° 246. T.*, rue du Plantier, 24. Venerable: Brother Paul Richard, at St. Martin. SC

Périgueux. – Lodge the Persevering Friends and the Star of Yesoie reunited n(s. T.'. rue St-Pront, 15. Venerable: Father Gadaud, member of the General Council, Doctor of Medicine, 44 rue Feletz. G0

Sarlat. – Lodge of Perfect Harmony. T.. Town Hall. Venerable Suitable: F.. Rouquette, Auguste, architect. Address: M. Rou-young upholsterer, rue de la Traverse. G0

Terrasson. – Lodge of Hope. T.*, Place Soubignac. Venerable Master:
F. Lombard, Louis, Doctor of Medicine. Address: Mr. Rou-dier, merchant. G0

Nontron. – Lodge of the Future of Nontron. T.*, Brune Street. Venerable:
P.*. Deschamps, banker. G0

Bergvrac. – Lodge of the True Brothers. T., rue Merline. Venerable s F.. Aubertie, Alfred, wine merchant and commission agent, Place de la Sous-Préfecture, 28. G0

ATTACHED DOCUMENT C

CHARENTE

Angoulême. ~ Lodge of the /Friends of Peace. T.-, Place Jean Faure, 11. Venerable: F.-. Jallageas, Marcel, merchant, rue de Pa- laughs. G0

Cognac. —Lodge the Venerable Lihertù: Br.'. Brisson, Jules, Owner. Address; MJ Ganivol lils, substitute judge at the trial civil bureau. G0

Cognac. — Loge le Travail, iv 215. T.', rue des Marchands. Vé- Nerable: F.'. Alpli. Prunier, Avenue de la Gare. SC

Ruffec. — Logo: Les Amis du Lien. T.-, rue de Valence, 2. V^énc'ra- hle: F.'. Poste, Alexandre, master of iiôtol. G0

Lower Gharente

Rochefort, — Lodge VAccord Parfait. T.-, rue Latayetle, l»;>. Venerable ble: F.'. Roche, Antoine, J)liarniacien, member of the Council of the borough and the City Council, rue des Fonderies, 117. G0

La Rochelle. — Lodge 17/n/on Parfaite. T.', small street of the Escale, 1. Venerable: F.-, Grêlât, solicitor, Quai Duperré. G0

Saint-Jean-d'Angély. — Logo VEfjalilè regenerated. T.*, Place Ré- Gnaud. Venerable: Brother Jacques Meunier (June 1st century AD). G0

Royan. —Lodge the Triple Accord. T.'. Grande-Rue, Venerable: F.*. Robert, Alfred, notary. G0

Saintes. — Logo la Sincérité, no. 225. T.*, rue de l'Evêché, 5. Vé- Inable: F.-. Jolinon père, Quai des Frères. SC

LOT-ET-GARONNE

Agen. — Lodge of Fraternal Solidarity. T.*, rue Pontarique, J. V'ée- Manager: Mr. Boucheron, mechanical engineer. G0

Marmande. — Logo of Justice. T.', peristyle of the Place du Mar Dear Venerable; Brother Charles Meynicl, lawyer, substitute judge Deputy mayor at the civil court. G0

Nérac. – Lodge the Sacred Triangle. T. Conference Street. Venerable rable: F.*. Ba.\, Joseph, merchant-tailor. G. 0.

Villeneuve-sur-Lot. – Logo: Le Réveil. T.–, rue Labay, house Eug. Lavergne. Venerable: Brother Léon Drondeau, owner
taire, in Senelles, commune of Villeneuve-sur-Lot. Address:
Mr. Caprais-Laville, owner, Blaniac Street, h. G. 0.

LANDES

GERS

Anch. – Lodge the True Fraternity. T.–, rue de Metz, 111. Venerable;

FRENCH MASONIC GEOGRAPHY 681

F. *. Danos, retired captain, tax collector, "rae de la Pommed'ür. G0

Condom. – Lodge of Augmented Friendship, T.*, rue de Gèle. Venerable Master:
the F.*. Lambert, Pierre, merchant, Quai Labaupoillet. G0

BASBS'PYRENEES

X

ÜACT-IiANGiiEDOG (Haute-Garonne, Hautes-Pyrenees, Ariège, Tarn, Tarn-et-Garonne, Aveyron, Lot)

HAUTE-GARONNE

Toulouse. – Lodge Les Cœurs Réunis. T.*, rue de ^Orient, .3.
Venerable: Brother Paul Godar, a man of independent means, residing at 31 rue des Balances
G0

Chapter of Rose-Groi.K the United Hearts. T.' . 8.–. the F,*. Godar, Paul. G0

Toulouse. – Encyclopedic Lodge^ T.*, rue de l'Orient, 3.
Venerable: F. Baqué, Jules, merchant, rue du Pont-Guillé-Mery, 7. G0

Chapter of the Rose-Croix Encyclopedia. Vol. 8. F. Mérié, Paul, director of the Conservatory of Music. G 0.

Venerable; Brother*. Pech, Charles, shirt cutter, rue Vignaig, 9, G0

Toulouse. – Lodge La Parfaite Harmonie. T.', rue de l'Orient, 3 Venerable: Brother Simon, Pierre, hairdresser, 11 Avenue de Lyon.
G. 0.

Toulouse. – Lodge Les Frais Amis réunis. T.–, rue de l'Orient, 3.
Venerable: Brother Berdoni, typesetter, 4 St. Jerome Street. G0

HAUTES-PYRÉNÉES

ARIÈGE

TARN

Albl. – Lodge of Perfect Friendship. T.*, rue de la Buade, 17. Venerable Rable: F.'. Chay, Joseph, member of the municipal council,

682 ANNEXED DOCUMENT C

Editor-in-chief of the Republican Union of Tarn. Address:
Mr. Auguste Tourel, owner. G0

Castres. – Logo Les Cœurs réunis. T.*, rue Chambre de l'Rdit.
Venerable: Brother Hippolyte Goste, former maker of pa-Piers, president of the chamber of commerce, rue de Stras* town, 8. G. 0

Gaillac. – Orion Lodge. T. *. rue Peyriac, 14. Venerable: Brother •.
Gary Mesmin, lawyer. G0

Tarn-et-Garonne

Gaussade. – Lodge of the Fraternity. T.'. Boudet house, place de
The Great Promenade. "Venerable; Brother Thuet, Aristide, pro..."
private. G0

Castel-Sarrasin. – Lodge Free Thought. T.*. St-Joan district opposite the barracks. Venerable: Brother Jean Baslard, former em-folded from the Orleans railway. G. ü.

AVEYRON

Barry, Artiôres house. Venerable: Brother*. A bric, Ernest, no-silence and mayor G0.

BATCH

XI

Pyrénées-Orientales, Aude, Hérault, Gard,

Lozère, Ardèche

Eastern Gardens

Perpignan. – Lodge of the Friends of Perfect Union. T., former Convent of St-Sauveur, rue St-Sauveur, 24. Venerable: the F.-. Bourguet, Louis, principal customs officer, rue de la Ré public G 0..

Perpignan. – St. John's Lodge of Arts of Regularity, no. 162. T.*, Cote St-Sauveur Street. Venerable: Brother Gaillarde, son, suburb Our Lady. SC

PoH-Vendres. – Maritime industry. SC

AUDE

Gareassonne. – Lodge of the True Friends United. T.*. 5, boulevard St-Michel. Venerable: Brother *. Tesseire. distiller-liquor maker, Grille Street, 32. G. 0.

Gsreassonne. – Lodge VEgalité, n^ 253. T.*, rue Ste-Lucie, 26. Venerable: Br.' Sarraut. SC

GléoaRAPHIB MASONIC FRENCH 683

Lésdfl'nan. – Lodge School of Virtue. <-> T.*. 113, national road of Carcassonne. Venerable: Brother Mas, Etienne, merchant in wines, owner in Oonilhac du Plat*Pays, near Lézignan. G. 0-

Limoux. – Lodge Y Fraternal Alliance. T., rue de l'Olflcialité, H. Venerable: F.. Peyre, Noël, wine merchant. Address: Mr. Raynaud üls, rue Blanqueric, 33. G0

Narbonne– Lodge of Free Thought. T.', rue du Pont, French café. Venerable Brother Louis Fages, city architect. G0

HÉRAULT

Montpellier. – Lodge of the True Faithful Friends^ n. 208. T.*, rue Ma-Guelonne. : F. *. Aussel, rue des Tessiers, 5. SC

Péeénas. – Lodge VFAoHe of the South. T.. Venerable: the F.. Gra. Jules, wine merchant. Address: at the Masonic Lodge that, VEtoile du Midi, at the castle of Mr. Herail. GO

Béziers. – Lodge of the Meeting of Chosen Friends. T.. Descent of the citadel, 12. Venerable: F.. Verdan, Jules, coachbuilder. G.0.
This.–“Lodge of the True Faithful Friends. T.’. Casernes Street. Venerable: F.–. Philomon, Didier, wine merchant, 21, rue de City Hall. GO

This, – Lodge of the United Friends. T.–, Casernes Street. Venerable;

F. Lacoste, Louis, watchmaker, Grand'rue, 18. G, 0.

Lunel. – Lodge of the Moon and Crescent. 1.*. National road, 113. Venerable: Brother Jules Grand, merchant clerk. G. 0.

GARD

Nîmes. – Echo Lodge of the Grand Orient. T.*, Boulevard de la Madeleine, 4. Venerable: Brother Ali Margarot, member of the Con-Order seat, banker, mayor, Quai de la Fontaine. G. 0.

Alais. LogQ VEtoile des Céennes. T.–. 8, quai Neuf and rue Savy. Venerable: Brother*. Queydan, Albert, accountant. G. 0.

Pont-Saint-Esprit. – Lodge the Straight Line. T.*, Quai du Rhône, Granier house. Venerable: Brother Robert Bruyère, owner Silence. GO

Le Vigan. – Lodge of Tolerance and Union. T. *. Boulevard du Plan of Auvergne. Venerable: Brother Benjamin Cambassèdes, doctor Medical specialist. Address: Mr. Léon Guibal, solicitor. GO Salnt>Geniës-de Malgoires.–Loge le Progrès.T.',v\iQ du Moulin oil, Mayol house. Venerable: Brother Desmons, member of the Council of the Order, member of the Chamber of Deputies, con General bailiff of Gard, etc. G. 0.

Bessèges. – Lodge Progress and Humanity^ n® 220. T.*. Mas du Gros. Venerable: Brother Auguste Nicolas, Grande rue. SG

LOZÈRE

Florac. – Union Lozérienne Lodge. T., National Road, 107. Véneable: the F.. Canonge, Firrain, head of office at the sub-pres Factory. Address: Mr. Montoils, Doctor of Medicine. G. 0.

OOGUNBNT ANNEXED C

ARDLSGHB

Annoaay. <— Concord and Perseverance Lodge» T. . rue de la Groizette 7(bis) and 9. Venerable: F.. Guibert, Armand-William, architect-engineer of the city of Annonay. GO

XII

Provence (Bouches-du-Rhône > Alpes-Maritimes) my, Basses-Alpes, Vaucluse and Corsica)

boughes-durhone

Marseille. — Lodge ParfaüeSincérité, T.—.rue Piscaloris, 24. Venerable: the F.—, Ernest, Gambini, publicist, rue f'iorac, 1. GO

Marseille. — Perfect Lodge of Unions T.—, 24 rue Pisoatoris. Vé Manager: F. Arnaud, sales clerk, 4 rue Lejeune. GO

Marseille. "— Lodge the Renaissance Lighthouse. T. . rue des Piscaloris, 24. Venerable: F.. Nugues, Maurice, merchant of Ice cream. Old road to Rome, 7ü. GO

Marseille. — Lodge of the Reunion of the Chosen A7nis. T.—, rue Piscatoris, 24. Venerable; the F.—. Fuzier, François, master saddler at the Tramway company, St-Just Road, 40. GO

Rose-Groii's Chapter: Perfect Sincerity and Reunion of Friends chosen and assembled. TS; F. Boulanger, Alphonse, clerk of our silence, 50 Paradis Street, GO

Council of Knights Kadosh. Meeting of Chosen Friends. Pre-President: F.*. Saunier Pons, owner, 3, rue Berriex. GO

Marseille. — Lodge of the Vie and the Reformation. T.', rue Piscaloris, 24. Venerable: Brother Brochier, civil engineer, priest of Marseille, member of the Municipal Council, rue de la République, 29. GO Marseille. — Lodge VAvenir. T.—, rue Piscaloris, 24. Venerable Master: Mr. Lambert, naval captain, 78 Boulevard Ghave.

La Giotat. — Lodge P Espérance Mw'aïmite. 'J'. Venerable: the F.. Ghinardi, Chemin de la Brulière, Sabatin countryside. M.

Martigues. — Lodge at the Etoile du Sud. T.*, Café du Port, Grande Rue

Aia. – Scottish Maillet Lodge, No. 129. T.*, Rifle–Rafle Street. Venerable Address: F. Silvy (JB), 40 rue Boulegon. SG

"Ai." – Lodge of Arts and Friendship. 11, rue de la Mule Noire. Venerable » Pust, Barthélemy, librarian, Grand Bou– Street levard, 5. G0

VAR

Toulon – Cliapitrare and areopagito Lodge, Reunion Island. T.–, avenue

KA^ONNIC OLEOGRAPAL ÈRANÇA18B 6f8â

Vaubao. Venerable: Brother Barthélemy, Marines, former no. taire, insurance director, rue des Marchands, n 1.

Chapter of the Rose–Cross: TS the F/. Pelissier Tanon, capi– frigate dog.

Council of the Knights Kadosh: President: Brother Laurent (Charles), bookseller–bookbinder, Quai du Port, 3 (bis).

ALPES–MARITIMES

Nice. – Cosmopolitan Philosophy Lodge. T.*, rue Beaulieu, house Vial. Venerable: F.'. Chauvain, Pierre, owner, rue Al– Berlin Villa Flore. G0

Nice. – Lodge of Ligurian Philanthropy, 154. T.°. rue Beau– Venerable: Brother Brun, 29 rue St–Etienne. SG

Cannes. → Lodge La Vraie Lumière^ No. 210. T.*. Level Passage of the station. Venerable: F.–. Jourtau, Jules, section chief at the canal of the Sign. S0

Cannes. –Friends of Science Lodge. T.', old road to Vallauris. Venerable: Brother Maurice Conte, merchant, rue d'Antibes, 19. G0

Menton. – Union and Concord Lodge^ 218. T.*, rue de Castellar. Venerable: Brother Auguste Viegl, marble worker. S. C

Grasse. – Lodge La Concorde. T.*, 15 Avenue Sainte–Lorelte. Venerable ble; F.–. Bravel, Placide, carpenter–mechanic. G0

BASSES–ALPES

che. – Venerable: F.*. Canton, Jacques, farrier. G0

VAUCLÜSE

Avignon. – Lodge Les Vrais Amis Réunis. T.', rue Bancasse. 22.
Venerable: the F.*. Guard, tanner. G0

Avignon – Chapter of Rose-CroLx the True Friends United. T. \ S., F.. Chesnon, commission agent and forwarder, Ste-Galherine Street,
20. G0

Garpenstras. – Lodge of the Friends of Humanity, T.*, Place du Palais,
No. 5, Bonnet house. G0

CORSICA

XIII

Dauphiné and Savoie (Hautes-Alpes, Orème, Isère, Savoie, Haute-Savoie)

HAUTES-ALPES

686

00CUKBNT ANNEXED 0

DROUE

Valence. – Lodge of Humanity of the Drôme. TV rue Côte-des-Cha-peliers and Côte Courbe Sylvunte, Venerable: the F.*. Bélat, avocat, former public prosecutor, mayor, vice-president of the General Council. G0

ISÈRE

Grenoble. – Lodge Les Arts Réunis. T.', rue de Strasbourg. Vén-erable: F.-. Giraud, former notary, in Pontcharra (Isère).
G0

Grenoble. – Scottish Alliance Lodge, No. 206. T.*, rue de Stras-town, 9. Venerable: Brother Émile Durand-Savoyat, St-

Vienna. – Concorde Lodge. T.*, Coupe-Jarret ramp. Venerable ble: F.-. Savigne, printer-typographer. G0

Voiron. – Lodge of the Triple Union and Friendship. T.', rue du Colombier, Giraud house. Venerable: Brother Alfred-Hugues Durand d'Auxy, owner in Coublevie near Voiron, and on rue Soufflet, 20. Paris. G0

SAVOY

Chambéry. – Lodge of the Savoyard Hope. No. 17G. 1*. Rue de la Republic. Venerable: Brother Ménard, 20 Jüiverie Street. S0

HAUTE-SAVOIE

XIV

Lyon^ Ilhène, Loire and Ain

RHONE

liyon. – Lodge of the Sage. T., 45 rue Ste-Elisabeth. Venerable ble: F. Girerd, Alexandre, merchant and engraver, main street 220 Guillotièro. G0

I<yon. Lodge of Candor. T.*, 45 Ste-Élisabeth Street. Venerable:

F*. Lagrange, Member of Parliament for the Rhône, 187 Avenue de Saxe. G0
Lyon. – Lodge of the Knights Templar. T.*, rue Ste-Élisabeth, 45.
Venerable: Brother Ulpas, Auguste, jeweller, St-Come Street, II.
G0

Lyon. – Logo Star and Compass T.*, 45 rue Ste-Élisabeth. Vel nerable: F.'. Maynard, bookkeeper, rue Neuve, 11, G. ü.

aié0GBAPBIB MACONNfQtfl VRAMÇAISB 0tf

Ljon. Lodge ParjaitSilence, T*. Ste-Eli«abeth, 45. Vénérable: F*. Dachamp, Joies, lawyer, former prefectural advisor ture, rue Terme, 18. G0

Chapter of the Rosicrucians. T*. S*, the F*. Pertus, owner, 35 rue de la Madeleine,

Council of Knight Kadosh. President: F*. Montanet, Phili

Lyon. – Lodge Simplicity and Compassion. T.', rue Ste-Elisabeth, 45.
Venerable: F.*. Melon, Victor, freight forwarder,
14 rue de l'Annonciade. G0

Lyon. – Union and Trust Lodge. T.*, 45 rue Ste-Elisabeth Venerable F.-. Berthet; industrialist, main street of Chapennes, near Lyon, G. ü.

Lyon. – Lodge of Charity and Friendship. T.*, Passage de l'Enfance, 2 bis. Venerable: F.'. Bonnet, Alphonse, merchant, rue Bois water, 27. G0

Lyon. – Lodge Les Amis des Hommes, No. 120, T.', rue Tête-d'Or, 00. Venerable: Brother Bouvery, 5 rue des Feuillants. SC
Lyon. – Lodge Lumière et Justice n° 204. T.*, rue Tête-d'Or, 90.
Venerable: Brother Vignet, Pélrus, 94 rue Montbernard, Paris.
8. C.

Lyon. ~ Lodge of Tolerance and Cordiality No. 155. T.*, rue Tête-d'Or, 90. Venerable: Father Alabrun the Younger, Ste-Elisabeth Street. 59. S0
Lyon. – Lodge Friends of Truth No. 12. T.*, rue Montée du Gourguillon 20. Venerable: Brother Bally, known as Baër 2, Place des
New homes in Villeurbanne (Rhône). GLSE

Lyon. – Lodge Les Amis des Hommes No. 16. T.*, rue Montée du Gourguillon 20. Venerable: Brother Blanc, rue Grenette, 1. GL 8. E.

Lyon. – Lodge La Sincère Amitié No. 19. T.', rue Montée du Gourguillon 20 Venerable: Brother Léonde Sl-Jean, Ma- course
raud 12. GLSE

Lyon-Valse. – Lodge Fraternity and Progress No. 20. Worshipful Master: Brother.'

Tever in KullylRhône). GL S E.

Givors. – Loge la Solidarité n° 196. T.-, impasse de la Patrière.

Venerable: Brother Mercier, at Chasse, near Givors (Rhône). SG VillefTanche-sur-Saône. – Lodge the Progressive Fraternity. T.*.
Frans Road, near the station. Venerable F.*.Jûgy, Casimir, district councillor, hardware merchant and in pa-Painted stones, 13 rue Nationale. G0

LOIRE

Saint-Étienne. – Lodge of United Workers 199. T.', main street
St-Roch, 94. Venerable: Brother Epitalon, rue de Lyon, 73. 8. C.
Saint-Étienne. – Loge les Élus. T.', rue du pavillon Chinois, 1. Vé-*

François, .5. G0

688 ATTACHED DOCUMENT C

Chapter (Bose-Croix. T.*. S.'., F.'. Louis Siaot, con-engineer of bridges and roads, a Sl-Chainond. G0

St-Étienne. » Loge VIndustrie^ rue du i^avillon Chinois, 1. Vénérable: F.'. Poupon, employee at the Loire mines, rue St* Charles, 22. G. 0.

Roanne. – Lodges the Scottish Hoanîiais. T.', rue Bayard. Venerable rable. F.*. Lafont, road surveyor, and architecte. G.-0.

AIN

Bourg-en-Bresse. – Lodge of Fraternal Friendship, T., rue des Tanneries, 3. Venerable. F.. Boi-desol, merchant, 4 rue Mercière etr.
6. 0.

Belley. – Lodge of the Three Wishes, former church, Grande Rue
His Excellency, Brother Martin, Michel, banker, Grande Rue I4.G0

St-Sorlin. – Lodge the Bugey Fraternity. Venerable Master: Brother.
Délorme, mayor of the commune of St-Sorlin, by Lagnieu
(Ain)'. G0

XV

Saône-et-Loire, Côte-d'Or, Yonne, Aube,

Marl

SAONE-ET-LOIRE

MACON. – Lodge the.dr/« Reunited. T.*, extended Lacrctelle street.
Venerable: Brother François Martin, honorary solicitor, mayor of Mâcon, member of the General Council of Saône-et-Loire, pro owner, rue Sigorgno, 28. G, 0.

Châlou-snr-Saône. Lodge Progress and Equality «« 21ü. T.', rue de la MareGolombière. Venerable: Br*. Parent, h St*MarceI, near Chalon-sur-Saône SC

Chakeny. LofSQ Equality and Progress, n® 223. T.*, rue du Pavillon.
Venerable: F.*. Nicot, rue de Beaune, in Châlons-sur-Saône.
SC

Bette house, father. Venerable: the F.*. Larcher, J.-B., printer bookseller at Greusot (18aône-ot-Loire). G0

Tournus. – Lodge of Concord. T.'. rue du Théâtre. Venerable* F.*. Quinet, François, farmer-winemaker in Lacrost, by Tournus. G0

COTE-D'OR

Dijon. – Lodge Solidarity and Progress. T., rue Courte-Épée. Venerable: F.. Pausiot, Nicolas, former bridge and bridge engineer Roads, city councilor, Place St-Nicolas. G0

FRENCH MASONIC GEOGRAPHY 689

Beanne. – The Amh of Nature and of Humanity. T/, rampart of the Comédie. Venerable: F. Izembart, carpenter, place at Butter, 8. G0

Beaune. – Lodge Le Réveil de la Côte-d'Or, no. 226. T.* . rampart of The Comédie. Venerable: F.*. Poidevin, deputy mayor. SC

TONNE

Avallon.–The Fraternity Lodge. T.–, rue des Merciers, Nègre house.

Venerable: Brother Launay, tax collector, 3 rue St-Martin. G0 Joigny'. – The Phoenix Lodge. T., Lyon road, near the train station dhemindefer. Venerable: Father. Berthe, Edme, owner, Mortellerie Street. G0

DAWN

Troyes. ~ Lodge of the Fraternal Union. T.*, rue de la Montée des Changes, 3. Venerable: Brother Louis Dessirier, rentier. G0

MARL

Ch&Ions*8urMarne. – Lodge of the BienJaisaneeCkéUonnalte.T.'.vne Grande-Étape, 54. Venerable; the BV. Roussel, rentier, St- Street Jacques, G0

Reims. – Lodge of Sincerity. T., rue BuireUe,',27. Venerable: Is F.. Thomas, Doctor of Medicine. G0

XVI

Jura, Doubs, Saône, Vosges, Haute-Marne, Belfort territory, Meurthe-et-Moselle, Meuse.

JURA

Let's-le-Saunier. – Lodge of the Prudent Friendship. T.*. 9, quay of the Tannery. Venerable: Brother Gaëtan Simon, headmaster of the Lycée cée- GO

St-Claude. – Logo: Le Réveil de la Montagne. T., rue du Collège, 22. Venerable: Brother Wilhelm Rosenberg, merchant. GO Dôle. – Lodge le Fal (FAMour T., rue des Tanneurs. Venerable: F.'. Renaud, Emile, merchant, Grande Rue, 35. GO

DOUBS

Besançon.– Chapter Lodge. Sincerity, Perfect Union, and Constant m 44

690

ATTACHED DOCUMENT G

Friendship united, T.', former St. Antoine church, St. Antoine street. Venerable: Brother Bruand, merchant, member of the Council of the Order, member of the Municipal Council. Grande Rue, 58. GO

Chapter of Rose-Croix, T.–. S.*., the f.–. Bruand.

HAUTE-SAONE

Vesoul.– Lodge of United Hearts. T., in the middle of the city. Venerable: F.. Voisard, Eugène, doctor of medicine, rue du Breuil. GO

Gray. – Lodge La P'raie Réunion Désirée. T.*, room of the old Theatre, rue de l'Ancienne Comédie. Venerable: Father Perrot, Aimé*François, rue des Casernes. GO

VOSGES

Epinal. – Lodge of the Fosgian Fraternity. Avenue de la Petite Pro

Rualménil. G0

Neufehâtean. Lo'ê St-Jean-de-la-Paix » T *. rue de l'Hôpital, 43.
Venerable: Brother Pierre Perrin, merchant. G. 0.

Remlremont. – Loge le Travail, – T.'. rue des Brosseries, maihis Lccomto. Venerable: the F.*. Spony, Alfred, merchant.
Address: Mr. Panl-Nardin, café owner. G0

St-Pié. – VÉgaillé Fosgienne Lodge, T.'. Galtain Avenue, 4. Védeductible: F.'. Ferry, Albert, member of the Chamber of Deputies prostitutes, lawyer, 8th Street-Gliarlcs, 12 G0

HAUTE-MARNE

Chaumont. – VÉtoile de la Haute-Marne logo. T.*, rue de Ghamarande, 11. Venerable: Brother Demouy, owner, rue de Cha-Marande, he. G0

MEURTHE-ET-MOSELLE

Nancy. – St. John of Jerusalem Lodge. T.*, 5 (bis) rue de Drouin.
Venerable: Brother Adam, Emile, director of the dress school
Wise man and equestrian, deputy mayor, 14 rue des Jardiniers*
Address: Mr. Jean Kert, rue Drouin, r> (bis). G0

MEUSE

Bar-le-Dnc. – Loge la Régénération. T.*, rue de la Couronne, 10.
Venerable: Brother Ernest Bradfer, Mayor. Address: Mr. Jones,
Post office clerk. G0

TERRITORY PE BELFORT

Belfry. – Lodge of Tolerance and Fraternity. T.: Stracmann Street. Vé-Manageable: F.. Thiaut, member of the Bar Council, lawyer.
G. 0.

FRENCH MASONIC GEOGRAPHY

691

XVII

Algeria

F.*. Honel, Salomon, president of the bar association, rue de the Lyre, 1*2 GB

Alger. – Lodge \q Delta n» 255. T.*, Boulevard de la République Venerable: Father Trech, Bruce Street, 2 SC

Blida. – Logo the Fraternity in the Mitidja n® 248. T., Mah- Street grind. Venerable: Br. Aumerat, rue Denfert. SC Constantine. – Lodge of the Hospitallers of Constantine n° 163. T*.
Impasse Caraman. Venerable: the F.'. Besançon, rue Nationale,
55. SC

Constantine. – . St. Vincent de Paul Lodge. T.*, Vieux Street, 51.
Venerable: 1st F*. Lebeau, EJouanl, head of accounting at Algerian Railways, 19 Rue Nationale. G0

Sétif – Lodge of the Sétif Union.n» 249. T.', rue de Constantine. Vémanageable: the F*. Subtra. SC

Bône. – Flippone Chipitral Lodge. T.', Trezel Street. Venerable: the F.'. Finaud, Alfred, bailiff. G0

Chapter of the Rosicrucians. IHppone. T. . S.*, the F.-. Finaud, Denis, commercial arbitrator. G0

Candle – the Numidian Brothers, T.'. Church steps, house Gafand. Venerable: Brother Parés, retired commander, pro-owner in Oued-Marsa, near Bougie. G0

Mascara. – Lodge VRtoiley T.-. Venerable: Brother*. Mercier, Charles, Hardware store. G. 0*

Miliana. -'Log^VUniPn duChelijf. T.-, rue d'Alger. G0
Mostaganem. – Lodge of the African Trinosophists. 5 rue de l'Alma.
Venerable: 1st F*. Mermot, André, officer of Nicham-liRikar, Landlord. G0

Tenes. – The Renaissance Lodge. SC

Oran. – Lodge .'/r/ca/ne. T.', rue d'Austerlitz, 30. Venerable rable: F*. Mithieu, Floréal, mayor of the city of Oran, phar-macien, Place Kléber. G0

Chapter of Rose-Oix, African Union. T.'. S*. : the F*. Master, Public works contractor, rue de la Préfecture. 00 Council of Knights Kadosh {African Union. President: the F*. Barlibas, master bootmaker in the 2nd Zouave Regiment. G0 Philppeville. – Lodge the Children of Mars. T.*, rue de l'Arsenal.
Venerable: Brother François Dépré, farrier-expert, veterinarian, 64 bis rue Nationale. 00

69IS DOCUMENT ANNBXIÊ G

Sitiat-Denls-dQ-Sig. -> Loge la Libre Peneie, T.*, boulevard de Slimen. Venerable: Brother André Deloupy, owner.
Address: Mr. Gélis, Boulevard Sliman. G0

Tisi-Onzou. - Logo of the Kabyle Family. T., plateaii of the Pépinière, Léotii house. Venerable: the F., Gtiappuis. Jacques-Edouard, defense attorney. G. 0

Tlemcen. Lodge of the Union of Tlemcen. 1. Almohades Street. Vé* neable: the F.*. Cabaud, GUarles, senior clerk at the conservatory Mortgage approval. G0

XVIII

French colonies

GOGHINGHINE

Sargon (Giadinh province). - Logo the Awakening of the Orient. T.-. rue d'Espagne. Verified by: F.*. Foulhous, Alfred, architect, Head of the Civil Buildings Department. G 0.

SENEGAL

Salnt'tiouls. - Lodge of the Senegalese Union. T.. rue de la Mos-Venerable: Brother Victor Beynis, merchant. G0

REUNION ISLAND

Saint-Denys. - Capital and Areopagite Lodge of Friendship. T.-, with Barrachois nude, 97. Venerable: Brother Augustus Mestres, head of accounting and port of Reunion Island.

Chapter of Rose-Groix: T.'. 8.. the F.. Volcy-Uingray, first Treasury clerk, owner.

Council of Kadosii Knights, President: Brother Üérieul de Roland, agent of the distillers. 00

GUADELOUPE ISLAND

Basse-Terre. - Lodge of the Elect of the West. T.-, rue de Bologne, 5.

Venerable: the F.*, Ilermantin, agetit-voyer. G0

La Pointe-à-Pitre. - Chapter Lodge the Disciples Aillram. T.',

Merchant and owner. G0

Chapter of Rosc-Groix T.-. S.*. :lo F.\ Daguin, merchant.
G0

Pointe-à-Pitre. – Chapter Lodge La Paix. T.', House of Freemasons. Venerable – the i*\'. Ferret, Napoleon, merchant.
6. 0.

Chapter of Rosicrucian La Paia^ G0

Masonic Geography 693

MARTINIQUE

Salnt-Pierrd. – Loge rt^nio.a, h* 115. T.', rue Moatmirail. Vene
Address: F.-. Hurard, rue Pesset. S0

NEW CALEDONIA

Nouméa. – Lodge 'Union Calédonienne. T.*.

Véucrable: F.*. Robin, Ernest, office client at the directorate of administration. Address: at the Union Calédonienne lodge, via Sue and Sydney (Australia). G. ü.

FRENCH GUIANA

Cayenne. – Lodge La Fronce Equinoxaley 08. Venerable: the F.*.
Cbarvein, rue d'Angoulême. SC

XIX

Lodges located in foreign countries

SPAIN

Madrid. – Lodge VHospitalièrey lïï. T.-, rue del Ducq de Alba,
8. Venerable; Brother Valat, Mateu passage. SC

Barcelona. – Chapter Lodge La Sagesse. T., calle Sera, 2(1" p).
Venerable: Brother*. Ban Martiney, José, dentist, rue des Escu-dillers, 19. T.'. S., of the Chapter: the F., Llabour, merchant, Calle Union, 10th floor, 3rd floor. G0

Cadiz. – Lodge Faith and Self-Sacrifice, No. 241. T.. Alaraada de Apodaca, 11. Venerable: leF.. Cayetano del Toro, Zaragoza street, 18. SG
Cadiz.-Loge les Pyramides, 250. T.*, rue Encarnalion, Vene-

SC

Saint Sebastian. – Lodge Jiriz de Pas 231. T.\ rue Garibay. Vé-unmanageable; F. Juan Sanchez Diez. SC

Mahon Island, Menorca. – Lodge Friends of Humanity, n° 158. T.'. Saint Sebastian Street. Venerable: Brother Hernandez, rue de la Moon, 4. SC

GREATER

Corfu (Ionian Islands). – Loge le Phénix. T.–, rue Aristotelis. Venerable: Brother*. Caslogouros, Nicolas, Doctor of Law– Address: M.–P.–N. Apostolopulos, Postal Employee. GO

ROMANIA

Galatz (Moldova). – Chapter Lodge of the Disciples of Pythagoras

T. –. Sirada Saint-Nicolas. Venerable; the F.'. Rescano, Georges,

ATTACHED DOCUMENT G

694

Prefect of the city of Galalz. Address: M– Brociner, Maurice T.–. S. of the Chapter: 1c F/. Maritiovich, Aiiioine, Lloyd's agent Austro-Hungarian. Address: Mr. Samuel Ueischler, representative of commerce. GO

Jassy (Moldova). – Peace and Union Lodge. T.*. Strada Ulica Marc. Venerable: Brother Gol.lbanni, Salomon, merchant. Address: Mr. Julien, Adolf, merchant. GO

Bijcliarrest (Valaclie). – Lodges the Snge,^ of Ileliopolis. T.'. strada 8la Vineri, 40. Venerable: Br*. Tavernier, Alexandre, major in the Romanian army (Strada, Flcvna, l'.K). Address: M. Moscow, Ascher, rentier, Strala Vineri, 8 via Austria. G O.

Ibraila (Wallachia). – Phare Hospitalier Lodge. Venerable: the Brother.

Bissarabianu, Georges, merchant., G O.

Ploesti. – Lodge V Union (Unrea). T •. rue Alexandre, II. GO

Toulttscha (Dobrutscha). – Lodge the Progress of Dobrutscha. T.'. Former Hotel Ilomania. Strada Garol. Venerable: the F.*. Leonidas Storla, lawyer. Address: Mr. A. Kelson, merchant. GD

Tarn Severin (Wallachia). Lodge VEtoile'jde Sever. T.-. Venerable: F.-J. Milescu, François, lawyer. G. 0.

SWISS

Geneva. – Lodge the Fraternity. T.-, rue de Rives, 7. Venerable the F.*. Charcoal burner, marble worker, in Paquis (Geneva). G0

Türkiye

Constantinople. –Loge l'E'oi/e du Bosphore, T.*, rue Tzifzeck, 5. Near Kaliound-jou-Koulouk (Fera). Venerable: Br.' Bardaut, Anatole-Prosper, lawyer. G. ü.

Constantinople. – Lodge Progress. T.*, Tziizek Street. Venerable:

the F.*. JeanStamelos, doctor of medicine. G0

Constantinople. – Ser Lodge (Love). T. . Tzilzek Street. Vé* nerablo: F.\ Artiii Noradôunghian, merchant, rue Voyvoda. Han Noradounghian (Galata). G0

Beirut. – LogeleUôa". T.*, Galgoul district. Venerable: the F.-. Esper, Slioucain, chancellor and dragoman of the consulate general from England. G0

EGYPT

Alexandria. – (Armenian Community). Lodge \os> Pyramids of Egypt. T.'. opposite the European Hospital. Venerable: the F.-. Adolphe Hartmann, merchant. Address: Mr. Jules Lileton, born gociant, G0

PortSaTd. LogeVUnion of the two men «« 10). T.*.... Venerable: the F. Hermann, Leon-Elliet. SC

&1Ê00RA.PH1E FRENCH MASONIC 695

MOROCCO

Tangier. – Lodge V Union of Morocco 194. T.*, Masonic premises. Venerable; Brother Haïra Beiichinol. SC

MAURITIUS

Port-Louis.– Logo r.^wiV/e245. T.. F.. Venerable: the F.*.

Daruty, Emile, rue de i'Kglise 8. 8. C.

Tagne and Touraine. G. 0.

Port-Louis. – Areopagite Chapter Lodge, and Consistory,
The Triple Hope. T., Corderie Street, 51. Venerable: the F.'. Evenor de Cliazal, planter. Very Wise of the Chapter; the F..
Kyshe, John Benjamin, Chief of Staff. President of the Council seil: F.–. Gourlaux Frédéric, merchant, rue de l'Eglise. Pré-President of the Consistory: Brother Jules Icery, business agent, rue of the Rampart, 26. G. 0.

ARGENTINE CONFEDERATION

Buenos-Ayres. – Lodge i.4mie des Naufragés. T.*, calle Cangallo.
Venerable: Brother Edouard Aubine, employee, S. José Street 135 GB

CHILE

Valparaiso. – Lodge V Étoile du Pacifique. T.*, Calle de la Victoria, 19. Venerable: Brother Edmond Maubrac, merchant. G. 0.

URUGUAY

Montevideo. – Chapter Lodge and Areopagite the Friends of the Pa/r/e. Venerable: T.'. Rappaz, Victor, Doctor of Medicine and in surgery: F.–, Calle Andes, 282. Very Wise Man of the Chapter and President of the Council: F.*. Rappay, Victor, Doctor of in medicine and surgery, G0

DANISH ANTILLES

St-Thomas. – Lodge of the Sincere Hearts n° 141. T.'. to the East of the city.
Venerable: Br.' Elias de Léon, in St-Thoraas. SC

HAITI ISLAND

Les Cayes. – The Pupils of Nature 10. T..,. Venerable: the F..
Alexandre Léon. SC

Jacmel. – Lodge of the Philadelphes, No. 59. T.', Lagosseline Street at Portal. Venerable: Brother Ilippolyte Kernisan. SG

HAWAII ISLANDS

Honolulu. – Lodge the Progress of Oceania^ 124. T.*.

Venerable: SM Kalakana, king of the Hawaiian fies. SC

P^[es.

FACE OF VOLUME THREE. I

Letter on Freemasonry, by Bishop Fava, Bishop of Grenoble. v

Letter from His Highness Bishop Sébaux, Bishop of Angoulême, to Mr.
Claudio Jannct. viii

Letter from Bishop Gay of Anthedon, Vicar-Capital
From Poitiers, to Mr. Claudio Jannet. x

LIVBB THIRD

Secret Societies and the Revolution

Preliminary Chapter. – On the Particular Characteristics of the Freemason Woman laughter according to times and countries.

1. The unity of Freemasonry's purpose and the diversity of its mode of action.

2– Why Freemasonry has a less outdated character tionary in Protestant countries than in countries Catholics. 3

3. Special tactics of Freemasonry in certain countries Catholics. •. ... ti

4. Freemasonry and Legitimate Governments. ... 8

5. The two phases of Masonic action. 13

6. The exploitation of national issues by France
Masonry... •. 16

7. Masonic persecution against the Church in the German countries. 18

9. The role of Jews in Freemasonry. 22

Chapter One. – Freemasonry in the 18th Century.

1. Some new historical sources. 27

2. What was thought in 1717 about Freemasonry . . 29

3. The Higher Degrees. -- Illuminism. – The Philalellia. – Martinez-Paschalis. – Saint-Martin. 34

4. Freemasonry in France since the Ministry

Choiseul until the constitution of the Grand Orient • .. 39

5. What was the purpose of Gallicanism? 43

6. The Episcopate and Freemasonry on the eve of the Revolution. 48

7. The concerns of an honest Freemason in 1785... 54

8. Freemasonry in the Austrian Netherlands . . 56

9 Freemasonry in Germany and Russia. ... 63

10. The sect in Italy. 65

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Page i.

Chapter Two.—Secret Societies during the Revolution.

1. Influence of Freemasonry in the elections of

1787 and 1789...!. 69

2. A final warning in 1789. ... 72

3. The history of the Revolution as told in 1794. 75

4. "The lodges transformed into clubs, according to a writer"

Freemason 83

5. The reorganization of logcsen 179'i. 86

Chapter Three. — Napoleon and the university monopoly,

according to a Bonapartist publicist. 89

Chapter Four. — The Masonic Conspiracy of ISIS

to 1830.

1. Secret Societies and the Parliamentary System. 93

2. The Philadelphia society and the early origins of Constitutional party. 95

3. A neglected aspect of the Hundred Days. 97

4. The role of secret societies in European politics

European according to Metternich. Prussia and France masonry. 98

5. Metternich's memorandum to Emperor Alexander in 1822.

6. England and the European Revolution. 113

7. The role of Freemasonry during the Restoration tt4

8. Masonic oaths and the military oath... 121

9. La Haute-Vente after 18.J0, according to M. de Meltrnich 122

Chapter Five. – The Bonapartes and the Revolutionary Sects (based on) L. de Melkrnich, 125

Chapter Six. – Secret Societies in Spain since the 16th century until 1332,

t. Introduction to Freemasonry. – The expulsion of Jesus. –A plan for schism. 131

2. Los Corlès Constituentes de Cádiz.135

3. Secret Societies during the reign of Ferdinand VII.. 138

4. The change in the law of succession to the throne and the Grand Orient of Spain.142

Chapter Seven. – The Italian Revolution [1830–1870]

1. National aspirations and secret societies. ... 147

2. Scientific congresses from 1839 to 1875 151

3. A carbonaro king. – Charles–Albert.153

4. An episode from 1848, The History of Secret Societies by

Crétineau-Joly.. ... 159

5. Victor–Emmanuel and Gavour.. iti 3

P!^:es*

6. Paimerson and his role in the European Revolution. 165

7. The secret policy of Napoleon III.171

8. Mazzini's policy... 179

9. The annexation of central Italy and the Two Sicilies . . .184

10. The relations of Victor-Emmanuel and Mazzini. –
1863–1870. 189

11. A little more light on the causes of the second ex-
Roman peddling, 1866–1868.. 202

12. The rise and fall of Mazzini.205

13. Mazzini and Freemasonry. 207

Gbapitbb eighth. – The secret relations of Napoleon 111
with Prussia.

1. Napoleon III and the Unification of Germany..213

2. The mission of Marquis Pepoli to Berlin in 1858. 214

3. The Italo-Prussian Alliance of 1866 and Napoleon III... 218

4. Revelations from an agent of Mr. do Bismarck.219

5. A secret agent of Napoleon III in 1866. 222

Chapter Nine. – The Masonic Alliance of Prussia and Italy.

1. The Memories of General La Marmora. 225

2. A Prussian Memorandum addressed to Mazzini in 1867.. 2*26

3. The recall of Mr. d'Usedom, Prussian minister to Florence

4. Emperor William and Italian Freemasonry ... 231

Chapter Ten. – Poland and Freemasonry. 233

Chapter eleven. – Freemasonry in Austria.

1. Prussian origin of Austrian lodges.237

2. Freemasonry in Cisleilhanie since 1860. 239

3. Hungarian Freemasonry. .2i2

4. The completion of the rouiilication of Germany.245

Chapter Twelve. – Masonic work from 1852 to 1870

1. Freemasonry at the time of the coup d'état... 249

2. A prophetic warning from Bishop Pie in 1856 . . 250

3. A center of free thought in Holland in 1857 252–

4. The Universal Religious Alliance.254

5. The laws of Brothers Ferry and Paul Bert, prepared in 1859. 255

6. The protection of a fraternal and tolerant power.258

7. The public courses of the Grand Orient on rue Cadet, in 1864–1865.

S. The Explosion of Anti-Christianity

260

264

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Pagei.

Chapter thirteen. A prelude to universal persecution against the Church in Portugal.

1. Particular characteristics of Portuguese Freemasonry.. 271

2. The war on the Sisters of Charity...

3. The centenary of Pombal... 284

Chapter Fourteen. – The Avant-Garde Lodges. 285

Chapter Fifteen. – Where do dogma and the Masonic morals.

1. Freemasonry claims to be superior to all religions
gions .•.295

2. The verifiable secret of Freemasonry.299

"

3. Atheism and Freemasonry •..303

4. Two speeches by Mr. Ferry and Mr. Gambetta307

5. The religion of rUmanilé. • 309

H. What the violability of the human person means.

The basis of Masonic morality. 313

7. Women and the Family. 315

Chapter Sixteen. – Conservative Freemasonry and Freemasonry progressive, – The /f.'. Renan and Jules Vallès,

Chapter Seventeen. – The New Theophilanthropists

I. A Masonic Baptism .•.327

2. Masonic confirmation. 331

3. Masonic marriages.332

4. Even simpler... 335

Chapter Eighteen. – Masonic Lodges and Abolition of the death penalty. 339

Chapter Nineteen. – Freemasonry and Political Action

1. Written statutes and facts. 3il

2. The Masonic secret. 349

3. What use can high ranks still be? 350

Chapter Twentieth. – The program of Ilelleville and the pro-
Masonic gram. 353

CHAPTER TWENTY-ONE. – The Great Masonic Conspiracy of 1873

1. The story of a conspiracy ..• . . ., 357

2. Foreign Freemasonry and the Monarchical Restoration than in France.36)

3. Freemasonry during the period of May 16th. 360

4. Freemasonry and Mr. Grévy. •.369

TABLE OF HATS

701

Pages.

Chapter Twenty-Second. – Freemasonry and Government

'formation of the Republic.

1. Lodges and factions in politics... 371

2. The deliberative sections.380

' 3. The lodges and the administration... 382

4. Freemasonry and Public Assistance . . . • . . 386

5. Freemasonry and the Army .388

6. Freemasonry at the police headquarters ... 393

7. Popular associations stemming from Freemasonry .. 396

8. Supplement to the list of committed politicians in Freemasonry.406

Chapter twenty-third. – Freemasonry and teaching public information.

1. The ultimate goal to achieve421

2. Freemasonry and the laws of Brothers Ferry and Paul Bert. 422

3. Again, the Intelligence League. A27

4. What will become of state education.431

Chapter twenty-four. – The Polytechnic Association and the Philotechnical Society. 437

Chapter Twenty-Fifth. – Freemasonry, the Companions gnonnages and the Workers' Trade Union Chambers 441

Chapter Twenty-Six. – Freemasonry and the so-socialism.

1. The social revolution, a consequence of the political revolution litique .449

2. A statue to Proudhon . .•.. 451

3. A page by Proudhon on Freemasonry and the so-called idea specialist. 453

Chapter twenty-seventh– The sect in Belgium and Holland.

1. Independent morality and the neutral school. • ..457

2. A second step forward.460

3. Solidarity-based societies.464

'i. The 1'.*. Üoftin. •... 466

5. The League of Education in Holland.469

Chapter Twenty-Eighth. – Freemasonry in the Empire German.

1. A look at the composition of German lodges 475

2. Freemasonry and the Prussian administration. ... 476

3. A collaborator of M. de Bismarck.477

702 TABLE OF CONTENTS

Pages.

4. Why the Kulturkampf never ended. 478

5. The question of schools in Switzerland *.479

Chapter Twenty-Nine.— Freemasonry in Spain

under Alfonso XII, 481

Chapter Thirtie. — The Sect in Italy and the Papacy

I. Plans for Masonic congresses in Rome.485

'2. Acts of His Holiness Leo XIII against Secret Societies... 488

Garibaldi and Universal Freemasonry. 494

•>

4. The height of hatred towards sects... 496

Chapter thirty-second. — Freemasonry in England
earth.

1. Organization of English lodges. 499

2. The spirit of English Freemasonry. 501

3. England and the Cosmopolitan Revolution...505

4. The secularist movement in schools. 506

5. Freemasonry in the English colonies. 509

Chapter thirty-second. — Secret Societies in Ireland.

1. The origins of the Irish question . . 511

2. The Defenders and the United Irislimen from 1791 to 1800 . . 513

4. The Popular Secret Societies... 515
5. The .leuae-Ireland of I 8 i 8 ü 1857. . . 518
6. The Fenians. 519
7. The involvement of sects in the events of 1879 to 1882 .•..525
8. Ireland and parliamentary government.. 534

Chapter Thirty-Third.— Secret Societies in the States—
United States of North America.

1. Origin and organization of Freemasonry in the United States United. .*. 537
2. The Spirit of American Freemasonry. 539
3. The “Anti-Masonic Party” and the “National Christian Party” 542
4. The more advanced sects. 546
5. The early origins of non-denominational public schools sionnelles. 551
6. Attacks against Catholicism. 554
7. Irish Secret Societies in the United States. 557
8. Jewish Masonic Rites in the United States.559

Chapter thirty-four.— The Franc-wiaponnene in Canada. 561

TABLE OF CONTENTS

703

Pages.

Chapixab TBBNTB-ciNQuiÈME- Freemasonry in P Ami-

Southern Rift.

1. Particular characteristics of Freemasonry in the ancients*

born in Spanish and Portuguese colonies.569

2. Masonic persecution in Brazil from 1872 to 1879... 573

3. Freemasonry in Chile. 593

4. Freemasonry in Ecuador and the Republics neighbors ..594

5. Freemasonry in Mexico. 601

Chapter thirty-six. – Secret Societies and Events

Eastern influences,

1. The Hetairie. 603

2. The Omladina and Secret Societies among the Slavs of South.607

3. Young Turkey.609

4. European lodges in the Levant countries.615

Chapter thirty-seven. – The Anarchists.

1. The Succession of the International. 617

2. The International Brothers. 620

The Black Hand in Spain. 628

4. Relations of Western European anarchists with Russian nihilists... 633

5. Relations of anarchists with other social factions lists. 641

I). The accomplices of the anarchists. 645

APPENDICES

Attached document A. – Sources for the history of the Ma stupidity in the 18th century. 655

D; attached document B. – The role of the Jews in the Revolution universal «. 658

Annex C. – Geographical and statistical overview of French Freemasonry in December 1882. 663